Chart Your Course in Communication Studies

Employers are looking for graduates who can “think critically, communicate clearly, and solve complex problems” (Hart Research Associates, 2013). With these skills and more, communication studies graduates are well prepared to succeed in a wide variety of careers or to go on to graduate and professional school. The communication studies curriculum is designed to give all of our students a solid foundation in the theory and practice of communication, along with the flexibility to explore their own interests in communication in depth.

Required courses for the Communication Studies concentration are offered every semester on the main campus, as well as online in rotating semesters, to maximize flexibility to student schedules. We also offer these courses on the same days & times each semester, so that students can plan their schedules well in advance.

Start Here

Communication Inquiry (2100) and Media and Information Literacy (2101) are the foundational courses for the Communication Studies concentration. These courses will introduce you to the range of areas you can pursue in Communication Studies and the basic research and analysis skills to help you succeed in the rest of the major.

Continue Your Journey

Rhetoric and Civic Controversy (3001) and Communication Ethics (3100) encourage you to think about the impact that communication has in the world. These courses will help you develop skills in critical thinking and ethical decision-making. Communication Research Methods (3330) will help you develop your research, writing, and problem solving skills as you develop a proposal for your capstone project.

Finish Here

Senior Capstone (4381) is the culminating experience for the major. You will complete an independent research project on the topic of your choosing, while also reflecting on your educational experience with an eye toward moving on in your life and career.
