18. 135 S. Ct. 2726 (2015).

19. 553 U.S. 35 (2008) (plurality opinion). The plurality opinion written by Chief Justice Roberts constitutes the holding of the Court. Glossip, 135 S. Ct. at 2738 n.2 ("In Baze, the opinion of The Chief Justice was joined by two other Justices. Justices Scalia and Thomas took the broader position that a method of execution is consistent with the Eighth Amendment unless it is deliberately designed to inflict pain. Thus, as explained in Marks v. United States, The Chief Justice's opinion sets out the holding of the case." (citations omitted)).

20. 381 U.S. 479 (1965).

21. 554 U.S. 570 (2008).

22. See infra Part III.

II. ANALYSES OF BAZE V. REES AND GLOSSIP V. GROSS

In the canonical case McCulloch v. Maryland,[23] Maryland challenged the authority of the United States to establish the Bank of the United States.[24] In upholding the power of Congress to do so, Chief Justice Marshall, in his opinion for the Court, interpreted the "necessary and proper" clause in the Constitution.[25] This required the Court to explore the means-end relationship regarding the limited powers the Constitution granted to Congress. The Court's interpretation gave Congress broad discretion when legislating a means to an end: "Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consist with the letter and spirit of the constitution, are constitutional."[26] Applying this interpretation, the Court upheld Congress's creation of the Bank of the United States by concluding: "Throughout this vast republic . . . revenue is to be collected and expended, armies are to be marched and supported."[27] Congress's incorporation and operation of the Bank of the United States was a constitutional means to achieve its enumerated taxing power,[28] power to declare war,[29] and power to raise and support armies.[30]

The interpretation of the necessary and proper clause stated in McCulloch v. Maryland can be applied to test the constitutionality of a specific, identified means to an end; however, it does not consider the question: If the Constitution or a law enacted under it establishes an end, must there exist a constitutional means for achieving that end? This question was answered by the Court, al-

---

23. 17 U.S. 316 (1819).
24. Id. at 321–22.
25. Id. at 413–22; U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 18 (granting Congress the authority "[t]o make all Laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into Execution the foregoing Powers, and all other Powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof").
26. McCulloch, 17 U.S. at 421.
27. Id. at 408.
28. U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 1.
29. U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 11.
30. U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 12.

most two hundred years later, in Baze v. Rees[31] and Glossip v. Gross.[32]

Baze involved challenges to the means selected by Kentucky for executing prisoners sentenced to death—lethal injection. In Kentucky, death row inmates claimed that Kentucky's lethal injection protocol constituted cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the Eighth Amendment.[33] This protocol included injecting the prisoner with a series of three drugs.[34] The first, sodium thiopental, is intended to cause the prisoner to be unconscious and not suffocate in that state as a result of the second drug or experience pain from the third.[35] The prisoners claimed that Kentucky's protocol did not include adequate measures to assure that sodium thiopental would be administered properly so as to achieve these objectives.[36] They claimed that this constituted unnecessary risk and that subjecting them to this unnecessary risk violated the Eighth Amendment prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment.[37] A plurality of the Court rejected that claim,[38] reasoning as follows:

> We begin with the principle, settled by Gregg, that capital punishment is constitutional. It necessarily follows that there must be a means of carrying it out. Some risk of pain is inherent in any method of execution—no matter how humane—if only from the prospect of error in following the required procedure. It is clear, then, that the Constitution does

---

31. 553 U.S. 35 (2008) (plurality opinion).
32. 135 S. Ct. 2726 (2015).
33. U.S. CONST. amend. VIII ("Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted."); Baze, 553 U.S. at 41 ("Petitioners . . . contend that the lethal injection protocol is unconstitutional under the Eight Amendment's ban on 'cruel and unusual punishments' . . . .").
34. Baze, 553 U.S. at 44.
35. Id. ("The proper administration of the first drug ensures that the prisoner does not experience any pain associated with the paralysis and cardiac arrest caused by the second and third drugs.").
36. Id. at 49.
37. Id. at 47.
38. Id.

> not demand the avoidance of all risk of pain in carrying out executions.[39]

The prisoners' theory that any unnecessary risk of pain constituted cruel and unusual punishment, if accepted by the Court, would render all means of execution unconstitutional since all means are subject to error and thereby would make capital punishment itself unconstitutional. This would effectively defeat the well-established holding in Gregg that capital punishment is constitutional.[40] Instead of the "unnecessary risk" of harm standard, the Court applied a principle under which the prisoners must propose an alternative to Kentucky's protocol. The Court imposed high standards on the alternative: "To qualify, the alternative procedure must be feasible, readily implemented, and in fact significantly reduce a substantial risk of severe pain."[41] Because the prisoners failed to meet this burden-of-proof requirement, the Court affirmed the Kentucky Supreme Court's decision that Kentucky's procedure was consistent with the Eighth Amendment.[42]

Seven years after issuing its opinion in Baze, the Court heard Glossip, which was also a challenge to lethal injections as a means of carrying out the death sentence. In this case, the prisoners claimed that Oklahoma's lethal-injection protocol violated the Eighth Amendment because it created an unacceptable risk of severe pain.[43] The Court summarized their theory as follows: "They argue that midazolam, the first drug employed in the State's current three-drug protocol, fails to render a person insensate to pain."[44] The Court rejected their claim for two independent reasons. The first was based on Baze: "[T]he prisoners failed to identify a known and available alternative method of execution that entails a lesser risk of pain."[45] The second was a failure by the prisoners "to establish that Oklahoma's use of a massive dose of

---

39. Id. (citation omitted).
40. Gregg v. Georgia, 428 U.S. 153, 177 (1976) ("It is apparent from the text of the Constitution itself that the existence of capital punishment was accepted by the Framers.").
41. Baze, 553 U.S. at 52.
42. Id. at 63.
43. Glossip v. Gross, 135 S. Ct. 2726, 2731 (2015).
44. Id.
45. Id.

midazolam in its execution protocol entails a substantial risk of severe pain."[46]

In explaining its first reason for rejecting the prisoners' theory, the Court affirmed and restated the following analysis used by the plurality in Baze:

> [I]n Baze, seven Justices agreed that the three-drug protocol [used by Kentucky] does not violate the Eighth Amendment.
>
> Our decisions in this area have been animated in part by the recognition that because it is settled that capital punishment is constitutional, "[i]t necessarily follows that there must be a [constitutional] means of carrying it out." And because some risk of pain is inherent in any method of execution, we have held that the Constitution does not require the avoidance of all risk of pain. . . . Holding that the Eighth Amendment demands the elimination of essentially all risk of pain would effectively outlaw the death penalty altogether.[47]

The Court, as it had done in Baze, again refused to allow a backhanded overruling of Gregg v. Georgia and its affirmation of the constitutionality of the death penalty.

III. THE PRINCIPLE FROM BAZE AND GLOSSIP: A CONSTITUTIONAL END IMPLIES THE EXISTENCE OF CONSTITUTIONAL MEANS TO REALIZE THE END

In refusing to hold that all means of carrying it out were a violation of the Eighth Amendment, and thereby declaring the death penalty unconstitutional, the Court applied a theory of constitutional logic that should be appropriate beyond the Eighth Amendment. Stated in a more general form, the constitutional logic used by the Court in Baze and Glossip is that when there is an end or right protected by the Constitution, there must be a constitutional means to attain that end or right. The hypothesis of this Article is that this general form is a constitutional principle derived from Baze and Glossip; it will be referred to as the "General Principle" in the remainder of this Article.

46. Id.
47. Id. at 2732–33 (citations omitted).

The argument proving the General Principle can be constructed by recasting the logic used by the Court in Baze and Glossip as follows. If a right were protected by the Constitution, but all means of realizing that right were unconstitutional, that right would provide no benefit to the people nor would it be an effective restraint on the government; functionally, the right itself would be removed from the Constitution. This would be contrary to the intention of those who drafted and ratified the Constitution and the Bill of Rights. It would also be contrary to the Supreme Court's principle for interpreting the Constitution: "[E]very word [in the Constitution] must have its due force, and appropriate meaning; for it is evident from the whole instrument, that no word was unnecessarily used, or needlessly added."[48] Giving due force to a constitutional right requires a means through which it can be realized.

IV. The Argument Used to Establish the General Principle is Analogous to the Logic Applied by the Court to Recognize Un-enumerated Constitutional Rights in Griswold v. Connecticut

The logic discussed in Part III has been applied in the past by the Supreme Court to recognize constitutionally protected rights that were not listed in the Constitution or Bill of Rights as specific guarantees.[49] One of the most important examples of this is the Court's analysis in Griswold v. Connecticut,[50] in which the Court recognized a constitutionally protected right of privacy.[51] In Gris-

48. Wright v. United States, 302 U.S. 583, 588 (1938) (emphasis added) (quoting Holmes v. Jennison, 39 U.S. 540 (1840)).

49. Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479, 484 (1965) ("[S]pecific guarantees in the Bill of Rights have penumbras, formed by emanations from those guarantees that help give them life and substance."); see also U.S. CONST. amend. IX ("The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.").

50. Griswold, 381 U.S. at 479.

51. Id. at 485 ("The present case, then, concerns a relationship lying within the zone of privacy created by several fundamental constitutional guarantees."). It is interesting to note that a right to privacy is included in the European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights. European Convention on Hu-wold, a Connecticut law made it a crime for married couples to use contraceptive devices and for a physician to advise couples about contraceptive devices.[52] The Court found that the Connecticut law did not violate any enumerated constitutional provision.[53] It held, consistent with the Ninth Amendment,[54] that there were other rights, un-enumerated, but still protected by the Constitution.[55] The Court's logic in arriving at this holding begins with the premise that each enumerated right created peripheral rights.[56] For example, in the First Amendment:

> The right of freedom of speech and press includes not only the right to utter or to print, but the right to distribute, the right to receive, the right to read and freedom of inquiry, freedom of thought, and freedom to teach—indeed the freedom of the entire university community.[57]

Regarding the First Amendment, the Court held that it created a right of association that included more than "the right to attend a meeting [and that] it includes the right to express one's attitudes or philosophies by membership in a group or by affiliation with it or by other lawful means."[58] The Court then gave its logic for declaring the existence of, and protection for, these peripheral constitutional rights: "Association in that context is a form of expression of opinion; and while it is not expressly included in the First Amendment its existence is necessary in making the express guar- man Rights, art. 8. This right was recognized as creating obligations on the part of the government to protect members of the public, that is, as a positive right, by the European Court of Human Rights. Lopez Ostra v. Spain, 436 Eur. Ct. H.R. 515 (1994), https://www.escr-net.org/docs/i/673084 (follow "Lopez_Ostra_v_Spain_Decision.doc" hyperlink for document).

---

52. Griswold, 381 U.S. at 480.

53. Id. at 481–86.

54. U.S. CONST. amend. IX ("The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparate others retained by the people.").

55. Griswold, 381 U.S. at 484.

56. Id. at 483.

57. Id. at 482 (citations omitted).

58. Id. at 483.

antees fully meaningful."[59] What is important for this Article is that, in Griswold, the Court developed a logical process which recognized un-enumerated rights called peripheral rights, and that the Court found them enforceable even if the peripheral rights were positive rights.[60]

In the reasoning of the preceding paragraph, the Court discussed the First Amendment; however, that was merely a particular example of its overall logic. It was in no way meant to suggest that the logic only applies to the First Amendment. In fact, in Griswold the Court combined peripheral rights from the First, Third, Fourth, and Fifth Amendments to form the constitutionally protected right of privacy.[61]

V. A SUPREME COURT DECISION WHICH SUPPORTS THE GENERAL PRINCIPLE

No decided Supreme Court case better represents the application and recognition of the General Principle than District of Columbia v. Heller.[62] The plaintiff, Dick Anthony Heller, challenged a District of Columbia law, which "totally ban[ned] handgun possession in the home."[63] Heller claimed this law violated his rights under the Second Amendment[64] to keep and bear arms.[65] The Court held that the strict scrutiny standard must be applied to 59. Id. (emphasis added).

---

60. See id. at 482–83.

61. Id. at 484. Finding a peripheral right protected by the Constitution by implication from several enumerated rights is an indication that the Bill of Rights is as much a system of rights as a "bill," that is, a list of unrelated rights. When interpreting the Bill of Rights, one should take into account the systems dynamics of the document as a whole and the multidimensional nature of each of the enumerated rights.

62. 554 U.S. 570 (2008).

63. Id. at 628.

64. U.S. CONST. amend. II ("A well regulated Militia, being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear Arms, shall not be infringed.").

65. Heller, 554 U.S. at 573 ("We consider whether a District of Columbia prohibition on the possession of usable handguns in the home violates the Second Amendment to the Constitution.").

the District of Columbia's law.[66] In striking down this law, the Court stated:

> As the quotations earlier in this opinion demonstrate, the inherent right of self-defense has been central to the Second Amendment right. The handgun ban amounts to a prohibition of an entire class of "arms" that is overwhelmingly chosen by American society for that lawful purpose. The prohibition extends, moreover, to the home, where the need for defense of self, family, and property is most acute. Under any of the standards of scrutiny that we have applied to enumerated constitutional rights, banning from the home "the most preferred firearm in the nation to 'keep' and use for protection of one's home and family," would fail constitutional muster.[67]

The Court then held that the District of Columbia had an obligation to provide Heller with the means of exercising this constitutional right; this meant that the District must issue Heller a license.[68] This holding may be interpreted as applying the principle that when there is an end or right protected by the Constitution, the state must provide a constitutional means to attain it, i.e., a means to an end. The Supreme Court's opinion provides strong evidence that this is the interpretation the majority intended when it cited, with approval,[69] the following quotation from the Alabama Supreme Court: "A statute which, under the pretence of regulating, amounts to a destruction of the right, or which requires arms to be so borne as to render them wholly useless for the purpose of defence, would be clearly unconstitutional."[70] If it were so inter-

---

66. See id. at 628 n.27 ("If all that was required to overcome the right to keep and bear arms was a rational basis, the Second Amendment would be redundant with the separate constitutional prohibitions on irrational laws, and would have no effect.").

67. Id. at 628–29 (citations omitted) (quoting Parker v. District of Columbia, 478 F.3d 370, 400 (D.C. Cir. 2007)).

68. Id. at 635.

69. Id. at 629.

70. State v. Reid, 1 Ala. 612, 616–17 (1840).

preted, Heller would clearly constitute precedent for the General Principle of this Article, specifically that when there is an end or right protected by the Constitution, there must be a constitutional means to attain that end or right.[71]

VI. AN ONGOING STRUGGLE THAT COULD LEAD TO A TEST CASE FOR THE GENERAL PRINCIPLE

The battle over abortion rights continues to this day, and it has been fought in legislatures, in courts, in the media, and on the streets.[72] A brief review of the tactics and successes of the anti-abortion rights groups from Roe v. Wade[73] to the present will develop the factual and legal settings from which there might arise a Supreme Court case in which the General Principle advocated by this Article could be argued.

Roe, the Plaintiff, challenged Texas criminal statutes that criminalized abortions unless they were "for the purpose of saving the life of the mother."[74] The Court acknowledged the social, as well as the legal dimensions of this conflict as follows: "We forthwith acknowledge our awareness of the sensitive and emotional nature of the abortion controversy, of the vigorous opposing views, even among physicians, and of the deep and seemingly absolute convictions that the subject inspires."[75] The Court reaffirmed its holding in Griswold "that a right of personal privacy, or a guarantee of certain areas or zones of privacy, does exist under the Constitution."[76] This right may be limited by a state, said Justice Blackmun in his opinion for the Court, only if the state could prove "a compelling state interest,"[77] and that its statutes were

71. See supra Part III.

72. See, e.g., Caitlin E. Borgmann, Roe v. Wade at 40: Roe v. Wade's 40th Anniversary: A Moment of Truth for the Anti-Abortion-Rights Movement?, 24 STAN. L. & POL'Y REV. 245 (2013) (tracing the history of the conflict between pro-abortion and anti-abortion forces and analyzing the present climate of that struggle).

73. 410 U.S. 113 (1973).

74. Id. at 118.

75. Id. at 116.

76. Id. at 152. The Court held that this right of privacy was founded in the Fourteenth Amendment's concept "of personal liberty and restrictions upon state action." Id. at 153.

77. Id. at 156.

"narrowly drawn to express only the legitimate state interest at stake."[78] This is the familiar strict scrutiny test, which is by far the most demanding standard imposed on government actions.[79] This was the standard applicable to state regulations that restricted abortions during the period before viability of the fetus, the point called the "compelling point" by the Court.[80] The compelling point was approximately at the end of the first trimester of pregnancy.[81] After the compelling point, the states were free to enact laws to "regulate the abortion procedure in ways that are reasonably related to maternal health,"[82] a standard much lower than strict scrutiny. The Court gave examples of the types of laws that could satisfy this lower constitutional standard; these include "requirements as to the qualifications of the person who is to perform the abortion . . . [and] the facility in which the procedure is to be performed."[83] Roe also allows states to enact restrictions that vary depending on the length of the pregnancy.[84]

As discussed below, states recognized authoritative advice[85] when they saw it and began to pass laws that made both obtaining and performing an abortion costlier, more inconvenient, and more difficult.[86] Anti-abortion groups viewed the five-to-four Roe decision as reversible if one of the justices in the majority re-

---

78. Id. at 155.

79. See, e.g., Richard H. Fallon, Jr., Strict Judicial Scrutiny, 54 UCLA L. REV. 1267, 1273 (2007) ("[T]he requirement of [strict scrutiny] also contrasts with an intermediate form of scrutiny under which the government, in defending challenged legislation, must point to an interest that is 'important.' Within this hierarchy, [strict scrutiny] stand[s] at the top.").

80. Roe, 410 U.S. at 163.

81. Id.

82. Id. at 164.

83. Id. at 163.

84. Id. at 150. ("Moreover, the risk to the woman increases as her pregnancy continues. Thus, the State retains a definite interest in protecting the woman's own health and safety when an abortion is proposed at a late stage of pregnancy.").

85. See Phillip M. Kannan, Advisory Opinions by Federal Courts, 32 U. RICH. L. REV. 769 (1998) (demonstrating that the Supreme Court may give what amounts to advisory opinions in dicta and by discussing examples).

86. See infra notes 98–101 and accompanying text.

tired and was replaced by a justice who opposed abortion.[87] It was widely anticipated and theorized that when President Reagan appointed Justice O'Connor this goal had been achieved.[88]

Planned Parenthood v. Casey[89] gave the Court the opportunity to test this hypothesis. At issue in Casey was the Pennsylvania Abortion Control Act ("PACA").[90] The judgment of the Court was given by Justice O'Connor, Justice Kennedy, and Justice Souter in a joint opinion.[91] They announced early in Section I of the joint opinion: "[T]he essential holding of Roe v. Wade should be retained and once again reaffirmed."[92] The Court repeated this reassuring message later in Section IV: "Our adoption of the undue burden analysis does not disturb the central holding of Roe v. Wade, and we reaffirm that holding."[93] In spite of this reassuring rhetoric, Casey did reverse important holdings in Roe. Perhaps the most important of these is that the strict scrutiny standard for state regulations applicable before viability under Roe is replaced by an "undue burden" standard in Casey.[94] Under this standard, a state regulation that has "the purpose or effect of placing a substantial obstacle in the path of a woman seeking an abor-

---

87. See Christopher E. Smith & Thomas R. Hensley, Unfilled Aspirations: The Court-Packing Efforts of Presidents Regan and Bush, 57 ALB. L. REV. 1111, 1117–18 (1994) (noting that Reagan and Bush attempted to "pack the Supreme Court with Justices who would undo the objectionable liberal decisions of the preceding three decades," and one reason Reagan chose O'Connor was because O'Connor "explicitly criticized the reasoning in Roe and . . . endorsed government restrictions on abortion"(citations omitted)).

88. See Ronald Reagan, Interview with Eleanor Clift, Jack Nelson, and Joel Havemann of the Los Angeles Times, RONALD REAGAN PRESIDENTIAL LIBR. & MUSEUM (June 23, 1986), http://www.reagan.utexas.edu/archives/speeches/1986/62386e.htm (Opposition to Roe on the bench grew when President Reagan, who supported legislative restrictions on abortion, began making federal judicial appointments in 1981. Reagan denied that there was any litmus test: "I have never given a litmus test to anyone that I have appointed to the bench . . . . I also place my confidence in the fact that the one thing that I do seek are judges that will interpret the law and not write the law.").

89. 505 U.S. 833 (1992).

90. Relevant provisions are reproduced in Casey, 505 U.S. at 902 (appendix to the opinion of O'Connor, Kennedy, and Souter, JJ.).

91. Id. at 843.

92. Id. at 846.

93. Id. at 879.

94. Id. at 874.

tion of a nonviable fetus" is unconstitutional.[95] Not only is this substantive component of the undue burden standard less protective than strict scrutiny of the woman's right, the new standard also shifts the burden of proof from the state having to prove the elements of strict scrutiny to the woman seeking an abortion, who now has to identify an obstacle that is impeding her abortion and then prove that it is a substantial impediment.[96] The strict scrutiny standard was replaced by a "reasonable relation" standard.[97] The actual holding of the Court is thus in conflict with its rhetoric.

The Court continues on to provide examples of types of state pre-viability regulations which may be constitutional.[98] These examples include means by which the state, parents, or guardian of a minor "may express profound respect for the life of the unborn;"[99] measures "designed to persuade her to choose childbirth over abortion;"[100] and "[r]egulations designed to foster the health of a woman seeking an abortion."[101] Next, the Court considered post-viability state regulation and concluded:

> We also reaffirm Roe's holding that "subsequent to viability, the State in promoting its interest in the potentiality of human life may, if it chooses, regulate and even proscribe, abortion except where it is necessary, in appropriate medical judgment, for the preservation of the life or health of the mother."[102]

After establishing the general doctrines summarized in the preceding paragraphs, the Court turned to the specific requirements of PACA. The first of these is that informed consent must be given after the pregnant woman is provided with information describ-

---

95. Id. at 877.

96. See Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 U.S. 968, 972 (1997) (reversing the appellate court for enjoining abortion restriction where plaintiffs had not proven that the requirement imposed an undue burden).

97. See Gonzales v. Carhart, 550 U.S. 124, 166 (2007) ("Considerations of marginal safety, including the balance of risks, are within the legislative competence when the regulation is rational and in pursuit of legitimate ends.").

98. Casey, 505 U.S. at 877.

99. Id.

100. Id. at 878.

101. Id.

102. Id. at 879 (quoting Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 164–65 (1973)).

ing the fetus, the medical assistance for child birth, child support, adoption agencies, and after a 24 hour waiting period.[103] In upholding this part of PACA, the Court reconsidered its decisions in Akron v. Akron Center for Reproductive Health, Inc. (Akron I)[104] and Thornburg v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists[105] and overruled both.[106] The information requirement and waiting period were upheld even if they were intended by the State to express a preference for childbirth over abortion.[107] Reporting requirements in PACA were also upheld under the undue burden test.[108]

The only section of PACA struck down by the Court under the undue burden standard was the requirement that wives notify their husbands of their intent to have an abortion.[109] This provision did not survive under the new standard because it would give the husband "[a] troubling degree of authority over his wife."[110]

As a result of Casey, states that wanted to restrict the constitutionally protected rights of pregnant women who wanted abor-

---

103. Id. at 881.

104. 462 U.S. 416, 451 (1983) (invalidating sections of Akron's "Regulations of Abortions" ordinance that dealt with parent consent, informed consent, a twenty-four-hour waiting period, and the disposal of fetal remains).

105. 476 U.S. 747, 764 (1986) (affirming the holding which invalidated specific provisions of Pennsylvania's 1982 Abortion Control Act).

106. Casey, 505 U.S. at 882 ("To the extent Akron I and Thornburgh find a constitutional violation when the government requires, as it does here, the giving of truthful, nonmisleading information about the nature of the abortion procedure, the attendant health risks and those of childbirth, and the 'probable gestational age' of the fetus, those cases are inconsistent with Roe's acknowledgment of an important interest in potential life, and are overruled." (citations omitted)).

107. Id. at 883 ("[W]e depart from the holdings of Akron I and Thornburgh to the extent that we permit a State to further its legitimate goal of protecting the life of the unborn by enacting legislation aimed at ensuring a decision that is mature and informed, even when in so doing the State expresses a preference for childbirth over abortion.").

108. Id. at 900–01.

109. 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 3209 (West 1990); see also Casey, 505 U.S. at 898 ("These considerations confirm our conclusion that § 3209 is invalid.").

110. Casey, 505 U.S. at 898. The Court justified its rejection of § 3209 by stating: "A State may not give to a man the kind of dominion over his wife that parents exercise over their children." Id.

tions had two new advantages: (1) the state restrictions must meet only an undue burden standard rather than the most demanding standard in constitutional law, strict scrutiny;[111] and (2) by combining the examples given in Roe of pre-viability restrictions that would be upheld even under strict scrutiny with those upheld in Casey under the undue burden standard, states have a catalogue of examples and models to choose from, extrapolate from, build on, and generalize. Many states have used this catalogue extensively. More specifically, they have enacted:

> [Laws banning] common abortion procedures; requirements that abortions be performed in hospitals; licensure, reporting, and other requirements for abortion facilities; limits on the performance of abortions after fetal viability; requirements for parental consent or notice for minors, or husband consent or notice for married women; mandatory delivery of information designed to discourage abortions; waiting periods; and bans on publicly funded abortions or use of public facilities for abortions[112] . . . . [And] pre-abortion ultrasound requirements [to] try to persuade women to forego abortion[113] . . . . [And] abortion clinic standards . . . [and] healthcare professionals' right to refuse to provide treatment . . . .[114]

Each of the conditions listed above makes abortions more expensive; more time consuming; less convenient; less accessible; a more difficult moral choice; less autonomous; and/or riskier for the woman seeking an abortion and for the person or institution willing to provide it. If a trend of building burden on burden becomes prevalent, even if no single one would constitute an undue burden under Casey, the cumulative result could be that the means to the constitutionally protected rights of pregnant women are ef-

111. Id. at 874 ("Only where state regulation poses an undue burden on a woman's ability to make this decision does the power of the State reach into the heart of the liberty protected by the Due Process Clause.").

112. Borgmann, supra note 72, at 253.

113. Id. at 259.

114. Id. at 261.

fectively foreclosed, especially for poorer women.[115] Under these circumstances, a pregnant woman could assert the positive right, advocated in this Article, called the General Principle.[116] Under that principle, she would claim that because she has constitutionally protected rights even under Casey, the government must provide her constitutional means to achieve those rights.

The case Planned Parenthood of Greater Texas Surgical Health Services v. Abbott[117] may provide Planned Parenthood of Greater Texas Surgical Health Services ("Texas Surgical") the opportunity to persuade the Court that the General Principle should be applied. In this case Texas Surgical challenged two provisions of a Texas statute:

> The first requires that a physician performing or inducing an abortion have admitting privileges on the date of the abortion at a hospital no more than thirty miles from the location where the abortion is provided. The second mandates that the administration of abortion-inducing drugs comply with the protocol authorized by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), with limited exceptions.[118]

The abortion clinics petitioned the Supreme Court for certiorari to reverse the holdings of court of appeals, and certiorari was granted in November 2015, with Texas Surgical being consolidated with other cases and renamed Whole Woman's Health v. Cole.[119] In their petition, the clinics assert that other provisions of 115. See Abortion and Down Syndrome, N. Y. TIMES, Aug. 25, 2015, at A18 ("[Ohio] lawmakers . . . [have] plowed ahead with 16 abortion restrictions, all signed by Mr. Kasich, since 2011. . . . These measures are part of a larger national effort to undermine reproductive rights and, eventually, to overturn Roe v. Wade in full . . . .").

116. See supra Part III.

117. 748 F.3d 583 (5th Cir. 2014), cert. granted sub nom. Whole Woman's Health v. Cole, 136 S. Ct. 499 (2015) (mem.); see also Adam Liptak, Texas Abortion Providers Ask Supreme Court to Reverse Ruling on Clinics, N.Y. TIMES (Sept. 3, 2015), http://www.nytimes.com/2015/09/04/us/politics/supreme-court-ruling-abortion-clinics-texas.html.

118. Abbott, 748 F.3d at 587.

119. Whole Woman's Health v. Cole, 136 S. Ct. 499 (2015) (mem.); see also Liptak, supra note 117.

this law have caused twenty of the forty-one abortion clinics in Texas to close,[120] and these two provisions would reduce the number of abortion clinics in Texas to ten.[121]

The impact of these two provisions of the Texas law on women seeking abortions was summarized as follows: "The Plaintiffs presented evidence that, as a result of the closure of approximately one third of Texas abortion clinics and the remaining clinics' inability to meet the inevitably increased demand, approximately 22,000 women per year will be precluded from accessing abortion services in Texas."[122]

It is these 22,000 women who would have standing to bring a suit under the General Principle that Texas must offer them a means for them to obtain a lawful abortion. They would argue that they have a well-established, constitutionally protected right to an abortion and that the state must provide a means by which they can realize that right. Just as the District of Columbia must provide Heller with a means to exercise his constitutionally protected right of self-defense in his home, Texas must provide women seeking an abortion in Texas a means to that end.

VII. CONCLUSION

Constitutionally protected rights do not exist as isolated points on a plane. Each is a multi-dimensional complex of rights. For example, although the Second Amendment does not mention self-defense, the Supreme Court recognized it as an "inherent" component of the rights expressed to keep and bear arms.[123] In Griswold v. Connecticut, the Court recognized that each constitutionally protected right had peripheral-penumbral constitutionally

120. Liptak, supra note 117 ("Other parts of the law have already caused about half of the state's 41 abortion clinics to close. If the contested provisions take effect, Wednesday's filing said, the number of clinics will again be halved.").

121. Id.

122. Abbott, 769 F.3d at 345 (Dennis, J., dissenting).

123. District of Columbia v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570, 628 (2008) ("As the quotations earlier in this opinion demonstrate, the inherent right of self-defense has been central to the Second Amendment right.").

protected rights.[124] For example, regarding the First Amendment, the Court stated: "[T]he First Amendment has a penumbra where privacy is protected from governmental intrusion."[125] In addition to recognizing and protecting rights that are inherent to or peripheral to enumerated constitutionally protected rights, this Article argues that there are constitutionally protected rights which are means necessary for protecting the enumerated and un-enumerated rights, and further, that the state must provide these means.

This argument is based on Baze and Glossip, which established the principle that where the state has a constitutional power to achieve a specific objective or outcome, there must be constitutional means for carrying out or achieving the objective or outcome.[126] The General Principle posited in this Article[127] makes the logical extrapolation from Baze and Glossip that when a person has a constitutionally protected right, the state must provide a constitutionally protected means to achieve it. Thus, each complex, multidimensional, constitutionally protected right includes (1) inherent rights, (2) peripheral-penumbral rights, and (3) necessary means for achieving constitutionally protected rights.

The General Principle posited in this Article reflects the basic logic of Principle 1 of the Stockholm Declaration.[128] In the context of U.S. law, the General Principle has been applied by the Supreme Court in Baze and Glossip regarding the Eighth Amendment and, very probably, in District of Columbia v. Heller regarding the Second Amendment. This Article posits that the General Principle applies to all constitutionally protected rights. As courts begin to recognize the multidimensional aspects of constitutionally protected rights, particularly the General Principle that when there is an end or right protected by the Constitution, there must be a constitutional means to attain that end or right, the landscape of 124. 381 U.S. 479, 484 (1965) ("The foregoing cases suggest that specific guarantees in the Bill of Rights have penumbras, formed by emanations from those guarantees that help give them life and substance.").

---

125. Id. at 483 (emphasis added).

126. See supra Part III.

127. See supra Part III.

128. See Stockholm Declaration, supra note 1 ("Man has the fundamental right to freedom, equality and adequate conditions of life, in an environment of a quality [that is, the necessary means] that permits a life of dignity and well-being, [that is, to a protected right]. . . .").

analysis and application of existing constitutional interpretation may begin to shift from a blunt categorical refusal to recognize positive rights to a more nuanced normative analysis. Conservative Justices, for example, may be willing to accept a positive right under the Second Amendment.

Learning Outcomes in a Flipped Classroom: A Comparison of Civil Procedure II Test Scores Between Students in a Traditional Class and a Flipped Class

KATHARINE T. SCHAFFZIN*

I. INTRODUCTION 662
II. WHAT IS FLIPPING AND WHY IS IT POPULAR? 663
    A. The History of Flipping 667
    B. The Perceived Benefits of Flipping 669
    C. Perceived Concerns About Flipping 675
III. THE ROLE OF FLIPPED LEARNING IN LAW SCHOOL PEDAGOGY 680
    A. The Langdellian Model 680
    B. Post-Modern Legal Education 682
IV. THE CIVIL PROCEDURE EXPERIMENT 686
    A. Spring 2013: A Traditional Approach 686
    B. Spring 2014: The Flipped Classroom 687
    C. The Final Exam 689
V. THE RESULTS 690
VI. CONCLUSION 692

* Katharine T. Schaffzin is Associate Professor and Director of Faculty Development at the University of Memphis Cecil C. Humphreys School of Law. This Article was made possible thanks to the support of the Law School, as well as the research assistance of Rachel N. Cade. The library and administrative assistance of Howard Bailey, Lucinda Valero, and Cheryl Edwards was invaluable to this project. The author thanks the faculty of the Law School for their helpful suggestions in shaping the direction of this article, as well as Daniel M. Schaffzin for his generous support. The input of Jeremy Bock, Michele Pistone, and Andrea Curcio was essential to this article.

I. INTRODUCTION

By now, many legal educators have heard of a "flipped classroom," even if they may not be familiar with its meaning. The odds are great that more and more law students have experienced a flipped classroom in high school, college, or even in law school,[1] although they may be unfamiliar with the pedagogical term. After learning about how the flipped classroom is being adapted for the law school course,[2] I became convinced that such an approach to teaching could benefit my students' learning outcomes.

In January 2014, I decided to adapt my own Civil Procedure II materials to this new format. Unbeknownst to my students, I tracked the performance of this class to compare it to that of my Civil Procedure II class from the preceding year.[3] Assigning the same readings from the same texts in both 2013 and 2014,[4] I changed only the mode in which I delivered the material to my students. Information I had previously presented to my class in 2013 in the form of a lecture interspersed with Socratic dialogue I now provided to the 2014 class online in advance of class and indefinitely thereafter in the form of PowerPoint slides with my lec-

1. See generally infra Part II.

2. I heard about flipped learning as early as 2013, but I was not inspired to make a change until I heard Michele Pistone of Villanova Law School speak about the practice and her LegalED website at the 2014 Annual Meeting of the Association of American Law Schools in January 2014 in New York, New York.

3. The idea of comparing the performance of the 2013 and 2014 classes belongs to Andrea Curcio of Georgia State University Law School. Professor Curcio urged me to empirically study the results of my experiment in teaching methods in response to my guest blog post on LegalED.

4. Both classes read assignments from JACK H. FRIEDENTHAL, ARTHUR R. MILLER, JOHN E. SEXTON, & HELEN HERSHKOFF, CIVIL PROCEDURE: CASES & MATERIALS (West, 10th ed. 2009), LEWIS A. GROSSMAN & ROBERT G. VAUGHN, A DOCUMENTARY COMPANION TO A CIVIL ACTION (Foundation Press, 4th ed. 2008), and JONATHAN HARR, A CIVIL ACTION (no specific edition was assigned). Admittedly, each class was assigned the most current rules supplement which differed slightly, as one might expect. Compare JACK H. FRIEDENTHAL, ARTHUR R. MILLER, JOHN E. SEXTON, & HELEN HERSHKOFF, 2012–2013 CIVIL PROCEDURE: SUPPLEMENT (West 2012), with JACK H. FRIEDENTHAL, ARTHUR R. MILLER, JOHN E. SEXTON, & HELEN HERSHKOFF, 2013–2014 CIVIL PROCEDURE: SUPPLEMENT (West 2013).

ture interposed as voiceover. Although I had also assigned hypothetical problems to the class in 2013, it was not uncommon that we would not have time to discuss all of those assigned problems in class. Inside the classroom in 2014, however, the class worked through assigned problems and many more requiring students to apply the content read and viewed in advance of class to hypothetical situations. I administered final examinations in both April 2013 and 2014 that were fifty percent identical. The content of the course and half the examination were the same in 2013 and 2014. The only thing that had changed was how I delivered that content to students.

This article documents my experience flipping a law school course in Civil Procedure. In Part II, I introduce the reader to the concept of flipped learning, as well as its development.[5] In Part III, I describe the evolution of the traditional law school learning environment and discuss new trends in legal pedagogy.[6] In Part IV, I explain the similarities and differences between my traditional course in Spring 2013 and my flipped course in 2014.[7] In Part V, I compare the performances of my 2013 and 2014 classes on the same exam and draw conclusions therefrom.[8] In Part VI, I conclude that the flipped learning experience was, overall, a success, although the objective performance of students on my exam was statistically insignificant.[9]

II. WHAT IS FLIPPING AND WHY IS IT POPULAR?

The concept of a flipped classroom is relatively new; in 2007, two chemistry teachers first developed it in a high school classroom in Colorado.[10] The idea took hold quickly and educa-

5. See infra Part II.
6. See infra Part III.
7. See infra Part IV.
8. See infra Part V.
9. See infra Part VI.
10. NOORA HAMDAN ET AL., THE FLIPPED LEARNING MODEL: A WHITE PAPER BASED ON THE LITERATURE REVIEW TITLED A REVIEW OF FLIPPED LEARNING 3 (2013) ("Two rural Colorado chemistry teachers, Jonathan Bergmann and Aaron Sams, are often referred to as the pioneers of Flipped Learning. Concerned that students frequently missed end-of-day classes to travel to other schools for competitions, games or other events, they began to use live video recordings and screencasting software in 2007 to record lectures, demonstrators from high schools, then colleges, and in recent years, even a few law schools quickly began adopting this teaching method.[11] What is involved? "As its name suggests, flipping describes the inversion of expectations in the traditional college lecture."[12] Essentially, educators reverse what typically happens in a classroom with what usually happens at home.

