CONCEPT OF FORM/SPACE
THE MISSISSIPPIANS

The importance of the Native American culture to the history and development of the bluff-top land on the Mississippi River makes the selection of the site ideal for the headquarters of the Anthropological Institute of the Mississippi. The structural form is an integral part of the cultural heritage of the Mississippi River region and is an important component of the site's identity. The design of the building is intended to be a testament to the rich history of the area, and to the significant contributions of the indigenous peoples who have lived here for thousands of years.

The concept is based on the idea of the bluff-top land as a sacred site, and the building is designed to be a respectful and appropriate response to this context. The design is intended to be a reflection of the culture and history of the area, and to be a source of inspiration for future generations.

The design of the building is intended to be a reflection of the culture and history of the area, and to be a source of inspiration for future generations.
ELEVATIONS  1/8"=1'-0"
Walking From Tom Lee Park

Driving Down Riverside Drive

Roof View Of Mississippi River