Course Description
This course will survey ways of theorizing communication using Craig’s (1999) meta-theoretical framework. Students will learn the philosophical underpinnings of communication theories, as well as how different theoretical traditions approach different aspects of communication studies (from individual communicators to culture & society), and how specific communication theories and models exemplify different theoretical traditions.

Assignments & Grading
Attendance & Participation (20% of final grade).
This is a once a week graduate seminar. Therefore, you are expected to come to each class prepared to discuss the week’s readings. The material will be more or less familiar to you, depending on your background. It is important to focus on the big picture (major claims and arguments) and not to sweat the small stuff. We can work through the details together in class. I welcome questions and critiques of the assigned readings.

Wiki discussions (20% of final grade)
Each week, you should contribute to the week’s discussion on the course wiki (https://umwiki.memphis.edu/x/p4B3Ag). Specific discussion questions will be posted each week, and everyone should contribute to the discussion (at least one comment, ~100-200 words) by no later than Monday at midnight.

Article Summaries and Discussion (20% of final grade)
Each student will be assigned a certain number of articles (tbd, based on enrollment) to briefly summarize and lead the class discussion. For each assigned article, you will summarize—in no more than 5 minutes—the major theoretical arguments from the article. Please do not rehearse the contents of the article (i.e., “First it talks about this, and then it talks about that, etc.”). Then you will lead a discussion on the article, involving your classmates in a conversation (and/or other activities) on how the article exemplifies a specific theoretical tradition, how the theory contributes to knowledge in communication, and/or how the theory can be applied to specific examples of communication data, artifacts, or contexts.

Final Paper (40% of final grade)

Your final paper will be a 20-25 page (double-spaced) literature review and/or application of a communication theory. This paper can (a) select a specific theory and review the scholarly literature developing and applying the theory; or, (b) select a specific theory, outline its details and relevant literature, and then (i) apply the theory to an analysis of some data, or (ii) apply it to a proposed research project.

Academic Honesty/Plagiarism

As graduate students, you are becoming producers, not just consumers, of knowledge in communication studies. Therefore, it is very important that you (a) properly acknowledge those who are responsible for the research and ideas that you are drawing upon and (b) do not inappropriately take credit for research and ideas that are not your own. Everyone makes honest mistakes, and I am willing to help correct these mistakes. However, deliberate efforts to represent others’ words, ideas, and/or research as your own will not be tolerated. Cheating, academic dishonesty, and/or plagiarism (including submitting the same paper for more than one course without permission) may result in an F for the course and will be reported to the Office of Judicial Affairs. “Your written work may be submitted to Turnitin.com, or a similar electronic detection method, for an evaluation of the originality of your ideas and proper use and attribution of sources. As part of this process, you may be required to submit electronic as well as hard copies of your written work, or be given other instructions to follow. By taking this course, you agree that all assignments may undergo this review process and that the assignment may be included as a source document in Turnitin.com’s restricted access database solely for the purpose of detecting plagiarism in such documents. Any assignment not submitted according to the procedures given by the instructor may be penalized or may not be accepted at all.” (Office of Legal Counsel, October 17, 2005)

Students with Disabilities

Reasonable accommodations will be made for students with documented disabilities. For additional information, please see: http://saweb.memphis.edu/sds/