> A flipped classroom inverts the traditional education model so that the content is delivered outside of class, while class time is spent on activities normally considered "homework." For example, students may access instructional material through videos, podcasts or online tutorials before the class meeting. Then during class time, students work on activities which force them to apply what they have learned.[13] tions, and slide presentations with annotations."); Catherine A. Lemmer, A View from the Flip Side: Using the "Inverted Classroom" to Enhance the Legal Information Literacy of the International LL.M. Student, 105 LAW LIBR. J. 461, 464–65 (2013); Seven Things You Should Know About . . . Flipped Classrooms, EDUCAUSE (Feb. 2012), http://net.educause.edu/ir/library/pdf/ELI7081.pdf; The Teacher's Guide to Flipped Classrooms, EDUDEMIC, http://www.edudemic.com/guides/flipped-classrooms-guide/ (last visited Mar. 14, 2016); Antonio Membrillo, The Flipped Classroom, PREZI (Jan. 16, 2014), https://prezi.com/dynqyw5ubkio/the-flipped-classroom/ ("Many factors influenced the creation and adoption of the flipped classroom model. However, two specific innovators played a key role. Teachers Jonathan Bergman and Aaron Sams at Woodland Park High School in Woodland Park, CO, discovered software to record PowerPoint presentations. They recorded and posted their live lectures online for students who missed class.").

---

11. See infra Section II.A.

12. Dan Berrett, How 'Flipping' the Classroom Can Improve the Traditional Lecture, CHRON. HIGHER ED. (Feb. 19, 2012), http://chronicle.com/article/How-Flipping-the-Classroom/130857 ("It takes many forms, including interactive engagement, just-in-time teaching (in which students respond to Web-based questions before class, and the professor uses this feedback to inform his or her teaching), and peer instruction."); see K.K. DuVivier, Goodbye Christopher Columbus Langdell?, 43 ENVTL. L. REP. NEWS & ANALYSIS 10475, 10476 (2013).

13. Candice Benjes-Small & Katelyn Tucker, Keeping up with . . . Flipped Classrooms, ASS'N C. & RES. LIBR, http://www.ala.org/acrl/publications/keeping_up_with/flipped_classrooms; Nicole Larson, The Flipped

In theory, students walk into the classroom with a greater understanding of the material than they would otherwise have walking into a traditional classroom. "But the techniques all share the same underlying imperative: Students cannot passively receive material in class . . . . Instead they gather the information largely outside of class, by reading, watching recorded lectures, or listening to podcasts."[14]

The process of flipped learning, also called an inverted classroom or reverse instruction,[15] seems simple: present information before class and do homework together in class.[16] However, this explanation "does not adequately represent the practice of what researchers are calling the flipped classroom. This definition would imply that the flipped classroom merely represents a reordering of classroom and at-home activities. In practice, however, this is not the case."[17] There is much more to flipping a class than putting a lecture online and doing homework in class. The process involves "a 'pedagogical approach in which direct instruction moves from the group learning space to the individual learning space, and the resulting group space is transformed into a dynamic, interactive learning environment where the educator guides students as they apply concepts and engage creatively in the subject

---

Classroom Inverts Traditional Teaching Methods, PREZI (Feb. 13, 2014) ("The flipped classroom inverts traditional teaching methods, delivering instruction online outside of class and moving 'homework' into the classroom.").

14. Berrett, supra note 12.

15. DuVivier, supra note 12, at 10480.

16. JACOB BISHOP & MATTHEW A. VERLEGER, THE FLIPPED CLASSROOM: A SURVEY OF THE RESEARCH 5 (2013), http://www.asee.org/public/conferences/20/papers/6219/view ("'Inverting the classroom means that events that have traditionally taken place inside the classroom now take place outside the classroom and vice versa.'").

17. Id.; JESSICA YARBRO ET AL., EXTENSION OF A REVIEW OF FLIPPED LEARNING 5 (2014), http://flippedlearning.org/cms/lib07/VA01923112/Centricity/Domain/41/Extension%20of%20Flipped%20Learning%20Lit%20Review%20June%202014.pdf ("The terms 'flipped classrooms' and 'Flipped Learning' are not synonymous and it is a common mistake usually perpetuated in the opening paragraph of articles written on the topic. What is often defined as 'school work at home and home work at school' is overly simplistic and does not cover the range of active engagement within a flipped classroom using a Flipped Learning approach.").

matter.'"[18] By encouraging the development of innovative teaching methods, flipped learning also encourages and facilitates the use of new technologies and techniques to educate the class.[19]

Additionally, instead of assigning problems for students to solve alone as homework, the instructor guides students as they work through problems, or other interactive activities, during class as a whole.[20] This offers a number of benefits. First, "[t]he immediacy of teaching in this way enables students' misconceptions to be corrected well before they emerge on a midterm or final exam. The result, according to a growing body of research, is more learning."[21] Second, from an assessment perspective, the professor has the advantage of measuring student learning in the moment. Third, and most touted, students engage in active, collective learning as a whole. It is in this way of inverting the traditional in-class delivery of substantive information and at-home application of such substantive information with an at-home delivery of content and in-class application of that content that a class is flipped.

---

18. YARBRO ET AL., supra note 17 (citation omitted); see Lemmer, supra note 10, at 465.

19. YARBRO ET AL., supra note 17 ("By moving from a flipped class to actively engaging in Flipped Learning, teachers are able to implement new or various methodologies into their classrooms."); see also Lemmer, supra note 10, at 465 ("[F]lipped classrooms use technology to invert the traditional teaching environment. Although there is no single model, the term is generally used for those class structures that use technology to deliver online instructional materials as preclass homework and then repurpose class time for individual or group lab work. The instructional materials become a study aid to help students complete the research assignment in the lab. During lab sessions, the professor serves as a coach or advisor, encouraging students in individual or collaborative efforts.").

20. Berrett, supra note 12 ("And when they are in class, students do what is typically thought to be homework, solving problems with their professors or peers, and applying what they learn to new contexts. They continue this process on their own outside class."); Teachers "Doing the Flip" to Help Students Become Learners, THE DAILY RIFF (May 13, 2011, 11:57 AM), http://www.thedailyriff.com/articles/teachers-doing-the-flip-to-help-students-become-learners-531.php ("[T]he teacher becomes the 'guide on the side' where students are using the class/school experience as a fully interactive experience WITH the teacher—instead of the teacher being the one-way traditional talking head.").

21. Berrett, supra note 12.

A. The History of Flipping

Flipped learning is less than a decade old. In 2007, two high school chemistry teachers at Woodland Park High School in rural Woodland Park, Colorado, Jonathon Bergman and Aaron Sams, began screencasting their lectures to students online.[22] Their goal was to keep those students who were absent or involved in extracurricular activities involved in learning the assigned material without falling behind.[23] Flipped classrooms quickly evolved beyond Woodland Park High School. "In 2012, Bergmann and Sams founded the Flipped Learning Network, a non-profit organization that seeks to help educators make the switch" from more traditional teaching methods to a flipped learning model.[24] The Flipped Learning Network developed the four pillars of flipped learning: flexible environment, learning culture, intentional con-

22. Emily Atteberry, "Flipped Classrooms" May Not Have Any Impact on Learning, USA Today (Dec. 5, 2013), http://www.usatoday.com/story/news/nation/2013/10/22/flipped-classrooms-effectiveness/3148447/ ("The flipped classroom trend first took root in 2007 when high school teachers Jonathan Bergmann and Aaron Sams began offering their lectures in PowerPoint version online to students who missed class."); The Teacher's Guide to Flipped Classrooms, supra note 10 ("Many factors influenced the creation and adoption of the flipped classroom model. However, two specific innovators played a key role. Teachers Jonathon Bergman and Aaron Sams at Woodland Park High School in Woodland Park, CO, discovered software to record PowerPoint presentations. They recorded and posted their live lectures online for students who missed class."); HAMDAN ET AL., supra note 10, at 3 ("Two rural Colorado chemistry teachers, Jonathan Bergmann and Aaron Sams, are often referred to as the pioneers of Flipped Learning. Concerned that students frequently missed end-of-day classes to travel to other schools for competitions, games or other events, they began to use live video recordings and screencasting software in 2007 to record lectures, demonstrations, and slide presentations with annotations.").

23. The Teacher's Guide to Flipped Classrooms, supra note 10; Membrillo, supra note 10 ("Many factors influenced the creation and adoption of the flipped classroom model. However, two specific innovators played a key role. Teachers Jonathan Bergman and Aaron Sams at Woodland Park High School in Woodland Park, CO, discovered software to record PowerPoint presentations. They recorded and posted their live lectures online for students who missed class.").

24. Atteberry, supra note 22.

tent, and professional educator to help share this novel teaching method with others.[25]

Flipped classrooms were "made mainstream through the Khan Academy,"[26] although Khan, a supplier of free online education, does not adopt the term "flipped classroom" to describe its methods.[27] Instead, Maureen Suhendra, a member of Khan's school implementation team, explains the difference as follows:

> The flipped classroom in the traditional sense is that teachers are assigning videos for homework, and they'll come to class and work out problems together. Students are still all moving at the same pace. Khan Academy is much more about a customized learning experience—working on different math exercises at a different time. It's a vision is of a self-paced, customized learning experience.[28]

So Khan has adapted a flipped learning model to provide a personal, self-paced program of instruction similar to that provided by a tutor.[29] Whatever they call it, Khan has helped bring flipped learning to the forefront of modern American teaching methods.

The flipped classroom concept is drawing interest from a broad spectrum of educators. Research shows that "[t]eachers who are flipping their classes are not necessarily only new-to-the-profession teachers, or those with a high degree of computer skills

---

25. The Four Pillars of F-L-I-P, FLIPPED LEARNING NETWORK (2014), http://flippedlearning.org/cms/lib07/VA01923112/Centricity/Domain/46/FLIP_handout_FNL_Web.pdf.

26. Lemmer, supra note 10, at 465 (citing About, KHAN ACADEMY, http://www.khanacademy.org/about (last visited Aug. 1, 2013)); see DuVivier, supra note 12 at 10480.

27. Karen Springen, Flipping the Classroom: A Revolutionary Approach to Learning Presents Some Pros and Cons, SCHOOL LIB. J. (April 1, 2013), http://www.slj.com/2013/04/standards/flipping-the-classroom-a-revolutionary-approach-to-learning-presents-some-pros-and-cons/#_ ("Khan, which offers free how-to videos, doesn't completely embrace the term 'flipped classroom.'").

28. Id. (quoting Maureen Suhendra, a member of Khan's school implementation team).

29. Id. ("The current educational system is too much of a 'one-size-fits-all model,' says Suhendra. Not the Khan Academy. . . . 'In essence, Khan Academy can become a personalized tutor for students.'").

and comfort with technology."[30] In fact, a 2014 study conducted by the Flipped Learning Network and Sophia Learning of 2,358 educators responding to 36 questions revealed that "42% of flippers have been teaching for 16 years or more."[31] Not surprisingly, math and science teachers were among the most likely to flip their classes (33% and 38%, respectively).[32] Researchers, however, were surprised to discover that the number of teachers of English or language arts flipping their classrooms had increased "from 12% in 2012 to 23% in 2014."[33] There is really no educational constituency that could not adopt flipped learning if it chose to do so.

B. The Perceived Benefits of Flipping

The potential benefits of flipped learning are numerous, contributing to its popularity. Although there is a great deal of cross-over, most of these perceived benefits can be categorized as either improving learning outcomes[34] or satisfying the goals of modern educational administrations.[35] Flipped learning arguably enhances learning outcomes by allowing students to work somewhat at their own paces by reviewing online content as many times as they would like,[36] correcting student misunderstanding in the moment,[37] increasing student-teacher interaction in an ever-growing class,[38] and enhancing critical thinking skills.[39] It also helps educators meet the challenges that modern administrations impose by providing countless opportunities for assessment of student learning[40] and efficiently offering student-teacher interaction despite large class sizes in a way online competitors cannot,[41]

---

30. YARBRO ET AL., supra note 17, at 6.
31. Id.
32. Id.
33. Id.
34. Berrett, supra note 12; see infra notes 37–63 and accompanying text.
35. See infra notes 37–63 and accompanying text.
36. See Berrett, supra note 12.
37. See DuVivier, supra note 12.
38. See The Teacher's Guide to Flipped Classrooms, supra note 10.
39. See infra note 50.
40. See Berrett, supra note 12.
41. See Springen, supra note 27.

while still enabling students a modified self-paced learning module similar to those made attractive by online education.[42]

One of the key factors driving increased adoption of the flipped classroom is poor learning outcomes from "the traditional one-size-fits-all model of education."[43] This concern is compounded by ever-growing class sizes.[44] "One of the main advantages of a flipped classroom is that it allows students to play back, as many times as they need, those parts of lectures they did not understand the first go-round."[45] Additionally, collective class time is not wasted on one student who needs greater clarification; the confused student can replay the online content of a flipped class as often as he or she wishes without delaying the rest of the class.[46] This ability to watch the online instruction when and as often as the student chooses empowers students with "greater control over the pace of instruction" while holding students accountable for their own learning.[47] In my personal experience, I had many students inform me how valuable they found this increased sense of control to be.

Additionally, flipped learning enhances faculty interaction with students by creating space during scheduled class meetings for dialogue. Moreover, "[t]he immediacy of teaching in this way enables students' misconceptions to be corrected well before they emerge on a midterm or final exam. The result, according to a growing body of research, is more learning."[48] Correcting student misunderstanding in real time is a distinct advantage offered by flipped learning.

One of the most beneficial aspects of flipped learning is the challenge it presents to students to think critically, in the moment, during class as they apply what they learned before class to prob-

---

42. See infra note 58.

43. The Teacher's Guide to Flipped Classrooms, supra note 10.

44. Sam Dillon, Tight Budgets Mean Squeeze in Classrooms, N.Y. TIMES (Mar. 6, 2011), http://www.nytimes.com/2011/03/07/education/07classrooms.html.

45. DuVivier, supra note 12, at 10480; Springen, supra note 27.

46. Springen, supra note 27.

47. Benjes-Small, supra note 13.

48. Berrett, supra note 12 ("More important, 'you can get better student-learning outcomes.'" (quoting Harrison Keller, vice provost for higher-education policy at University of Texas at Austin)).

lems or exercises posed to the group. In a traditional class, "[s]tudents have only a passive role in the lecture process, and cognitive psychologists have found that audiences have difficulty remembering information if it is conveyed only through listening."[49] Unlike in a traditional course, "the cognitive strain that flipping imposes on students accounts for much of its success—and the resistance it engenders."[50] Several researchers have concluded that flipped learning creates such cognitive strain to the benefit of students.[51]

Karen Rhea is a lecturer and director of the introductory mathematics program at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor. Along with two colleagues, she has been studying whether students learning calculus in a flipped classroom have made greater gains in understanding the concepts than those students learning in a traditional lecture class. The program administered:

> concept inventories to students before they started calculus and after they finished, and calculated the difference relative to the maximum gain they could have made. Students in Michigan's flipped courses showed gains at about twice the rate of those in traditional lectures at other institutions who took the same inventories. The students at Michigan who fared worst—a group of 12 who were at risk of failing the course—showed the same gain as those who demonstrated the largest increase in understanding from traditional lectures elsewhere.[52]

---

49. DuVivier, supra note 12.

50. Berrett, supra note 12. Although researchers agree that flipped learning does challenge critical thinking, other teaching methods may similarly challenge students. Id. ("Ultimately that strain is what is most important, not whether the course is flipped, says Carl E. Weiman, associate director of the White House Office of Science and Technology Policy. He has documented gains when relatively inexperienced physics graduate students and postdoctoral researchers lecture hundreds of students but stop intermittently to quiz and give feedback on the students' understanding of key concepts.").

51. See infra notes 53–63 and accompanying text.

52. Berrett, supra note 12.

A similar study at Harvard University focused on the learning gains of physics majors and nonmajors enrolled in physics.[53] The "results from using peer instruction show that, on the force concept inventory, nonmajors who take [the flipped physics] class outperform physics majors who learn in traditional lectures."[54]

In 1979, before web-based technology existed to flip a class as described above, Edward Kimball and Larry Farmer conducted an experiment at Brigham Young University J. Reuben Clark Law School wherein Kimball taught three sections of Evidence, employing a different teaching method in each. In the first section, Kimball used the traditional method and assigned a conventional casebook. In the second section, he assigned reading from a treatise and prepared problems that the class would then discuss in class. In the final section, he assigned reading from an Evidence treatise, used a computer program for students to work through the same prepared problems and to compare his own prepared answers to those problems, and offered periodic, voluntary class sessions to answer student questions. All students were given the same final exam. The results across all three sections were statistically insignificant.[55]

Flipped learning involves what is often referred to as "blended" instruction mixing online learning with face-to-face instruction. Studies show that such blended learning—whether in the form of a flipped classroom or otherwise—generates "'deeper learning experiences for the students.'"[56] In September 2010, the U.S. Department of Education ("DOE") compared the effectiveness of face-to-face teaching and online instruction.[57] "Based on the analysis of more than fifty empirical studies of online learning

---

53. Id.

54. Id.

55. Todd E. Pettys, The Analytic Classroom, 60 BUFF. L. REV. 1255, 1276–77 (2012) (citing Edward L. Kimball & Larry C. Farmer, Comparative Results of Teaching Evidence Three Ways, 30 J. LEGAL EDUC. 196 (1979)).

56. Lemmer, supra note 10, at 466–67 (quoting Rita Shackel, Beyond the Whiteboard: E-Learning in the Law Curriculum, 12 QUEENSLAND U. TECH. L. & JUST. J. 105, 109–10 (2012)).

57. Id. at 466 (citing Barbara A. Means et al., Evaluation of Evidence-Based Practices in Online Learning, U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. (Sep. 2010), http://www2.ed.gov/rschstat/eval/tech/evidence-based-practices/finalreport.pdf); see Pettys, supra note 55, at 1303–05.

conducted between 1996 and 2008, the report [of the DOE's comparative research] found purely online education 'as effective as classroom instruction, but no better.'"[58] The DOE's research varied, however, in studies comparing purely face-to-face instruction with a blend of online learning and face-to-face instruction.[59] The DOE research "found an average of thirty-five percent stronger learning outcomes for students taught in a blended format."[60] Blended courses are "'more successful and increase student satisfaction with the learning experience.'"[61] Interestingly, the DOE report concluded that > there is nothing about a blend of online and face-to-face instruction per se that should improve student learning. Rather, the significantly improved outcomes for students taught in blended settings may flow simply from the fact that those students are exposed to more instructional materials than students whose primary encounters take place in a classroom.[62]

The blended flipped learning format necessarily provides students with more educational materials than the traditional class by providing more online content in advance of class, as well as greater interaction during class.

Not only may flipped learning improve student learning outcomes, it may also solve some educational challenges posed by institutional administrators. Specifically, flipped learning may respond to pressure from university administrations, accrediting bodies, and other groups for increased assessment of student learn-

58. Lemmer, supra note 10, at 466 (citing Means et al., supra note 57); see Pettys, supra note 55, at 1303–05.

59. Lemmer, supra note 10, at 466 (citing Means et al., supra note 57); see Pettys, supra note 55, at 1303–05.

60. Lemmer, supra note 10, at 466 (citing Means et al., supra note 57); see Pettys, supra note 55, at 1303–05.

61. Lemmer, supra note 10, at 466 (quoting Shackel, supra note 56, at 109–10).

62. Lemmer, supra note 10, at 466 (citing Means et al., supra note 57); see Pettys, supra note 55, at 1303–05.

ing.[63] In a flipped classroom, teachers witness student understanding, or the lack thereof, during class and can deal with it appropriately by making adjustments in real time. "[F]rustrations that students experience or incorrect learning patterns they develop can be reduced when students work on problems in the classroom while being guided by teachers or peers, as dictated by the flipped classroom model."[64] Because flipped learning provides daily opportunities for informal assessment, problems can be addressed immediately, before they manifest themselves in student performance on less frequently assessed examinations.

In addition to demanding greater assessment of student learning to improve the "product" schools offer to students, academic institutions are increasingly facing budget cuts.[65] Modern educational programs have consistently responded to tighter budgets by increasing class sizes and the student-to-teacher ratio. To the detriment of the student, economic forces mandate that class sizes cannot be reduced to allow greater interaction between student and teacher.[66] According to Harrison Keller, vice provost for higher-education policy at the University of Texas at Austin, however, flipped learning "allows colleges, particularly large research institutions with big classes, to make the traditional lecture model more productive . . . . 'If you do this well, you can use faculty members' time and expertise more appropriately, and you can also use your facilities more efficiently.'"[67] Flipped learning, thus, may mitigate the harmful impact of increased class size on student learning.

Flipped learning also helps educators respond to the demands of administrators to become more competitive in an educa-

---

63. Berrett, supra note 12.

64. DuVivier, supra note 12, at 10480.

65. See Joyce E. McConnell, The Future of Legal Education and the Profession, W. VA. LAW., July–Sept. 2013, at 12; Ashby Jones & Jennifer Smith, Amid Falling Enrollment, Law Schools are Cutting Faculty, WALL STREET J. (Jul. 15, 2013, 4:39 PM), http://www.wsj.com/articles/SB10001424127887323664204578607810292433272.

66. Berrett, supra note 12.

67. Berrett, supra note 12 (quoting Harrison Keller); see also Bishop, supra note 16, at 6 ("The theoretical foundations used for justifying the flipped classroom typically focus on reasons for not using classroom time to deliver lectures.").

tional landscape that now offers a great deal of information to students working at their own pace for free online, for example, through MOOCs and online institutions.[68] "'I see a paradigm shift, and it's coming soon,' says Michael S. Palmer, an associate professor of chemistry and assistant director of the Teaching Resource Center at the University of Virginia. 'Content is not going to be the thing we do. We're going to help unpack that content.'"[69] Traditional educators are no longer the only sources of substantive information, but they have become the most expensive. Thus, providing students with an understanding and mastery of that information is the advantage that traditional educators hold over online for-profit institutions and free Internet sources. Harvard Physicist Eric Mazur suggests that: "Simply transmitting information should not be the focus of teaching; helping students to assimilate that information should."[70] Flipped learning allows educators to provide the information to students online in advance of class and then dig deep to struggle towards understanding and mastery together as a collective with the teacher guiding the way.

C. Perceived Concerns About Flipping

Despite the many cited potential benefits of flipped learning, educators have identified a variety of concerns preventing its uniform adoption. There are several criticisms of flipped learning, including that: embarking upon such an endeavor is extremely labor intensive;[71] flipped learning feels uncomfortable to educators, putting them on the spot in the moment to respond to unpredictable situations that may arise in class;[72] students who perceive flipped learning as more work will punish teachers with bad stu-

---

68. Berrett, supra note 12. "MOOC" stands for Massive Open Online Course, wherein tens of thousands of students may enroll in a class, either for free or for a tuition-based fee, offered by a professional MOOC provider, often with the assistance or cooperation of more traditional brick-and-mortar colleges and universities. Juliana Marques & Robert McGuire, What is a Massive Open Online Course Anyway? MN+R Attempts a Definition, MOOC NEWS AND REVIEWS (June 7, 2013), http://moocnewsandreviews.com/what-is-a-massive-open-online-course-anyway-attempting-definition/#ixzz3UHrShTSm.

69. Berrett, supra note 12 (quoting Michael S. Palmer).

70. Id. (quoting Eric Mazur).

71. See infra notes 77–82 and accompanying text.

72. See infra note 83 and accompanying text.

dent evaluations;[73] the online materials utilized are too passive compared to the traditional presentation of those materials in class;[74] the flipped classroom involves so much student involvement that it conflicts with the Socratic Method;[75] and even that flipped learning is simply the Socratic Method in new packaging.[76]

There is no doubt that flipping one's class requires an investment in redeveloping the course to replace the in-class presentation of material with similar content available online. "Teachers and site administrators continued to be in agreement that the following hindrances may be keeping them from flipping their classrooms: . . . needed instruction on how to 'make' or 'find high quality videos;' and how to 'best utilize' the additional classroom time."[77] At the very least, flipping tasks the teacher with identifying existing teaching material suitable for relaying the content and making that available electronically.[78] At worst, faculty would develop their own online materials for electronic distribution to the class.[79] In either case, those implementing flipped learning take on the additional burden of planning interactive activities, problems, or course discussions on which the class can focus during the class meeting.[80] The initial attempt to flip a course is labor intensive and this concern prevents some educators from adopting this teaching method.[81]

Related to these concerns about the increased work required to flip a course are those that student expectations of teacher availability will similarly increase. By making content available online at the student's leisure, some are concerned that teachers will be forced to answer students' additional questions about the

---

73. See infra notes 84–87 and accompanying text.

74. See infra notes 88–90 and accompanying text.

75. See infra notes 91–93 and accompanying text.

76. See infra note 94 and accompanying text.

77. YARBRO ET AL., supra note 17, at 15.

78. Id.

79. Id.

80. Id.

81. Berrett, supra note 12 ("It can also be very labor-intensive for faculty members who do not have teaching support, she adds, if it requires a professor to read questions that students submit before class (which is characteristic of just-in-time teaching). 'For a normal, straight-ahead professor, there's a steep learning curve,' Ms. Franklin says.").

online materials beyond their expected work day, as students may pose questions electronically any time they find convenient.[82] This concern focuses on the perception of universal accessibility of the teacher because the teacher's materials are universally accessible. Of course, such notions arise anytime a teacher is digitally available, either by posting an online syllabus or responding to email. They can be easily defeated with clear communication of a teacher's appropriate boundaries.

Moreover, flipped learning demands flexibility from those implementing it and that is a difficult hurdle for some teachers. Where an instructor in a traditional class may have relied on preplanned notes to disseminate information to students pursuant to that plan, the flipped classroom invites much greater spontaneity. The interactive nature of the class time requires the faculty member to be flexible even when put on the spot in a situation the educator did not predict. Melissa E. Franklin, chair of Harvard's physics department, states that several "colleagues have tried flipping . . . but few have stuck with it. It demands that faculty members be good at answering students' questions on the spot, even when their misconceptions are not yet clear because they are still processing the information."[83] While some educators may view their inflexibility as a challenge flipped that learning may help them overcome, others may simply be ill-suited for the flipped format.

Because of the labor-intensive nature of flipped learning and the challenge to a teacher's flexibility that it presents, several educators are concerned that they risk receiving negative student evaluations that could affect their promotion, tenure, and merit salary increase decisions.[84] Such concerns are apparently valid, as the "average score on a student evaluation of a flipped course is about half what the same professor gets when using the traditional lecture."[85] Student resistance to flipped learning may be attributable to the increased amount of material presented outside of class, perceived by students as more work or extra class time, or the increased cognitive challenge offered within the classroom.[86] Many

82. Springen, supra note 27.
83. Berrett, supra note 12 (quoting Melissa E. Franklin).
84. Id.
85. Id.
86. See supra text accompanying note 50.

students complain that flipped educators should "just teach,"[87] demonstrating their expectations from and past experiences with more traditional educational styles and their misunderstanding of the instructor's goals in implementing flipped learning.

Some critics of flipped learning complain that online material presented in lieu of in-class presentation is too passive.[88] According to Lisa Nielsen, author of Teaching Generation Text, "Listening to a lecture is nothing new. I just don't believe it's the most effective way to learn."[89] It is certainly possible that an educator may post passive lectures online. In such a case, the professor was probably replacing passive lectures in class with the passive lectures online and, at least hopefully, adding more active learning to the class meeting, which should still be an improvement over a live, passive lecture. Moreover, while this valid criticism may apply to some online materials, it is certainly overcome where more innovative online materials are utilized. Critics continue, however, noting that "not everything is flippable. 'Nothing is going to replace the experience of being a member of an audience that has a group discussion or debate,' says School Library Journal blogger Joyce Valenza."[90] It is probably true that not everything is flippable, but the more active engagement promoted in the flipped class meeting should provide exactly the experience of being a member of a group discussion or debate.

Some educators resist flipped learning in favor of retaining the Socratic Method to engage students. These teachers believe that a flipped classroom sacrifices actual instruction in order to increase opportunities for student collaboration and activities generated and led by students.[91] This criticism applies to those flipped classes featuring student interaction with minor faculty involvement. Proponents of flipped learning, however, would suggest that a key role for teachers "'is to lead from behind.' In other words, the teacher has the task of 'observation, feedback and assessment'

---

87. Robert Talbert, Three Critical Conversations Started and Sustained by Flipped Learning, FAC. FOCUS NEWSL. (Mar. 2, 2015), http://ww1.facultyfocus.com/eletter/profile/1/216.html?ET=facultyfocus:e216:281629a:&st=email.

88. Springen, supra note 27 ("The 'home' portion of the flipped classroom can be too passive for many educators' taste.").

89. Id.

90. Id.

91. HAMDAN ET AL., supra note 10, at 11.

and guiding the learners' thinking, in the best spirit of the Socratic Method."[92] Similarly, critics complain that flipped learning "undervalues the power of good, engaging, face-to-face Socratic teaching."[93] This concern certainly applies to those engaging Socratic teachers; but for those less successful at coaxing a productive Socratic dialogue, blended methods such as flipped learning could offer a more effective alternative.

Yet another critique of flipped learning posits that it is not a new or novel teaching method, even suggesting that it is simply a retooled version of the Socratic Method.

> Professors have flipped courses for decades. Humanities professors expect their students to read a novel on their own and do not dedicate class time to going over the plot. Class time is devoted to exploring symbolism or drawing out themes. And law professors have long used the Socratic method in large lectures, which compels students to study the material before class or risk buckling under a barrage of their professor's questions.[94]

Admittedly, flipped learning may be a modern take on the Socratic Method. Law faculties have successfully implemented the Socratic Method as a primary teaching method for nearly two centuries. Updating a successful teaching method by infusing the benefits of modern technology may prove to enhance students' learning outcomes.

---

92. Id.

93. Id.

94. Berrett, supra note 12; see also Springen, supra note 27 ("Aside from the technology involved, it's not necessarily a new idea. 'In the 1970s, when I was a classroom English teacher, I flipped my classroom, and I didn't even know it,' says Doug Johnson, the director of media and technology for the Mankato Area Public Schools in Minnesota. 'I'd ask my kids to read the text at home, and then I'd use the class time to discuss the lesson. Now, instead of asking kids to read, we're asking them to watch videotape lessons. I sense this is something like old wine in a new bottle.'").

III. THE ROLE OF FLIPPED LEARNING IN LAW SCHOOL PEDAGOGY

A. The Langdellian Model

Law school is a fairly modern concept. Because law is a profession, "legal training was viewed as entirely vocational, not academic, in nature" in pre-Revolutionary America.[95] Legal training took the form of attendance at Inns of Court meetings in London, where prospective attorneys would gain practical training.[96] Additionally, future lawyers accepted apprenticeships with practicing attorneys, in the earliest form of experiential learning.[97] Apprenticeships gained in popularity at the turn of the 18th century as the more common method of legal training, while American travel to Inns of Court meetings in London became less palatable for obvious reasons.[98]

In approximately 1784, private law schools began to emerge to meet the academic needs of a growing bar.[99] In 1817, Harvard University founded Harvard Law School—the oldest continually operating law school in the country.[100] Harvard named Christopher Langdell dean of the law school in 1870. Langdell is credited with developing the framework for modern legal education, including the implementation of the Socratic Method to decipher the law from appellate decisions.[101]

---

95. Michele R. Pistone & John J. Hoeffner, No Path But One: Law School Survival in an Age of Disruptive Technology, 59 WAYNE L. REV. 193, 204 (2013).

96. Id.

97. Id. at 204–05.

98. Id. at 205 n.47.

99. Id. at 206.

100. Id.

101. Id. at 207 ("[I]t can accurately be said that the modern law school was born during Langdell's quarter century as dean. For generations of law students, for instance, the case method and the Socratic method of teaching have seemed essential—or at least ever-present—characteristics of law teaching, but they became a standard part of the fabric of law school life only during or slightly after Langdell's tenure."); DuVivier, supra note 12, at 10476 ("Christopher Columbus Langdell is often credited with sparking the first revolution in law school teaching when he introduced the case method at Harvard Law School in the early 1870s.").

Langdell approached legal education as any other academic field of study. He stated, "[c]onsidered as a science," law "consists of certain principles or doctrines. To have a mastery of these as to be able to apply them with constant facility and certainty to the ever-tangled skein of human affairs, is what constitutes a true lawyer."[102] To foster this academic approach, Langdell developed the case method of learning the law and the Socratic Method for teaching it.[103]

> In the case method, leading cases or case excerpts are assembled into a case book. Before each class, students are assigned a selection of cases to review. Then, during class, the professor calls on individual students to present their briefs of a given case. The professor guides the students through a question-and-answer process to ensure the class appreciates the holding in each case and its significance to the body of law being studied.[104]

These advances marked a significant reform to legal education at the time.[105]

Langdell's Socratic Method offered a more active approach to learning, requiring students to think critically on their feet.[106] As discussed in Part II above, the passive dissemination of information is a less effective teaching method.[107] "Cognitive psychology shows that if new knowledge is processed more deeply and 102. Pistone & Hoeffner, supra note 95, at 208.

103. Id. at 207–08; DuVivier, supra note 12, at 10476.

104. DuVivier, supra note 12, at 10476; see also Pistone, supra note 95, at 208 ("Langdell's 'scientific approach [would] infer the corpus of general legal rules from the reasoning used by courts' and then 'use such reasoning to predict outcomes in future cases.'").

105. See DuVivier, supra note 12, at 10477 (citing SUSAN A. AMBROSE ET AL., HOW LEARNING WORKS; SEVEN RESEARCH-BASED PRINCIPLES FOR SMART TEACHING (2010)).

106. See id. at 10476.

107. See supra notes 50–52 and accompanying text.

actively, it is much more likely to be retained and retrieved."[108] Through the Socratic Method,

> Instead of passively listening to lectures and taking notes, students were now expected to read real cases and derive principles of law for themselves through Socratic questioning. Thus, to the extent the Socratic Method is a discussion, it would track with research that shows discussion methods are more effective than lectures for achieving the main goals of student retention, transfer of knowledge to new situations, development of problem solving, thinking, attitude change, and motivation for additional learning.[109]

It seems, therefore, that the Socratic Method offered a significant improvement over traditional lectures.[110]

The vast majority of law schools have maintained this casebook and Socratic Method approach to teaching for nearly two centuries—and with good reason. "[T]he Socratic methodology used in most first-year courses was one of the few aspects of law school teaching praised in Educating Lawyers, the 2007 study of law schools conducted by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching."[111] Because it demands active learning, the Socratic Method remains an effective teaching pedagogy in modern classrooms.

B. Post-Modern Legal Education

Despite the advancement of the case method and Socratic Method, they have become so ingrained into the fabric of law school pedagogy that the legal academy has made little room for potentially more effective post-modern pedagogical reforms.

---

108. DuVivier, supra note 12, at 10477 (citing SUSAN A. AMBROSE, HOW LEARNING WORKS; SEVEN RESEARCH-BASED PRINCIPLES FOR SMART TEACHING (2010)).

109. Id. at 10476.

110. Id. at 10477.

111. W. Warren H. Binford, New Ideas in Law and Legal Education: Envisioning a Twenty-First Century Legal Education, 43 WASH. U. J.L. & POL'Y 157, 174 (2013).

While the Socratic Method and case method may have been significant improvements upon the teaching methods employed in early nineteenth century law schools, it is possible that other teaching methods developed in the last two centuries may offer even greater progress. Specifically, > the way many professors employ the Socratic Method may undermine its value. The only student that is actively learning is the one who is under the inquisitional fire of the professor's barrage of questions. The exchange may still be a relatively passive learning experience for the rest of the students in the class who are simply listening and trying to glean the message they should take from the repartee between the professor and their classmate.[112]

Additionally, after the commercialized standardization of casebooks by publishers, "most twentieth century law professors subscribed to the static, lifeless materials developed by third parties and students were compelled to buy and read those materials regardless of price or relevance. To this day, the case method and the standardized casebook dominate legal education methodology in the United States."[113] With modern technological advances, there is certainly room to improve upon both the case method and the Socratic Method. "The Digital Revolution offers twenty-first century law professors the opportunity to return to the customized, engaged curricula exemplified by the revolutionary pedagogical methods of Dean Langdell and his colleagues."[114]

Technology is already forcing modernization of the case method. In recent years, "publishers again are compelling change in legal education; but this time, they are moving away from the standardized, hardbound casebook and utilizing digital technologies to modularize, diversify, and enrich legal education materials."[115] As the case method enters the digital age, so too may the

---

112. DuVivier, supra note 12, at 10477.
113. Binford, supra note 111, at 160–61.
114. Id. at 162.
115. Id. at 161.

Socratic Method. Thus, flipped learning may be a pedagogical reform ripe for adoption by the legal academy.

In recent years, law schools have not sat on the sidelines when opportunities to adapt technology to the classroom have arisen.

> One could argue that legal educators pioneered digital education when Harvard Law School and the University of Minnesota Law School incorporated the Center for Computer-Assisted Legal Instruction (CALI) over three decades ago in 1982. Today, CALI hosts over 950 online interactive tutorials available in more than thirty-five law subjects. Nearly every law school in the United States is a member of CALI.[116]

One would not expect law schools to shy away from the advantages offered by flipped learning, especially in light of its similarities to the Socratic Method, which has proven particularly well-suited for the law school classroom.

As discussed above, flipped learning shares some similarities with the Socratic Method by presenting students with material in advance of class and then delving deeply into that material during class.[117] Moreover, it can blend easily with the case method; there is no reason for legal educators to stop assigning appellate decisions to their students in advance of class along with other online materials. In fact, technology and online resources already exist to aid law professors in flipping their classrooms. Specifically, "a small group of law school professors founded 'LegalED,' informally described as a Khan Academy for law schools. LegalED aims to move law school content online through recorded lectures so law students can watch the lectures at their convenience as many times as they needed."[118] LegalEd provides faculty with instruction on how to flip a course and develop personalized online

116. Id. at 171.
117. See supra note 94 and accompanying text.
118. Binford, supra note 111, at 172–73.

content for distribution to students and serves as a free online exchange of digital materials for class distribution.[119]

> By using Web-based technologies – technologies that are likely to become pervasive in mainstream higher education regardless of our initial eagerness to embrace them – faculty can expose students to some of their courses' foundations and frameworks before they enter the classroom. Confronted then with the need to rethink the chief purposes of live classroom sessions, faculty can focus on developing activities that build on those foundations and frameworks in ways aimed squarely at strengthening students' analytic capacities and solidifying students' understanding of the course material in the process.[120]

With such technological resources available, one would expect legal educators to be at the forefront of its development.

Nonetheless, law schools have been slow to adapt to flipped learning. In fact, "[i]n a spring 2013 conversation with Rishi Desai, a content producer from the Khan Academy, it was revealed that only one law professor had contacted the Khan Academy in the seven years since the organization was founded."[121] It seems that the legal academy is comfortable letting others advance the cutting edge. "While professors from Harvard Medical School and the Stanford University School of Medicine are reaching out to the Khan Academy to explore opportunities for collaboration, the legal academy has shown no interest, according to Desai."[122] One suggested reason for this stagnation > is that law professors are smart enough to let other faculties serve as the guinea pigs in the development of, and experimentation with, digital tools and methodology in order to conserve limited law school resources. According to Paul McGreal, 119. See LegalED, http://legaledweb.com (last visited Mar. 12, 2016).

