

INTRODUCING THE UNIVERSITY OF MEMPHIS BLOG REVIEW

Max Friedman,^{*} Grace Clement,[†] & Charlie Woodman[‡]

On behalf of Volume 57 of The University of Memphis Law Review, we are delighted to launch a new, online component of our journal, under the affectionate moniker, The University of Memphis Blog Review. We offer the Blog Review as our humble contribution to our journal's forthcoming volumes, the broader Memphis Law family, and the Memphis community at large. This project expresses our faith in the capacity of legal scholarship to channel timely, new, creative ideas into meaningful change in the spaces in which we reside. As such, Blog Review will be a forum for Essays and short-form Articles that center human experiences with the law in Memphis and the Mid-South, advocating law reform in the state of Tennessee and the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals.

We could not have launched this new endeavor without significant support. We leaned heavily on our dedicated Volume 57 Editorial Board and Staff, as well as our beloved faculty advisor, Professor Regina Hillman. Additionally, we are indebted to Professor Daniel Kiel for offering Blog Review's inaugural Essay. And we thank the rest of the Memphis Law faculty and administration of The University of Memphis Cecil C. Humphreys School of Law for supporting this exciting new addition to our journal's publications.

We see Blog Review as a crucial opportunity to grow our journal and highlight the outstanding scholarship of our students, faculty, and alumni. We look forward to establishing Blog Review as an enduring contribution to Memphis Law and the many communities it touches.

^{*} Editor-in-Chief, Volume 57, The University of Memphis Law Review.

[†] Managing Editor, Volume 57, The University of Memphis Law Review.

[‡] Business & Media Editor, Volume 57, The University of Memphis Law Review.