Bachelor of Arts in History

About the Department of History

More than two dozen History Department faculty teach courses that cover all major geographic areas and time periods. The department's particular strengths are African-American; Egyptology; Women, Gender, and Family; and Global History. Our faculty members are active researchers who teach both in the classroom and online.

About the Degree

Studying history at the University of Memphis introduces students to the richness and complexity of the human experience through a curriculum that emphasizes both the unity of that experience and the diversity resulting from such factors as cultural, social and gender differences.

History Degree Requirements:

Students will take the "history core" consisting of both halves of the U.S. survey, and both halves of the World Civilization survey classes.

In addition to these four core courses, students will complete their choice of seven upper division courses (3/4000 level). Of these, a maximum of four may be taken in any one field (United States, Latin American, Ancient, European, Asian, Middle Eastern and African) and at least one course of the seven must be non-American and non-European.

See course descriptions at memphis.edu/history/ug.htm for a complete list of course offerings.

Comprehensive Advising

The Department of History is dedicated to providing educational support, including academic advising, internship opportunities, writing tutoring, and career and postgraduate counseling to all U of M students interested in the field of history.

History majors meet with their faculty advisor each and every semester to discuss current academic plans and long-term educational and professional goals. Advisors are committed not only to helping history students plan their schedules and graduate on time, but also to assisting students with identifying and developing their passions and interests in the field of history, in the U of M academic community, and in the Memphis community at large.