120. Pettys, supra note 55, at 1305–06.
121. Binford, supra note 111, at 165.
122. Id. at 166.

> Dean of the University of Dayton School of Law, "A lot of these teaching methods require more resources from law schools and teachers. Let's make sure they work."[123]

Given the research demonstrating the positive effect on learning outcomes of blended learning employed in other disciplines,[124] it may be time for the legal academy to stop watching others flip their courses and start doing it themselves.

Another suggested reason for the legal academy's resistance to flipped learning may be its complacency with an effective and proven pedagogy—the Socratic Method. "The disinterest of legal educators in new technologies can partially be explained by the legal academy's deep commitment to a culture and tradition of the Socratic methodology and institutional values that emphasize scholarship far above teaching."[125] For the reasons explained above, however, the past success of the Socratic Method should not be to the exclusion of further progress. In a time when law school applications are down nationally by over twenty percent,[126] it may be time for the legal academy to consider changing the way it does business.

IV. THE CIVIL PROCEDURE EXPERIMENT

A. Spring 2013: A Traditional Approach

During the Spring semester of 2013, I taught Civil Procedure II as I had in recent years. I assigned readings from four texts: Civil Procedure: Cases & Materials, by Jack H. Friedenthal, Arthur R. Miller, John E. Sexton, & Helen Hershkoff;[127] 2012–2013 Civil Procedure: Supplement, by Jack H. Friedenthal,

123. Id. at 167.

124. See supra notes 52–62 and accompanying text.

125. Binford, supra note 111, at 167.

126. Karen Sloan, Law School Enrollment Continues Historic Decline, THE NAT'L L. J. (Dec. 16, 2014), http://www.nationallawjournal.com/id=1202679988741/.

127. JACK H. FRIEDENTHAL ET AL., CIVIL PROCEDURE: CASES & MATERIALS (West, 10th ed. 2009).

Arthur R. Miller, John E. Sexton, & Helen Hershkoff;[128] A Documentary Companion to A Civil Action, by Lewis A. Grossman & Robert G. Vaughn;[129] and A Civil Action, by Jonathan Harr.[130] The course was the mandatory two-credit counterpoint to Civil Procedure I which the same students had taken from me in the Fall of 2012. Civil Procedure II covered the following subjects: cross-claims, joinder, impleader, class actions, discovery, summary judgment, voluntary dismissal, judgment as a matter of law, res judicata, and collateral estoppel.

I presented students with the material in a style common to many traditional law school courses. Before class, I assigned readings from the Friedenthal casebook and supplement, and asked students to consider problems and discussion questions from Grossman and Vaughan's A Documentary Companion. During class, I would employ the Socratic Method[131] to discuss the material, posing critical questions to students to guide our discussion. Information I might have discussed in a lecture was instead embedded into the discussion questions (and, hopefully, the students' answers thereto). When time permitted, we walked through the questions raised in A Documentary Companion to discuss the application of the law to a different, but familiar, set of facts. Unfortunately, time did not always permit, especially in 2013 when my class hours had been cut from three to two to accommodate curricular reform. I found myself unable to engage in the drafting exercises, role plays, and discussions that extra credit hour had previously afforded.

B. Spring 2014: The Flipped Classroom

By the Spring semester of 2014, I had already taught the students enrolled in Civil Procedure II for a full semester in Civil Procedure I. I assigned readings from the same texts that I had used the previous year,[132] except that I assigned an updated Supplement by the same authors. We covered the same subjects as we

---

128. JACK H. FRIEDENTHAL ET AL., 2012–2013 CIVIL PROCEDURE: SUPPLEMENT (West 2012).

129. LEWIS A. GROSSMAN & ROBERT G. VAUGHN, A DOCUMENTARY COMPANION TO A CIVIL ACTION (Foundation Press, 4th ed. 2008).

130. JONATHAN HARR, A CIVIL ACTION (1996).

131. See supra notes 103–05 and accompanying text.

132. See supra notes 127–30 and accompanying text.

had in the previous year, as well as counterclaims. I posted reading assignments from the casebook and supplement, as well as problems, discussion questions, drafting exercises, and role plays based loosely from A Documentary Companion, in advance of class. The course material was nearly unchanged from the previous year. Instead, I changed my method of delivering the material to students dramatically.

In Spring 2014, I flipped my Civil Procedure II course. In addition to posting reading assignments and problems in advance of class, I posted my PowerPoint slides with my own voiceover lecture online. Not only was I not hiding the ball, I handed it to them. Students could view my ten to twenty minute presentations before they tackled the reading assignments and problems, after they read the assignments, or both. The expectation was that they would arrive in class with a pretty good understanding of the material. We would spend a few minutes in class addressing any questions that arose before class. Then, we turned our attention to the problems, discussion, and exercises.

We spent approximately thirty-five to forty minutes applying theoretical procedural concepts to problems in a real case[133]—every class. I never had the problem of running out of time to cover the assigned problems or exercises. In fact, I had to assign more problems and exercises to take full advantage of the extra class time now available to me. We worked through the problems with me as a guide posing questions and follow-up questions to students in a manner quite similar to the Socratic Method. Sometimes, the students formed "law firms" to complete exercises in small groups. By the end of class, in theory, students had answers to the problems, had an understanding of the reasoning involved in solving the problems, and had exercised some critical thinking skills to get there. If students needed further clarification of an issue, they could review my online presentation again (from immediately after class until the final exam) and, of course, visit my office.[134]

Class meetings in the flipped class were invigorating for me as an educator. Each flipped class was a new opportunity for me to creatively challenge students in a fresh way, which made preparing for class exciting. I was able to implement problems, role plays, drafting exercises, and group exercises that I had read about for years and, in some instances, recently cut from my course to accommodate the time constraints of curricular reform—all within one semester. Teaching in a flipped learning environment was fun for me.

133. Anderson v. Cryovac, Inc., 862 F.2d 910 (1st Cir. 1988).

134. While I did not keep records of the number of students visiting me during office hours, I will note that I did not notice any increase or decrease in those visits.

Additionally, I was convinced at the end of every class that my students had learned more than I had been able to teach other classes in years past using a more traditional approach to teaching. Objectively, I knew that I had provided my students with more learning material than before, but I based my suspicions of greater learning on more than that. My ability to assess student learning in the moment and adjust in real time to help fill in gaps in student understanding or simply to spend more time on an issue troubling students certainly contributed to my confidence. Moreover, watching students collectively work through problems and exercises by applying the substantive material they had tackled independently convinced me that we had gone deeper into the material than I had ever gone before. Of course, these are my subjective impressions of student learning; I concluded that students had learned more and that they had had more fun doing it.

C. The Final Exam

Truth be told, the idea of empirically comparing student learning in my flipped classroom in 2014 with that in my traditional class in 2013 did not occur to me when I set out to flip my course. Accomplishing what initially appeared to me to be a nearly insurmountable task—the act of flipping the course—was my solitary goal from the outset. About thirteen weeks into the semester, however, the suggestion arrived from Professor Andrea Curcio of Georgia State University College of Law in response to a blog post I authored on LegalED.[135] She suggested that I administer an exam identical in part to the previous year's exam and compare the results. This article is the result of heeding her brilliant advice.

---

135. Katharine Schaffzin, Reflections of a First-Time Flipper, LEGALED (Apr. 21, 2014), http://legaledweb.com/blog/2014/4/21/reflections-of-a-first-time-flipper-by-katherine.

Although I presented the course material quite differently in 2014 than I had in 2013, the subjects I covered and the reading assignments upon which I relied were virtually identical. To compare the learning outcomes of the students in the different learning environments, I administered a final examination in 2014 that was identical to the 2013 exam in fifty percent of the points awarded. Specifically, I repeated ten of the twenty multiple choice questions in 2014 that I had included in the 2013 exam. I also repeated one essay question in 2014 that I had used in 2013. I compared the learning outcomes of one class to the other on these identical questions to note if there was any discernible difference in performance.

V. THE RESULTS

Because my teaching methods differed so drastically from one year to the next, I hypothesized that I would see a significant improvement of student performance in 2014 over that in 2013. After all, the students in my flipped course received more educational material than those in my traditional class, I implemented blended instruction, rather than offering face-to-face or online exclusive content, and class was more active, interesting, and fun. All the empirical data supported my hypothesis.[136] Moreover, I walked out of every class in the flipped format confident that we had gone deeper into the material than I had ever gone in my traditional course.[137]

The data from my small empirical study, however, did not support my hypothesis. There was no statistical difference in the students' performance from one year to the next, despite the vastly different teaching methods I had employed. Any change in student performance on my exams from 2013 to 2014 was statistically insignificant. This held true for exam performance on both the essay[138] and multiple-choice[139] portions of the exams when considered in isolation.

---

136. See supra notes 52–62 and accompanying text.

137. See supra Section IV.B.

138. The result of a T-Test with two tails and unequal variance was 0.945326 comparing performance on the identical essay questions from 2014 and 2013. The average raw score on the essay was 17.35455 in 2014 and 17.4017 in 2013.

The statistically insignificant difference in exam performance between students in my traditional course and my flipped course is less surprising when noted that the differences between undergraduate grade point averages of both classes were also statistically insignificant.[140] By this marker, the two classes had the same ability to perform on the final examination. The admissions indices and Law School Admissions Test scores of the 2013 class, however, were measurably higher than those of the 2014 class,[141] demonstrating that the students in 2013 may have had an advantage in their predicted performance in law school. It is certainly possible that the students' statistical performance advantage in 2013 canceled out any gains in learning outcomes realized by the 2014 class as a result of the flipped course.

A number of other factors may also have affected the empirical value of the data. First, the sample pool may simply have been too small to yield reliable results of statistical significance. After all, the sample from 2013 was comprised of only 56 students and the 2014 set included only 57 students. There may have been too few students studied to draw any reliable conclusion.

Additionally, when comparing two groups of students studying similar material through different methods, it is not unusual to find similar exam performance.

> Numerous literature surveys have found that, when researchers try to evaluate the comparative effectiveness of teaching methods by comparing the average exam performance of students taught by one method to the average exam performance of stu> dents taught by a different method, the different teaching methods commonly appear equally efficacious. To be sure, some individual students learn better when taught by one method rather than another. When comparing the average performance of students within groups, however, those individual differences tend to balance out, such that shifting from one group teaching method to another is unlikely to yield significant net learning gains for the group as a whole.[142]

139. The result of a T-Test with two tails and unequal variance was 0.9416 comparing performance on the identical multiple-choice questions from 2014 and 2013. The average raw score on the multiple-choice section was 2.781818 in 2014 and 2.767857 in 2013.

140. The result of a T-Test with two tails and unequal variance was 0.80049 comparing students' undergraduate grade point averages ("UGPA") from 2014 and 2013. The average UGPA was 3.22 in 2014 and 3.24 in 2013.

141. The result of a T-Test with two tails and unequal variance was 0.00432 comparing students' admissions indices from 2014 and 2013. The average admissions index was 2.48 in 2014 and 2.64 in 2013. The result of a T-Test with two tails and unequal variance was 0.80049 comparing students' scores on the Law School Admissions Test ("LSAT") from 2014 and 2013. The average LSAT score was 152.9 in 2014 and 154.2 in 2013.

The answer may simply lie in the fact that empirical studies such as these may not be the most effective method for assessing learning outcomes. Of course, an equally valid alternative conclusion could be that flipped learning, as I employed it, had no effect on the learning outcomes of my Civil Procedure students.

VI. CONCLUSION

The empirical data suggests that flipped learning should lead to increased student learning. My own data suggests that, at the very least, it does not decrease student learning in a law school setting. My personal experience leads me to conclude that flipped learning is an overall positive teaching method preferable to a traditional Socratic classroom. Both my students and I reported an enjoyable learning environment and, at the very least, I provided my class with additional educational materials online, which they appreciated. Although the data neither proved nor disproved my hypothesis, I remain convinced that my students learned substantive material on a deeper level.

I cannot prove that student learning improved in my flipped classroom over that of my traditional class. There are other practical reasons, however, to adopt a flipped learning model. Most pressing is the economic pressure facing modern law schools, which must prepare to compete in an increasingly online-only educational environment.

---

142. Pettys, supra note 55, at 1277–78.

> The number of university leaders and faculty members who will have to confront that question is poised to skyrocket in the years ahead, as many of the nation's most respected institutions of higher education develop platforms for conveying to the public – for little or no charge – a great deal of the information that students historically have paid tens of thousands of dollars to obtain. There is no reason to believe, by the way, that the information traditionally conveyed in law schools' doctrinal classrooms will remain exempt from that revolution. Like their counterparts in other disciplines, many law professors may covet the opportunity to teach thousands of students around the world through creative uses of Web-based technologies.[143]

Blended learning in the form of a flipped classroom model will enable law schools to educate larger classes, while maintaining the face-to-face instructor support that online courses and MOOCs simply cannot provide.[144] Even if there is no definable learning advantage to implementing flipped learning, the overall advantages of such a platform outweigh those offered by the status quo.

Flipped learning demands greater effort from both educators and students than the more traditional Socratic Method. It also offers both parties a return on their investment of increased effort. I may not be able to objectively prove the success of my flipped course, but I am nonetheless convinced of its benefits. I intend to continue flipping my Civil Procedure and other courses, hopefully improving as an educator and a flipper with each effort.

---

143. Id. at 1299. Stanford University computer science faculty member Daphne Koller "predicts that the increasing availability of well-taught free or low-cost online courses will push universities 'to change, because they will not be able to charge students for content any longer.'" Id. at 1302.

144. See supra notes 65–70 and accompanying text.

Droning On and On: A Tort Approach to Regulating Hobbyist Drones

JORDAN M. CASH*

I. INTRODUCTION 696
II. UNMANNED AIRCRAFT SYSTEMS 699
  A. History and Development of UAS Technology 700
  B. Benefits and Capabilities of Domestic Drones 702
  C. The Privacy Threat from Hobbyist Drones 704
III. CURRENT LEGAL LANDSCAPE 707
  A. Federal Aviation Administration 707
    1. FAA Modernization and Reform Act of 2012 708
    2. FAA's Authority to Regulate Hobbyist Drones 711
  B. Federal Legislative Attempts 713
  C. Executive Regulatory Efforts 714
  D. State Legislative Actions 715
  E. Problems Faced by Legislative Attempts 720
    1. Preemption 720
    2. Impeding Innovation 722
    3. Untested Legislation 723
    4. Violation of First Amendment Rights 723
    5. Inconsistency Across the States 724
IV. COMMON LAW APPLICABILITY 724
  A. Intrusion Upon Seclusion 725
  B. Aerial Trespass 728
V. CONCLUSION 731

* J.D. Candidate, May 2016, The University of Memphis, Cecil C. Humphreys School of Law, Articles Editor, The University of Memphis Law Review, Volume 46. I would like to thank Professor Andrew McClurg and Kevin Brown for the work they put into helping me write this Note.

I. INTRODUCTION

Imagine being inside of your home and noticing a small device hovering outside of your window. You spot a camera attached to the floating machine, realizing that it is peering into your personal space and videoing you inside your home. A frenzy of thoughts and questions come to mind as you watch this device that is watching you. What is that thing? How long has it been there? Has this happened before without your knowledge? The device you see is an unmanned aircraft system ("UAS")—more commonly known as a drone[1]—equipped with a high-definition camera and a microphone to record the private activities that are occurring inside the home. The situation described above is one that many people have already been in, or will find themselves in, as drones enter the hands of private citizens.

UAS technology has the capacity to revolutionize many aspects of American society.[2] Despite the potential advantages of drone technology, their incorporation into the airspace creates substantial concerns that trouble both citizens and policymakers alike. Private, hobbyist drone use is expected to rapidly increase as the equipment becomes more accessible and affordable.[3] The drone industry is expanding exponentially, anticipating consumers to

---

1. The terms drone and UAS will be used interchangeably throughout this Note. See FED. AVIATION ADMIN., U.S. DEP'T OF TRANSP., INTEGRATION OF CIVIL UNMANNED AIRCRAFT SYSTEMS (UAS) IN THE NATIONAL AIRSPACE SYSTEM (NAS) ROADMAP 7 (2013) [hereinafter ROADMAP] ("[T]he term UAS is used to emphasize the fact that separate system components are required to support airborne operations without a pilot onboard the aircraft."). Unmanned aircraft systems consist of three elements: unmanned aircraft, control station, and data link. Id. at 8. Some popular literature will use the acronyms UAS or UAV (Unmanned Aerial Vehicle), but technically UAV represents only the drone itself, while UAS refers to all the components that enable the drone to fly remotely. Id. at 7–8.

2. The use of UAS technology has endless potential applications in areas such as public safety and commercial enterprises; however, this Note focuses primarily on hobbyist or recreational use of drones.

3. See WELLS C. BENNETT, CIVILIAN DRONES, PRIVACY, AND THE FEDERAL-STATE BALANCE 3 (2014) ("As unmanned flight technology matures and grows ever cheaper, it will find its way into more private hands.").

spend more than 100 million dollars on drones in 2015.[4] Today, many advanced drones are commercially available in local hobby stores and on the Internet for less than a few hundred dollars.[5] These devices have features that allow the drone to maneuver like a miniature helicopter, and can be controlled through the operator's smartphone or mobile device.[6] Additionally, there are drones that are the size of a bug or a small bird that are beginning to catch the attention of hobbyist drone operators.[7] Drones have the ability to stay airborne for extended periods of time and can be outfitted with specialized surveillance technology that can violate a person's privacy from extremely high altitudes.[8] As drones become more affordable, the apprehension that hobbyists may use their personal drones in a way that invades the privacy of others becomes more alarming.

Given the attention and controversy that surrounds the increasing use of the technology, it is unsurprising that various policymakers have entered the arena of drone regulation. Drone availability is granting private citizens unprecedented access to low altitude airspace, while laws that were designed to address airplanes and helicopters cannot effectively address issues that stem from

---

4. Tom Risen, Drone Market Grows at CES 2015, U.S. NEWS (Jan. 8, 2015, 5:40 PM), http://www.usnews.com/news/articles/2015/01/08/faa-touts-growing-drone-market-at-ces-2015. It is estimated that worldwide expenditures and drone related research could reach up to $89.1 billion over the next decade. Id. at 5. For an overview on what drone industry representatives expect as drones enter the markets, see DARRYL JENKINS & BIJAN VASIGH, ASS'N FOR UNMANNED VEHICLE SYS. INT'L, THE ECONOMIC IMPACT OF UNMANNED AIRCRAFT SYSTEMS INTEGRATION IN THE UNITED STATES (2013), http://robohub.org/_uploads/AUVSI_New_Economic_Report_2013_Full.pdf. Industry leaders hope to employee up to 100,000 people by 2025. Id. at 3.

5. Troy A. Rule, Airspace in an Age of Drones, 95 B.U. L. REV. 155, 157 (2015).

6. Id. at 157–60.

7. The Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency is currently creating a drone that is the size of a hummingbird that can fly up to eleven miles per hour for eight minutes. JAY STANLEY & CATHERINE CRUMP, AM. CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION, PROTECTING PRIVACY FROM AERIAL SURVEILLANCE: RECOMMENDATIONS FOR GOVERNMENT USE OF DRONE AIRCRAFT 3 (2011), https://www.aclu.org/files/assets/protectingprivacyfromaerialsurveillance.pdf [hereinafter ACLU REPORT].

8. The backpack craft, which is most used by hobbyist operators, can reach altitudes of up to 14,000 feet and stay in the air for up to 110 minutes. Id.

drone operations.[9] In 2012, Congress passed a law that requires the Federal Aviation Administration ("FAA") to develop a plan to safely integrate drones into the national airspace by September 2015,[10] which the FAA failed to meet.[11] The FAA is far behind the deadlines created by Congress and the regulations that govern the use of public,[12] commercial,[13] and private drones are in a perpetual state of fluctuation.[14] Federal lawmakers have proposed numerous bills aimed at filling gaps left in current federal drone legislation.[15] Likewise, state lawmakers are attempting to address the privacy concerns by enacting legislation aimed at preventing hobbyist and commercial drone operators from using their drones in an offensive manner.[16]

This Note argues that legislative attempts to regulate hobbyist and recreational use of drones are unnecessary because existing common law tort claims of general applicability can effectively deter invasions of privacy by recreational drone operators. "[T]he common law is not a static but a dynamic and growing thing. Its rules arise from the application of reason to the changing conditions of society."[17] The tort claims of aerial trespass[18] and intru-

---

9. Rule, supra note 5, at 169–70.

10. FAA Modernization and Reform Act of 2012, Pub. L. No. 112-95 § 332, 126 Stat. 11, 73 (2012).

11. Keith Wagstaff, FAA Misses Deadline for Creating Drone Regulations, NBC NEWS (Oct. 1, 2015, 3:29 PM), http://www.nbcnews.com/tech/innovation/faa-misses-deadline-creating-drone-regulations-n437016.

12. This Note will not address the use of drone technology by government entities or any potential violations of Fourth Amendment rights. For information on the threat posed by law enforcement use of drones, see Robert Molko, THE DRONES ARE COMING! Will the Fourth Amendment Stop Their Threat to Our Privacy?, 78 BROOK. L. REV. 1279 (2013).

13. This Note will briefly touch on the subject of commercial drone use in an effort to explain the different considerations, as well as the similarities between drones that are used for recreational purposes and those that are used in a commercial context.

14. OFFICE OF THE INSPECTOR GEN., U.S. DEP'T OF TRANSP., AUDIT REPORT NO. AV-2014-061, FAA FACES SIGNIFICANT BARRIERS TO SAFELY INTEGRATE UNMANNED AIRCRAFT SYSTEMS INTO THE NATIONAL AIRSPACE SYSTEM (2014) [hereinafter AUDIT REPORT].

15. See, e.g., Drone Aircraft Privacy and Transparency Act of 2013, H.R. 1262, 113th Cong. (2013).

16. See, e.g., TENN. CODE ANN. § 70-4-302(a)(6) (2012 & Supp. 2015).

17. Roach v. Harper, 105 S.E.2d 564, 568 (W. Va. 1958).

sion upon seclusion[19] are applicable to situations in which a private individual uses a drone in a way that interferes with another's private property or offends their personal space. As drone technology continues to develop and evolve, statutory solutions are likely to become outdated and obsolete, while tort claims of broad-ranging applicability are flexible enough to adapt to unpredictable technological advances. State legislation faces many challenges that are not implicated by addressing violations of privacy with common law tort claims. The legislation runs against the public interest, as it might have a chilling effect on the private experimentation with the technology. State legislation also runs the risk of being preempted by the enactment of federal laws that govern private drone use. Additionally, it is unclear how broadly the FAA regulations will reach once they are finalized.

Part II of this Note explores the background and current development of drone technology, focusing on drones used for recreational purposes by private parties. Part III examines the current legal landscape of drone integration into American society, addressing both federal and state legislative and regulatory efforts. Part IV discusses the common law torts of aerial trespass and intrusion upon seclusion, and analyzes how, although currently overlooked in the drone debate, they can adapt to provide remedies that would address unreasonable intrusions by hobbyist drones. Part V concludes this Note by offering brief closing remarks.

II. UNMANNED AIRCRAFT SYSTEMS

This Part discusses the historical development of UAS technology. It highlights the evolution of drone technology from a military tool to a technology that has limitless domestic applications. This Part also explains the current use of drone technology and the possible applications for UAS in the future as the equipment continues to become more affordable. Finally, this Part examines the privacy implications as drones become integrated into the national airspace.

---

18. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 159(2) (1965).
19. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652B (1977).

A. History and Development of UAS Technology

In theory, the history of UAS is as long as the history of aviation itself.[20] Drone technology has traditionally been used as a military tool.[21] The evolution of drone technology is marked by stages of rapid expansion followed by episodes of inactivity.[22] This trend is due in large part to the fact that research and development is sparked by a reaction to a specific problem that arises during a specific conflict.[23] In response to the close combat missions fought in World War I, technologists began to develop the first operational remote piloted vehicle.[24] As the conflict between 20. Early research in unmanned aircraft provided a framework that would be used by early developers of manned aircraft, such as the Wright brothers, who first achieved sustained flight in 1903. Eyes in the Sky: The Domestic Use of Unmanned Aerial Systems: Hearing Before the Subcomm. on Crime, Terrorism, Homeland Security, & Investigations of the Comm. on the Judiciary H.R., 113th Cong. 2 (2013) (statement of Christopher R. Calabrese, Legislative Counsel, American Civil Liberties Union); see also John Villasenor, Observations from Above: Unmanned Aircraft Systems and Privacy, 36 HARV. J. L. & PUB. POL'Y 462 (2013).

---

21. The Army became involved in unmanned flight research as early as 1918. See JOHN DAVID BLOM, UNMANNED AERIAL SYSTEMS: A HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVE, COMBAT STUDIES INST. PRESS 1 (2010), http://usacac.army.mil/cac2/cgsc/carl/download/csipubs/OP37.pdf; see also, e.g., Neville Parton, Introduction, in ROYAL AIR FORCE DIRECTORATE OF DEF. STUDIES, UAVS: THE WIDER CONTEXT 4 (Owen Barnes ed., 2011) ("[T]he first flying bomb type device was developed during the First World War."); John Sifton, A Brief History of Drones, THE NATION (Feb. 7, 2012), www.thenation.com/article/166124/brief-history-drones# ("Air warfare has been with us for a hundred years, since the Italian invasion of Libya in 1911, and the development of drones was in the works from the start. The reason is simple: even with all the advantages offered by air power, humans still needed to strap themselves into the devices and fly them. There were limits to the risks that could be taken.").

22. Foreword to ROYAL AIR FORCE DIRECTORATE OF DEF. STUDIES, UAVS: THE WIDER CONTEXT, supra note 21, at 2.

23. See Christina J.M. Goulter, The Development of UAVs and UCAVs: The Early Years, in ROYAL AIR FORCE DIRECTORATE OF DEF. STUDIES, UAVS: THE WIDER CONTEXT, supra note 21, at 11.

24. BLOM, supra note 21, at 46 (2010) (describing "the Bug" as a prototype of the UAS, which "had a counter that measured the number of rotations made by the propeller" and at a preset number would drift towards the ground and towards a particular target); see Goulter, supra note 23, at 13 (explaining that the war ended before the tools were used in combat).

the Soviet Union and the United States worsened during the 1960s, the U.S. employed drones as a successful reconnaissance tool.[25] UAS were put to use during the Vietnam War due to the necessity for stealth in monitoring the activities on the North and South Vietnamese borders.[26] During this period, the research focused on creating technology that could reach higher altitudes and remain aloft for longer periods of time.[27]

During the 1980s, the development of UAS moved from an idea in need of innovation and proper management to a tool that played a significant role in military operations worldwide.[28] In 1990, Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait giving developers an opportunity to learn from the use of UAS.[29] The UAS available at the time proved to be extremely valuable by providing information about enemy positions.[30] It was during this period that the technology expanded exponentially. Operations in Afghanistan and Iraq, following the 2001 attack of the World Trade Centers, provided another forum to experiment with new tools, demonstrated by the increase in the type and quantity of missions performed by 25. See Goulter, supra note 23, at 11. This advance was made in reaction to the loss of the U2 Spyplane in 1960 over the USSR. Id.

---

26. Id. It can be argued that it was during this period that the technology really takes off. It is difficult to ignore the role played by cruise missiles and ballistic missiles when speaking about the military development of drones. Id. at 19. Cruise missiles are essentially a version of a drone that can be dispatched and guided in flight, but they cannot hover or return to base. Sifton, supra note 21.

27. BLOM, supra note 21, at 64. There was also progress made in the stealth capabilities of the UAS that could prevent them from being detected on a radar. Id. at 65.

28. During this period, the DARPA began to look for ways to create a long endurance UAS and merge them with new technologies. David Jordan & Ben Wilkins, Unmanned Aerial Vehicles Operations Since the 1980s, in ROYAL AIR FORCE DIRECTORATE OF DEF. STUDIES, UAVS: THE WIDER CONTEXT, supra note 21, at 28. There is little known about the breadth of DARPA's UAS research and development because many of their programs are concealed due to security concerns. Id. DARPA began to explore the idea of combining long endurance technologies with other emerging technologies, such as solar power. Id. The agency's efforts resulted in three small UAV's designed for reconnaissance and three other prototypes intended to serve as loitering cruise missiles. Id.

29. Id. at 30–32.

30. Id. at 31.

UAS.[31] The first armed drone was flown in Afghanistan in 2001, and the next year the CIA used an unmanned Predator drone in a targeted killing.[32] The CIA continues to use aggressive drone attacks in Pakistan, Yemen, and Somalia as a more accurate method of aerial attacks.[33]

B. Benefits and Capabilities of Domestic Drones

The potential uses of drone technology are seemingly endless. Currently, drones are being used by the Department of Homeland Security in performing border and port surveillance, by NASA for scientific research and environmental monitoring, by universities to conduct research, and to support other activities by government entities.[34] Drones can also be used by fire departments,[35] farmers to assist in agriculture and ranching,[36] humanitar-

---

31. BLOM, supra note 21, at 105.

32. Sifton, supra note 21. This attack remains controversial because the target of the strike was a "tall man" purported to be Osama bin Laden. Id. Military officials were quick to acknowledge that the "tall man" was not bin Laden, but continue to claim that the targets of the strike were "legitimate" and "appropriate." Id.

33. Ajoke Oyegunle, Comment, Drones in the Homeland: A Potential Privacy Obstruction Under the Fourth Amendment and the Common Law Trespass Doctrine, 21 COMMLAW CONSPECTUS 365, 375–76 (2013). The drone program was expanded under President Barack Obama. See Matt Sledge, The Toll of 5 Years of Drone Strikes: 2,400 Dead, THE HUFFINGTON POST (Jan. 23, 2014, 7:32 PM), http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2014/01/23/obama-drone-program-anniversary_n_4654825.html (estimating that 2,400 people were killed by drone attacks in the five years since his administration initiated its program).

34. ROADMAP, supra note 1, at 25 (explaining that unmanned aircraft are currently operating in the NAS under very controlled circumstances).

35. Jay Stapleton, The Drone Dilemma; Unmanned Aircraft Run Into Raft of Regulatory, Privacy Issues, CONN. L. TRIB., Feb. 17, 2014, at 1 (describing a situation in which a man used a drone he owned personally to communicate hazards to firefighters below); see also Greg Jakubowski, Preplanning & Incident Management Trends, FIREFIGHTER NATION, Sept. 2013 (describing several situations in the firefighting and rescue context that could benefit from the deployment of drones).

36. This method of agriculture has been used in Japan since the early 1990s as a way to assist elderly farmers and prevent pesticides from entering residential areas. Sara Sorcher, What Can Drones Do for You, NAT'L J. (Apr. 11 2013), https://www.nationaljournal.com/s/81276/what-drones-can-do-you?q (arguing that using a drone to apply pesticides to crops is preferable to the current method of spraying the entire field, which wastes money, resources, man-ian missions,[37] search and rescue operations,[38] mining and property related endeavors,[39] and as a delivery tool.[40]

Hobbyists have spent decades building and using remote-controlled aerial vehicles; however, the capabilities of the average drone greatly exceed expectations for the typical model airplane.[41] Drones come in a variety of sizes and capabilities that can be customized to fit the operator's needs.[42] Individuals are able to purchase and assemble drones, as well as equip the drone with other technologies that will expand the capabilities of the drone.[43] The power, and increases pollution). Ranchers can also use drones to test the air quality in feed lines, track livestock, and detect health problems in animals. Id.

---

37. The benefits for humanitarian missions include the ability to obtain samples from, or send medicine and other supplies to people in need when roads are inaccessible and manned aircraft are of short supply or unavailable. Id.

38. Sonia Waharte & Niki Trigoni, Supporting Search and Rescue Operations with UAVs, University of Oxford (unpublished manuscript), https://www.cs.ox.ac.uk/files/3198/submission_waharte.pdf.

39. See Robert Spence, The Mining Sector Puts Drones to Work, MINING GLOBAL (Sept. 24, 2014), http://www.miningglobal.com/tech/1167/The-Mining-Sector-Puts-Drones-to-Work (explaining the various ways in which the mining industry would benefit from the use of drones in the field). See generally Sorcher, supra note 36.

40. John Aziz, Why You Should Be Excited About Amazon's Drone Delivery, THE WEEK (Dec. 2, 2013), http://theweek.com/articles/455298/should-excited-about-amazons-drone-delivery.

41. Rule, supra note 5, at 159–60; see also Radio Control, ACAD. OF MODEL AERONAUTICS, http://www.modelaircraft.org/museum/radiocontrol.aspx (last visited Feb. 21, 2016).

42. Ben Jenkins, Note, Watching The Watchmen: Drone Privacy and the Need for Oversight, 102 KY. L.J. 161, 163 (2014) ("Drones can range in size from a traditional jet to an insect.").

43. There are a variety of surveillance and other technologies that can be attached to drones. ACLU REPORT, supra note 7, at 5–6. "High-power zoom lenses . . . "allow for significant zooming" to focus on specific people without a chance of them noticing. Id. at 5. Infrared imaging shows heat emitted by objects, so it can identify living things in the dark. Id. "Ultraviolet (UV) imaging can detect some materials not visible in natural or infrared light" and is likely to improve by becoming more sensitive and available at higher resolutions. Id. "Synthetic Aperture Radar" is a technology that can see through inclement weather conditions and vegetation, "and has the potential to penetrate the earth and walls. Id. "Video analytics" will allow the technology "not just to collect [the footage] but also to 'watch' video . . . . and [be able] recognize and respond to specific people, events, and objects." Id.

most commonly used drone among hobbyists is the backpack-craft-style drone.[44] A drone this size can be built, carried, and operated by a single person.[45]

C. The Privacy Threat from Hobbyist Drones

The improvement of drone technology has many positive applications, but also presents serious privacy concerns. New types of technology inevitably create new modes of human collaberation and conflict; and consequently, they create novel and interesting legal issues.[46] Model airplane operators and drone enthusiasts are quickly becoming proficient in UAS operation. The advancement of drone technology is eroding the limitations inherent to manned aircraft because UAS are affordable, require little maintenance, and hobbyists are permitted to fly with few restrictions and with little, if any, aviation qualification.[47]

As the cost of UAS technology decreases, more drones will be entering the airspace. Increasing drone use, especially drones equipped with camera and sensory devices, will inevitably lead to new threats that an operator will violate an individual's right to privacy. For example, on YouTube, there are hundreds of videos shot by hobbyist drone operators, recording everything from sporting events, DUI checkpoints, national parks, public beaches, and other public areas.[48] The amount of videos available gives some indication as to the prevalence of hobbyist drones. Peeping toms, as well as unsuspecting drone operators, will be able to use the technology to see people in their most intimate moments.[49]

---

44. An example is an AeroVironment Raven that weighs 4 pounds, has a 4.5 feet wingspan, and can fly up to 14,000 feet and stay in the air for 110 minutes. See id. at 3.

45. Id.

46. Thomas Clark, Drones in Our Future: Opportunity and Privacy Considerations, CAL. ST. ASSEMBLY 2 (Aug. 8, 2014), http://ajud.assembly.ca.gov/sites/ajud.assembly.ca.gov/files/reports/Drones%20Background%20Paper.pdf.

47. 14 C.F.R. § 91 (2015) (demonstrating the lack of restrictions that govern hobbyist drone operators).

48. See, e.g., Epic Drone Videos: Sharing the Worlds Best Drone Videos, YOUTUBE, https://www.youtube.com/channel/UC9FmF7MZlsl3QCWtuCAnOeQ (last visited Feb. 25, 2016).

49. This inadvertently happened in 2004 when the New York police helicopter equipped with night vision found a couple engaged in sexual relations on

Numerous reports indicate the pervasiveness of drones and demonstrate reactions of people who have come face to face with a bothersome drone. In Seattle, a woman heard a noise outside that sounded like a weed eater, but it was actually a drone hovering by her third story window.[50] In another drone incident, a woman spotted a drone hovering at her bedroom window on the 26th floor of her apartment building as she was dressing.[51] The woman described the situation as "freaky" and immediately notified the building security personnel.[52] Recently, a family reported a drone that was flying around their home as they were enjoying dinner on their patio.[53] The drone subsequently crashed into a tree in the yard and the family was able to recover a memory chip from the drone.[54] The memory chip revealed pictures of the family's activities that afternoon, as well as photos from other houses.[55]

Additionally, this is a problem when private people are recorded by drones in a public place. There have been a number of incidents taking place at public beaches where drones have reportedly been lurking around unsuspecting sunbathers.[56] Following a a dark, private rooftop balcony. See Jim Dwyer, Police Video Caught a Couple's Intimate Moment on a Manhattan Rooftop, N.Y. TIMES (Dec. 22, 2005), www.nytimes.com/2005/12/22/nyregion/22rooftop.html.

---

50. Rebecca J. Rosen, So This is How It Begins: Guy Refuses to Stop Drone-Spying on Seattle Woman, THE ATLANTIC (May 13, 2013), http://www.theatlantic.com/technology/archive/2013/05/so-this-is-how-it-begins-guy-refuses-to-stop-drone-spying-on-seattle-woman/275769/ (describing an incident in which a woman spotted a drone hovering over her yard outside of her home at the third story window).

51. Christina Sterbenz, Should We Freak Out About Drones Looking in Our Windows?, BUSINESS INSIDER (Sept. 24, 2014, 2:22 PM), http://www.businessinsider.com/privacy-issues-with-commercial-drones-2014-9.

52. Id.

53. Corey Vaughn, Drone Drops in on Family, THE DAILY IBERIAN (Jan. 30, 2015), http://www.iberianet.com/news/drone-drops-in-on-family/article_9cf3b2c0-a89a-11e4-bd19-4f0d9d2b404f.html.

