4373 (Section 001): African American Authors from the Harlem Renaissance (The South in African American Literature)
9:10-10:05am MWF
Dr. Terrence Tucker
tttucker@memphis.edu/901-678-3029
Course Description:
The South has played a central role in African American life and culture since before the creation of the Constitution. Despite this, overt racism has continued to be a defining feature in the South’s relationship with African Americans from slavery to the Civil War and Reconstruction to Jim Crow. While many African Americans fled the South during the 20th century, the 21st century has seen the return of many African American return to the South more empowered than any generation before it. As a result, African American life continues to be directly or indirectly impacted by the politics, anxieties, and reputation of the South. However, African Americans have been central to Southern ideology, economy, and culture in ways that often go unnoticed or under discussed. The impact of African Americans on the South has, at times, made African American culture almost indistinguishable from Southern culture. In this course we will examine works that have explored black experience in the South and depicted the complex, intimate relationship between African Americans and a region central to their identity while also being a central site of their oppression.
Required Texts:
Wright, Richard
Uncle Tom's Children (ISBN: 9780060812515)
Black Boy (ISBN: 1568490674)
Walker, Alice
The Third Life of Grange Copeland (ISBN: 0156028360)
Meridian (ISBN: 0156028344)
Gaines, Ernest
A Lesson Before Dying (ISBN: 0375702709)
Kenan, Randall
A Visitation of Spirits (ISBN: 9780375703973)
Jones, Tayari
Leaving Atlanta (ISBN: 0446690899)
Locke, Attica  