CONNECTION TO THEME: Rights and Responsibilities in History

What was revolutionary/a reaction/a reform about your topic? Rosa Parks and other Montgomery community members desired reform of the segregated bus system . As a reaction to her arrest, advocates for civil rights challenged segregation as unconstitutional while city leaders and citizen groups stood behind the Montgomery law that preserved segregation on public transportation.

What was the impact of historical significance of your topic? The economic impact of the boycott succeeded in forcing the bus company and city leaders to reform the established laws and end segregation in the Montgomery Bus System. Consequently, civil rights advocates around the country were inspired to take similar non-violent action.

Put it all together into a thesis statement. Wanting reform to the segregated Montgomery Bus System, Rosa Parks was arrested for violating the Jim Crow Laws. Black residents of Montgomery and the NAACP reacted by boycotting the buses for 382 days leading to financial problems for the bus company and the eventual end of bus segregation. This boycott inspired similar protests helping end segregation, sparking the modern Civil Rights Movement, and securing greater equality for African Americans across the United States.

Can you prove it? Yes

How? Explain: City officials and the bus company refused to come to a compromise over segregation on buses until the boycott made a significant financial impact. Other civil rights leaders sent letters and requests to boycott participants seeking advice to start similar protests. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. used what he learned in Montgomery and applied it in other cities. These are documented in meeting minutes, testimonials, newspaper articles, letters, speeches, and a timeline of events.