54. Id.

55. Id.

56. Joseph Serna, As Hobby Drone Use Increases, So Do Concerns About Privacy, Security, L.A. TIMES (June 21, 2014, 4:58 PM), http://www.latimes.com/local/la-me-drone-hobbyist-20140622-story.html (describing situations in California where a mother notified the lifeguard that a drone was hovering over her and her daughter snapping photos as they tanned;

Los Angeles Kings game, a group of celebrating fans noticed a drone was buzzing around their heads and videoing the festivities following the Stanley Cup.[57] The fans, angered that the drone was recording them, retaliated by hitting the drone down using a t-shirt and smashing it with a skateboard.[58] The police that responded to the incident stated that, if the owner came to claim his drone, they must give it back to him and do little else, because flying a drone in public is not illegal.[59]

In addition to private party concerns, several organizations are issuing blanket bans on drones in specific areas or events. The common sighting of drones in the national parks[60] caused the National Park Service to release a temporary ban on the use of drones in national parks.[61] The National Football League issued a statement that banned the use of drones at the 2015 Superbowl.[62] Major League Baseball banned Indians pitcher Trevor Bauer's drone that he built during offseason after he used it to take aerial shots during spring training.[63]

There are concerns that drone use will further erode personal privacy if the information collected by UAS is distributed to and in Connecticut, where a drone operator was attacked by a woman who accused him of snapping pictures of her).

---

57. Id.

58. Id.

59. Id.

60. Id. (describing two incidents in national parks, the first at Mt. Rushmore, where ranger confiscated a drone after it flew around the monument and over the heads of visitors, and the second at Zion National Park in Utah where volunteers "watched a drone buzz over a herd of big horn sheep, separating the adults from the young").

61. Press Release, Nat'l Park Serv., Unmanned Aircraft to be Prohibited in America's National Parks (June 20, 2014), http://www.nps.gov/cure/learn/news/unmanned-aircraft-prohibition.htm (quoting National Park Service Director Jonathon Jarvis, "[w]e have serious concerns about the negative impact that flying unmanned aircraft is having in parks, so we are prohibiting their use until we can determine the most appropriate policy that will protect park resources and provide all visitors with a rich experience.").

62. Michael S. Schmidt & Michael D. Shear, Drones Spotted, but Not Halted, Raise Concerns, N.Y. TIMES, Jan. 30, 2015, at A1.

63. Extra Mustard, Indians Pitcher Flies Drone Over Spring Training, MLB Promptly Bans It, SPORTS ILLUSTRATED (Feb. 20, 2015), http://www.si.com/extra-mustard/2015/02/20/cleveland-indians-trevor-bauer-drone-banned.

consumer data brokers. In a statement by Senate Commerce Committee Chairman Jay Rockefeller, he pointed out that "consumers are 'already under assault' from the multi-billion dollar data broker industry 'dedicated to tracking our health status, our shopping habits, and our movements.'"[64] As drone technology continues to become more pervasive, the "worry that drones . . . could be yet another way for private companies to track where we are and what we are doing" becomes more serious.[65] The effect on society could be damaging if people begin to believe that someone is always monitoring their behavior.[66]

III. CURRENT LEGAL LANDSCAPE

This Part addresses the current efforts by the federal and state government to regulate drone use. Section A discusses action taken by of the Federal Aviation Administration, which is the federal government's primary regulatory authority for nearly every aspect of the aviation activities. Section B provides an overview of federal legislative attempts and executive weigh-ins on the issue. Section C provides a brief account of the executive regulatory efforts. Section D highlights state regulatory attempts and some of the problems associated with the state legislative action.

A. Federal Aviation Administration

The FAA is the division of the Department of Transportation that is in charge of regulating the national airspace by ensuring it is used in a safe and efficient manner.[67] The FAA regulates aircraft design, manufacture, repair, and operation by publishing a set of rules in the Code of Federal Regulations.[68] Generally, no air-

---

64. Clark, supra note 46, at 5.

65. Id.

66. Psychologists have found that people tend to behave differently when they feel like are being observed which could create a chilling effect on an individual's general decision-making and behavior. M. Ryan Calo*, People Can Be So Fake: A New Dimension to Privacy and Technology Scholarship*, 144 PENN ST. L. REV. 809, 842–43 (2010).

67. ROADMAP*, supra* note 1, at 14.

68. 14 C.F.R. pt. 23, 25 (2015); see also Clark, supra note 46, at 5. The FAA also releases clarification and policy documents in the form of agency orders, advisory circulars, and notices-to-airmen. They license pilots, regulation craft may operate in the national airspace without some sort of approval from the FAA.[69]

1. FAA Modernization and Reform Act of 2012

It is not shocking that the FAA is under tremendous pressure from legislators, manufacturers, and commercial industry representatives to develop a strategy to safely integrate drones into the national airspace system ("NAS").[70] The FAA Modernization and Reform Act of 2012 ("FMRA") required the FAA to develop a plan to safely integrate UAS into the NAS.[71] The purpose of the law was to introduce drones for domestic use by revamping the nation's air traffic control system and to accelerate the expansion of drone use by September 30, 2015.[72] The FMRA requires that the Secretary of Transportation, in consultation with the industry representatives and other federal agencies who employ UAS,[73] to develop a comprehensive plan to safely facilitate the integration of civil UAS into the national airspace by the September 2015 deadline.[74] The comprehensive plan supports coordination and integra-commercial airlines, oversee the operation of air traffic control, issue certificates to who can operate in the airspace.

---

69. Clark, supra note 46, at 2.

70. The FAA first approved use of UAS in 1990. Press Release, Fed. Aviation Admin., Fact Sheet – Unmanned Aircraft Systems (UAS) (Feb. 15, 2015), https://www.faa.gov/news/fact_sheets/news_story.cfm?newsId=18297.

71. The FMRA is an appropriations and reform law. FAA Modernization and Reform Act of 2012, Pub. L. No. 112–95, 126 Stat. 11 (2012).

72. Id.

73. The agencies involved in the integration of UAS include, but are not limited to, the following: the Department of Transportation, Defense, Commerce, Homeland Security, National Aeronautics and Space Administration, and the Federal Aviation Administration. Id.; see ROADMAP, supra note 1, at 7 ("The FAA will coordinate these integration activities with other United States Government agencies, as need, through the Interagency Planning Committee (IPC).").

74. FAA Modernization and Reform Act of 2012, Pub. L. No. 112–95, § 332, 126 Stat. 11, 73 ("The plan required . . . shall contain, at a minimum, recommendations or projections on . . . the best methods to enhance the technologies and subsystems necessary to achieve safe and routine operation of civil unmanned aircraft systems . . . a timeline for the phased-in approach [to integration] . . . airspace designation for cooperative manned and unmanned aircraft systems into the national airspace system . . . [and the] establishment of a pro-

tion of research and development, explaining that an assessment of the needs and prioritization of activities are essential to integrating UAS.[75] The FAA failed to meet the deadline for creating national drone regulations.[76]

The FAA faces difficulty as they attempt to craft regulations that are not overly broad or too narrow.[77] They must clarify which regulations apply to these types of aircrafts to ensure that the definition is broad enough to encompass all forms of unmanned aircraft, without unintentionally regulating current operators in the NAS, such as manned aircraft.[78] The "requirements [for UAS] will vary depending on the nature and complexity of the operation, aircraft or component system limitations, pilot and other crewmember qualifications, and the operating environment."[79] The FAA considers unmanned aircraft to be an aircraft flown by a pilot, despite the fact that there is no pilot onboard. Due to this assumption, existing regulations and policies will be applied to unmanned aircraft.[80] The current procedures that apply to manned aircraft are cess to develop certification, flight standards, and air traffic requirements for civil unmanned aircraft systems at test ranges . . . ."); see also ROADMAP*, supra* note 1, at 18.

---

75. JOINT PLANNING AND DEV. OFFICE, supra note 4, at 13.

> Integration of UAS into the NAS will require: review of current policies, regulations, environmental impact, privacy considerations, standards, and procedures; identification of gaps in current UAS technologies and regulations, standards, policies, and procedures; development of new technologies and new or revised regulations, standards, policies, and procedures; and the associated development of guidance material, training, and certification of aircraft systems, propulsion systems, and airmen.

ROADMAP*, supra* note 1, at 7.

76. Wagstaff, supra note 11.

77. "Ultimately, UAS must be integrated into the NAS without reducing existing capacity, decreasing safety, negatively impacting current operators, or increasing the risk to airspace users or persons and property on the ground any more than the integration of comparable new and novel technologies." ROADMAP, supra note 1, at 4.

78. Id. at 4.

79. Id. at 23.

80. Id. at 9.

not suitable for UAS.[81] The complete integration of the UAS in other airspace classes will require the development of new or supplemental procedures.[82]

The FMRA establishes three categories of UAS with separate rules that apply to each.[83] The three broad categories of UAS are public, civil, and private drones. Currently, public and civil drone operators must obtain FAA approval before operating drones.[84] Public drones are owned and operated by a governmental entity, which must apply for a certificate of authorization or waiver.[85] Civil drones, those used for commercial or business purposes, must obtain a special airworthiness certificate from the FAA by demonstrating that they can operate safely within assigned flight test areas and will cause no harm.[86] The FMRA contains a carve-out provision with respect to drones that are flown for recreational purposes.[87] Hobbyists are permitted to use the national

---

81. Id. at 25. "Existing airworthiness standards have been developed from years of operational safety experience with manned aircraft and may be too restrictive for UAS in some areas and inadequate in others." Id.

82. Id. at 18.

83. FAA Modernization and Reform Act of 2012, Pub. L. No. 112–95, § 333(b), 126 Stat. 11, 76. The decision on which UAS will have these special rules will be based on a determination of "which types of unmanned aircraft systems, if any, as a result of their size, weight, speed, operational capability, proximity to airports and populated areas, and operation within visual line of sight do not create a hazard to users of the national airspace system or the public or pose a threat to national security." Id.

84. Public Operations (Governmental), FED. AVIATION ADMIN., http://www.faa.gov/uas/public_operations/ (last updated Sept. 11, 2015); Civil Operations (Non-governmental), FED. AVIATION ADMIN., http://www.faa.gov/uas/civil_operations/ (last updated Mar. 17, 2015).

85. Public Operations (Governmental), supra note 84.

86. Drones used for commercial purposes fall into this category. Id.

87. FAA Modernization and Reform Act § 336 ("[T]he Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration may not promulgate any rule or regulation regarding a model aircraft, or an aircraft being developed as a model aircraft, if . . . the aircraft is flown strictly for hobbyist or recreational use . . . ."). Recent reports indicate however, that model airplanes may be subject to the new FAA rules regarding small UAS. See Gregory S. McNeal, FAA's Proposed Drone Rules May Address Toy Drones, FORBES (Jan. 29, 2015 11:26 AM), http://www.forbes.com/sites/gregorymcneal/2015/01/29/in-a-surprise-change-faas-proposed-drone-rules-will-address-toy-and-hobbyist-drones/.

airspace without any advanced permission, if they abide by the standards set forth in section 336 of the FMRA.[88]

2. FAA's Authority to Regulate Hobbyist Drones

The authority of the FAA to regulate the national airspace is premised on the fact that "'air travel is inherently interstate travel' and thus falls within federal jurisdiction based on the Commerce Clause."[89] With the rise of hobbyist drones, that by their very definition operate at less than 500 feet of altitude and often do not travel interstate, the federal authority over such operations is arguably uncertain.[90] Under current FAA regulations, the FAA contends that drones used for recreational purposes must follow the guidelines set forth in Advisory Circular 91-57 ("AC 91-57"), released in 1981.[91] AC 91-57 "outlines, and encourages voluntary compliance with safety standards for model aircraft operators."[92] The suggestions include that the operators stay a > sufficient distance from populated areas[,] . . . do not operate model aircraft in the presence of spectators until the aircraft is sufficiently flight tested and

---

88. FAA Modernization and Reform Act § 336. The conditions include that the aircraft is flown strictly for recreational purposes, the aircraft is not more the 55 pounds, the aircraft operates in a way that does not interfere with any manned aircraft, and that when flown within 5 miles of an airport, the operator gives the prior notice to the air traffic controller. Id. Drones used for recreational use or hobby are prohibited from flying above 400 feet, operating near airports, flying at night and must stay within the line of sight of the operator. Model Aircraft Operations, FED. AVIATION ADMIN., http://www.faa.gov/uas/model_aircraft/ (last updated Feb. 10, 2016).

89. Rule, supra note 5, at 198 (quoting Jeffrey A. Berger, Comment, Phoenix Grounded: The Impact of the Supreme Court's Changing Preemption Doctrine on State and Local Impediments to Airport Expansion, 97 NW. U. L. REV. 941, 965 (2003)).

90. Id. at 198–99.

91. DEP'T OF TRANSP., FED. AVIATION ADMIN., MODEL AIRCRAFT OPERATING STANDARDS, ADVISORY CIRCULAR 91-57 (1981) [hereinafter AC 91-57].

92. Respondent's Motion to Dismiss at 5, Huerta v. Pirker, No. CP-217 (N.T.S.B. 2014) (explaining that AC 91-57 does not distinguish between model airplanes that are flown for recreational use or those that are flown for a commercial or business purpose).

> proven airworthy[,] . . . do not fly model aircraft higher than 400 feet above the surface[,] . . . [and] when flying aircraft within 3 miles of an airport, notify the control tower, or flight service station.[93]

In a later policy statement issued in 2007, the FAA clarified that to qualify as a model airplane, the operator must only fly the aircraft for recreational purposes.[94]

The carve-out provision for recreational drones in the FMRA also contains language that nothing will limit the FAA's authority to take action against an individual who uses their model aircraft in a way that endangers the safety of the NAS.[95] In an attempt to regulate drone operators, the FAA issues cease and desist letters.[96] It is important to note that the guidelines established by the FAA with regard to model airplanes and recreational drones do not carry the weight of the law[97] and the FAA has not attempted to enforce them as such until recently.[98]

Thus far, one operator has successfully challenged the FAA's authority to regulate hobbyist drone use.[99] An administrative judge found for the operator, who argued that the attempts to

---

93. AC 91-57, supra note 91.

94. Unmanned Aircraft Operations in the National Airspace System, 72 Fed. Reg. 6689-01 (Feb. 13, 2007) (to be codified at 14 C.F.R. pt. 91).

95. FAA Modernization and Reform Act of 2012, Pub. L. No. 112–95, § 336(b), 126 Stat. 11, 77.

96. Michael Berry & Nabiha Syed, Litigation Pushes Back Against FAA Enforcement, WASHINGTON POST (Sept. 24, 2014), http://www.washingtonpost.com/news/volokh-conspiracy/wp/2014/09/24/litigation-pushes-back-against-faa-enforcement/.

97. The FAA is required to adhere to the requirements of the to the Administrative Procedures Act ("APA"), which lays out the process for which a federal agency may enact rules and regulations. Administrative Procedures Act, 5 U.S.C. § 553 (2013). This process is required for any informal rulemaking that will bind the public to comply. Id.; see also Decisional Order, Huerta v. Pirker, No. CP-217 (N.T.S.B. Mar. 6, 2014). For more information on the APA, see Thomas W. Merrill & Kathryn Tongue Watts, Agency Rules with the Force of Law: The Original Convention, 116 HARV. L. REV. 467 (2002).

98. FED. AVIATION ADMIN., INTERIM OPERATIONAL APPROVAL GUIDANCE 08-01: UNMANNED AIRCRAFT SYSTEMS OPERATIONS IN THE U.S. AIRSPACE SYSTEM 6 (2008).

99. Decisional Order, Huerta v. Pirker, No. CP-217 (N.T.S.B. Mar. 6, 2014).

regulate the use of UAS through the Advisory Circular and the policy statements are not valid because they were not subjected to the requirement for agency rulemaking set out in the Administrative Procedures Act.[100] It is clear that the FAA does have the power to bring action against hobbyist that use drones in a way that will impact high altitude flights or operate near airports, but their authority with regard to safe, low altitude operations remains to be seen.[101] Examined holistically, the FAA's regulations regarding hobbyist drones are vague and arbitrary.[102]

B. Federal Legislative Attempts

Given that the FAA is struggling to implement regulation, it is unsurprising that the legislative process has taken hold of the issue. Federal bills aimed at drone usage largely focus on their use by public officials[103] and are attempts to fill gaps that are perceived in the FMRA.[104] The Preserving America Privacy Act includes

---

100. The APA requires that a governing agency publish a notice of the proposed rule in the Federal Register that includes the time and place of the proceeding regarding the proposed rules to give interested persons an opportunity to review and submit their views on the proposed rules. Administrative Procedures Act, 5 U.S.C. § 553.

101. Rule, supra note 5, at 164.

102. Most drones operate on a system that controls the drone through some type of video that can be seen on the operator's handheld device. See id. at 157. These are naturally meant to be operated outside of the operator's line of sight, and commonly are. Id. at 163–64. The recently released FAA plan for small commercial drones require that those drones stay below 500 feet, but it is unclear what the purpose is served by 100 feet altitude difference for hobbyist and commercial drones. Bart Jansen, FAA Unveils Drone Rules; Obama Orders Policy for Agencies, USA TODAY (Feb. 16, 2015, 8:12 AM), http://www.usatoday.com/story/news/2015/02/15/faa-drone-rule/23440469/.

103. This Note does not address issues raised by government or public use of drones.

104. See Drone Aircraft Privacy and Transparency Act of 2013, H.R. 1262, 113th Cong. (2013) (requiring that every applicant for a UAS certificate to include in its application information on how it intends to collect, use and retain information; require FAA to make these applications available on its website; prohibit law enforcement from using UAS for investigation and intelligence purposes without a warrant, subject to certain exceptions; and require any UAS application by law enforcement to include a minimum data statement); Preserving Freedom from Unwarranted Surveillance Act of 2012, S. 3287, 112th Cong. (2012); Cameron Cloar, Unmanned Aircraft: Filling US Airspace – And Court- specific provisions that address the use of a drone by a private citizen to capture any type of visual image or recording that would be highly offensive to a reasonable person.[105] The Drone Aircraft Privacy and Transparency Act of 2013 would obligate the Secretary of Transportation to "establish procedures to ensure that the integration of unmanned aircraft systems into the national airspace is done in compliance with privacy principles."[106] Another proposed federal bill that, if passed, would apply to hobbyist drones is the No Armed Drones Act, which would modify the FMRA to prevent armed drones from entering the national airspace.[107]

C. Executive Regulatory Efforts

The White House released an executive memorandum addressing privacy concerns posed by both public and private drone operators on February 15, 2015.[108] The memo was designed to rooms?, LAW360 (July 5, 2012, 12:44 PM), http://www.law360.com/articles/355118/unmanned-aircraft-filling-us-airspace-and-courtrooms.

---

105. Preserving American Privacy Act of 2013, H.R. 637, 113th Cong. § 319f (2013) ("It shall be unlawful to intentionally operate a private unmanned aircraft system to capture, in a manner that is highly offensive to a reasonable person, any type of visual image, sound recording, or other physical impression of a individual engaging in a personal or familial activity under circumstances in which the individual had a reasonable expectation of privacy, through the use of a visual or auditory enhancing device, regardless of whether there was a physical trespass, if this image, sound recording, or other physical impression could not have been achieved without a trespass unless the visual or auditory enhancing device was used").

106. H.R. 1262 § 338. This was reintroduced in 2015 as the Drone Aircraft Privacy and Transparency Act of 2015. Drone Aircraft and Transparency Act of 2015, S. 635, 114th Cong. (2015).

107. No Armed Drones Act of 2013, H.R. 1083, 113th Cong. (2013).

108. Memorandum from President Barack Obama, Promoting Economic Competitiveness While Safeguarding Privacy, Civil Rights, and Civil Liberties in Domestic Use of Unmanned Aircraft Systems (Feb. 15, 2015), https://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2015/02/15/presidential-memorandum-promoting-economic-competitiveness-while-safegua; see also Kevin Robillard & Erin Mershon, Obama to Issue Drove Privacy Order, POLITICO (July 23, 2014, 7:01 PM), http://www.politico.com/story/2014/07/executive-order-drone-privacy-barack-obama-109303.html#ixzz38PrOcxLj; Charles D. Tobin et al., FAA Proposes Commercial Drone Rules As White House Issues Executive Memo, HOLLAND & KNIGHT (Feb. 17, 2015), http://www.hklaw.com/publications/FAA-Proposes-address the privacy and transparency issues raised by various members of congress and civil liberty groups. The memo directed at the National Telecommunications and Information Administration ("NTIA") to develop operational guidelines for drone use that will "develop and communicate best practices for privacy, accountability and transparency issues regarding commercial and private UAS use."[109] The NTIA is a section of the Commerce Department and would work with other government agencies to develop guidelines for commercial drone operators.[110] The NTIA has conducted similar investigations involving multi-stakeholder privacy interests for issues that arose during the introduction of technology such as mobile application and facial recognition.[111]

D. State Legislative Actions

"Concerns over privacy tend to manifest themselves at the local level," meaning that states are largely responsible for enacting legislation restricting the private use of drones.[112] Thus far, twenty-six states have enacted legislation and six have enacted resolutions concerning drone use.[113] In 2013, forty-three states

---

Commercial-Drone-Rules-As-White-House-Issues-Executive-Order-02-17-2015/?utm_source=Mondaq&utm_medium=syndication&utm_campaign=View-Original.

109. Tobin et al., supra note 108; see also Gregory S. McNeal, Drones Face Critical Moment as White House Prepares to Act, FORBES (Nov. 30, 2014, 6:23 PM), http://www.forbes.com/sites/gregorymcneal/2014/11/30/drones-face-critical-moment-as-white-house-prepares-to-act/.

110. McNeal, supra note 109.

111. Tobin et al., supra note 108.

112. Raymond L. Mariani, Rise of the Drones: The Growing Proliferation of Unmanned Aircraft in the National Airspace System, THE BRIEF, Summer 2014, at 18, 23; see also Melanie Reid, Grounding Drones: Big Brother's Tool Box Needs Regulations Not Elimination, 20 RICH. J. L. & TECH. 9, 25 (2014).

113. Current Unmanned Aircraft State Law Landscape, NAT'L CONF. OF ST. LEGISLATURES, http://www.ncsl.org/research/transportation/current-unmanned-aircraft-state-law-landscape.aspx (last updated Feb. 26, 2016); Allie Bohm, The Year of the Drone: An Analysis of State Legislation Passed This Year, AM. CIV. LIBERTIES UNION (Nov. 7, 2013, 8:50 AM), https://www.aclu.org/blog/technology-and-liberty/year-drone-roundup-legislation-passed-year [hereinafter The Year of the Drone] ("[I]t is . . . remarkable that many bills were enacted the first session out of the gate given that legislation often takes multiple years to marinate and gain legislator and public

considered bills related to domestic drones and eight states enacted legislation related to drone use.[114] Four of the states simply appropriated money for programs related to drones, generally for the purpose of promotion rather than restriction.[115] The reluctance to enact legislation that would restrict private use may be due to of economic considerations or because they are being considered as locations for drone test sites.[116]

Not all states share this sentiment with regard to drones. Of the nine that imposed restrictions, most deal with law enforcement and other governmental agencies, on which this Note does not address.[117] In 2013, three states enacted legislation that aimed at imposing restrictions on the private use of drone technology.[118] Idaho approved the first UAS bill, which is aimed at protecting people from surveillance by UAS.[119] Oregon also passed drone legislation support before passing."); see, e.g., S.B. 1221, 27th Legis., Reg. Sess. (Haw. 2013).

---

114. Current Unmanned Aircraft State Law Landscape, NAT'L CONF. OF ST. LEGISLATURES, http://www.ncsl.org/research/transportation/current-unmanned-aircraft-state-law-landscape.aspx (last updated Feb. 26, 2016); see Allie Bohm, Status of 2014 Domestic Drone Legislation in the States, AM. CIV. LIBERTIES UNION (April 22, 2014, 10:30 AM), https://www.aclu.org/blog/technology-and-liberty/status-2014-domestic-drone-legislation-states [hereinafter Status of 2014 Domestic Drone Legislation]; see also, e.g., FLA. STAT. ANN. § 934.50 (West 2015).

115. 2013 State Unmanned Aircraft Systems (UAS) Legislation, NAT'L CONF. OF ST. LEGISLATURES, http://www.ncsl.org/research/transportation/2013-state-unmanned-aircraft-systems-uas-legislation.aspx (last updated July 21, 2015).

116. Hawaii, Maryland, Nevada, and North Dakota are the four states that passed these types of bills. See id. Interestingly, of these four states that enacted this type of promotional legislation, Hawaii, Nevada, and North Dakota were selected to operate a test range under the FAA's research and development plan. See generally id.

117. Oregon, Montana, Idaho, Texas, Illinois, Tennessee, Virginia, North Carolina, and Florida are states that enacted this type of legislation. See id.

118. The Year of the Drone, supra note 114; see also, e.g., OR. REV. STAT. ANN. § 837.380 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.), Current Unmanned Aircraft State Law Landscape, supra note 113.

119. 2013 State Unmanned Aircraft Systems (UAS) Legislation, supra note 115. The bill prohibits individuals from using a drone to take photographs of private property without obtaining the owner's prior written permission. Id. (citing S.B. No. 1134, 62nd Leg., 1st Reg. Sess. (Idaho 2013)). Idaho has the in 2013, which focuses on private property.[120] Texas passed legislation concerning drones used to capture images in certain types of circumstances.[121] The law creates two new crimes: the illegal use of an unmanned aircraft to capture images and the offense of possessing or distributing the image.[122]

Five states enacted legislation regarding drones in 2014. Indiana became the first state to enact UAS legislation in 2014,[123] which established that it is a crime for a person to intentionally, electronically survey the private property of another without first obtaining permission.[124] In Louisiana, it is unlawful to intentional-most sweeping of the regulations which allows a person to assert a private cause of action and recover "actual and general damages" from someone who uses a drone to photograph them, without written consent for the purpose of publicly disseminating such recording, defines an "Unmanned Aircraft System," requires warrants for their use by law enforcement, establishes guidelines for their use by private citizens and provides civil penalties for damages caused by improper use. Id.

---

120. Id. If a person has notified the drone operator on a previous occasion that they do not wish for the operator to fly the drone over their property, a landowner can bring an action against that operator for flying the drone lower than 400 feet over their property. Id. (citing OR. REV. STAT. § 837.380 (West 2013), amended by OR. REV. STAT. ANN. § 837.380 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.)). The law also requires that the DOA must report to legislative committees on the status of federal regulations and whether UAS's operated by private parties should be registered in a manner similar to the requirement for other aircraft. Id. (citing OR. REV. STAT. § 837.360 (West 2013), amended by OR. REV. STAT. ANN. § 837.360 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.)).

121. Id. (citing Texas Privacy Act, TEX. GOV'T CODE ANN. § 423 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.)) (enumerating many lawful uses for unmanned aircraft, including their use in airspace designated as an FAA test site, use in connection with a valid search warrant and use in oil pipeline safety).

122. 2013 State Unmanned Aircraft Systems (UAS) Legislation, supra note 115. Texas Privacy Act §§ 423.003–.004. "Image" is defined broadly as any sound wave, thermal, ultraviolet, visible light or other electromagnetic waves, odor, or other conditions existing on property or an individual located on the property. Id. at § 423.001.

123. 2014 State Unmanned Aircraft Systems (UAS) Legislation, NAT'L CONF. OF ST. LEGISLATURES, http://www.ncsl.org/research/transportation/2014-state-unmanned-aircraft-systems-uas-legislation.aspx (last updated July 2, 2015) (citing IND. CODE § 35-46-8-5 (Lexis Nexis 2009)).

124. Id. (citing IND. CODE § 35-46-8-5 (Lexis Nexis 2009)). Note this law does not apply specifically to drone technology but more generally to all surveillance technology.

ly use a drone to carry out surveillance directed at a specific location without the owner's prior written permission.[125] North Carolina law creates a civil cause of action for those whose privacy is violated.[126] Tennessee adopted two new laws in 2014.[127] The first makes it a misdemeanor for any private entity to use a drone to conduct video surveillance of a person who is hunting or fishing without their consent.[128] The second law provides that it is a crime for a person to use UAS to knowingly conduct surveillance of an individual or their property.[129] Wisconsin enacted a law that regulates the use of a drone by a person, with the intent to observe another individual, in a place where they have a reasonable expectation of privacy.[130]

---

125. Id. (citing LA. STAT. ANN. § 14:337 (Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.)). The crime is punishable by a fine of up to $500 and imprisonment for six months. Id. A second offense can be punished by a fine up to $1,000 and one-year imprisonment. Id.

126. 2014 State Unmanned Aircraft Systems (UAS) Legislation, supra note 123 (citing N.C. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 15A-300.1 (West 2014)). The new law prohibits any entity from conducting UAS surveillance of a person or private property and also prohibits taking a photo of a person without their consent for the purpose of distributing it. Id. The bill creates several new crimes: using UAS to interfere with manned aircraft, a class H felony; possessing an unmanned aircraft with an attached weapon, a class E felony; the unlawful fishing or hunting with UAS, a class 1 misdemeanor; harassing hunters or fisherman with a UAS, a class 1 misdemeanor; unlawful distribution of images obtained with a UAS, a class 1 misdemeanor; and operating a UAS commercially without a license, a class 1 misdemeanor. Id. (citing H.B. 1099, 2013 Gen. Assemb., Reg. Sess. (N.C. 2014)).

127. Id. (citing TENN. CODE ANN. § 70-4-302 (2012 & Supp. 2015); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-13-609 (West, Westlaw through 2016 2nd Reg. Sess.)).

128. Id. (citing TENN. CODE ANN. § 70-4-302(a)(6) (2012 & Supp. 2015)).

129. Id. (citing TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-13-609(a)(1) (West, Westlaw through 2016 2nd Reg. Sess.)). It also makes it a crime to possess those images (Class C Misdemeanor) or to otherwise use them (Class B Misdemeanor). Id. The law also identifies 18 lawful uses of UAS, including the commercial use of UAS under FAA regulations, professional or scholarly research and for use in oil pipeline and well safety. Id.; see also BENNETT, supra note 3, at 5 ("[O]ne can escape liability by showing that, upon learning the images were obtained unlawfully, the drone operator promptly destroyed or stopped publicizing them." (citing TENN. CODE ANN. §§ 39-13-609)).

130. Id. (citing WIS. STAT. ANN. § 942.10 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Act 150)).

In 2015, twenty states passed legislation concerning drone use and eight of these new laws are concerned with regulating private, hobbyist drone operators.[131] Arkansas prohibits the use of a drone to commit any acts that would constitute an act of voyeurism[132] and outlawed the use of UAS to collect or record information about critical infrastructure without consent.[133] Florida enacted new legislation that prohibits the use of a UAS to capture images of privately owned property or the owner, tenant, or occupant of a property without first obtaining consent from said party if it can fairly be said that a reasonable expectation of privacy exists.[134] Illinois created a task force that would consider and prepare recommendations for both the private and commercial use of UAS within the state.[135] Maryland passed legislation that prevents other entities other than the state from enacting law that regulate the testing or operation of UAS.[136] Mississippi enacted legislation that specifies that using a drone to commit any type of "peeping Tom" activities is a felony if the victim is under the age of sixteen.[137] North Dakota provides limitations on how hobbyists can use UAS for surveillance purposes.[138] Tennessee enacted legislation to fur-

---

131. See generally Current Unmanned Aircraft State Law Landscape, NAT'L CONF. OF ST. LEGISLATURES, http://www.ncsl.org/research/transportation/current-unmanned-aircraft-state-law-landscape.aspx (last updated Feb. 26, 2016).

132. Id. (citing ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-16-101(b) (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess. & 2015 1st Ex. Sess.)).

133. Id. (citing ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-60-103(b) (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess. & 1st Ex. Sess.)).

134. Id. (citing FLA. STAT. ANN. § 934.50 (West 2015)).

135. Unmanned Aerial System Oversight Task Force Act, Pub. L. No. 099-0392, 2015 Gen. Assemb. (Ill. 2015).

136. Current Unmanned Aircraft State Law Landscape, supra note 113 (citing MD. CODE ANN., ECON. DEV. § 14-301(b) (West, Westlaw through ch. 1–6 of 2016 Reg. Sess.)).

137. Current Unmanned Aircraft State Law Landscape, supra note 113 (citing MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-29-61 (West, Westlaw through end of 2015 Reg. Sess.)).

138. Current Unmanned Aircraft State Law Landscape, supra note 113 (citing N.D. CENT. CODE ANN. § 29-29.4-05 (West, Westlaw through ch. 484 of 2015 Reg. Sess.)).

ther the regulation of drones by prohibiting the use of a drone to capture images of open-air events and firework displays.[139]

E. Problems Faced by Legislative Attempts

It is interesting that as of yet, no plaintiff has brought a claim against another private citizen for the unlawful use of drones to invade or trespass on his or her property.[140] The enactment of this type of legislation ignores that there is already a body of existing, general privacy laws that are technology neutral that can be applied to protect privacy from varied forms of surveillance.[141] Many of the laws passed by the states are unnecessarily broad and could be found to infringe on certain fundamental rights.[142]

1. Preemption

The federal government has authority over the national airspace and should the Congress pass legislation aimed at civilian drone use, the state legislation would be rendered useless.[143] State attempts to impose curfews at airports or prevent flight over certain areas are often held to be federally preempted, demonstrating that there is precedent for preemption of state legislation regarding the 139. Current Unmanned Aircraft State Law Landscape, supra note 113 (citing TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-13-609 (West, Westlaw through 2016 2nd Reg. Sess.)).

---

140. BENNETT, supra note 3, at 7.

141. Id. at 4.

142. Idaho's restrictions, for example, would likely inhibit a journalist from using a drone to collect information about a traffic situation absent the consent of all the people operating their vehicles on the road. Allie Bohm, The First State Laws on Drones, AM. CIV. LIBERTIES UNION (April 15, 2013, 3:13 PM), https://www.aclu.org/blog/first-state-laws-drones. It could prevent an aerial photographer from using the drones to take photos of public facilities for upcoming publications. Id.

143. Preserving American Privacy Act of 2013, H.R. 637, 113th Cong. § 3119i (2013). The language of the bill arguably implied that the law would preempt state regulation of drones that are flying between states. See also Margot E. Kaminski, Drone Federalism: Civilian Drones and the Things They Carry, 4 CALIF. L. REV. CIR. 57, 73 (2013) (explaining the preemption of state drone regulations).

national airspace.[144] The Preserving American Freedom Act contains language that arguably could be construed to preempt drone regulation passed by the state and would regulate drones flown state to state.[145]

The FAA's authority over airspace and privacy consideration was expanded in the FRMA.[146] Congress acknowledged the FAA's interest in privacy matters by altering the FAA's mission, calling on the FAA to conduct a study on the integration of the UAS integration into national airspace on individual privacy.[147] The language of the statement clearly shows that Congress intends for the FAA to do research on the future of privacy implications. Although the FAA claims that it will not be delving deeply into the privacy issues posed by drone use, officials acknowledge that there are privacy challenges that will be addressed as they integrate UAS into the national airspace.[148] The FAA proposed and requested public input on the privacy research for the test site programs,

---

144. City of Burbank v. Lockheed Air Terminal, Inc., 411 U.S. 624, 633 (1973); San Diego Unified Port Dist. v. Gianturco, 651 F.2d 1309-10 (9th Cir. 1981); Kaminski, supra note 143, at 73.

145. "Nothing in this Act shall be construed to preempt any State law regarding the use of unmanned aircraft systems exclusively within the borders of that State." Preserving American Privacy Act of 2013 § 3119i (2013) (emphasis added); see also Kaminski, supra note 143, at 73 (explaining that this language could have the effect of preempting state regulations that apply to drones that are flying from state to state).

146. BENNETT, supra note 3, at 8 (arguing that the plan "presupposes at least some federal guidance with respect to 'private' privacy").

147. Id. at 12 ("The study should address the application of existing privacy law to UAS integration; identify gaps in existing law, especially with regard to the use and retention of personally identifiable information and imagery; and recommend next steps for how the FAA can address the impact of widespread use of UAS on individual privacy as it prepares to facilitate the integration of UAS into the national airspace." (quoting Explanatory Statement, Consolidated Appropriations Act of 2014, H.R. 3547, 113th Cong., Division L. at 6 (Jan. 14, 2014))).

148. Id. at 9. When selecting the sites that would be used for testing drones, FAA's administrator Michael Huetra justified the FAA's slow pace with privacy concerns, explaining that the concerns of privacy "necessitates an extensive review of the privacy impacts of the test site program." Id. (quoting Letter from Michael P. Huerta, Acting Administrator, Fed. Aviation Admin., to Michael Toscano, President and CEO, Ass'n for Unmanned Vehicle Systems Int'l (Sept. 21, 2012)).

which will serve as a basis for evaluating the privacy issues that will arise as drone use becomes more frequent. When the FAA publicized the test site selections, the announcement also issued privacy guidelines that the test site operators would be required to follow.[149] The agency emphasized that transparency, public involvement, and compliance with existing laws will be necessary as they research the privacy implications of expanded drone use.[150] The FAA's licensing power also will allow for transparency and notice to people whose privacy rights may be infringed.[151] These requirements issued for the test sites and licensing indicate that the FAA will at least temporarily be charged with the duty of ensuring privacy rights are not violated by the test site operators.[152]

2. Impeding Innovation

Today's drone experimenters are no different from inventors from the past who attempted to explore the world from a new point of view. This period of exploration should not be curtailed by unnecessary and limiting regulation. It would be better to see how drones and the technology evolves naturally, observing how people use drones and what problems arise as drones become more commonplace. The best way to do this is to allow existing state laws and common law doctrines to serve their remedial purpose.

---

149. Id. at 10. Privacy considerations were required to be taken by the test site operators: to sign special contracts with the FAA that required them to keep records of all drone flights, to have a written plan for use and retention of drone-collected data, to maintain an openly available privacy policy, to annually assess compliance being assessed by the operator annually in a manner accessible to the public, to obey any applicable privacy laws, then existing or subsequently enacted, and to acknowledge that the FAA may suspend test site operations if the terms of the contract are not honored by the test site operator. Id.

150. JOINT PLANNING AND DEV. OFFICE, supra note 4, at 7.

151. Kaminski, supra note 143, at 67.

152. JOINT PLANNING AND DEV. OFFICE, supra note 4, at 4 (explaining that the agency did not seek to enter the privacy arena with the regulations, but instead seeks to "inform the dialogue among policymakers, privacy advocates, and the industry regarding broader questions concerning the use of UAS technologies in the NAS"); see also BENNETT, supra note 3, at 11–12 noting how Congress charged the FAA to undertake privacy research in this area).

