

Course Description

ENGL 3501: Modern English Grammar

In this class we will examine the structure of the English language with a focus on syntax, morphology, and the lexicon. We will consider different Englishes and how English grammar varies within and across communities. Our approach will be primarily descriptive (i.e. focused on how grammar is used, not how it should be used), but we will also discuss grammar in relation to context and the peculiarities of standard and academic language. By the end of this course, students will be able to effectively use metalanguage to describe and analyze English grammar.
