SELECTING MARKETING AS YOUR MAJOR
Perhaps you tune into the Super Bowl as excited to watch the commercials as the game. Maybe you intuitively rack up social media followers. Or, it may be that you're analytical, strategic, creative, express your ideas clearly and can embrace the big picture. If these traits speak to you, then consider choosing Marketing as your major.

Marketing majors dig deep into consumer behavior and effective marketing strategies while gaining a broad understanding of business fundamentals that apply to many industries. You'll learn various facets of marketing, including marketing communications, digital and social media strategy, marketing analytics, sales and account management and brand management.

A CAREER IN DEMAND
In a world that’s changing dramatically, businesses need professionals who are creative and adaptable problem solvers. A degree in Marketing gives you precisely those tools by preparing you to be a strategic thinker, one who’s valuable to any industry, business or not-for-profit. And because marketing, brand strategy and sales are essential to any organization — from products and services to fundraising — marketing professionals are always in demand.

Minors: Social Media Marketing & Supply Chain Management

Dr. Tracy Cosenza really gave every effort to provide us with success in her course and for life post-college. She inspired me to get a minor in social media marketing and to take individuality as a marketer to the community space. I have never felt so empowered... I have found my passion, been provided the tools, and grown my network — all through the UofM.”