3. Untested Legislation

Given that many of the laws enacted by the states remain untested, it is difficult to determine how effective any of this new legislation will be. Once the use of drones by private citizens becomes more commonplace, the new regulations on drones will be tested as to their effectiveness or legality. There is no consensus on which state laws will better regulate the use of drones or which law will withstand challenges.[153] The states are at best making educated guesses based on other precedents that do not specifically speak to the problems that could be caused by drone use.[154]

4. Violation of First Amendment Rights

Laws that restrict the ability of civilians to engage in legitimate information gathering will undoubtedly implicate First Amendment issues. The First Amendment protects an individual's right to privacy regarding speech, assembly, and religion.[155] Laws restricting ability in legitimate or essential information gathering will be made in the name of privacy but will still place restrictions on speech.[156] If drone restriction has a chilling effect on protected activities, that could be regarded as a violation of the fundamental right to free speech. The First Amendment's protection of speech and privacy is most at odds when applied to the media's information gathering rights. Some of these laws prohibit photos in public areas or objects and people in plain view.

---

153. BENNETT, supra note 3, at 7 (stating that "[t]he uncertainty will frustrate the consensus about how best to regulate drones, snooping, and nongovernmental actors—and thus bolster states' prerogatives in the short run"); see also Kaminski, supra note 143, at 69–71 (explaining different state drone-related privacy laws).

154. BENNETT, supra note 3, at 7. "Two core assumptions inform modern drone policy: drones will allow for more aerial surveillance than other airborne platforms have to date, and more drones will soon find their way into more private hands." Id.

155. U.S. CONST. amend. I.

156. Kaminski, supra note 143, at 61.

5. Inconsistency Across the States

One of the benefits that accompanies state regulations is that the state government is best equipped to cater to the needs and values of the citizens in that state. But the inconsistency with regard to drone legislation across the states could present problems for operators as they attempt to comply with the various state regulations. Operators may not know of regulations of a state that they are visiting and could inadvertently violate a law, subjecting themselves to penalties. In sum, UAS could create "interesting jurisdictional issues for state courts."[157]

IV. COMMON LAW APPLICABILITY

Having analyzed the current efforts underway to regulate drone use, this Part argues that a common law approach may be superior, at least as a supplement, to a regulatory approach given the fast-changing nature of drone technology and use. "Privacy is one of the sensitive and necessary human values and undeniably there are circumstances under which it should enjoy the protection of law."[158] Specifically, this Part analyzes the common law torts of intrusion upon seclusion and trespass to argue that a tort approach to drone intrusions could prove to be a useful tool in the fast changing and complex world of emerging technology. The common law tort system is already in place as a regulatory tool and has the advantage of experience in application with regard to emerging technologies.[159] A tort approach may not eliminate all problems associated with regulating drones, but it can serve as an ancillary method of address privacy invasions by hobbyist operators as these arise. This approach would enable legislators to more carefully craft laws to address problems posed by drones, rather than creating solutions aimed to address hypothetical situations.

---

157. Benjamin Kapnik, Unmanned but Accelerating: Navigating the Regulatory and Privacy Challenges of Introducing Unmanned Aircraft into the National Airspace System, 77 J. AIR L. & COM. 439, 464 n.156 (2012).

158. Leopold v. Levin, 259 N.E.2d 250, 254 (1970).

159. Andrew J. McClurg, A Thousand Words Are Worth a Picture: A Privacy Tort Response to Consumer Data Profiling, 98 NW. U. L. REV. 63, 97–98 (2003).

A. Intrusion Upon Seclusion

Samuel Warren and Louis Brandeis introduced the general idea that the law should protect the right to privacy in the publication, The Right to Privacy, in 1890.[160] Dean Prosser furthered the concept of invasion of privacy as a distinctive and independent right by explaining that there are four distinct types of invasions that can give rise to liability.[161] Intrusion upon seclusion is designed to protect the right to privacy by guarding our affairs from the "prying eyes and ears of others."[162] This is exactly why it is the most logical way to guard against the potential privacy violations as the law catches up with the technology.[163]

The second Restatement of Torts explains, "one who intentionally intrudes, physically or otherwise, upon the solitude or seclusion of another or his private affairs or concerns, is subject to liability to the other for invasion of his privacy, if the intrusion would be highly offensive to a reasonable person."[164] As the Restatement of Torts points out, a claim of intrusion upon seclusion has a few essential elements. The intrusion must be intentional for the plaintiff to state a cause of action. This element of the tort is important since it focuses on behavior, which will avoid any First Amendment issues that are likely to arise with state legislative ac-

---

160. Interestingly, the authors viewed the protection of privacy as increasingly important as new forms of technology began to appear. See Samuel D. Warren & Louis D. Brandeis, The Right to Privacy, 4 HARV. L. REV. 193, 195 (1890) (citing to "recent inventions and business method" as reasons to secure a right to privacy).

161. Jeffrey F. Ghent, Annotation, Invasion of Privacy by Radio or Television, 56 A.L.R. 3d 386, § 2a (1974). These include: "(1) intrusion upon the plaintiff's seclusion or solitude, or into his private affairs; (2) public disclosure of embarrassing private facts about the plaintiff; (3) publicity which places the plaintiff in a false light in the public eye; and (4) appropriation, for the defendant's advantage, of the plaintiff's name or likeness." Id.

162. See Nader v. Gen. Motors Corp., 255 N.E.2d 765, 768 (N.Y. 1970) (finding that observance that is deliberate and malicious can give rise to a remedy); see also Jane Yakowitz Bambauer, The New Intrusion, 88 NOTRE DAME L. REV. 205, 230 (2012) (explaining the rationale behind the tort of intrusion upon seclusion).

163. See Nader, 255 N.E.2d at 768 (N.Y. 1970); see also Bambauer, supra note 162, at 230 (explaining further the rationale behind the tort of intrusion upon seclusion).

164. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652B (1977).

tions.[165] Malicious intent is not always required in order to have an actionable invasion of privacy claim;[166] instead, some courts look at what the intruder did rather than what their purpose for the intrusion was.[167] The purpose of the operator of a drone and the actions taken by the drone operator should be a relevant inquiry when determining the culpability of the operator, further highlighting the applicability of the tort to drones.

A physical intrusion is not necessary for the tort to apply.[168] Courts have applied the tort to nonphysical intrusions, such as eavesdropping on private conversations and peering through windows.[169] Additionally, the comments to the Restatement stress that the tort protects against unwanted surveillance, even when there has been no trespass and the victim is unaware of the offensive conduct.[170] The significance of the torts application to nonphysical intrusions should not be understated. It shows that the tort can be adapted to apply to various situations in which a person's privacy has been invaded. Given the maneuverability and discrete characteristics of drones, the tort of intrusion upon seclusion should be applied to situations where an operator uses their drone to peer into the windows of homes or make recordings without the knowledge of the victim.[171]

A victim typically must be in a private place unless the intrusion involves access to matters that are not exhibited for public gaze.[172] The Restatement also notes that "there may be some matters about the plaintiff, such as his underwear or lack of it, that are

---

165. Bambauer, supra note 162, at 230.

166. Love v. S. Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 263 So. 2d 460, 466 (La. Ct. App. 1972).

167. Id.

168. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652B cmt. b (1977). The tort can be committed through "the use of the defendant's senses, with or without mechanical aids, to oversee or overhear the plaintiff's private affairs, as by looking into his upstairs windows with binoculars." Id.

169. See Nader v. Gen. Motors Corp., 255 N.E.2d 765, 770 (N.Y. 1970) (holding that eavesdropping and peering through windows would obviously constitute an invasion of privacy); Hamberger v. Eastman, 206 A.2d 239 (1964).

170. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652B cmt. b (1977).

171. Baugh v. Fleming, No. 03-08-00321-CV, 2009 WL 5149928, at *2 (Tex. App. Dec. 31, 2009) (permitting a claim based on videotaping through the window of a home).

172. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 652B cmt. c (1977).

not exhibited to the public gaze" which implies that it could be applied to drone operators, even if they are filming in a public place, if the filming is considered offensive.[173] Seclusion has also been found in public spaces if constant surveillance is used to track an individual.[174] Given the comments and court decisions that have found intrusions in a variety of situations, persistent recording of a location or tracking a person with a drone, even if done in a public place, may be actionable in some jurisdictions.

Additionally, this privacy tort does not require that information collected be disseminated to third persons, making it more widely applicable to a private citizen using their drone against another private citizen.[175] Courts instead examine the full extent of the defendant's behavior over a period of time in which the intrusion was taking place.[176] This analysis would be beneficial in the case against a drone operator, particularly if the conduct affected multiple people.

The tort of intrusion upon seclusion can be applied to wrongs committed by hobbyist drone operators without the problems that can result from forms of state legislation. The court in Roach v. Harper[177] stated, "[t]he common law is not a static but a dynamic and growing thing. Its rules arise from the application of

---

173. Id.

174. Kramer v. Downey, 680 S.W.2d 524, 526 (Tex. App. 1984) (holding that incessant observations by a previous romantic partner, even though the defendant remained on public property to do so, was an intrusion that justified damages); Luken v. Edwards, No. C10-4097-MWB, 2011 WL 1655902, at *5 (N.D. Iowa May 3, 2011) (allowing an intrusion claim to proceed that was premised on the interception of phone conversations between the plaintiff and her counsel in the midst of a divorce proceeding).

175. See McDaniel v. Atlanta Coca-Cola Bottling Co., 2 S.E.2d 810, 817 (Ga. Ct. App. 1939) (stating that the general rule is that publication is not necessary to state a claim for intrusion); Hamberger v. Eastman, 206 A.2d 239, 242 (N.H. 1964) (finding that publication can impact the amount of damages awarded for the intrusion).

176. Biondich v. NBC Subsidiary (WMAQ-TV, Inc.), No. 1-09-2269, 2011 WL 9717470, at *3–6 (Ill. App. Ct. Jan. 21, 2011) (ruling against reporters who film plaintiffs in their homes after they objected).

177. Roach v. Harper, 105 S.E.2d 564, 566–68 (W. Va. 1958) (applying the tort of intrusion to a case in which a landlord had installed a listening device in the dwelling of a tenant to find that the landlord had intruded upon the tenant's privacy).

reason to the changing conditions of society."[178] Applying the tort of intrusion upon seclusion to a drone offense would reveal the specific problems that arise as drones enter the airspace. Additionally, this approach would not impede innovations and can be more readily adapted as the technology continues to change. This would enable policy makers to more carefully craft regulations that will address the issues, rather than creating solutions to an issue that has not yet become a problem. Intrusion can be modified by private agreements, which strongly resemble much of the state legislation language that the drone operator must obtain the property owners consent to operate a drone over their property, revealing the unnecessary nature of the state legislation.[179] By allowing a property owner to consent, the doctrine of intrusion can redefine what that particular owner objectively expects to be a reasonable invasion of their privacy.[180]

B. Aerial Trespass

Prior to the acknowledgement that privacy is a distinct right worthy of protection, courts had often protected the right to privacy under the "guise of property right."[181] The trespass doctrine has historically defended a property owner's right to exclude others from their land.[182] At common law, the space above and below a property was considered to belong to the owner. This is known as the ad coelom doctrine, short for the Latin phrase "cuius est solum, eius usque ad coelum et ad infernos," meaning "to him to whom the soil belongs, belongs also to heaven and to the depths."[183] As William Blackstone explained, "no man may erect any building, or the like, to overhang another's land . . . . So that the word 'land' includes not only the face of the earth but everything under it, or over it."[184] The idea that an owner of land also has interest in the space above the land is reflected in modern sources as aerial tres-

---

178. Id. at 568.

179. Bambauer, supra note 162, at 254 (claiming that the First Amendment is not implicated with the use of the tort of intrusion).

180. Id.

181. Ghent, supra note 161.

182. Rule, supra note 5, at 175.

183. See Eric R. Claeys, On the Use and Abuse of Overflight Column Doctrine, 2 Brigham-Kanner Prop. Rts. Conf. J. 61, 61 (2013).

184. 2 WILLIAM BLACKSTONE, COMMENTARIES 18 (1766).

pass. The second Restatement of Torts states that "[f]light by aircraft in the air space above the land of another is a trespass if, by only if, (a) it enters into the immediate reaches of the air space next to the land, and (b) it interferes substantially with the other's use and enjoyment of his land."[185]

The Supreme Court rejected the traditional common law doctrine in the case of United States v. Causby, where the Court held that property rights extend only so far as needed for the person to use and enjoy their property.[186] The "enveloping atmosphere rule" announced in Causby established that landowners possess as much of the airspace above their property to which they can reasonably use and an invasion of this airspace is trespass subject to damages.[187] But there is no clear authority as to exactly how far this right extends, creating continued uncertainty regarding low-altitude airspace rights.[188] The Causby Court stated "the flight of airplanes, which skim the surface [of land] but do not touch it, is as much an appropriation of the use of the land as a more conventional entry upon it . . . . [I]nvasions of it are in the same category as invasions of the surface."[189] The language of this statement indicates that it would be reasonable to expand the aerial trespass tort doctrine to situations that involve the use of drones.

A great example of the aerial trespass doctrine in action involves overhanging encroachment situations. The common law's treatment of overhanging encroachments as a trespass is analogous

---

185. See RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 159(2) (1965).

186. See United States v. Causby, 328 U.S. 256, 260–61 (1946). The court rejects this doctrine stating that "[i]t is ancient doctrine that at common law ownership of the land extended to the periphery of the universe . . . [b]ut that doctrine has no place in the modern world. Id.

187. See Todd Janzen, How a 1940's Chicken Farmer Case Answered: Who Owns the Sky?, JANZEN AG LAW BLOG (Jan. 30, 2016), http://www.aglaw.us/janzenaglaw/2016/1/28/united-states-v-causby-the-1940s-chicken-farmer-case-that-will-impact-drone-law.

188. See Rule, supra note 5, at 169 (arguing for a more definite altitude to govern whether a drone has committed a trespass); see also Colin Cahoon, Comment, Low Altitude Airspace: A Property Rights No-Man's Land, 56 J. AIR L. COM. 157, 198 (1990). "With no definitive standard yet enunciated, and courts mixed in their approach to the question, landowners must still wonder just exactly what their property rights are to the airspace above their land." Id. at 198.

189. Causby, 328 U.S. at 264–65.

to drone operations over the land of another. "If a tree, building, or other structure affixed to the ground extends over the property and encroaches" on the airspace directly above another's land, "the law typically will enforce the right of a person to exclude this encroachment."[190] In many states, a property owner even has the right to trim the overhanging shrubbery or trees in the air above their land.[191]

"The common trespass law doctrine draws no limitations upon the character of the trespasser," so it can be applied in a variety of situations and circumstances.[192] Under traditional trespass doctrine, flight by an aircraft constitutes a trespass if it enters into the immediate reaches of airspace next to the land and interferes with the owner's use and enjoyment of the land.[193] Drones are far superior to traditional aviation technology that was examined by the courts in trespass doctrine cases, but courts have demonstrated that the common law can be adapted to new and emerging technologies. This is demonstrated through the development of the law with regard to the emergence of the radio,[194] the Internet,[195] and the telephone.[196]

---

190. Rule, supra note 5, at 182.

191. See, e.g., Macero v. Busconi Corp., 12 Mass. L. Rep. 521 (Super. Ct. 2000) (stating that the law in Massachusetts "recognizes a right to self-help by which a property owner can cut the limbs or branches of a tree that invade his property as long as such cutting is done at the property line").

192. See RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 159 (1965); see also Oyegunle, supra note 33, at 384.

193. See id.; Geoffrey Christopher Rapp, Unmanned Aerial Exposure: Civil Liability Concerns Arising from Domestic Law Enforcement Employment of Unmanned Aerial Systems, 85 N.D. L. REV. 623, 645 (2009).

194. See generally Radio Spectrum Allocation, FED. COMM. COMMISSION, www.fcc.gov/encyclopedia/radio-spectrum-allocation (last visited Feb. 25, 2016) (describing basic modern law that governs the property rights related to the radio).

195. See generally Michael L. Rustad & Diane D'Angelo, The Path of Internet Law: An Annotated Guide to Legal Landmarks, 2011 DUKE L. & TECH. REV. 12 (2011) (providing a general history of the complex legal landscape surrounding the property interest related to the Internet).

196. See generally Navarra v. Bache Halsey Stuart Shields, Inc., 510 F. Supp. 831 (E.D. Mich. 1981) (finding that eavesdropping with a telephone is actionable).

Courts must engage in a "subjective and unpredictable" analysis as to whether the alleged trespass enters into the "immediate reaches" of the land and whether it "interferes substantially" with the landowner's use of the land.[197] When applying this principle to an alleged trespass committed by the use of a drone, a court could apply a different rule that views the drone as a projectile rather than an aircraft.[198] Courts have held that it is actionable trespass to fire projectiles and to fly an advertising kite through the air above land even though no harm to the land or to the possessor's enjoyment of it has occurred.[199] In sum, this tort would be implicated if a drone operator uses their drone close enough to the land of another and if it interfered with their enjoyment of land.[200]

V. CONCLUSION

Currently, drone regulation is in a constant state of modification as the technology is rapidly evolving. Legislation that is aimed at solving the problem of drone technology invading privacy is unnecessary, likely unconstitutional—and with regard to state legislative actions—runs the risk of preemption. Additionally, the states that have enacted legislation aimed at drones vary significantly in their application and breadth, leading to confusion among drone operators. The legislation and regulatory attempts at addressing hobbyist drones are untested, meaning their effectiveness is unknown. Common law existing tort claims of general applicability have been utilized for years by courts to address situations involving emerging technologies and to avoid the pitfalls of other regulatory efforts. Statutory solutions are likely to become outdated and obsolete, while common law tort causes of action are flexible enough to adapt as new uses for drones are discovered. For the foregoing reasons, privacy invasions committed by private, hobby-

---

197. Rule, supra note 5, at 170.

198. Id.

199. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF TORTS § 158 cmt. i. (1965) ("[I]n the absence of the possessor's consent or other privilege to do so, it is an actionable trespass to . . . fire projectiles . . . through the air above [the land], even though no harm is done to the land or to the possessor's enjoyment of it.").

200. For example, if an operator used their drone to video people lying by the pool in their backyard, this type of disruptive and interfering activity could be considered a trespass.

ist operators should be addressed by applying common law tort claims of intrusion upon seclusion and aerial trespass.

Pirate Battles in Outer Space: Preventing Patent Infringement on the 8th Sea

WILLIAM C. PANNELL

I. INTRODUCTION 733
II. THE JURISDICTION OF PATENT LAW 737
A. Decca Limited v. United States 738
B. NTP, Inc. v. Research in Motion, Ltd. 739
III. MARITIME LAW 740
IV. OUTER SPACE LAW 743
A. The Outer Space Treaty 744
B. The Registration Convention 745
C. The International Space Station 747
D. Patents in Space Act 748
V. ISSUES WITH OUTER SPACE PATENT LAW: THE LOOPHOLE 749
VI. PAST SUGGESTED SOLUTIONS 753
VII. THE BENEFICIAL USE SOLUTION 757
VIII. CONCLUSION 759

I. INTRODUCTION

The news of the Challenger space shuttle explosion in 1986 shocked the nation.[1] The catastrophe occurred just seventy-three seconds into the launch due to a faulty o-ring in the solid fuel rocket that led to a chain of failures ending with the mixing and ignition of liquid oxygen and liquid hydrogen fuel.[2] The event was nationally televised, and millions of Americans helplessly watched

---

1. Nick Greene, Remembering Challenger, January 28, 1986, ABOUT EDUC., http://space.about.com/cs/challenger/a/challenger.htm (last updated Jan. 27, 2016).

2. PRESIDENTIAL COMM'N ON THE SPACE SHUTTLE CHALLENGER ACCIDENT, REPORT OF THE PRESIDENTIAL COMMISSION ON THE SPACE SHUTTLE CHALLENGER ACCIDENT 19–21 (1986); Greene, supra note 1.

the disaster as it unfolded.[3] In the aftermath of the explosion, the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation ordered the Congressional Budget Office to perform a special study to determine the United States' future involvement in outer space.[4]

Twenty-six years prior to the Challenger incident, when the United States Shuttle Program was first created, the United States' policy was that space travel would be conducted almost exclusively in the public sector through the National Aeronautics and Space Administration ("NASA").[5] It was not until Congress enacted the Commercial Space Launch Act in 1984 that the private sector was allowed to launch spacecraft into outer space for the first time.[6] In 1990, the Launch Services Purchase Act was passed into law, requiring NASA to outsource the launches of its primary payloads to commercial launch providers.[7] By 2010, NASA extended its commercial launch preference to any "space goods, services, or activities," meaning that almost every launch beyond this point was to be contracted to the private sector.[8]

In the absence of a government space launch program, the commercial launch industry is a rapidly growing technological field valued at over $100 billion per year.[9] As with all technological advances, companies want to ensure that their future invest-

---

3. Greene, supra note 1.

4. See Rudolph G. Penner, Preface to CONG. BUDGET OFFICE, SETTING SPACE TRANSPORTATION POLICY FOR THE 1990S (1986), https://www.cbo.gov/sites/default/files/99th-congress-1985-1986/reports/doc24c-entire_0.pdf.

5. See Nat'l Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958, Pub. L. No. 85-568, 72 Stat. 426 (1958); Timothy A. Brooks, Regulating International Trade in Launch Services, 6 BERKLEY TECH. L.J. 59, 60–61 (2001).

6. See Commercial Space Launch Act, Pub. L. No. 98-575, 98 Stat. 3055 (1984) (enabling the private sector to launch commercial launch vehicles into outer space).

7. Launch Services Purchase Program, 42 U.S.C. § 2465d (1990) (repealed 1998).

8. See OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT, NATIONAL SPACE POLICY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA 10−12 (2010), https://www.whitehouse.gov/sites/default/files/national_space_policy_6-28-10.pdf.

9. GLENNON J. HARRISON, CONG. RESEARCH SERV., R42492, THE COMMERCIAL SPACE INDUSTRY AND LAUNCH MARKET 1 (2012), http://www.law.umaryland.edu/marshall/crsreports/crsdocuments/R42492_04202012.pdf.

ments are protected. Traditionally, inventors have used patents as a tool to obtain an exclusive right granted by a national government to exclude others from making, using, or selling an invention for a limited period of time.[10] "Because patents are granted by national governments, they are inherently territorial and may only be enforced within the jurisdiction of the granting government."[11] This means that while the holder of a United States patent would enjoy legal protection for her invention within the United States' territories, the inventor would also need to file for a patent in every other country in which she wishes to receive protection.[12] This jurisdictional issue presents many problems for protecting inventions that have wide, international markets. But what about inventions that have extraterrestrial markets? After all, no one has jurisdiction over outer space.[13]

---

10. Matthew J. Kleiman, Patent Rights and Flags of Convenience in Outer Space, AIR & SPACE LAW, 2011, at 4; see 35 U.S.C. § 271(a) (2013) ("Except as otherwise provided in this title, whoever without authority makes, uses, offers to sell, or sells any patented invention, within the United States or imports into the United States any patented invention during the term of the patent therefor, infringes the patent.").

11. Kleiman, supra note 10, at 4; s*ee* JON O. NELSON, INTERNATIONAL PATENT TREATIES 1 (2007); Christopher Miles, Comment, Assessing the Need for an International Patent Regime for Inventions in Outer Space, 11 TUL. J. TECH. & INTELL. PROP. 59, 59–60 (2008).

12. Kurt G. Hammerle & Theodore U. Ro, The Extra-Territorial Reach of U.S. Patent Law on Space-Related Activities: Does the "International Shoe" Fit as We Reach for the Stars?, 34 J. SPACE L. 241, 247 (2008) [hereinafter Extra-Territorial Reach]; Kleiman, supra note 10, at 4 ("For this reason, an inventor must file a separate patent application in each country where it wishes to obtain exclusive rights to an invention."); Theodore U. Ro et al., Patent Infringement in Outer Space in Light of 35 U.S.C. § 105: Following the White Rabbit Down the Rabbit Loophole, 17 B.U. J. SCI. & TECH. L. 202, 206–07 (2011) [hereinafter Patent Infringement in Outer Space].

13. Treaty on Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, Including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies, art. II, Oct. 10, 1967, 18 U.S.T. 2410, 610 U.N.T.S. 8843 [hereinafter Outer Space Treaty] ("Outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, is not subject to national appropriation by claim of sovereignty, by means of use or occupation, or by any other means."); Kleiman, supra note 10, at 5 ("Once an object is in space, however, it transcends the boundaries and protections of any single terrestrial market or patent jurisdiction.").

"For years, inventors have been filing and obtaining patents for technologies that have either exclusive applicability in outer space or dual-use applicability both on Earth and in outer space."[14] But these inventions are only protected on Earth.[15] In the beginning of commercial space flight, the technology and cost of entry for joining the commercial space launch industry was a barrier, which kept the number of companies in the field relatively small.[16] As the industry grows, however, and more companies enter the market, "traditional terrestrial legal issues associated with intellectual property ('IP') law will find increasing applicability to such commercial outer space activities."[17]

To address this issue, Congress enacted the Patents in Space Act in 1998, giving the United States extraterritorial jurisdiction over "[a]ny invention made, used, or sold in outer space on a space object or component thereof under the jurisdiction or control of the United States" subject to exceptions for compliance with international treaties.[18] As discussed later in this Note, Congress unintentionally created a loophole by adding these exceptions, allowing infringers in the United States to use, control, and derive benefits from technology in outer space that treads on a United

---

14. Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 205; s*ee also USPTO Patent Full-Text and Image Database*, U.S. PATENT & TRADEMARK OFF., http://patft.uspto.gov/netahtml/PTO/search-bool.html (last visited Mar. 3, 2016) (finding over 5,600 patents in a quick search that reference to the term "outer space"); USPTO Application Patent Full-Text and Image Database, U.S. PATENT & TRADEMARK OFF., http://appft.uspto.gov/netahtml/PTO/search-bool.html (last visited Mar. 3, 2016) (finding over 4,400 patent applications in a quick search that reference the term "outer space").

15. See Outer Space Treaty, supra note 13, art. II; Kleiman, supra note 10, at 5 ("Once an object is in space, however, it transcends the boundaries and protections of any single terrestrial market or patent jurisdiction.").

16. See Kleiman, supra note 10, at 5.

17. Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 205; see also Barbara Luxenberg, Protecting Intellectual Property in Space, in PROCEEDINGS OF THE TWENTY-SEVENTH COLLOQUIUM OF THE LAW OF OUTER SPACE, 172 (1984), http://digitalcommons.unl.edu/cgi/viewcontent.cgi?article=1005&context=spacelawdocs; Kunihiko Tatsuzawa, The Regulation of Commercial Space Activities by the Non-Governmental Entities in Space Law, SPACE FUTURE (1988), http://www.spacefuture.com/archive/the_regulation_of_commercial_space_activities_by_the_non_governmental_entities_in_space_law.shtml.

18. 35 U.S.C. § 105 (2013); see Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 208–09.

States patent without liability by registering their space vehicle in another country. This Note will suggest that a treaty should be made between the United States and the most technologically-advanced countries banning benefits derived from any technology used in outer space that would otherwise infringe on patents currently in force in the United States or any other participating countries.

II. THE JURISDICTION OF PATENT LAW

Before one can begin to understand patent law in outer space, one must have a basic understanding of United States patent law and its jurisdiction. For an inventor to obtain legal protection for an invention, the inventor must file a patent application in each country in which the inventor is interested in receiving jurisdictional protection.[19] A patent is a trade with a government. By filing a patent in a country, the inventor is given an exclusive property right by that country's government to exclude all other people in that country from making, using, or selling the invention for a limited period of time.[20] In exchange, the inventor must publicly disclose the invention with enough specificity so that a person skilled in the relevant field could make and use it.[21] The invention must

19. Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 207; Extra-Territorial Reach, supra note 12, at 247; Kleiman, supra note 10, at 4 ("For this reason, an inventor must file a separate patent application in each country where it wishes to obtain exclusive rights to an invention.").

20. 35 U.S.C. § 271(a) ("Except as otherwise provided in this title, whoever without authority makes, uses, offers to sell, or sells any patented invention, within the United States, or imports into the United States any patented invention during the term of the patent therefor, infringes the patent."); Kleiman, supra note 10, at 4; see also 35 U.S.C. § 261 ("[P]atents shall have the attributes of personal property.").

21. 35 U.S.C. § 112(a) ("The specification shall contain a written description of the invention, and of the manner and process of making and using it, in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art to which it pertains, or with which it is most nearly connected, to make and use the same, and shall set forth the best mode contemplated by the inventor or joint inventor of carrying out the invention.").

be new, useful, and nonobvious to receive a patent.[22] In most cases, a patent cannot be obtained for any invention that has already been disclosed to the public, with the exception of some countries—like the United States—that allow for a one-year grace period under certain disclosure situations.[23] Because patents are issued by governments, and are therefore inherently territorial, it follows that no country has patent jurisdiction over outer space.[24]

A. Decca Ltd. v. United States

Although patent jurisdiction is territorial, this does not limit patent infringement liability to acts that physically occur on United States soil. For example, United States courts have interpreted the definition of "use" of an infringing system or apparatus in a manner that allows certain extraterritorial acts to trigger infringement under United States jurisdiction.[25] In its 1976 opinion in Decca Ltd. v. United States,[26] the Court of Claims was faced with determining whether the United States had jurisdiction over a claim about a worldwide navigational system called Omega.[27] Omega utilized three transmitting stations—two located in the United States and one located in Norway—to send signals to receivers on ships and aircraft.[28] By noting the time differences between the three signals, the receiver could calculate its distance from each transmitter and determine its location.[29] In its opinion, the Court

---

22. See id. §§ 101–03. "Whoever invents or discovers any new and useful process, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, may obtain a patent therefor . . . ." Id. § 101.

23. Id. § 102(a)(1)−(b)(1); Kleiman*, supra* note 10, at 4.

24. Outer Space Treaty, supra note 13, at art. II ("Outer space, including the Moon and other celestial bodies, is not subject to national appropriation by claim of sovereignty, by means of use or occupation, or by any other means."); NELSON, supra note 11, at 1; Kleiman*, supra* note 10, at 4–5 ("Once an object is in space, however, it transcends the boundaries and protections of any single terrestrial market or patent jurisdiction."); see Miles, supra note 11, at 59–60.

25. See generally 35 U.S.C. § 271(a) ("Except as otherwise provided in this title, whoever without authority makes, uses, offers to sell, or sells any patented invention, within the United States or imports into the United States any patented invention during the term of the patent therefor, infringes the patent.").

26. 544 F.2d 1070 (Ct. Cl. 1976) (per curiam).

27. Id. at 1074.

28. Id.

29. Id.

of Claims held that the important factors in determining whether the patented system was "used" within the United States were "(1) whether 'control of a system' occurs on [United States] territory, (2) whether the system is 'owned' by a [United States] entity, and (3) whether there is 'beneficial use' in the [United States]."[30] The court held that the infringing technology utilized on United States registered ships was used within the United States because use occurred wherever the signals were received and used.[31]

B. NTP, Inc. v. Research in Motion, Ltd.

For almost thirty years, the Decca factors were the test for determining whether the United States had extraterritorial patent jurisdiction. But in 2005, the United States Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit modified the test in its NTP, Inc. v. Research in Motion, Ltd. opinion.[32] This case centered around technology that allowed users to receive their emails on Blackberry devices through a wireless communication network.[33] When a user sends an email from her mobile device via the "push" technology at issue in this case, the email is sent to a relay where it is pushed to the end recipient without the necessity of a user-initiated connection to the mail server.[34] The issue in this case was that Research in Motion's relay was physically located in Canada but was being used in the United States.[35] Research in Motion claimed "that the entire accused system and method must be contained or conducted within the territorial bounds of the United States" for 35 U.S.C. section 271 infringement to apply.[36] The court was again charged with determining whether allegedly infringing activity occurred "within the United States" as required in section 271(a) of the Patent Act.[37] More specifically, the court considered "whether the using, offering to sell, or selling of a patented invention is an infringement

---

30. Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 210 (citing Decca Ltd., 554 F.2d at 1083) (emphasis added).

31. Decca Ltd., 544 F.2d at 1081, 1098.

32. 418 F.3d 1282 (Fed. Cir. 2005).

33. Id. at 1289–90.

34. Id.

35. See id. at 1313–15.

36. Id. at 1314.

37. See id. at 1311; Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 210−11.

under section 271(a) if a component or step of the patented invention is located or performed abroad."[38] The Federal Circuit determined that when deciding the situs of the "use" of a system, a court should look to (1) the place where the system is controlled and (2) the place where the system obtains its beneficial use.[39] By combining the control and beneficial use factors from the Decca test and omitting the ownership element, the court created the new "the place at which the system as a whole is put into service" test.[40] Therefore, even if some of the necessary components of a protected system are not physically located in the United States, an infringement claim may still have extraterritorial reach under the NTP test as long as the user exercises a minimal amount of control over, and receives beneficial use from, the product within the United States.[41]

III. MARITIME LAW

With a foundational knowledge of the jurisdictional reach of United States patent law, one can move on to the second building block used in creating existing outer space law: jurisdiction under maritime law. As discussed above, outer space law is a tricky body of law because no single country has jurisdiction over outer space. Instead, most of the laws governing space are embodied in a collection of treaties, much like maritime law, signed by the major outer space exploring countries. In fact, many of the treaties governing outer space are modeled after maritime law because of the vast similarities and difficulties in governing an area over which no country has control. Due to the youth of outer space exploration, the collection of treaties governing it is relatively small and still developing. To better understand the intent of the treaties on outer space aimed at solving the problems arising in the field, it is important to first have a brief understanding of maritime law.

Maritime law is defined in the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea ("UNCLOS") as "all issues relating to the 38. NTP, Inc., 418 F.3d at 1315; Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 211.

---

39. NTP, Inc., 418 F.3d at 1317.

40. Id.; Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 211.

41. Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 211.

law of the sea."[42] All ships sailing in international waters must register in a country or "flag state."[43] By registering a ship in a flag state, that country's laws receive extraterritorial jurisdiction to follow the ship wherever it travels, turning the ship into what is known as a "floating island."[44]

A very important issue arises out of this floating island concept: ships do not have to register in the country in which their owners live or are incorporated.[45] In fact, most of the time they are not.[46] As with any law where jurisdiction is left to the involved parties to decide, forum shopping runs rampant.[47] Many ship owners abuse the flag state registration principle by registering their ships in the countries with the least regulation so they can sidestep many of the laws that would otherwise impose additional taxes, costs, and liability.[48] Over the years, this concept of maritime fo-

---

42. United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea pmbl., Dec. 10, 1982, 1833 U.N.T.S. 397.

43. Convention on the High Seas art. 6(1), Apr. 29, 1958, 13 U.S.T. 2312, 450 U.N.T.S. 11 ("Ships shall sail under the flag of one State only and, save in exceptional cases expressly provided for in international treaties or in these articles, shall be subject to its exclusive jurisdiction on the high seas."); Kleiman, supra note 10, at 5 ("Similar to the Outer Space Treaty, under maritime law, a ship operates under the law of its country, or 'flag,' of registration.").

44. Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 208; Glenn H. Reynolds, Legislative Comment: The Patents in Space Act, 3 HARV. J.L. & TECH. 13, 19 (1990).

45. See United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, supra note 42, art. 91.

46. See United Nations Conference on Trade and Development, Review of Maritime Transport, 44 tbl.2.5, U.N. Doc. UNCTAD/RMT/2014, (Nov. 20, 2014) [hereinafter U.N. Trade & Dev.] (estimating that Panama, Liberia, and the Marshall Islands—the three countries with the largest registered fleets based on deadweight tonnage—have national ownership of only 0.17%, 0.01%, and 0.30% of their registered vessels, respectively).

47. See B.J. Haeck, Note & Comment, Yamaha Motor Corp. v. Calhoun: An Examination of Jurisdiction, Choice-of-Laws, and Federal Interests in Maritime Law, 72 WASH. L. REV. 181, 208 (1997).

48. Kleiman, supra note 10, at 4 ("This system of national jurisdiction could enable companies to circumvent patents on space technologies by registering their spacecraft in countries where these patents are not on file, just as the owners of merchant ships often register their vessels under 'flags of conven-

rum shopping has become known as "flags of convenience."[49] "Due to lax regulations, minimal oversight, and poor record keeping in these countries, flags of convenience are often criticized for creating a permissive environment for criminal activities, poor working conditions, and environmental damage."[50] The flags of convenience issue has become a widespread, global problem with over fifty percent of the world's deadweight tonnage ("DWT") being carried by ships registered in Panama, Liberia, the Marshall Islands, and Hong Kong.[51] Furthermore, over seventy-five percent of all DWT is carried by the top ten flags of convenience States.[52]

While the laws of the flag states govern ships while they are traveling at sea, traveling at sea is not the end goal for most ships; most of them are transporting cargo from one country to another.[53] At each port, a ship is subject to the jurisdiction of the country where it is currently located.[54] While a ship registered in a state other than the United States could make, use, or sell a device that infringed on a United States patent while at sea, United States laws prevent incoming ships from participating in these activities once they reach United States territory.[55] One such law—of importance to this Note—prevents the importation of patented devic-ience,' such as Panama and Liberia, to avoid burdensome taxes and regulations in their home countries.").

---

49. Id. at 5 ("The term 'flag of convenience' refers to the practice of registering a ship in a country different from that of the ship's owners for the purpose of reducing operating costs and avoiding burdensome regulations.").

50. Id.; see, e.g., The Common Maritime Policy, EUR. PARL. DOC. ch. 2 (1996), http://www.europarl.europa.eu/workingpapers/tran/w14/2_en.htm; Rex S. Toh & Sock-Yong Phang, Quasi-Flag of Convenience Shipping: The Wave of the Future, TRANSP. J., Winter 1993, at 31; Flags of Convenience: Avoiding the Rules by Flying a Convenient Flag, INT'L TRANSP. WORKERS' FED'N, http://www.itfglobal.org/en/transport-sectors/seafarers/in-focus/flags-of-convenience-campaign/ (last visited Mar. 3, 2016).

51. See U.N. Trade & Dev., supra note 46, at 44 tbl.2.5.

52. See id. (listing the top ten flags of registration states by the most deadweight tonnage shipped: (1) Panama, (2) Liberia, (3) Marshall Islands, (4) Hong Kong, (5) Singapore, (6) Greece, (7) Bahamas, (8) China, (9) Malta, and (10) Cyprus).

53. Kleiman, supra note 10, at 5.

54. Id.

55. Id.

es.[56] When a foreign ship arrives at one of the 360 designated ports in the United States, the United States Customs Department checks the ship's cargo to ensure that none of its contents contain any such items.[57] If it does, the ship is not allowed to unload its contents on United States soil.[58]

IV. OUTER SPACE LAW

Like maritime law, outer space law is a type of international law that is almost completely governed by treaties.[59] But because the treaties were "largely developed during the Cold War" and focused mostly on governing "the behavior of the major space powers" instead of regulating private space activities, it is debatable whether this body of international law has any application to

---

56. 35 U.S.C. § 271(a) (2013) ("Except as otherwise provided in this title, whoever without authority makes, uses, offers to sell, or sells any patented invention, within the United States or imports into the United States any patented invention during the term of the patent therefor, infringes the patent.").

57. U.S. Public Port Facts, AM. ASS'N PORT AUTHORITIES, http://www.aapa-ports.org/Industry/content.cfm?ItemNumber=1032 (last visited Mar. 4, 2016); 19 U.S.C. § 1337(a)(1)(B) (2013).

> (a) Unlawful activities; covered industries; definitions
>
> (1) Subject to paragraph (2), the following are unlawful, and when found by the Commission to exist shall be dealt with, in addition to any other provision of law, as provided in this section:
>
> . . .
>
> (B) The importation into the United States, the sale for importation, or the sale within the United States after importation by the owner, importer, or consignee, of articles that—
>
> (i) infringe a valid and enforceable United States patent or a valid and enforceable United States copyright registered under title 17, United States Code; or
>
> (ii) are made, produced, processed, or mined under, or by means of, a process covered by the claims of a valid and enforceable United States patent.

Id.

58. 35 U.S.C. § 271(a); 19 U.S.C. § 1337(a)(1)(B); U.S. Public Port Facts, supra note 57.

59. Miles, supra note 11, at 59–60.

private enterprises at all.[60] "Consequently, none of the major international space treaties specifically addresses [sic] how national patent laws may apply to activities in outer space."[61]

A. The Outer Space Treaty

The Principles Governing the Activities of States in the Exploration and Use of Outer Space, Including the Moon and Other Celestial Bodies ("Outer Space Treaty") was the first international, outer space treaty.[62] It was ratified in 1966 by the United States, the Soviet Union, and the United Kingdom but has since been signed by 128 countries.[63] The treaty discusses property rights with respect to outer space activities.[64] The Outer Space Treaty, and all other later treaties concerning outer space, has a shared concept of "non-appropriation," prohibiting nations from claiming any territory or resources in outer space or on celestial bodies.[65] The Outer Space Treaty also states that a space object launched into outer space must be registered in a country and that country "shall retain jurisdiction and control over such object, and over any personnel thereof, while in outer space or on a celestial body."[66] By creating a framework of jurisdiction based on regis-

---

60. Kleiman*, supra* note 10, at 4; Miles, supra note 11, at 59–60; see Rosanna Sattler, Transporting a Legal System for Property Rights: From the Earth to the Stars, 6 CHI. J. INT'L L. 23 (2005).

61. Kleiman*, supra* note 10, at 4.

62. See Outer Space Treaty, supra note 13.

63. Id. at 7; Comm. on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, Legal Subcomm. on Its Fifty-Third Session, Status of International Agreements Relating to Activities in Outer Space as at 1 January 2014, U.N. Doc. A/AC.105/C.2/2014/CRP.7 (Mar. 20, 2014); Miles, supra note 11, at 61.

64. See, e.g., Outer Space Treaty, supra note 13, at art. II.

65. Id. at art. I ("The exploration and use of outer space . . . shall be carried out for the benefit and in the interests of all countries, irrespective of their degree of economic or scientific development . . . ."); see also Steven Freeland, Up, Up, and . . . Back: The Emergence of Space Tourism and Its Impact on the International Law of Outer Space, 6 CHI. J. INT'L L. 1, 11–12 (2005); Leo B. Malagar & Marlo Apalisok Magdoza-Malagar, International Law of Outer Space and the Protection of Intellectual Property Rights, 17 B.U. INT'L L.J. 311, 345 (1999); Miles, supra note 11, at 64, 70 ("One of the core principles enshrined in the OST is that the exploration and exploitation of outer space should be done for all nations, regardless of their level of development.").

66. Outer Space Treaty, supra note 13, at art. VIII; see also FRANCIS LYALL & PAUL B. LARSEN, SPACE LAW: A TREATISE 41 (2009) ("Of [the major tration states, the Outer Space Treaty adopted a system analogous to the "floating island" principle in maritime law.[67] "Thus, the treaty permits countries to extend their laws—including their patent laws—" extraterritorially to their registered space objects.[68]

B. The Registration Convention

In 1975, the Convention on the Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space ("Registration Convention") was created, describing how space objects were to be registered.[69] The Registration Convention implemented the Outer Space Treaty's registration requirements, stating that the "launching State" is responsible for registering a space object.[70] This, in effect, turned the Outer Space Treaty's "the appropriate state party to the Treaty" into the "launching state."[71] Even more importantly, the Registration Convention further defines the "launch state" as either (1) "[a] State which launches or procures the launching of a space object" or (2) "[a] State from whose territory or facility a space object is launched."[72] In other words, a "launch State" can be: (1) a state that launches a space object, (2) the state that procures the launching of a space object, (3) a state that has a space object launched from its territory, or (4) a state that has a space object launched from its facility. Like maritime law, the owner of a space object space treaties] the Outer Space Treaty of 1967 (OST) is generally accepted as foundational, containing in part at least principles of a generality that have passed into customary law."); Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 208.

---

67. Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 208; see also Reynolds, supra note 44, at 18–19 ("Though we may speak of aircraft, ships, or embassies as being 'U.S. soil' in a legal sense, this characterization was aptly described by the U.S. Supreme Court as 'a figure of speech—a metaphor' and not an accurate statement of their legal status.").

68. Kleiman, supra note 10, at 4; see LYALL & LARSEN, supra note 66, at 124–27; see Extra-Territorial Reach, supra note 12, at 275.

69. Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space, Jan. 14, 1975, 28 U.S.T. 695, T.I.A.S. No. 8480.

70. Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space, supra note 69, at art. II(1); Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 208.

71. Miles, supra note 11, at 63.

72. Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space, supra note 69, at art. I(a)(i)–(ii); Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 208; Miles, supra note 11, at 63.

that meets these registration standards in more than one country is free to engage in "flags of convenience" type forum shopping by selecting under which country to register.

At the time the United States signed the Registration Convention, "U.S. patent law . . . [did] not provide protection for inventions made, used, or sold in outer space because the existing law [was] territorial in application."[73] According to the definitions under the Patent Act, "[t]he terms 'United States' and 'this country' mean the United States of America, its territories and possessions," limiting patent law jurisdictionally.[74] Courts have held in the past that United States laws typically do not have extraterritorial reach without Congress explicitly saying so.[75] More specifically, courts have held that United States patent law does not have extraterritorial effect and only applies to activities that take place within the United States' territorial limits.[76]

---

73. Reynolds, supra note 44, at 14.

74. 35 U.S.C. § 100(c) (2013); Reynolds, supra note 44, at 14.

75. See, e.g., Cunard S.S. Co. v. Mellon, 262 U.S. 100, 121−23 (1923) (holding that the 18th Amendment's prohibition of liquor sales in "the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof" did not apply extraterritorially to U.S. registered ships outside of U.S. territorial waters); Lam Mow v. Nagle, 24 F.2d 316, 318 (9th Cir. 1928) (holding that a baby born to Chinese parents on a U.S. registered ship in international waters was not a U.S. citizen); Air Line Stewards and Stewardesses Association v. Nw. Airlines, Inc., 267 F.2d 170, 178 (8th Cir. 1959) (holding that U.S. labor laws do not apply to a U.S. registered aircraft outside of U.S. territory); United States v. 12536 Gross Tons of Whale Oil, 29 F. Supp. 262, 267 (E.D. Va. 1939) (holding that a U.S. registered ship was not a "point" in the U.S. with regards to the Merchant Marine Act of 1920).

76. See, e.g., Deepsouth Packing Co. v. Laitram Corp., 406 U.S. 518, 531 (1972); Ocean Sci. & Eng'g, Inc. v. United States, 595 F.2d 572, 574 (Ct. Cl. 1979) (dictum) ("Of course, the constitutional power of Congress to make our patent laws applicable to processes carried out on U.S. flag ships and planes at sea is not challenged; the question is whether Congress has done so in view of the Supreme Court's doctrine of strict construction. Perhaps the patent bar will note the possible loophole in the coverage of the U.S. patent laws and will invite the attention of Congress to it. Meanwhile, it is well to adjudicate cases on other grounds when possible, as we do this case."); Decca Ltd. v. United States, 544 F.2d 1070, 1074 (Ct. Cl. 1976) (per curiam) ("In view of the foregoing, we think a decision founded on the fiction that for purposes of the Patent Laws, United States ships and planes wherever found, are United States territory, would be founded on water.").

C. The International Space Station

The United States has adopted one treaty that discusses intellectual property in outer space. In 1998, Japan, Russia, and the United States signed the Agreement Among the Government of Canada, Governments of Member States of the European Space Agency, the Government of Japan, the Government of the Russian Federation, and the Government of the United States of America Concerning Cooperation on the Civil International Space Station ("Agreement Concerning the ISS"), which stated,

> [F]or purposes of intellectual property law, an activity occurring in or on a Space Station flight element shall be deemed to have occurred only in the territory of the [country] of that element's registry, except that for [European Space Agency]-registered elements any European Partner State may deem the activity to have occurred within its territory.[77]

The Agreement Concerning the ISS gave Japan, Russia, and the United States exclusive patent jurisdiction over their respective space modules.[78] This marked the first time that the major space powers instituted an international patent jurisdiction based upon the "floating island" concept, showing that international outer space law could actually be sustained.[79]

Another important concept that arose out of the Agreement Concerning the ISS is that it confirmed that the Outer Space Treaty's non-appropriation doctrine did not cover such intangible property rights as intellectual property.[80] By signing the treaty, the major space powers of the world implicitly stated that the non-appropriation doctrine of the Outer Space Treaty and its progeny

---

77. Agreement Among the Government of Canada, Governments of the Member States of the European Space Agency, the Government of Japan, the Government of the Russian Federation, and the Government of the United States of America Concerning Cooperation on the Civil International Space Station art. 21, Jan. 29, 1998, 1998 U.S.T. 212 [hereinafter Agreement Concerning the ISS].

78. Kleiman*, supra* note 10, at 5.

79. See id. 4–5.

80. Agreement Concerning the ISS, supra note 77, at art. 21; Miles, supra note 11, at 64–66.

only applied to physical property rights for objects that originated in outer space.[81]

D. Patents in Space Act

In 1989, when Congress enacted 35 U.S.C. section 105 (i.e., the "Inventions in Outer Space" provision of the Patent Act), it coordinated United States patent laws with the Outer Space Treaty and the Registration Convention and extended the reach of United States patent laws to United States-registered spacecraft.[82] Section 105(a) states that "[a]ny invention made, used or sold in outer space on a space object or component thereof under the jurisdiction or control of the United States shall be considered to be made, used or sold within the United States for the purposes of [United States patent laws]," subject to a few exceptions.[83]

The first of these exceptions state that jurisdiction under 35 U.S.C. section 105 will not extend to space objects that are "specifically identified and otherwise provided for by an international agreement to which the United States is a party."[84] The second exception is where the true problem resides: even if the space object would normally be under United States jurisdiction, United States patent law will not apply if the object is carried on the regis-

---

81. If one can own intellectual property created in outer space under the Agreement Concerning the ISS, then this would imply that the Outer Space Treaty's ban on owning outer space property does not include such intangible property.

82. 35 U.S.C. § 105(a) (2013); Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 208–09.

83. 35 U.S.C. § 105(a). The exceptions in the statute referenced in the text reads:

> [E]xcept with respect to any space object or component thereof that is specifically identified and otherwise provided for by an international agreement to which the United States is a party, or with respect to any space object or component thereof that is carried on the registry of a foreign state in accordance with the Convention on Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space.

Id.; Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 213. It should be noted that only the "control" element of the NTP test still remains in this equation. Therefore, space objects arguably fall into United States jurisdiction less easily than other extraterritorial objects.

84. 35 U.S.C. § 105(a); Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 213.

try of a foreign state in accordance with the Registration Convention.[85] Therefore, any invention created on a United States registered spacecraft would be considered invented in the United States and any infringement suits would be under United States jurisdiction, but a country could simply avoid United States jurisdiction altogether by registering the space object in another applicable country.

V. ISSUES WITH OUTER SPACE PATENT LAW: THE LOOPHOLE

The second exception in 35 U.S.C. section 105(a) creates a loophole allowing individuals and companies to avoid liability under the prohibition outlined in the first part of the subsection. When a loophole is large enough that anyone who would be a potential infringer can use it, the law itself becomes ineffective, resulting in plaintiffs losing a remedy. Current patent law requires a company to apply for a patent in every country where its space object may potentially be infringed upon.[86] This can be a long, tedious, and expensive process in many cases.[87] Any country in which the company fails to obtain patent protection could become a loophole exploited by competitors through flags of convenience.[88] As discussed above, the Patents in Space Act only gives the United States extraterritorial jurisdiction over space objects that are not registered in another country in accordance with the Registration Convention.[89] Under the Outer Space Treaty and the Registration Convention, a space object can be registered in a country that "launches or procures the launching of" said space object.[90] This language is ambiguous enough to allow a company that is seeking to exploit stolen technology to avoid United States jurisdiction simply by launching its space object from any other coun-

---

85. 35 U.S.C. § 105(a); Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 213; Miles, supra note 11, at 65.

86. See supra note 19 and accompanying text.

87. See Kleiman, supra note 10, at 5.

88. Id.

89. See supra Section IV.D.

90. Registration of Objects Launched into Outer Space, supra note 69, at art. I(a)(i).

try where the stolen technology has not received patent protection.[91]

Consider this hypothetical: Acme Space Launch, a private entity incorporated and located in the United States, decides to get into the satellite television business but can not, or does not want to, expend resources on researching and developing the requisite technology to accomplish its goal. Acme instead builds a launch pad and facilities in a small foreign country and proceeds to build a spacecraft and satellite based on the disclosed technology in existing United States patents held by Acme's competitors. Once completed, Acme launches its "space objects" from the foreign country and puts the satellites into orbit. The satellites send transmissions to customers throughout the United States. In this scenario, the United States would not have jurisdiction over an infringement claim against Acme pursuant to 35 U.S.C. section 105(a).[92] Because the second exception to 35 U.S.C. section 105(a) overrides any of the United States jurisdiction granted in the main body of the legislation, a company in the above fact pattern can skirt liability even when the infringing technology is owned by Acme (a United States corporation), is controlled by Acme or Acme's cus-

---

91. Bernhard Schmidt-Tedd & Michael Gerhard, Registration of Space Objects: Which Are the Advantages for States Resulting from Registration?, in SPACE LAW: CURRENT PROBLEMS AND PERSPECTIVES FOR FUTURE REGULATION 121, 126 (Marietta Benkö & Kai-Uwe Schrogl eds., 2005); Miles, supra note 11, at 63.

92. 35 U.S.C. § 105(a) (2013); ORG. FOR ECON. CO-OPERATION & DEV., SPACE 2030: TACKLING SOCIETY'S CHALLENGES 177 (2005); Kleiman, supra note 10, at 5 ("Because the term 'launching state' is broadly defined, a company could conceivably select an outer space flag of convenience by either incorporating its business in or launching its spacecraft from the desired country."); see LYALL & LARSEN, supra note 66, at 94; Michael Gerhard, National Space Legislation - Perspectives for Regulating Private Space Activities, in ESSENTIAL AIR & SPACE LAW 2: CURRENT PROBLEMS AND PERSPECTIVES FOR FUTURE REGULATION 75, 90 (Marietta Benkö & Kai-Uwe Schrogl eds., 2005) ("There seem to be certain tendencies towards a 'flag of convenience' situation in space law since some States are offering a legal framework that is very advantageous financially to private entities, which encourages them to establish themselves in these States' territory, while these States, are not willing to take full responsibility (and consequential liability) for the activities of such entities."); International and National Laws § 7.3.1.1, PERMANENT.COM, http://www.permanent.com/legal-international-laws.html (last visited Mar. 5, 2016).

tomers from the United States, or otherwise benefits Acme and Acme's consumers located in the United States—all the traditional factors that have been examined in extraterritorial jurisdiction determinations by the United States courts.[93] It should also be noted that a smaller country would welcome the Acme space program because of the tax proceeds, while Acme would benefit from the relatively low number of registered patents in that country. A private company could forum shop to decide which jurisdiction to apply to its space objects by changing where the company "is headquartered, where its production facilities are located, or even where it chooses to register the space object."[94]

Flags of convenience could have drastic economic effects on the private outer space industry. First, patents are meant to incentivize individuals to create new and innovative technology and to share it with the public.[95] In return, the individual receives a monopoly on that invention for a limited time so that the individual can recover any costs for development and earn a profit for her hard work.[96] The end goal for society is that this technology will be the foundation for further advancements in the same area for the betterment of mankind.[97] If a competitor company can sidestep patent laws by avoiding certain jurisdictions, then the monopoly is diminished, and the incentive to invent new technology is gone.

Second, any competitor companies that are able to sidestep patent laws would not only be able to market the same technology, but they would also be able to offer it to the consumer at a lower cost. Research and development expenses in outer space technology are enormous and must be passed on to the consumer through increased pricing. Companies avoiding liability through flags of convenience would not have these costs like the original inventors and could, therefore, offer their product for much lower prices than 93. See NTP, Inc. v. Research in Motion, Ltd., 418 F.3d 1282 (Fed. Cir. 2005); Decca Ltd. v. United States, 544 F.2d 1070 (Ct. Cl. 1976) (per curiam).

---

94. Miles, supra note 11, at 63.

95. Kleiman, supra note 10, at 4; see Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 221.

96. Kleiman, supra note 12, at 4; see 35 U.S.C. § 271(a).

97. See generally U.S. CONST. art. 1, § 8, cl. 8 ("To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their respective Writings and Discoveries."); Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 206.

the inventor. This would effectively run the inventor out of business. This competitive advantage would also put "considerable economic pressure on all space companies to register their spacecraft under flags of convenience, resulting in a race to the bottom, that would exacerbate the patent protection problem along with safety, environmental, and other regulatory problems traditionally associated with flags of convenience."[98]

The problems with an ineffective outer space patent system would affect the private outer space industry at large. If companies can easily avoid liability for patent infringement in the United States, the growth of the outer space program could be stunted due to the lack of incentives for new research that the United States patent program is meant to encourage.[99] Companies may be more likely to protect new technologies as trade secrets instead of sharing them with the public as patent filings, preventing future innovation inspired by the new technology.[100] Companies looking to develop new outer space technology may also "find it more difficult to secure private financing for research and development activities."[101] Accordingly, a solution to correct the problems associ-

98. Kleiman*, supra* note 10, at 6; see J. Jonas Anderson, Hiding Behind Nationality: The Temporary Presence Exception and Patent Infringement Avoidance, 15 MICH. TELECOMM. TECH. L. REV. 1, 41–42 (2008) (discussing the "temporary presence exception" used by ships to avoid liability for patent infringement).

99. Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 221; Kleiman*, supra* note 10, at 4–5 ("Permitting space companies to evade patents using flags of convenience will lessen the value of these patents. . . . Basing the outer space patent system on the application of national patent laws to registered space objects could limit the effectiveness of patent protection for space technologies.").

100. Kleiman*, supra* note 10, at 4−6; Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 221; see also Reynolds, supra note 44, at 15–17 ("Many of the most promising [space technologies] can only be reduced to practice in outer space, since they rely on microgravity or other unique characteristics of the space environment. Thus, a lack of patent protection would likely forestall research in these fields. . . . By failing to extend patent protection to space innovations made by smaller firms and research centers, we would systematically be depriving ourselves of our most valuable research resources."); JOE BIDEN, INVENTIONS IN OUTER SPACE, S. DOC. NO. 101-266, at 5 (2d Sess. 1990) (discussing that the addition of Exception 2 to § 105 to conform to the Outer Space Treaty may have resulted in the exact chilling effect that section 105 was meant to avoid).

101. Kleiman*, supra* note 10, at 4.

ated with the outer space "flags of convenience" needs to be implemented to prevent potentially detrimental damage to the outer space industry and innovation.

VI. PAST SUGGESTED SOLUTIONS

There have been many proposed solutions for solving the outer space "flags of convenience" problem. One such solution is to form an international patent jurisdiction.[102] A uniform and predictable patent law jurisdiction for governing outer space activities would help encourage inventors from around the world to research and share their ideas with each other, spawning new technology and companies in the field.[103] The major problem with this solution is that governments have traditionally resisted conceding their sovereignty to international organizations.[104]

One of the biggest issues with an international patent jurisdiction is the traditional difference in philosophies behind governments awarding patent protection in the first place.[105] Many European countries base their patents upon a "personality" justification while the United States relies on Lockean ideals.[106] Under the personality approach, an invention is seen as an extension of the inventor. In other words, "an idea belongs to its creator because the

---

102. See, e.g., LYALL & LARSEN, supra note 66, at 127 ("A general and uniform patent protection for inventions made in outer space would give investors confidence in outer space research and encourage such activities."); Kleiman, supra note 10, at 6 ("The ideal solution to the flag-of-convenience problem, at least as it relates to effective patent protection, is to create a new multinational patent jurisdiction for filing and enforcing patents in outer space.").

103. Kleiman, supra note 10, at 6 ("A recently published space law treatise, meanwhile, similarly argued that 'general and uniform patent protection for inventions made in outer space would give investors confidence in outer space research and encourage such activities.'" (quoting LYALL & LARSEN, supra note 66, at 127)).

104. LYALL & LARSEN, supra note 66, at 560–61 ("In the early days of space it was never likely that the US and the USSR . . . would consent to the transfer of their authority . . . to the control of an International Space Agency. . . . [I]t seems clear that in the immediate future a global international operational space agency will not be created."); Kleiman, supra note 10, at 6.

105. See Kleiman, supra note 10, at 6–7.

106. Justin Hughes, The Philosophy of Intellectual Property, 77 GEO. L.J. 287, 303, 330 (1988).

idea is a manifestation of the creator's personality or self."[107] On the other hand, the Lockean approach to patents poses an "instrumental" argument. That is, a person's ideas are her instruments, and therefore, they belong to that person. This argument is best shown through the Constitution's copyright and patent clause, which grants Congress "the power to create intellectual property rights in order 'To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts.'"[108]

While these differences may seem insignificant, ending with the same result of patent protection, these differences in ideals can create procedural variations in the way patents are awarded in each country. From the time Congress passed the Patent Act of 1790, just one year after the signing of the Constitution, until it enacted the Leahy-Smith America Invents Act in 2011, the United States used a first-to-invent system for determining patent priority.[109] The decision to enact the America Invents Act was motivated in part by the growing push to "promote harmonization of the United States patent system with the patent systems commonly used in nearly all other countries throughout the world."[110] While

---

107. Id. at 330.

108. Id. at 303–04 (quoting U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 8); see also Alexa L. Ashworth, Race You to the Patent Office! How the New Patent Reform Act Will Affect Technology Transfer at Universities, 23 ALB. L.J. SCI. & TECH. 383, 385 (2013).

109. See Jerome H. Reichman & Rochelle Cooper Dreyfuss, Harmonization Without Consensus: Critical Reflections on Drafting a Substantive Patent Law Treaty, 57 DUKE L.J. 85, 90–91 (2007); Reynolds, supra note 44, at 15 ("Unlike the patent laws of most other countries, U.S. patent law generally provides that a patent will issue to the first person to invent the product or process she claims in her patent."); id. at 15 n.10 ("In most other countries, the general rule is that the patent goes to whoever is 'first to file,' regardless of who was in fact first to invent."); 157 CONG. REC. E1191 (daily ed. June 23, 2011) (speech of Hon. West).

110. David W. Trilling, Recent Development: Recognizing a Need for Reform: The Leahy-Smith America Invents Act of 2011, 2012 U. ILL. J.L. TECH. & POL'Y 239, 246 (2012).

> Converting the United States patent system from "first[-]to[-]invent" to a system of "first[-]inventor[-]to[-]file" will improve the United States patent system and promote harmonization of the United States patent system with the patent systems commonly used in nearly all other countries throughout the world with whom the United States conducts trade and thereby this is a shift toward international alignment of different patent processes, the United States remained one of the only first-to-invent jurisdictions in the world for over 200 years, showing the reluctance of countries to concede their patent procedures.[111] Procedural differences, like the system to determine priority, run deep to the roots of why these governments award patents in the first place and why countries are not likely to agree to forfeit their sovereignty to an international organization with opposing ideals.

Perhaps a more significant reason why an international patent jurisdiction would likely fail is that every country in the world would need to sign the treaty in order for it to be effective. If only the large, spacefaring nations sign the treaty for an outer space patent jurisdiction, a company could build a launch pad in a small developing country and register there, creating a flags of convenience opportunity. This may seem like an expensive measure to avoid patent infringement, but it may be cheaper than incurring the high costs of research and development in the private outer space exploration industry.

Smaller nations have no incentive to sign a treaty to be governed by an international patent organization. Smaller nations typically see enforcement of larger nation's patents as a way to make the larger countries richer while making the smaller countries poorer.[112] With the outer space industry grossing over $100 > promote greater international uniformity and certainty in the procedures used for securing the exclusive rights of inventors to their discoveries.

Id. (quoting H.R. 1249, 112th Cong. § 146(p) (2011)).

111. See Miles, supra note 11, at 69.

> Perhaps the most contentious is the split between the United States, which follows a first-to-invent patent system, and the majority of other nations, including those who are currently, and are most likely to be space-faring, who follow a first-to-file patent system. Additionally, it has been suggested that substantive harmonization of patent law is not truly feasible nor advisable until developing nations are better equipped to meet their obligations under the existing international agreements.

Id. at 69−70.

112. Patent Infringement in Outer Space, supra note 12, at 230–31 ("Yet the 'traditional reluctance of terrestrial nations to surrender their sovereignty to international organizations' makes the implementation of such a system unlikely billion every year,[113] smaller countries would rather collect the tax money and collateral benefits they could derive from a space program located in their country than sign a treaty that has nothing to offer them in return. Therefore, every country—both big and small—would need to sign the treaty to enforce all other countries' patents in order for an international patent regime to succeed, which seems unlikely.

Another proposed solution has been to provide tax incentives and government contracting preferences to companies that register their space objects in participating countries.[114] The idea behind this approach is to disincentivize private companies from filing for registration in flags of convenience states. The problem with this concept is the same as above: the amount of money that a government can provide in tax incentives cannot rival the immense costs of research and development involved in designing new technology for outer space. For instance, if Acme's research and development costs and licensing costs for patented technology accounted for forty percent of its total expenditures, then the United States government would need to give tax incentives that would match or exceed that amount to disincentivize Acme from exploiting the section 105 loophole by launching from a foreign country. Otherwise, it would still be more lucrative for a company to decline the tax benefits by registering in another country and using existing United States patented technology.

---

in the foreseeable future." (quoting Kleiman*, supra* note 10, at 6)); see also Kleiman*, supra* note 10, at 6.

> While industrialized nations view robust intellectual property protection as a critical component of a technology-based economy, many developing nations are skeptical of strong intellectual property protections. Developing nations tend to believe that "intellectual property rights raise prices and profits for one country or company at the expense of the well-being of a developing nation" and that weak intellectual property protection is "a means of increasing access to the information and technology needed for economic growth."

Id. (quoting THE GLOBAL CHALLENGE OF INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY RIGHTS 11 (Robert C. Bird & Subhash C. Jain, eds., 2008)).

113. HARRISON, supra note 9, at 1.

114. Kleiman*, supra* note 10, at 6.

VII. THE BENEFICIAL USE SOLUTION

Perhaps the best solution to the flags of convenience problem in outer space law is one that already exists in maritime law. On earth, ships transport cargo from one country to another, and when the ship and its cargo reach their destination, they become subject to the laws of that country.[115] A ship entering the United States is subject to inspection by the United States Customs and Border Patrol, and any of its cargo that violates United States law is considered an "unfair act[] involved in importation of articles."[116] An exclusion order can be obtained through the United States International Trade Commission if it finds that the cargo being imported infringes a United States patent.[117] The cargo is then prohibited from entering onto United States soil.[118] But in space, "there is no 'destination country' with its own patent laws;" there are only the laws of the country where the spacecraft is registered.[119]

But many times in the outer space industry, something does enter into a destination country. The outer space industry is inher-

---

115. Id. at 5; see supra Part III.

116. J. Stephen Simms, Comment, Scope of Action Against Unfair Import Trade Practices Under Section 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930, 4 NW. J. INT'L L. & BUS. 234, 235 (1982); see 19 U.S.C. § 1337(a)(1)(A) (2013); supra Part III.

117. See Simms, supra note 116, at 235; 19 U.S.C. § 1337(d).

> (d) Exclusion of articles from entry
>
> (1) If the Commission determines, as a result of an investigation under this section, that there is a violation of this section, it shall direct that the articles concerned . . . be excluded from entry into the United States . . . . The Commission shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury of its action under this subsection directing such exclusion from entry, and upon receipt of such notice, the Secretary shall, through the proper officers, refuse such entry.

Id.

118. 19 U.S.C. § 1337(d).

119. Kleiman*, supra* note 10, at 5; see Hughes Aircraft Co. v. United States, 29 Fed. Cl. 197, 242 (Fed. Cl. 1993) (holding that there was no infringement when the device for controlling the spacecraft was never actually in the U.S., was controlled from outside the U.S., and launched from outside U.S. territory); see also Extra-Territorial Reach, supra note 12, at 26365 (discussing that the court in Hughes would have to have found "direct control" of the satellite in the U.S. to establish U.S. extraterritorial jurisdiction over the claim).

ently technological, and many of the companies in this field transmit data in some form—such as radio, television, GPS, or photos—to their end users. The solution to the flags of convenience problem in outer space is to form a treaty between the largest spacefaring countries to ban any benefits derived from the use of technology that violates the patents of any of the signing countries. Creating such a ban in the most technologically advanced countries of the world would take away the large majority of consumers of the pirated technology. This solution, in effect, brings the beneficial use factor from the NTP test into the outer space patent jurisdiction discussion.[120]

In the past, courts have not held the "law of the flag" as absolute.[121] In fact, courts have been willing to ignore the foreign registry of ships for more important public policy considerations.[122] Just as companies outside the United States could build a machine outside of the United States that reads on a United States patent's claims, the company would not be able to derive any benefit from selling the machine within the United States.[123] Most proposed solutions to the outer space flags of convenience problem involve laws or treaties that are aimed toward the infringing companies themselves.[124] This Note's solution takes a passive approach by targeting the companies' potential customers. Because most companies are created for the purpose of, and are therefore incentivized by, making money, drastically limiting their consumer pool would make stealing United States patented technology unprofitable.

---

120. See NTP, Inc. v. Research in Motion, Ltd., 418 F.3d 1282, 1314, 1317–18 (Fed. Cir. 2005) (stating that, for an infringement determination, a court should look to (1) the place where the system is controlled and (2) the place where the system obtains its beneficial use).

121. Kleiman*, supra* note 10, at 5 n.9.

122. Id. ("For instance, the U.S. Supreme Court held in Spector v. Norwegian Cruise Line Ltd., 545 U.S. 119 (2005), that a foreign flag could not shield a cruise ship from the requirements of the Americans with Disabilities Act while the ship was in U.S. waters.").

123. See generally 35 U.S.C. § 271(a) (2013) ("Except as otherwise provided in this title, whoever without authority makes, uses, offers to sell, or sells any patented invention, within the United States or imports into the United States any patented invention during the term of the patent therefor, infringes the patent.").

124. See supra Part IV.

This ban would work even if the United States were the only country to implement it. Some of the top-grossing outer space fields today include satellite servicing, space communications, and Earth observation data visualization.[125] These three areas of technology generate $380 billion worldwide, with the United States accounting for over fifty percent of consumption.[126] If the United States were to pass legislation banning any benefits derived from infringing technology within the country, companies who decide to evade the United States' jurisdiction would not be able to sell their product to over half of that product's potential market.[127] Over time, the loss in potential future profit a company could have made selling their product within the United States would outweigh the one-time costs for researching and developing new technology. The economic results of such legislation would be devastating enough to deter companies from using flags of convenience.

A ban on benefits derived, however, would not stop all outer space flags of convenience problems. Industries such as commercial space travel and space taxiing do not necessarily target consumers within the United States. Companies in these industries instead rely on customers coming to them and would not be affected by such a ban. This ban would only stop flags of convenience problems in outer space industries that derive their benefits terrestrially. A solution for fixing this other sector of private outer space activities is outside the scope of this Note and would still need to be devised and implemented along with this beneficial use solution.

VIII. CONCLUSION

The problems with flags of convenience have existed in maritime law for years, creating conditions ripe for criminal activities, poor working conditions, and environmental damage.[128] The private outer space industry is a rapidly growing field that needs better regulations to ensure that loopholes do not allow companies to avoid liability.[129] By creating a treaty that places a ban on any benefits derived through use of patent infringing-technology, many of the flags of convenience problems in outer space could be eliminated. Because almost every benefit derived from a "space object" is inherently technological, a ban of these benefits in the most technologically advanced countries would greatly disincentivize patent pirating. Attacking the private entities' customer base would help reduce the incentives for private entities to infringe on patented technology. Even if no other large countries signed the treaty with the United States, there would likely be a substantial enough reduction in the customer base solely from a ban in the United States to disincentivize the infringement worldwide.

125. NAT'L AERONAUTICS AND SPACE ADMIN., PUBLIC-PRIVATE PARTNERSHIPS FOR SPACE CAPABILITY DEVELOPMENT: DRIVING ECONOMIC GROWTH AND NASA'S MISSION 4–7 (2014), http://www.nasa.gov/sites/default/files/files/NASA_Partnership_Report_LR_20140429.pdf.

126. Id. at 6–8.

127. Id.

128. Flags of Inconvenience, supra note 10, at 5; see, e.g., EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT DIRECTORATE-GENERAL FOR RESEARCH, supra note 50 ch. 2; Phang, supra note 50; INT'L TRANSP. WORKERS' FED'N, supra note 50.

129. Kleiman, supra note 10, at 4.

Spiritual-Treatment Exemptions to Child Neglect Statutes—State v. Crank: Vagueness and Establishment Clause Challenges to Selective Prosecution of Faith-Healing Parents

PABLO J. DAVIS*

I. INTRODUCTION 761
II. BACKGROUND AND ISSUES 764
  A. Vagueness 764
  B. Establishment Clause 766
  C. Elision...769
  D. Spiritual Treatment Exemptions......................................772
    1. Early Cases...772
    2. ST Exemptions..774
    3. Oklahoma..776
    4. Ohio..777
    5. California 778
    6. Minnesota...779
    7. Tennessee 780
III. STATE V. CRANK 781
  A. Background and History...781
  B. The Tennessee Supreme Court's Decision 783
IV. ANALYSIS OF DECISION 786
V. CONCLUSION 791

I. INTRODUCTION

Is justice served when a state statutorily protects parents who choose to treat their child's illness through prayer, rather than medical treatment, but then prosecutes the parents for child neglect—or worse—when their child suffers harm or dies as a result? Regardless of one's views of religion and medical science, the issue is a difficult one. Two foundational societal imperatives—the constitutionally enshrined freedom of religion and the duty of parents to protect their children from harm—can clash when parents assert a faith-based right to choose spiritual means over medical care for their sick child.[1] In Tennessee, the child abuse and neglect statute exempts from liability parents whose faith leads them to choose "treatment by spiritual means through prayer alone" for their child, in lieu of medical care.[2] Similarly, nearly all states have a spiritual-treatment ("ST") exemption, though jurisdictions vary as to where the ST exemption fits in the overall statutory scheme, the scope of the exemption, and how courts have interpreted and applied the exemption—leading to confusion and controversy.[3]

---

* Juris Doctor Candidate, The University of Memphis, Cecil C. Humphreys School of Law, May 2017; Symposium Editor, The University of Memphis Law Review, Volume 47; Ph.D., History, The Johns Hopkins University; M.A., History, The Johns Hopkins University; M.A., History, Columbia University; B.A. cum laude, History, University of Maryland–College Park. It has been my privilege to work with Mary Katherine Smith and Sarah E. Smith during the drafting and editing of this Comment; I am grateful for their knowledge, insight, and encouragement. I would also like to thank Greg Wagner for his sage editorial eye and ideas. The shortcomings that remain are, of course, strictly my own. This Comment is current as of March 20, 2016 and does not consider any legislation pending in the Tennessee General Assembly.

1. On religious freedom, see U.S. CONST. amend. I and TENN. CONST. art. I, § 3. On the universal legal duty of parents to care for their children, see People v. Pierson, 68 N.E. 243, 245–46 (N.Y. 1903). See also Baruch Gitlin, Annotation, Parents' Criminal Liability for Failure to Provide Medical Attention to Their Children, 118 A.L.R.5th 253 § 2[a] (2004) (citing 40A Am. Jur. 2d Homicide § 83 (1964)).

2. Tennessee's spiritual treatment exemption was adopted in 1994 via amendment of the aggravated child abuse, neglect, and endangerment statute, TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-15-402 (2014), which was originally enacted in 1989. State v. Crank, 468 S.W.3d 15, 21 (Tenn. 2015).

3. See generally Gitlin, supra note 1 (analyzing criminal cases arising from failure of parents to obtain medical aid for their children); Shirley Darby Howell, Religious Treatment Exemption Statutes: Betrayest Thou Me with a Statute?, 14 SCHOLAR 945 (2012) (questioning the existence of statutory religious exemptions to medical treatment for children); Janna C. Merrick, Spiritual Healing, Sick Kids and the Law: Inequities in the American Healthcare System, 29 AM. J.L. & MED. 269 (2003) (providing an overview of religious exemptions that exist in various states); Jennifer L. Rosato, Putting Square Pegs in a Round Hole: Procedural Due Process and the Effect of Faith Healing Exemptions on the Prosecution of Faith Healing Parents, 29 U.S.F. L. REV. 43 (1994) (analyzing the existing procedural due process doctrine as it relates to the prosecution of parents who engage in faith healing over medical treatment); Zaven T. Sa-

In State v. Crank, the Tennessee Supreme Court[4] held, first, that because the ST exemption applies only to members of the Christian Science and like churches, the statute gives fair notice of prohibited conduct and is not void for vagueness; and, second, that even if the ST exemption were held unconstitutional under the Establishment Clause, the exemption would be subject to elision and stricken from the statute—whose enforcement minus the exemption would leave the conviction standing and afford Defendant no relief. State v. Crank, 468 S.W.3d 15 (Tenn. 2015). The court in Crank was incorrect because the ST exemption leaves parents without fair warning of whether their decision to use spiritual treatment will be criminally prosecuted. Therefore, the court should have held the statute unconstitutionally vague, which would have been dispositive and led the court to vacate the conviction.[5] royan, Spiritual Healing and the Free Exercise Clause: An Argument for the Use of Strict Scrutiny, 12 B.U. PUB. INT. L.J. 363 (2003) (analyzing past United States Supreme Court decisions involving the Free Exercise Clause and suggesting the return of a strict scrutiny analysis in spiritual healing cases); Eric W. Treene, Prayer-Treatment Exemptions to Child Abuse and Neglect Statutes, Manslaughter Prosecutions, and Due Process of Law, 30 HARV. J. ON LEGIS. 135 (1993) (analyzing past Christian Science and faith healing cases).

---

4. References to the United States Supreme Court and to the high courts of Tennessee and other jurisdictions will be made explicit.

5. ST exemptions are also vulnerable to a powerful Equal Protection critique under the Fourteenth Amendment: on this view, such exemptions make children of parents who invoke a ST exemption a class of persons denied the protection afforded to other children. See Gregory Engle, Towards a New Lens of Analysis: The History and Future of Religious Exemptions to Child Neglect Statutes, 14 RICH. J. L. & PUB. INT. 375, 384–93, 395–98 (2010); Elizabeth A. Lingle, Treating Children by Faith: Colliding Constitutional Issues, 17 J. LEG. MED. 301, 324–28 (1996). See generally James G. Dwyer, The Children We Abandon: Religious Exemptions to Child Welfare and Education Laws as Denials of Equal Protection to Children of Religious Objectors, 74 N.C. L. REV. 1321 (1996). Like concerns drive the work of Children's Healthcare Is a Legal Duty, Inc., an advocacy group founded in 1983 by former Christian Scientist Rita Swan, and the lead plaintiff in CHILD, Inc. v. Vladeck. See Children's Healthcare is a Legal Duty, Inc. v. Vladeck, 938 F. Supp. 1466, 1484 (D. Minn. 1996); CHILD, INC., http://childrenshealthcare.org (last visited Mar. 21, 2016). For information on Rita Swann, see Merrick, supra note 3, at 272 (citing Ramona Cass, We Let Our Son Die: The Tragic Story of Rita and Doug Swan, 6 J. CHRISTIAN NURSING 6 (1987)). See also Committee on Bioethics, American Academy of Pediatrics, Religious Objections to Medical Care, 99 PEDIATRICS

While the court was right (if too tentative) in voicing concerns about the statute's constitutionality under the Establishment Clause, its application of the doctrine of elision so as to strike the entire ST exemption is a closer question; the case for more selective elision of that part of the exemption favoring certain religious faiths is at least tenable.

II. BACKGROUND AND ISSUES

To determine the constitutionality of Tennessee's ST exemption, the Tennessee Supreme Court evaluated the exemption, first, in the light of the Due Process requirement that a statute give clear notice to the public, or else fail for vagueness. The court then considered the exemption as it relates to the Establishment Clause, and finally determined how to apply the doctrine of elision. These issues are addressed below in the same order, followed by ST exemptions and pertinent case law.

A. Vagueness

The "void for vagueness" doctrine is grounded in fundamental notions of legality, anchored in the bedrock of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments' Due Process clauses.[6] The underlying policy is to avoid the twin dangers of a vague statute: failing to warn citizens of possible criminal liability, and leaving law enforcement too much room for arbitrary enforcement.[7] The United States Supreme Court ("U.S. Supreme Court") addressed the first, paramount, danger in Lanzetta v. New Jersey, a 1939 case involving a statute criminalizing "gang" membership without defining the term.[8] The Court declared, "[n]o one may be required at peril

---

279, 279–80 (1997). From this standpoint, the holding in Crank is largely welcome. The Equal Protection argument, and the concern for the children of religious objectors, warrants the most serious consideration. However, these concerns lie outside the scope of this Comment, which assesses Crank with respect to vagueness, the Establishment Clause, and elision.

6. U.S. CONST. amends. V, XIV § 1.

7. See City of Chicago v. Morales, 527 U.S. 41, 52–56 (1999); Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 108–13 (1972). See generally 16B AM. JUR. 2D Constitutional Law § 972 (2015). Another formulation of the vagueness doctrine posits a third danger, that of "proscrib[ing] conduct that . . . is normally innocent." State v. Sammons, 391 N.E.2d 713, 714 (Ohio 1979).

8. 306 U.S. 451, 453–54 (1939).

of life, liberty or property to speculate as to the meaning of penal statutes."[9] In the 1999 case, City of Chicago v. Morales, the U.S. Supreme Court struck down an ordinance barring "loitering" in any public place by "criminal gang members," whether with one another or with other persons, holding the ordinance triggered both dangers.[10] Justice Stevens, writing for the Court, criticized the ordinance's definition of "loiter" ("to remain in any one place with no apparent purpose") on the ground of vagueness:

> It is difficult to imagine how any citizen of the city of Chicago standing in a public place with a group of people would know if he or she had an "apparent purpose." . . . Since the city cannot conceivably have meant to criminalize each instance a citizen stands in public with a gang member, the vagueness that dooms this ordinance is not the product of uncertainty about the normal meaning of "loitering," but rather about what loitering is covered by the ordinance and what is not.[11]

Similarly, in Grayned v. City of Rockford, the U.S. Supreme Court insisted laws must "give the person of ordinary intelligence a reasonable opportunity to know what is prohibited, so that he may act accordingly."[12] The Court overturned part of the defendant's conviction, holding the ordinance unconstitutionally vague, particularly because it involved First Amendment rights.[13]

---

9. Id. at 453. The statute read, in part:

> Any person not engaged in any lawful occupation, known to be a member of any gang consisting of two or more persons . . . who has been convicted at least three times of being a disorderly person, or who has been convicted of any crime, in this or in any other State, is declared to be a gangster.

Id. at 452. (quoting New Jersey, § 4, c. 155, Laws 1934). The Court pointedly noted: "The phrase 'consisting of two or more persons' is all that purports to define 'gang.'" Id. at 453.

10. 527 U.S. at 64.

11. Id. at 56–57.

12. 408 U.S. 104, 108 (1972).

13. Id. at 108–09. The anti-picketing ordinance under which Grayned had been convicted stated that "[a] person commits disorderly conduct when he knowingly . . . [p]ickets or demonstrates on a public way within 150 feet of any

B. Establishment Clause[14]

The very first provision of the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, the Establishment Clause, states "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof."[15] The Establishment Clause clearly forbids states to sanction—that is, establish—an official church. But government is inevitably involved with religion in many lesser ways—for example, determining if an organization is a church and thus tax-exempt.[16] Such realities create the need for a test to identify when government becomes impermissibly enmeshed with religion. The U.S. Supreme Court has held that some degree of interaction between the state and religious groups, including regulation, is inevitable; "[e]ntanglement must be 'excessive' before it runs afoul of the Establishment Clause."[17] primary or secondary school building while the school is in session" but made an exception for pickets concerning a labor dispute. Id. at 107.

---

14. The Defendant in Crank also raised an Equal Protection challenge, arguing that allowing only certain religious groups to invoke the ST exemption denied members of other groups equal protection. The argument is closely related to that over the Establishment Clause. This Comment considers the latter but not the Equal Protection issue.

15. U.S. CONST. amend. I. Tennessee's equivalent is the "freedom of worship" provision of the State Constitution:

> That all men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own conscience; that no man can of right be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or to maintain any minister against his consent; that no human authority can, in any case whatever, control or interfere with the rights of conscience; and that no preference shall ever be given, by law, to any religious establishment or mode of worship.

TENN. CONST. art. I, § 3.

16. In Christ Church Pentecostal v. Tenn. State Bd. of Equalization, the Tennessee Court of Appeals upheld the Equalization Board's determination that a café/bookstore area within a church was "not . . . an integral part of . . . the recognized purposes of a church," and therefore that segment of the church's operations was taxable. 428 S.W.3d 800, 812 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2013). The court held that such government regulation of religion did not violate the Establishment Clause because it was completely indifferent to religious doctrine and practice, i.e., neutral as to religion. Id. at 821.

17. Agostini v. Felton, 521 U.S. 203, 233 (1997) (holding a program for public-school teachers to give remedial instruction to some children in parochial

The traditional Establishment Clause test is the three-part inquiry established by the U.S. Supreme Court in Lemon v. Kurtzman, which applies to laws benefiting religion generally.[18] The Lemon test requires a governmental involvement with religion to (1) have a secular purpose, (2) neither advance nor inhibit religion, and (3) avoid excessive entanglement with religion.[19] In Lemon, the Court held a Pennsylvania law authorizing state reimbursement of certain religious-school expenses "excessively entangl[ing]," in part because the scheme required the government to examine school records to determine the share of expenditures attributable to secular and religious instruction.[20] The Lemon Court noted, "This kind of state inspection and evaluation of . . . religious content . . . is a relationship pregnant with dangers of excessive government direction of . . . churches."[21]

On the other hand, courts have given constitutional sanction to such governmental interactions with religion as property tax exemptions for churches, determining taxability of churches' commercial operations, and scheduling different faiths' access to shared worship facilities. These involvements were held permissible as rationally furthering legitimate secular purposes and neither promoting nor impeding religion.[22] Courts have even validated schools was a legitimate purpose, and neither advanced nor inhibited religion); see also id. at 234–35 (utilizing excessive entanglement analysis).

---

18. 403 U.S. 602, 612–13 (1971); see Larson v. Valente, 456 U.S. 228, 252 (1982).

19. Lemon, 403 U.S. at 612–13 (citing Waltz v. Tax Comm'n of New York, 397 U.S. 664, 673 (1970); Bd. of Educ. v. Allen, 392 U.S. 236, 243 (1968)).

20. Id. at 603.

21. Id. at 620. The Lemon Court also struck down a Rhode Island statute authorizing state payment of a salary supplement, in certain statutorily prescribed circumstances, to teachers in religious schools. Id. at 607–09.

22. See Walz, 397 U.S. at 675–76 (property tax exemptions not a governmental involvement with religion but rather a decision to forego involvement); Thompson v. Kentucky, 712 F.2d 1078, 1082 (6th Cir. 1983) (the impartial apportionment of access to a prison chapel for inmates of varying faiths penalized no faith group); Christ Church Pentecostal v. Tenn. State Bd. of Equalization, 428 S.W.3d 800, 821 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2013) (determining whether the taxability of church's cafe-bookstore is legitimate and secular in purpose).

Sunday closing laws, originally religiously motivated, but now held to have a broad, secular purpose.[23]

The U.S. Supreme Court has applied the more rigorous standard of strict scrutiny where governmental action favors particular religious faiths. In Larson v. Valente, a decade after Lemon, the Court struck down a Minnesota statute requiring certain churches to register with a state regulatory agency and to report contributions received as "not closely fitted to the furtherance of any compelling governmental interest."[24] The Court held the statute, in favoring some churches, was "fraught with the sort of entanglement that the Constitution forbids."[25] At the state level, the Texas Supreme Court in HEB Ministries v. Texas Higher Education Coordination Board held unconstitutional the state's regulation of a religious institution's use of the term "seminary."[26] Such an inquiry, the court held, impermissibly invaded the religious realm. Justice Wainwright, concurring, cautioned that "[t]he Board can no more prohibit a church from calling its school a seminary than it can prohibit a religious congregation from calling itself a church."[27]

23. In McGowan v. Maryland, the U.S. Supreme Court held state regulations do not run afoul of the Establishment Clause merely because they "coincide or harmonize with" religious tenets or practices, and that the original religious motivation for Maryland's Sunday beer-sales ban had evolved into a secular purpose. 366 U.S. 420, 442, 444–45 (1961) (providing "a uniform day of rest for all citizens"); see Martin v. Beer Bd. of Dickson, 908 S.W.2d 941, 952–53 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1995). For an even more sharply-drawn Establishment Clause issue, see State v. Solomon, where a Jewish businessman was convicted for operating his store on Sundays, choosing to close on Saturdays instead, in keeping with his religious faith. 141 S.E.2d 818, 833 (S.C. 1965). The Solomon court upheld the constitutionality of the Sunday-closing law due to its broad, secular purpose. Id. at 827.

24. 456 U.S. 228, 255 (1982).

25. Id.

26. 235 S.W.3d 627, 657 (Tex. 2007).

27. Id. at 678 (Wainwright, J., concurring); see also Boone v. Boozman, 217 F. Supp. 2d 938, 947 (E.D. Ark. 2002) (noting that Arkansas's religious exemption to immunization violates the Establishment Clause despite not specifying particular faiths because it gives preferential treatment to "recognized churches").

C. Elision

The question of whether the valid remainder of a partly unconstitutional law may stand alone has long perplexed courts. The principle by which the invalid parts may be removed, and the rest enforced, is variously known as severability, separability, or elision. In the words of one of the signal students of the doctrine, John Copeland Nagle, "[s]everability is usually an afterthought, a sifting through the statutory rubble to salvage whatever survives a ruling that part of a law is unconstitutional."[28] Nagle cautions, however, that severability deserves close attention because "[t]he question is . . . ubiquitous . . . . [and] can have profound consequences."[29]

A presumption of severability appears to have been the rule in the early legal history of the United States: when the U.S. Supreme Court held, in Marbury v. Madison, that one section of the Judiciary Act of 1789 was unconstitutional, the Court left the rest of the statute intact.[30] The Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts made the first significant departure from that earlier doctrine in the 1854 case of Warren v. Mayor of Charlestown, when it held that an unconstitutional statutory provision rendered an entire statute invalid.[31]

The modern trend has swung back towards severability, but not without controversy. The two-part modern test is descended from the 1932 U.S. Supreme Court holding in Champlin Refining Company v. Corporation Commission.[32] The first part asks wheth-

---

28. John Copeland Nagle, Severability, 72 N.C. L. REV. 203, 204 (1993).

29. Id. In the words of another legal scholar,

> Each time a court strikes down a statutory provision, it must determine whether to invalidate only the unconstitutional provision, or instead whether to invalidate the statute in its entirety or in substantial part. Severability is the doctrine of determining whether part or all of a statute can survive without the invalid provision.

Kenneth A. Klukowski, Severability Doctrine: How Much of a Statute Should Federal Courts Invalidate?, 16 TEX. REV. L. & POL. 1, 3 (2011).

30. See Marbury v. Madison, 5 U.S. 137, 162 (1803); Nagle, supra note 28, at 212.

31. 68 Mass. (2 Gray) 84, 99–100 (1854); see also Nagle, supra note 28, at 211–12 (citing Warren, 68 Mass. (2 Gray) at 99–100).

32. 286 U.S. 210, 234 (1932).

er the legislature would have enacted the statute with the offending provision removed; the second, whether the remaining statute is capable of enforcement.[33] The first question can potentially lead courts down a speculative, even hypothetical, path.[34] In Tennessee, the rule of elision is recognized in the severability statute, which states that "the sections, clauses, sentences and parts of the Tennessee Code are severable . . . and any of them shall be excscinded if the code would otherwise be unconstitutional or ineffective."[35] In applying the rule, courts analyze the two Champlin questions.[36]

Elision can be seen as a last resort where a law's constitutionality is questioned. The principle of judicial restraint leads a court to consider a statute's constitutionality only when such consideration is absolutely unavoidable. When doing so, the court has an obligation to uphold a statute's constitutionality wherever possible.[37] In the 2003 case of State v. Prater, the Tennessee Court of

---

33. Id.

> The unconstitutionality of part of an [A]ct does not necessarily defeat or affect the validity of its remaining provisions. Unless it is evident that the Legislature would not have enacted those provisions which are within its power, independently of that which is not, the invalid part may be dropped if what is left is fully operative as a law.

Id. (citations omitted).

34. Nagle calls this speculative part predictive: "A court is . . . required to predict what the legislature would have done if it had known that part of the law it passed would be invalidated." Nagle, supra note 28, at 215.

35. TENN. CODE ANN. § 1-3-110 (2014); see also State v. Murray, 480 S.W.2d 355, 356 (Tenn. 1972).

36. See Davidson Cnty. v. Elrod, 232 S.W.2d 1, 3 (Tenn. 1950) (upholding statute despite its scope being broader than the caption, because after elision of the invalid parts, the law was capable of enforcement and its purpose of pensions for widows reflected legislative intent). But see Leech v. Am. Booksellers Ass'n, 582 S.W.2d 738, 755 (Tenn. 1979) (striking down the state obscenity statute as impermissibly vague because excision of the offending provisions would leave less than a whole, enforceable statute).

37. See State v. Lyons, 802 S.W.2d 590, 591–93 (Tenn. 1990) (reversing the criminal court's dismissal, for unconstitutional statutory vagueness, of indictment of Defendant on criminal trespass charges for preaching on high school grounds even after asked to leave by school superintendent, because superintendent's "lawful order" was clear and did not unlawfully impede protected conduct).

Criminal Appeals affirmed its duty "to indulge every presumption and resolve every doubt in favor of the constitutionality of the statute when reviewing the statute for a possible constitutional infirmity."[38]

As befits a last resort, the Tennessee Supreme Court has held "[t]he doctrine of elision is not favored."[39] After all, a court's decision whether to elide part of a statute has huge implications: if a court refuses to elide at all, an entire statute can fall due to the unconstitutionality of one provision; elision could lead a court to usurp legislative power by "mak[ing] a new law, not . . . enforc[ing] an old one."[40] In the 1950 case of Elrod v. Davidson County, the Tennessee Supreme Court cautioned that, in applying the first part of the two-part test, the "conclusion . . . that the Legislature would have enacted the Act in question with the objectionable features omitted ought not to be reached unless such conclusion is made fairly clear of doubt from the face of the statute. Otherwise, its decree may be judicial legislation."[41]

Elision remains a difficult and controversial topic; the lack of agreement even on its name is symbolic of the deeper doctrinal disagreement that surrounds it. It remains today the "vast and troubling terrain" John Copeland Nagle surveyed nearly a quarter-

---

38. 137 S.W.3d 25, 31 (Tenn. Crim. Ct. App. 2003) (citing Lyons, 802 S.W.2d at 592).

39. Smith v. City of Pigeon Forge, 600 S.W.2d 231, 233 (Tenn. 1980) (citing Elrod, 232 S.W.2d at 2).

40. United States v. Reese, 92 U.S. 214, 221 (1875); Klukowski, supra note 29, at 9. See generally Michael C. Dorf, Facial Challenges to State and Federal Statutes, 46 STAN. L. REV. 235 (1994) (discussing the constitutional limits imposed on the doctrine of severability).

41. Elrod, 232 S.W.2d at 2. But one scholar cautions, "Severability doctrine should not confer on courts . . . a freewheeling remedial lawmaking power" and urges that the judicial power to sever be subjected to separation-of-power analysis. David H. Gans, Severability as Judicial Lawmaking, 76 GEO. WASH. L. REV. 639, 688 (2008). "For that reason, severability should not turn on legislative intent but on the extent of the rewriting necessary to save the statute." Id. Indeed, fear of the separation-of-powers danger lurking in severability has led some scholars to question the constitutional validity of the doctrine entirely. Tom Campbell argues that when a court, following a holding of unconstitutionality, "does anything more than [strike down the statute as unconstitutional], it is legislating." Tom Campbell, Severability of Statutes, 62 HASTINGS L.J. 1495, 1496 (2011).

century ago.[42] As will be seen below, it plays an important role in the troubling case of State v. Crank.

D. Spiritual Treatment Exemptions

The story of religious claims to healing powers, and of popular belief in such powers, reaches back many centuries.[43] However, religiously-motivated parental decisions to forgo medical care for a child only began to come before the courts around the turn of the twentieth century—likely because before then, medical science was neither professionalized nor licensed by the state, and thus courts generally recognized no duty to obtain medical care for one's sick child.[44] Since the mid-1970s, most jurisdictions provide some form of statutory exemption from criminal liability for parents who choose religious, rather than medical, treatment for their sick child. The exemptions vary in scope and application, and there has been no simple trend over time. The following overview of early cases, the enactment of ST exemptions, and key subsequent cases from five states illustrates the difficulties courts have had with the exemptions and the sometimes contradictory outcomes that have emerged.

1. Early Cases

In the three quarters of a century before enactment of ST exemptions, parental spiritual-treatment defenses came before the courts on several occasions. An influential early test of the paren-

---

42. Nagle, supra note 28, at 211 (quoting J. Gregory Sidak & Thomas A. Smith, Four Faces of the Item Veto: A Reply to Tribe and Kurland, 84 NW. U. L. REV. 437, 456 (1990)).

43. See People v. Pierson, 68 N.E. 243, 245 (N.Y. 1903); Howell, supra note 3, at 950–52.

44. The New York Court of Appeals noted:

> Formerly no license or certificate was required of a person who undertook the practice of medicine. . . . [C]hapter 513 . . . of the Laws of 1880 [of New York] . . . is the first statute . . . we have found which prohibits the practice of medicine by any other than a person possessing a diploma from a medical college conferring . . . the degree of doctor of medicine, or a certificate from the constituted authorities giving him the right to practice.

Pierson, 68 N.E. at 246.

tal assertion of religious freedom to forgo medical care for a child is the 1903 case of People v. Pierson. In Pierson, New York's high court reinstated a father's conviction for failing to obtain medical care for his infant daughter, whose untreated whooping cough developed into catarrhal pneumonia, causing her death.[45] In strong language, the court set forth a clear hierarchy in which religious freedom must defer to the "peace [and] safety" of the state.[46] Although unable to invoke an ST exemption, the father denied a parent had a common-law duty to provide medical care for his child, asserting a constitutional right to choose spiritual treatment for his daughter.[47] The court noted, "[w]e place no limitations upon . . . the power of faith to dispel disease. . . . We merely declare the law as given us by the Legislature."[48] The court then pointedly quoted the state constitution, which recognizes the right to "the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship" but with the limitation that "liberty of conscience . . . shall not be so construed as to . . . justify practices inconsistent with the peace or safety of this state."[49] Pierson stands for the proposition that absent any special statutory exemption to the contrary, freedom of religion does not relieve a parent of the duty to furnish his or her child with all the child's necessaries, including medical attention when the child's health so requires.[50]

Pierson exerted strong influence on the courts of other jurisdictions, though not without exceptions. In the 1911 case of Owens v. State, the Oklahoma Court of Criminal Appeals upheld the child-endangerment conviction of a father who had failed to obtain medical treatment for his daughter, who died of typhoid fever.[51] On appeal, the defendant argued the jury should have been allowed to determine if his religious belief was a valid defense.[52] The court reasoned, relying heavily on Pierson, that the parental duty to provide medical attention for their child was not subject to

45. Id. at 244–47.
46. Id. at 246.
47. Id. at 244–45.
48. Id. at 247.
49. Id. at 246 (quoting N.Y. CONST., art. I, § 3).
50. Id. at 246–47.
51. 116 P. 345, 348 (Okla. Crim. App. 1911).
52. Id. at 345–46.

religious belief.[53] A contrary holding came from the Supreme Court of Florida in Bradley v. State, where the Florida Supreme Court overturned a father's manslaughter conviction for not obtaining medical attention for his severely burned daughter.[54] The father testified that rather than calling a physician, he was "trusting to the Lord and . . . believing in divine healing," but the court was silent as to this defense.[55] The court held the manslaughter statute did not cover the father's conduct, which it concluded did not constitute "[t]he killing of a human being by . . . culpable negligence"—it was the burns caused by the flames, not the father, that killed the girl.[56]

2. ST Exemptions

The history of ST exemptions, though barely four decades old, is marked by complexity and contradiction. Their genesis lies in the federal Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act ("CAPTA") enacted in 1974 to create uniform national legal standards on child abuse and neglect, and to promote state study and prevention efforts on the topic.[57] The statute included no religious exemption, leaving the issue to the administrative discretion of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare ("HEW"), which issued a regulation including this provision: "However, . . . a parent or guardian legitimately practicing his religious beliefs who thereby does not provide specified medical treatment for a child, for that reason alone shall not be considered a negligent parent or guardian."[58] The regulation made state receipt of federal 53. Id. at 346; see Pierson, 68 N.E. at 246. The same court followed the Owens rule in Beck v. State, upholding a father's conviction for failing to obtain timely medical care for his son, who died of tetanus. 233 P. 495, 495 (Okla. Crim. App. 1925).

---

54. 84 So. 677, 679 (Fla. 1920).

55. Id. at 680. The dissent by Justice West, on the other hand, addresses the religious defense at some length and explicitly rejects it, relying in part on Pierson and a common-law parental duty of care. Id. at 679–83 (West, J., dissenting).

56. Id. at 679 (majority opinion).

57. The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act of 1974, Pub. L. No. 93-247, 88 Stat. 4 (codified as amended at 42 U.S.C.S. §§ 5101–5119c (1974)).

58. Child Abuse and Neglect Prevention and Treatment Program, 39 Fed. Reg. 43937 (Dec. 19, 1974) (to be codified at 45 C.F.R. § 1340 (removed and assistance under the statute contingent upon acceptance of this provision—in effect, the federal government using its budgetary resources to push states to enact ST exemptions; most states did so.[59] In 1983, less than a decade after CAPTA's enactment, the Department of Health and Human Services ("HHS"), HEW's successor, adopted updated regulations removing the earlier requirement of an ST exemption.[60] Very few states repealed their exemptions, though, and a large majority of jurisdictions continue to retain them.[61]

A key beneficiary, and advocate, of ST exemptions has been The First Church of Christ, Scientist, commonly known as the "Christian Science Church," founded in Massachusetts in 1879 by Mary Baker Eddy.[62] Inspired in part by the New Thought movement which advocated metaphysical healing of illness, Eddy "discover[ed] . . . that Mind governs all . . . supremely" and the real reserved 80 Fed. Reg. 16577, 16579 (Mar. 30, 2015))). The quoted passage is in the section on harm to a child's health or welfare.

---

59. Id. CAPTA became law during the Nixon Administration; at least two prominent White House advisors, H.R. Haldeman and John Ehrlichman, were Christian Scientists, and are believed by some commentators to have influenced the HEW regulations. Caroline Fraser, Suffering Children and the Christian Science Church, THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY (Apr. 1995), http://www.theatlantic.com/past/docs/unbound/flashbks/xsci/suffer.htm.

60. See Engle, supra note 5, at 377 n.11 ("Nothing in this part should be construed as requiring or prohibiting a finding of negligent treatment or maltreatment when a parent or guardian practicing his or her religious beliefs does not . . . provide medical treatment for a child . . . ." (quoting 45 C.F.R. § 1340.2 (d)(3)(ii) (1983) (removed and reserved 80 Fed. Reg. 16579 (Mar. 30, 2015)). For comments on the change, see Child Abuse and Neglect Prevention and Treatment Program, 48 Fed. Reg. 3698 (Jan. 26, 1983), section on Definition of Negligent Treatment. Regarding the change from HEW to HHS, see U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, HHS HISTORICAL HIGHLIGHTS, http://www.hhs.gov/about/historical-highlights/index.html.

61. See Engle, supra note 5, at 377. As of February 2015, thirty-nine states, the District of Columbia, and Guam had some form of ST exemption. Nat. Ctr. for Prosecution and Child Abuse, Religious Exemptions to Child Neglect, NAT'L DIST. ATTORNEYS ASS'N (Feb. 2015), http://www.ndaa.org/pdf/2-11-2015%20Religious%20Exemptions%20to%20Child%20Neglect.pdf.

62. Hans A. Baer, Christian Science, ENCYCLOPEDIA OF RELIGION AND SOCIETY, http://hirr.hartsem.edu/ency/cscience.htm.

causes of disease were spiritual.[63] As suggested by the name Eddy chose for the church, Christian Science makes claims that its methods of healing are empirically verifiable. Eddy wrote that her system of treating disease "has proved itself, whenever scientifically employed, to be the most effective curative agent in medical practice."[64] Christian Science views the church's healing methods as incompatible with medical science, believing the two interfere with each other.[65]

3. Oklahoma

In State v. Lockhart, an Oklahoma appellate court upheld the jury instruction given by the trial court in a manslaughter case, where the parents' alleged failure to provide medical care for their 9-year-old son (who died of peritonitis) was a misdemeanor predicate offense to the first-degree manslaughter charge.[66] The jury instruction stated a parent could justifiably choose "not [to] provid[e] medical treatment for his child if instead that parent in good faith, selects and depends upon spiritual means alone through prayer, in accordance with the tenets and practice of a recognized church or religious denomination" for the child.[67] Oklahoma's child endangerment statute in force at the time of the child's death protected parents' choice of "spiritual means alone through prayer, in accordance with the tenets and practice of a recognized church or religious denomination," but with two provisos unlike Tennessee's exemption: the parental choice must be "in good faith" and "the laws, rules, and regulations relating to communicable diseases and sanitary matters" not violated.[68] The court found the ST exemption clearly induced reliance by the parents that choosing treatment by prayer would not lead to subsequent prosecution in the event treatment was unsuccessful.[69] The court found no

63. MARY BAKER EDDY, SCIENCE AND HEALTH: WITH KEY TO THE SCRIPTURES 13 (1888).

64. Id.

65. See Merrick, supra note 3, at 272.

66. 664 P.2d 1059, 1059–60 (Okla. Crim. App. 1983).

67. Id. at 1060.

68. Id. (quoting OKLA. STAT. tit. 21, § 852 (1975) (current version at OKLA. STAT. tit. 21, 852 (West 2002 & Supp. 2013)).

69. Id. at 1059.

vagueness in the ST exemption statute, but rather clear legislative intent to provide the protection.[70] Lockhart stands for the proposition that the ST defense will be allowed where the exemption induces reliance by parents. A 1988 amendment to Oklahoma's child endangerment statute narrowing the ST exemption by requiring provision of medical care "where permanent physical damage could result" provides a clear boundary line beyond which the ST exemption no longer protects parents.[71]

4. Ohio

In State v. Miskimens, where the parents chose prayer treatment for their thirteen-month old son's respiratory infection, of which he later died, both defendants and state attacked the state's ST exemptions as unconstitutional—the state on Establishment Clause grounds, among others, and the defendants on the ground of vagueness.[72] Ohio's ST exemption in force at the time included this proviso in the child-endangerment statute: "It is not a violation of a duty of care . . . when the parent . . . treats the . . . illness . . . of such child by spiritual means through prayer alone, in accordance with the tenets of a recognized religious body."[73] The trial court found the exemption, "based solely upon a religious preference of the accused," rife with Establishment Clause difficulties and held it unconstitutional on that ground.[74] In rejecting the defendants' free-exercise argument, the court relied on the 1944 U.S. Supreme Court case of Prince v. Commonwealth for the proposition that while religious freedom is absolute in matters of conscience, states may limit religious practice.[75] But the court also

---

70. Id. at 1060.

71. OKLA. STAT. tit. 21, § 852 (1975) (current version at OKLA. STAT. tit. 21, 852 (West 2002 & Supp. 2013)).

72. 490 N.E.2d 931, 933–38 (Ohio Ct. Com. Pl. 1984).

73. Id. at 933 n.1 (quoting OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2919.21(A) (1984) (amended 2011)).

74. Id. at 934.

75. Id.; Prince v. Commonwealth, 321 U.S. 158, 166 (1944). In Prince, a guardian charged with violating the child-labor statutes by allowing a minor ward to distribute religious literature on the streets invoked a free-exercise First Amendment defense. Id. 160–64. The U.S. Supreme Court held that, as "parens patriae," the state may restrict religious conduct (though not belief) in order to protect a child's well-being. Id. at 166 (emphasis added). In the earlier found the exemption irremediably vague, failing to define "tenets," "recognized," and other key terms whose determination would also "hopelessly involve the state" in entangling questions of religion.[76] Because the exemption's vagueness deprived the parents of fair notice (as well as leaving the state without clear guidelines for enforcement), the court voided the conviction.[77] Miskimens stands for the proposition that, even where the ST exemption invoked by parents is held unconstitutional on Establishment Clause grounds, statutory vagueness entitles the parents to relief.

5. California

In Walker v. Superior Court, the California Supreme Court upheld the denial of a motion to dismiss involuntary manslaughter and felony child endangerment charges against a Christian Scientist mother whose child died of medically untreated meningitis.[78] The court pointedly stated that "parents have no right to free exercise of religion at the price of a child's life."[79] California's ST exemption is in the child abuse and neglect statute, but the Walkers were prosecuted under manslaughter and felony child-endangerment statutes. The court rejected the argument that California law forced parents to guess when one statute's protections give way and the other statute's imposition of criminal liability become controlling; the law just required parents to "estimate rightly . . . the point at which their course of conduct becomes criminally negligent"—a requirement, and a kind of estimate, of case of Reynolds v. United States, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld a man's bigamy conviction in spite of his religious defense; the Court held that religious belief is no defense to violation of a criminal statute. 98 U.S. 145, 167 (1879). "To permit [the defense] would be to make the professed doctrines of religious belief superior to the law of the land, and in effect to permit every citizen to become a law unto himself." Id.

76. Miskimens, 490 N.E.2d at 934.

77. Id. at 938–39. Because of the notice issue, the court expressly made its holding of unconstitutionality of the ST exemption prospective only. Id. at 936; see also State v. Hermanson, 604 So. 2d 775, 775–76 (Fla. 1992) (parents were unconstitutionally denied fair notice of when their choice of spiritual treatment for their child would lose statutory protection).

78. 763 P.2d 852, 873 (Cal. 1988).

79. Id.

which the law is "full of instances."[80] The Walker court strikingly asserted the primacy of parental duty over the tenets of religious faith: "Imposition of felony liability for endangering or killing an ill child by failing to provide medical care furthers an interest of unparalleled significance."[81] Walker stands for the continued vigor of Pierson, and for the limitation of an ST exemption's effects to the statute that contains it.

6. Minnesota

The ST exemption's interaction with other statutes proved difficult in the Minnesota case of State v. McKown, as well.[82] In McKown, Christian Science parents were charged with second-degree manslaughter for choosing spiritual rather than medical means to treat their son's diabetes, of which he died; the court rejected their invocation of the ST exemption because that exemption was located in the child neglect statute, not the manslaughter statute, and the two were not in pari materia.[83] The court found, however, that the ST exemption's "broad[] word[ing], stating that a parent may in good faith 'select and depend upon' spiritual treatment and prayer, without indicating a point at which doing so will expose the parent to criminal liability," deprived the defendants of their Due Process right to fair notice.[84] Persuaded by the defendant parents' argument that the exemption induced reliance on their part, the court upheld the voiding of their conviction.[85]

---

80. Id. at 871–72.
81. Id. at 869.
82. 475 N.W.2d 63, 65 (Minn. 1991).
83. McKown, 475 N.W.2d at 66.
84. Id. at 68.
85. Id. at 68–69. In another key case involving prosecution under a statute separate from the one containing the ST exemption, Commonwealth v. Twitchell, the court ruled that the exemption—phrased almost exactly like Tennessee's—was not intended by the legislature to serve as a defense to the involuntary manslaughter statute because the exemption was placed in the parental desertion and nonsupport statutory section. 617 N.E.2d 609, 615–16 (Mass. 1993). On statutory grounds, therefore, the court rejected the parents' "fair notice" argument for the spiritual-treatment defense. Id. at 615–17. However, the court reversed the conviction on the grounds the defendants might have relied on a misleading opinion by the state attorney general regarding the ST exemption. Id. at 618–20. A case where faith-healing parents obtained reversal of convic-

Like the Walker court, the McKown court refused to extend the ST exemption to a manslaughter statute via the canon of in pari materia; however, as in Miskimens, the court voided the conviction on grounds of vagueness.

7. Tennessee

Tennessee enacted its ST exemption in 1994, some two decades after most jurisdictions did so.[86] The exemption currently extends the following protection against prosecution for child neglect:

> Nothing in this part shall be construed to mean a child is abused, neglected, or endangered, or abused, neglected or endangered in an aggravated manner, for the sole reason the child is being provided treatment by spiritual means through prayer alone, in accordance with the tenets or practices of a recognized church or religious denomination by a duly accredited practitioner of the recognized church or religious denomination, in lieu of medical or surgical treatment.[87]

An early parental assertion of a religiously based right to forgo medical treatment for one's child, predating enactment of the ST exemption, was the 1983 case, In re Hamilton.[88] There, the father of a 12-year-old girl suffering from Ewing's Sarcoma refused to obtain medical care for his daughter, invoking his free-exercise rights under the First Amendment.[89] The court held Pam-tion, but not by application of the ST exemption's protections, is Craig v. State, 155 A.2d 684, 689 (Md. 1959). In Craig, the appellate court reversed the parents' involuntary manslaughter conviction over the death of their infant daughter, holding that the state failed to prove the parents' gross negligence was the proximate cause of the child's death. Id.

86. 1994 Tenn. Pub. Acts ch. 978 (current version at TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-15-402(c) (2014)).

87. TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-15-402(c) (2014).

88. 657 S.W.2d 425, 428–29 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1983).

89. Id. at 426–27. In a remarkable coincidence, Pamela Hamilton's affliction was the same one Jessica Crank would suffer some twenty-five years later.

ela was a dependent and neglected child under the relevant state statute, and that under the doctrine of parens patriae the state had the right to limit the father's free exercise of religion so as to protect the child's health and well-being.[90] Between enactment of the ST exemption in 1994 and Jacqueline Crank's 2007 indictment, no assertion of parental religious freedom to forgo medical care for a sick child reached Tennessee courts—making State v. Crank a case of first impression.[91]

III. STATE V. CRANK

A. Background and History

In State v. Crank, the Tennessee Supreme Court upheld the criminal conviction of a Lenoir City, Tennessee mother for child neglect for failing to obtain medical treatment for her teenaged daughter, who contracted bone cancer and died.[92] Defendant Jacqueline Crank ("Jacqueline") and her teenaged daughter Jessica Crank ("Jessica") joined the Universal Life Church congregation established by Ariel Ben Sherman ("Sherman") in April 2001.[93] A personal relationship developed between Jacqueline and Sherman.[94] When fifteen-year-old Jessica developed shoulder trouble, 90. Id. at 429. The conviction of Pamela's father in In re Hamilton came under then TENN. CODE ANN. § 37-202(6)(iv) (1994), which is now TENN. CODE ANN. § 37-1-102(b)(12)(D), and which in both cases defines a "[d]ependent and neglected child" as one "[w]hose parent, guardian, or custodian neglects or refuses to provide necessary medical, surgical, institutional or hospital care for such child." Id. § 37-1-102(b)(12)(D).

91. The statute previously survived a vagueness challenge, but not with respect to the ST exemption. State v. Prater, 137 S.W.3d 25, 32 (Tenn. Crim. App. 2003) (noting that because the statute's mens rea requirement of "knowing" conduct clearly applied to the verbs "treats" and "neglects," the child abuse and neglect statute provided constitutionally sufficient warning of prohibited conduct).

92. 468 S.W.3d 15, 17–18 (Tenn. 2015).

93. Id. at 18.

94. Id. at 20. On at least one occasion, Sherman identified himself to a health professional as Jessica's father. Id. Sherman is not the most sympathetic figure. News reports of his death noted that he sought medical treatment for his cancer and pneumonia, and one religious-news website termed him a "hypocrite" for that reason. Faith Healer Convicted in Girl's Faith Healing Death was a Hypocrite, RELIGION NEWS BLOG (Jan. 10, 2013), http://www.religionnewsblog.com/27016/ariel-ben-sherman-faith-healing; Bob

Jacqueline took the daughter to see a chiropractor and, several weeks later, a nurse practitioner; both health professionals urged Jacqueline to take Jessica to the local emergency room, but Jacqueline chose instead "to turn to Jesus Christ, [her] Lord and [her] Savior . . . for Jessica's healing" by prayer.[95] The nurse practitioner, who observed bone disintegration on an x-ray of Jessica's shoulder, became concerned, verified that Jessica was never taken to the emergency room, and notified the police.[96] This led to the Department of Children's Services taking custody of Jessica and having her admitted to a hospital, where a physician diagnosed her with Ewing's Sarcoma, a rare bone cancer.[97] Jessica received treatment, was later transferred to hospice care, and died within three months of her original hospitalization.[98]

Jacqueline and Sherman were indicted in April 2003 for neglect of a child under the age of eighteen, due to their failure to provide Jessica with adequate medical care.[99] The trial court dismissed Sherman's indictment but it was reinstated on appeal and remanded for further proceedings.[100] On remand, Sherman was convicted of child neglect; he died during the pendency of his appeal.[101] The trial court initially dismissed the charge against Jacqueline, relying on a 2005 amendment to section 39-15-401 that made the statute's child neglect portion applicable only to children younger than thirteen.[102] The Court of Criminal Appeals, however, reversed the trial court and reinstated the indictment because it held the 2005 amendment could not be applied retroactively.[103]

Fowler, Faith-Healer Sought Medical Care While Recommending Against Same for Teen, KNOXVILLE NEWS SENTINEL (Jan. 7, 2013), http://www.knoxnews.com/news/local/faith-healer-sought-medical-care-while-recommending-against-same-for-teen-ep-359205398-356276851.html.

95. Crank, 468 S.W.3d at 19.

96. Id. at 19–20.

97. Id.; Ewing Sarcoma, U.S. NAT'L LIBRARY OF MED. MEDLINEPLUS (Mar. 23, 2014), https://www.nlm.nih.gov/medlineplus/ency/article/001302.htm.

98. Crank, 468 S.W.3d at 20.

99. Id. at 18 (citing TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-15-401(a) (Supp. 2001)).

100. Id.

101. Id.

102. Id. (citing TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-15-401 (Supp. 2005)).

103. Id. (citing State v. Sherman, No. E2006-01226-CCA-R3-CD, 2007 WL 2011032, at *4–5 (Tenn. Crim. App. July 12, 2007)).

After a pre-trial hearing on the effect of the ST exemption on the child-neglect charge, the trial court dismissed Jacqueline's constitutional claims and denied her motion to dismiss.[104] In a bench trial, the court found Jacqueline guilty of child neglect and sentenced her to eleven months and twenty-nine days of unsupervised probation.[105] On appeal, the conviction and sentence were affirmed.[106] The Tennessee Supreme Court granted an appeal, in which it affirmed the lower court.[107]

B. The Tennessee Supreme Court's Decision

In Crank, the Tennessee Supreme Court considered vagueness and Establishment Clause challenges, preceding the analysis with an overview of the exemption's legislative history.[108] Importantly, Defendant's challenge to the ST exemption was facial, rather than as-applied. A facial challenge states, in effect, that there is no way to apply the challenged statute or provision that would be constitutional.[109] This sets a high bar for Defendant to overcome—which is one reason why, aside from First Amendment cases, such challenges are quite rare. The court allowed this challenge, precisely because the statute implicated Defendant's First Amendment religious rights.[110]

After reviewing the facts, the court began with an analysis of the statute for vagueness; if the exemption were found imper-

---

104. Id. at 19.

105. Id. at 19–21.

106. Id. at 21 (citing Crank, No. E2012-01189-CCA-R3-CD, 2013 WL 5371617, at *6–8 (Tenn. Crim. App. Sept. 26, 2013), aff'd 468 S.W.3d 15).

107. Id. at 31.

108. Id. at 22–30. The Court also considered a third issue, outside the scope of this Comment: whether Defendant was entitled to a hearing pursuant to the State Preservation of Religious Freedom Act ("PRFA"), holding that she was not because there was no evidence of legislative intent to make the PRFA retroactive. Id. at 30–31

109. Dorf, supra note 40, at 236–37 ("A facial challenge to a legislative Act is . . . the most difficult challenge to mount successfully, since the challenger must establish that no set of circumstances exists under which the Act would be valid." (quoting United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 745 (1987))); City of Chicago v. Morales, 527 U.S. 41, 111 (1999).

110. Crank, 468 S.W.3d at 24–25.

missibly vague, Defendant's conviction would be overturned.[111] "[T]he determinative inquiry," stated the court, "is whether [the] statute's 'prohibitions are not clearly defined and are susceptible to different interpretations as to what conduct is actually proscribed.'"[112] The court acknowledged the exemption "falls short of 'absolute precision.'"[113] However, the court resolved potential ambiguity, first, by construing statutory language "according to the fair import of its terms."[114] The court noted a dictionary defined "recognized" as "acknowledge[d] or treat[ed] as valid."[115] The court further found the term "duly accredited practitioner" pointed clearly to the Christian Science faith because that term is used by Christian Scientists to refer to a person within that church who is "authorized to practice healing."[116]

The legislative history of the ST exemption presented at the outset of the court's analysis included reference to the Tennessee House initial 93–0 vote in favor of a version of the 1994 Act with no ST exemption.[117] The court gave this fact considerable weight in its deliberation, reasoning that the unanimous approval of the earlier version made discernment of legislative intent less speculative than it might otherwise have been.[118] The court also noted statements by the ST exemption's primary legislative sponsors.[119] Particularly striking is State Senator Jim Holcomb's quoted remark: "The amendment was offered by the Christian Scientists,

---

111. Id. at 22–23. The Court explicitly rejected the argument offered by the State, that if the ST exemption were found unconstitutionally vague, the proper remedy would be to excise it from the statute, "which would provide the [D]efendant no relief." Id. at 23 (alteration in original). The logic the Court rejected as to vagueness, it later employed in considering the Establishment Clause challenge.

112. Id. at 23 (quoting State v. Pickett, 211 S.W.3d 696, 704 (Tenn. 2007)).

113. Id. at 27 (quoting State v. McDonald, 534 S.W.2d 650, 651 (Tenn. 1976)).

114. Id. (quoting TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-104 (2014)).

115. Id. at 26 (citation omitted) (alteration in original).

116. Id. at 27.

117. Id. at 21–22.

118. Id. at 22. The Court later looks to the 93–0 vote as a guide in how to apply the doctrine of elision with regard to the Establishment Clause challenge. Id. at 27–30.

119. Id.

and it ensures that they are protected. . . . [I]t was offered by that group, and that is the reason that I put it in."[120] The legislative history, the court reasoned, makes the term "recognized" "less vague" and makes it "apparent" that "the exemption is effectively limited to members of religious groups that closely resemble the Christian Science Church."[121] The court distinguished Hermanson, where the Florida Supreme Court found it unconstitutional that one statute permitted conduct that another statute forbade.[122] The Crank court, in contrast, held "it cannot be said that our statutes simultaneously authorize and prohibit the same conduct," thus disallowing the vagueness claim.[123]

Turning to Jacqueline's Establishment Clause challenge, the court first invoked the maxim of judicial restraint, which cautions against adjudicating issues of constitutionality unless doing so is absolutely unavoidable.[124] The court reasoned there was no need to rule on the Establishment Clause: in the event the ST exemption were held unconstitutional, the only remedy would be to elide the exemption because the legislature "enacted the child abuse and neglect statute in 1989 without a[n] . . . exemption."[125]

---

120. Id. at 21–22 (quoting Hearing on S.B. 2562, 98th Gen. Assemb., Reg. Sess. 2 (Tenn. 1994) (statement of Sen. Jim Holcomb)). Similarly, the primary sponsor in the House, Representative J.B. Napier, "recognized the amendment as 'relative to the Christian Science religion, which I have no objection to.'" Id. at 22 (quoting Hearing on S.B. 2562, 98th Gen. Assemb., Reg. Sess. 2 (Tenn. 1994) (statement of Rep. J.B. Napier)). Senator Holcomb's remarks were made to the full Senate, Representative Napier's in committee hearings.

121. Id. at 27; see also Treene, supra note 3, at 143–44 (arguing that provisions which require spiritual treatment by a duly accredited practitioner in accordance with the tenets of a recognized church "effectively limit the exemption to Christian Scientists").

122. Crank, 468 S.W.3d at 25; State v. Hermanson, 604 So. 2d 775, 776 (Fla. 1992).

123. Crank, 468 S.W.3d at 27.

124. Id. at 27–29. "This Court will not pass on the constitutionality of a statute, or any part of one, unless it is absolutely necessary for the determination of the case and of the present rights of the parties to the litigation." State v. Murray, 480 S.W.2d 355, 357 (Tenn. 1972) (citing State ex rel. Loser v. Nat'l Optical Stores, 225 S.W.2d 263, 268 (Tenn. 1950)).

125. Crank, 468 S.W.3d at 29. Note how this is the same logic that, on the vagueness issue, the Court refused to accept from the State. See supra text accompanying note 111. In its review of the statute's legislative history, the Court

Enforcing the statute sans ST exemption, in the court's view, best honors legislative intent.[126] But what if elision were applied not to the entire exemption but just to the language referring to "a recognized church"? The court briefly considered this possibility, which would simply leave an ST exemption for any parent who "provide[s] treatment by spiritual means through prayer in lieu of medical or surgical treatment," but the court rejected this as "indulging in judicial legislation."[127] The court reasoned that even if such an elision might cure the statute's possible constitutional infirmity, "we cannot say that our legislature would have enacted an exemption so broad [as to] encompass all instances in which a parent claims reliance on prayer in lieu of medical treatment for a child."[128] The court cautioned that the doctrine of elision gives no license to "completely re-write or make-over a statute."[129] Hypothetically applying elision to the entire ST exemption, the court reasoned that the remaining child abuse and neglect statute would contain no protection for parents' choice of ST—leaving the conviction standing. Since the hypothetical elision would afford Jacqueline no relief, the trial court's judgment was affirmed.[130]

IV. ANALYSIS OF DECISION

The challenge of Crank lies not just in the two chief constitutional issues raised—vagueness and the Establishment Clause—but in the way the two issues interact, even intertwine with one another. The Tennessee Supreme Court refused to invalidate the Tennessee child abuse and neglect statute or its ST exemption provision for vagueness, finding that its key terms ("prayer," "tenets," "church," "recognized," and "practitioner") clearly expressed the legislative intent to extend the exemption's protections exclusively to "members of religious groups that closely resemble the Chris-also noted that, initially, the House had voted unanimously to pass a version of the 1994 Act with no ST exemption. Crank, 468 S.W.3d at 21.

---

126. Crank, 468 S.W.3d at 29–30.

127. Id. at 29 (quoting State v. Tester, 879 S.W.2d 823, 830 (Tenn. 1994)).

128. Id.; see Tester, 879 S.W.2d at 830; In re Swanson, 2 S.W.3d 180, 189 (Tenn. 1999); see also Davidson Cnty. v. Elrod, 232 S.W.2d 1, 2 (Tenn. 1950).

129. Crank, 468 S.W.3d at 29 (quoting Shelby Cnty. Election Comm'n v. Turner, 755 S.W.2d 774, 778 (Tenn. 1988)).

130. Id. at 30.

tian Science Church" and thus the statute met the Due Process requirement to give fair notice.[131] With that, the vagueness issue shades quickly into Establishment Clause concerns. It would seem, at first glance, that the statute has gone from the frying pan into the fire, constitutionally speaking—no sooner does it pass the vagueness test with ease, than Establishment Clause alarm bells go off. But then the Tennessee Supreme Court applied the doctrine of elision in a manner that rendered the Establishment Clause issue moot and afforded Jacqueline Crank no relief.

The court denied that "[Tennessee's] statutes simultaneously authorize and prohibit the same conduct"—yet the same omission (of medical treatment) is allowed to some, who are permitted to meet their duty of parental care via religious means alone, and denied to others.[132] Insofar as the Florida case of Hermanson involved two contradictory statutes, one permitting the conduct in question, and the other forbidding it, the court was correct to distinguish—Crank involves no such clash of statutes.[133] Yet the court was too quick to distinguish Hermanson, for vagueness can result not only from confusingly clashing statutes but also from the confusing operation of a single statute. The Court denied this, stating that the [ST] exemption merely "protects from prosecution individuals whose conduct would otherwise qualify as child abuse or neglect."[134] But omitting to obtain medical attention for one's sick child is both authorized and forbidden by the exemption—authorized to members of some religious faiths and forbidden to members of other religious faiths.

Leaving the Establishment Clause aside for the moment, the vagueness question is whether the statute puts citizens on clear notice as to the state's regulation of their conduct, or instead "require[s] [them] at peril of life, liberty or property to speculate as to the meaning of penal statutes."[135] This fundamental Due Process

131. Id. at 26–27. For the "closely resembling" phrase, see id. at 27. The Court also relied on Treene, supra note 3, at 143–44 (arguing that the "duly accredited practitioner" and "recognized church" language of many ST exemptions effectively limits their protections to members of the Christian Science church).

132. Crank, 468 S.W.3d at 27.

133. See State v. Hermanson, 604 So. 2d 775, 775–76 (Fla. 1992).

134. Crank, 468 S.W.3d at 27.

135. Lanzetta v. New Jersey, 306 U.S. 451, 453 (1939).

question is in play—whether Tennessee's ST exemption is best understood as "simultaneously authoriz[ing] and prohibit[ing] the same conduct" or as "protect[ing] from prosecution individuals whose conduct would otherwise qualify as child abuse or neglect."[136] The persuasive authority of the Miskimens court furnishes valuable guidance, for there, as in Crank, there was no clash of statutes.[137] In Miskimens, the Ohio trial court correctly noted that the statute failed to define "tenets," "recognized," and other essential terms.[138] Tennessee's exemption similarly failed to define its key terms, and the Supreme Court's attempt to do so raised as many questions as it answered.[139]

The Tennessee Supreme Court relied on legislative history to further determine the statute's clarity. Resolving the vagueness issue with reference to legislative history imposes a questionable burden on citizens, imputing to citizens not only constructive knowledge of the law but also of committee debates and other steps of the legislative process. Certainly the court's reasoning is not without warrant: in State v. Smith, the Tennessee Court of Criminal Appeals held that "[t]he clarity in meaning required by due process may also be derived from legislative history."[140] However, the court's language in Crank is notably tentative at times regarding vagueness, as when it says that the legislative history makes the term "recognized" "less vague."[141] The modest

136. Crank, 468 S.W.3d at 27.

137. See supra Section II.D.4.

138. State v. Miskimens, 490 N.E.2d 931, 934–35 (Ohio Ct. Com. Pl. 1984).

139. In attempting to show the ST exemption is not vague, the Court states that "the legislative intent was for the exemption to apply to members of religious bodies which, like the Church of Christian Science, are established institutions with doctrines or customs that authorize healers within the church to perform spiritual treatment via prayer." Crank, 468 S.W.3d at 27. But this language does not clarify what is meant by "established," for instance, or what practice qualifies as a "doctrines or customs."

140. 48 S.W.3d 159, 168 (Tenn. 2000); see also State v. Wilkins, 655 S.W.2d 914 (Tenn. 1983); State v. Hayes, 899 S.W.2d 175, 181 (Tenn. Crim. App. 1995). In Walker v. Superior Court, the California Supreme Court stated a similar expectation of the public with regard to legislative history. 763 P.2d 852, 872–73 (Cal. 1998).

141. Crank, 468 S.W.3d at 27. The Court also cites to Treene, supra note 3, at 143–44 (arguing that provisions which require spiritual treatment by a duly assertion, "less vague," seems shaky ground to support a finding that the statute is not void for vagueness, and appears to contradict the court's language, elsewhere in its opinion, that the ST exemption clearly applied only to churches "closely resembl[ing] the Christian Science Church."[142] The Tennessee Supreme Court's affirmative answer, based on narrowing the exemption's scope to one faith, purports to resolve vagueness by leading us straight into the thickets of the Establishment Clause. This is because exempting "members of religious groups that closely resemble the Christian Science Church" raises the specter of Larson, or, worse yet, HEB Ministries-like inquiry into theological, liturgical, and other religious traits—not to mention the privilege inherent in setting one faith up as the yardstick against which to assess others' "close resemblance."[143]

Highly persuasive authority for viewing with serious misgivings the Crank court's acceptance of special statutory protection to one religious faith comes from a 1996 federal case, Children's Healthcare Is a Legal Duty, Inc. v. Vladeck.[144] The Vladeck court held making Christian Science "sanatoria" (the church's centers devoted to healing by prayer) eligible for Medicare reimbursement amounted to religious favoritism that failed strict scrutiny.[145]

Particularly troubling is the Tennessee Supreme Court's use of a dictionary definition to establish the clarity of the word "recognized" as applied to a church, when it states that the word "broadly refers to something that is 'acknowledge[d] or treat[ed] as valid.'"[146] A clearer infringement of the Establishment Clause would be hard to find: "valid," with its senses of "correct" and "proper," evokes just the sort of state review and approval (or rejection) of individual churches' doctrine and practice the HEB Ministries court held unconstitutional.[147] accredited practitioner in accordance with the tenets of a recognized church "effectively limit the exemption to Christian Scientists.").

---

142. Crank, 468 S.W.3d at 27.

143. Id.; see supra Section II.B (citing Larson v. Valente, 456 U.S. 228, 244–52 (1982); HEB Ministries v. Tex. Higher Educ. Coordination Bd., 235 S.W.3d 627, 656–57 (Tex. 2007)).

144. 938 F. Supp. 1466 (D. Minn. 1996).

145. Id. at 1472–73.

146. Crank, 468 S.W.3d at 27 (citation omitted).

147. HEB Ministries, 235 S.W.3d at 678.

Finally, the Establishment Clause issue is intertwined with the vagueness issue because the definition of terms like "tenets," "recognized," "prayer," "church," and the like would, in the words of the Miskimens court, "hopelessly involve the state" in entangling questions of religion.[148]

The Tennessee Supreme Court acknowledged serious Establishment Clause concerns in a lengthy footnote near the end of its opinion, which stated in part:

> [T]he Establishment Clause issue gives us pause, as the statutory text and the legislative history, taken together, appear to indicate that the spiritual treatment exemption was enacted for the benefit of the Christian Scientist denomination of the Christian faith. The Establishment Clause provides that "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion," and the corresponding provision in the Tennessee Constitution provides "that no preference shall ever be given, by law, to any religious establishment or mode of worship."[149]

The Tennessee Supreme Court was correct to look with concern on the Establishment Clause issues raised in Crank, though its language did not go far enough. It is not clear whether the tentative nature of the court's language had to do with uncertainty as to whether the statute violates the Establishment Clause, or rather with the principle of judicial restraint, which led the court not to rule on the issue.

Ultimately, the vagueness challenge having been rejected, the Crank holding turns on the court's use of elision. The court foreclosed the Establishment Clause issue by hypothetically applying elision to the entire ST exemption. Whether to apply elision as broadly as the court hypothesized, or by more narrowly pruning the exemption of its favoritism, is a closer question than the court allows. The severability statute allows selective elision. Applying elision more surgically by cutting the "established church" verbiage would leave a child abuse and neglect statute containing an exemption for spiritual treatment, but not an exemption tethered to a particular faith and others "closely resembling" it. It is not so manifest that this would have thwarted legislative intent. The Tennessee Supreme Court appeared to dismiss the possibility out of hand, thereby denying Jacqueline relief. In short, once it found the statute not vague, the court's use of elision became dispositive.

---

148. State v. Miskimens, 490 N.E.2d 931, 934 (Oh. Ct. Comm. Pl. 1984).

149. Crank, 468 S.W.3d at 27 n.8 (quoting U.S. CONST. amend. I; TENN. CONST. art. I, § 3).

Had the Tennessee Supreme Court dwelt more thoroughly on the alternative elision hypothesis, it might have entertained the possibility that adjudicating constitutionality under the Establishment Clause was necessary to its determination of the case—as necessary as the constitutional examination it so readily undertook with regard to vagueness. Eliding the entire exemption would be the proper remedy where unconstitutionality lay in giving benefits to religion generally, but the court never raised the latter issue. If, on the other hand, the statute's Establishment Clause infirmity lies in favoring certain faiths, more selective elision would be appropriate. This much the court recognized, but it concluded that using elision in this way would rewrite the statute—impermissible "judicial legislation."[150]

V. CONCLUSION

The fundamental problem with the Tennessee Supreme Court's holding in Crank was that the statute, with its ST exemption, failed to give Jacqueline Crank fair notice of what conduct was prohibited and what conduct allowed. To paraphrase the U.S. Supreme Court in Morales, the vagueness that dooms the Tennessee statute lies in the uncertainty it creates about which prayers are protected by the statute and which prayers are not.[151] As such, the proper course for the court was to void the conviction on the Due Process ground of vagueness. The Establishment Clause infirmities of the statute were equally clear. Less so was the proper application of the doctrine of elision; it is at least tenable that a more selective striking of the statutory language favoring particular 150. See supra Section II.C.

151. City of Chicago v. Morales, 527 U.S. 41, 57 (1999) ("The vagueness that dooms this ordinance is . . . the product of uncertainty . . . about what loitering is covered by the ordinance and what is not.").

churches would have been appropriate. The State's interest in protecting children is unassailable, an "interest of unparalleled significance" in the Walker court's eloquent phrase.[152] But in Crank the State asserted, and the court found, no warrant for the superior efficacy of Christian Science prayers over those of any other church, or, indeed, any mother or father, to heal an ailing child.

152. Walker v. Superior Court, 763 P.2d 852, 869 (Cal. 1998); see also People v. Pierson, 68 N.E. 243 (N.Y. 1903); 118 A.L.R.5th, supra note 1.

THE UNIVERSITY OF MEMPHIS LAW REVIEW

VOLUME 46	WINTER 2015	NUMBER 2

Copyright © 2016 The University of Memphis Law Review

CONTENTS

ARTICLES

VACATUR OF AWARDS UNDER THE TENNESSEE UNIFORM ARBITRATION ACT: SUBSTANCE, PROCEDURE, AND STRATEGIES FOR PRACTIONERS
Steven W. Feldman 271

STAND YOUR GROUND LAWS: MISCHARACTERIZED, MISCONSTRUED, AND MISUNDERSTOOD
Pamela Cole Bell 383

NOTES

NO LOOKING BACK: THE EFFECT OF TRANSFER ON THE CHOICE OF LAW RULES APPLICABLE TO DIRECTLY FILED MULTIDISTRICT LITIGATION CASES
Elisabeth Courson 437

PRIVATE PAYER PARITY IN TELEMEDICINE REIMBURSEMENT: HOW STATE-MANDATED COVERAGE CAN BE THE CATALYST FOR TELEMEDICINE EXPANSION
Carl Benjamin Lewis 471

ENOUGH WITH THE WHITE LIE-ABILITY: DECREASING FRIVOLOUS HEALTH CARE LIABILITY ACTIONS IN TENNESSEE WITH TIME AND TRANSPARENCY
Mary Katherine Smith 503

Vacatur of Awards Under the Tennessee Uniform Arbitration Act: Substance, Procedure, and Strategies for Practitioners

STEVEN W. FELDMAN*

I. INTRODUCTION 273
II. ARBITRATION ESSENTIALS: "ARBITRATION" DEFINED, THE SCOPE OF JUDICIAL REVIEW, AND THE NEED FOR FINALITY...277
A. "Arbitration" Defined 277
B. The Scope of Judicial Review 281
C. The Need for Finality 283
III. TUAA AGREEMENTS, AWARDS, AND RELATED PROCEDURES 285
IV. VACATUR AND MODIFICATION OF AWARDS—OVERVIEW 287
A. Substantive Requirements..287
B. Procedural Requirements...291
V. TUAA GROUNDS FOR VACATUR..296
A. "Vacatur" as a Judicial Control Mechanism 296
B. Record Review in Vacatur Cases 300
C. Award Procured by Corruption, Fraud or Other Undue Means (TENN. CODE ANN. Section 29-5-313(a)(1)(A))...304
1. Corruption 305
2. Fraud 305
3. Undue Means 308
D. Evident Partiality by an Appointed Neutral Arbitrator or Corruption in any Arbitrators or Misconduct Prejudicing the Rights of Any Party (TENN. CODE ANN. Section 29-5-313(a)(1)(B)).....................................309
1. "Evident Partiality" Defined 310
2. Evidence of Partiality..314
3. Arbitrator's Duty of Self-Investigation and Disclosure 317

E. The Arbitrators Exceeded Their Powers (TENN. CODE ANN. Section 29-5-313(a)(1)(C)) 319
1. The Statutory Standards...319
2. Role of Contract Interpretation.................................321
3. Ambiguity in Arbitration Agreements/Arbitrator Decisions..324
4. Gaps in Arbitration Agreements/Arbitrator Decisions..326
5. Limits on Grants of Relief 327
F. The Arbitrators Refused to Postpone the Hearing Upon Sufficient Cause or Refused to Hear Material Evidence at the Hearing or Otherwise Conducted the Hearing as to Prejudice Substantially the Rights of a Party (TENN. CODE ANN. Section 29-5-313(a)(1)(D))...329
1. Party Discretion and Rules of Procedure...................329
2. Burden of Proof..331
3. Arbitrator Discretion in Allowing Evidence.............332
G. No Arbitration Agreement Existed and the Issue was Not Adversely Determined at the Proceeding and the Party Participating in the Hearing Raised an Objection (TENN. CODE ANN. Section 29-5-313(a)(1)(E)) 336
H. Common Law (Non-Statutory) Grounds for Vacatur 337
I. "Manifest Disregard of the Law" 345
J. Violation of Public Policy 349
VI. CRITIQUE OF VACATUR UNDER TENNESSEE ARBITRATION LAW 352
A. The Superiority of Arbitration Over Litigation: Fact or Fiction? 352
B. TUAA's Judicial Gloss 355
C. Judicial Review, Transcripts, and Arbitrator Findings of Fact/Conclusions of Law 359
D. Misreading "Exceeding" Arbitrator "Powers" (TENN. CODE ANN. Section 29-5-313(a)(1)(C))...........................363
E. Good Faith and Fair Dealing—A Little-Used Vacatur Theory 367
F. Judicial Interpretation of Arbitration Contracts: Question of Law or Fact? 370
G. Mutual, Final, and Definite Awards 373
H. Manifest Disregard of the Law—Is it a Viable Theory? 375

I. The Status of the Public Policy Defense 377
J. An Appeal Alternative 378
K. A Vacatur Alternative 379
L. The Gap Between the Award and its Confirmation 380
VII. CONCLUSION 380

I. INTRODUCTION

In 1983, the Tennessee General Assembly passed the Tennessee Uniform Arbitration Act ("TUAA" or "the Act").[1] The Act repealed all prior inconsistent laws on arbitration and reversed the common law rule that agreements to arbitrate a future dispute are unenforceable.[2] The prior version of the Tennessee arbitration statutes were codified at Tenn. Code Ann. sections 23-501 to 23-519 and were substantially unchanged from 1852 until the advent of TUAA.[3] Although most TUAA proceedings are between private parties, governmental entities, as allowed by law, may invoke TUAA.[4]

With a few exceptions, the legislature patterned TUAA after the Uniform Arbitration Act, which is a model statute that the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws drafted in 1955 and that numerous American jurisdictions enacted

---

* Attorney-Advisor, U.S. Army Engineering Support Center, Huntsville, Alabama. This article is drawn in part from the author's upcoming addition to his treatise in the Tennessee Practice Series, Contract Law and Practice (Thomson Reuters 2006). The author expresses his love and appreciation to his wife, Gayla Feldman.

1. TENN. CODE ANN. §§ 29-5-301 to -320 (2012).

2. Act of May 11, 1983, ch. 462, 1983 Tenn. Pub. Acts 946 (Tenn. 1983); Brown v. KareMor Int'l, Inc., No. 01A01-9807-CH-00368, 1999 WL 221799, at *2 (Tenn. Ct. App. Apr. 19, 1999) (comparing TUAA and common law).

3. See Meirowsky v. Phipps, 432 S.W.2d 885, 886 (Tenn. 1968) (describing pre-TUAA standards).

4. Cf. Chattanooga Area Reg'l Transp. Auth. v. T.U. Parks Constr. Co., No. 03A019712CH00524, 1999 WL 76074, at *5 (Tenn. Ct. App. Jan. 28, 1999) (stating the statute would need to include these entities by specific reference before they may enter into arbitration); Tipton Cty. Dep't of Pub. Instruction by Tipton Cty. Bd. of Educ. v. Delashmit Elec. Co., No. 02A01-9704-CH-00084, 1998 WL 158774, at *3 (Tenn. Ct. App. Apr. 7, 1998) (stating school boards, counties, and other political subdivisions in the state may invoke the Act).

thereafter.[5] Because of the close relation of TUAA and other states' arbitration statutes, TUAA provides that it "shall be construed as to effectuate its general purpose to make uniform the laws of those states which enact it."[6] On the other hand, Tennessee courts carefully point out that while "the objective of uniformity cannot be achieved by ignoring [the] utterances of other jurisdictions," sister court opinions on their Uniform Act are not binding upon Tennessee tribunals.[7] Indeed, the Tennessee Supreme Court has gone so far as to say, "We do not construe Tenn. Code Ann. [section] 29-5-320 as an inexorable command to make up a scorecard of the states that have accepted and rejected a particular interpretation of a provision of the Uniform Arbitration Act and then to follow the majority view without further discussion or analysis."[8]

Another important point of comparison is the Federal Arbitration Act ("FAA"),[9] which Tennessee courts cite frequently as persuasive—but not necessarily binding—authority in TUAA cases.[10] This comparison is also important because Tennessee state and federal courts both have jurisdiction of FAA cases. Thus, a claimant may properly file an action in state court to obtain relief under the governing FAA with respect to arbitration agreements

---

5. See Stephen Wills Murphy, Note, Judicial Review of Arbitration Awards Under State Law, 96 VA. L. REV. 887, 891 (2010). In 2000, the National Conference of Commissioners approved a Revised Uniform Arbitration Act, which seventeen states (not including Tennessee) have adopted. All told, forty-seven states plus the District of Columbia have adopted the Uniform Arbitration Act or substantially similar legislation. See id.

6. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-320 (2012); see also Buraczynski v. Eyring, 919 S.W.2d 314, 319 (Tenn. 1996); Wachtel v. Shoney's, Inc., 830 S.W.2d 905, 909 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1991) (providing good summary of the policies for consistent interpretation of uniform acts).

7. Buraczynski, 919 S.W.2d at 318–19 (quoting Holiday Inns, Inc. v. Olsen, 692 S.W.2d 850, 853 (Tenn. 1985)); see also Wachtel, 830 S.W.2d at 909 (stating a good summary of principles).

8. Morgan Keegan & Co. v. Smythe, 401 S.W.3d 595, 612 (Tenn. 2013).

9. 9 U.S.C. §§ 1–16 (2012).

10. E.g., Pugh's Lawn Landscape Co. v. Jaycon Dev. Corp., 320 S.W.3d 252, 257–59 (Tenn. 2010); Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 448, 450–51 (Tenn. 1996).

involving interstate commerce.[11] This article will make frequent use of decisions from other jurisdictions to address issues that are unclear or insufficiently addressed in TUAA case law.

TUAA has only grown in importance for the commercial law system since its enactment in 1983. Tennessee appellate courts have strongly endorsed TUAA as a fair and efficient alternative to conventional civil litigation.[12] Tennessee courts view arbitration as a "valuable tool"[13] that is "favored by legislative policy"[14] because it can make resolution of disputes "more efficient, more economical, and equally fair" to the parties.[15] Tennessee courts have said about TUAA, "[T]he legislature sought to facilitate and promote a quicker, more cost effective, less cumbersome, yet binding means of dispute resolution."[16]

In keeping with this pro-arbitration policy, courts have stated that the Tennessee arbitration statutes are remedial and any issue of interpretation "ought to be resolved in line with [their] liberal policy of promoting arbitration both to accord with the original intention of the parties and to help ease the current congestion of court calendars."[17] Therefore, Tennessee courts have observed that the scope of an arbitration agreement under TUAA (as opposed to

---

11. E.g., Frizzell Constr. Co. v. Gatlinburg, L.L.C., 9 S.W.3d 79 (Tenn. 1999).

12. E.g., Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 449 ("[A]rbitration is attractive because it is a more expeditious and final alternative to litigation." (quoting Boyd v. Davis, 897 P.2d 1239, 1242 (Wash. 1995))). Currently, a lively debate exists in the academic community on whether arbitration as applied to mass market consumer contracts is a fundamentally fair process. One commentator has said that "[m]any well-articulated and convincing critiques have been aimed at 'mandatory' arbitration, and some equally strong counterarguments have also been made." Meredith R. Miller, Contracting Out of Process, Contracting Out of Corporate Accountability: An Argument Against Enforcement of Pre-Dispute Limits on Process, 75 TENN. L. REV. 365, 369 (2008).

13. Golden v. Hood, No. E1999-02443-COA-MR3-CV, 2000 WL 122195, at *2 (Tenn. Ct. App. Jan. 26, 2000) (citing Tenn. R. S. Ct. 31 prmbl.).

14. Blount Excavating, Inc. v. Denso Mfg. Tenn., Inc., No. 03A01-9903-CV-00112, 1999 WL 1068678, at *3 (Tenn. Ct. App. Nov. 25, 1999).

15. Golden, 2000 WL 122195, at *2 (quoting Tenn. R. S. Ct. 31 prmbl.).

16. T.R. Mills Contractors, Inc. v. WRH Enters., L.L.C., 93 S.W.3d 861, 868 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2002) (citing cases).

17. 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:20 (4th ed. 2001) (alteration in original) (citations omitted).

its enforceability vel non)[18] must receive as "broad a construction as the words will allow."[19] A further consequence is that courts must resolve "any doubts" in favor of requiring arbitration.[20]

Nevertheless, as one authority observes, "[I]n spite of the increased use of arbitration, the law concerning arbitration is still considered to be esoteric and often misunderstood by attorneys and judges alike."[21] Compounding this challenge is that commentary is brief on TUAA arbitration and essentially unaddressed in law journals.[22] One of the most challenging TUAA topics is the action for vacatur (annulment) of an arbitral award, where claimants regularly prove unsuccessful in their efforts. Because actions for vacatur are often the most hotly-disputed matters between the arbitral parties, this article focuses on this subject to assist practitioners develop their strategies as they seek to advance their clients' interests.

After this Introduction, the next part of the article covers the arbitration essentials inclusive of definitions, the scope of judicial review, and the policy favoring finality of awards. The third

---

18. Urology Assocs. v. CIGNA Healthcare of Tenn., No. M2001-02252-COA-R3-CV, 2002 WL 31302922, at *5 (Tenn. Ct. App. Feb. 18, 2003) (citing cases).

19. Id.

20. Dale Supply Co. v. York Int'l Corp., No. M2002-01408-COA-R3-CV, 2003 WL 22309461, at *7 (Tenn. Ct. App. Oct. 9, 2003); see Blount Excavating, Inc. v. Denso Mfg. Tenn., Inc., No. 03A01-9903-CV-00112, 1999 WL 1068678, at *2 (Tenn. Ct. App. Nov. 25, 1999) ("[Q]uestions of law are to be resolved with respect for the public policy concerning arbitration."); id. at *4 (explaining there is no requirement that the arbitration clause use the word "arbitration"); Wachtel v. Shoney's, Inc., 830 S.W.2d 905, 908 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1991); see also Wilks v. Pep Boys, 241 F. Supp. 2d 860, 863 (M.D. Tenn. 2003) (citing "any doubt" rule).

21. 27 AM. JUR. 3D Proof of Facts § 103 (1994).

22. See 27 JOSEPTH T. GETZ & MICHAEL I. LESS, TENNESSEE PRACTICE SERIES, CONSTRUCTION LAW HANDBOOK, ch. 14 (2013); 16 WILLIAM BROWN, ET AL., TENNESSEE PRACTICE SERIES, DEBTOR-CREDITOR LAW AND PRACTICE, pt. I, ch. 2, § 2:121 (2d ed. 2013); 13 ELLEN BRONAUGH VERGOS, TENNESSEE PRACTICE SERIES, LEGAL FORMS REAL ESTATE LEASES § 7:1 (2d ed. 2001 & Supp. 2015); 2 THOMAS LEVEILLE & LORI FARRIS FLEISHMAN, TENNESSEE LITIGATION FORMS AND ANALYSIS, ch. 18 (Sept. 2013); 1 LAWRENCE A. PIVNICK, TENNESSEE CIRCUIT COURT PRACTICE § 3:21 (2013); Lewis L. Laska, A General Practitioner's Guide to Commercial Arbitration and the 1983 Tennessee Uniform Arbitration Act, 20 TENN. B.J. 23 (1984).

part addresses TUAA agreements, awards, and related procedures. The fourth part provides an overview of the substantive and procedural aspects of vacatur and the modification of arbitral awards. The fifth part is the most extensive in the article and describes vacatur as a judicial control mechanism. This part addresses the standards for record review in vacatur cases and then examines at length the five statutory grounds for vacatur in Tennessee. The fifth part also covers a topic that has practically no Tennessee commentary, but bears noting by practitioners: whether Tennessee still recognizes common law arbitration. The section also covers common law grounds for vacatur. The most important candidates for common law (non-statutory) vacatur are the arbitrator's "manifest disregard of the law" in rendering the decision and where the arbitrator's decision violates public policy.[23]

In keeping with the title of this article, the sixth part contains a wide-ranging procedural and substantive critique of arbitration in Tennessee. Examples of the topics discussed in this section include the supposed superiority of arbitration over litigation, the questionable judicial gloss on TUAA regarding the narrow judicial standard of arbitral awards, the unduly permissive judicial stance toward a minimal record in arbitration proceedings, and many other substantive and procedural points. Throughout, the article will emphasize legal strategies for practitioners, especially in unclear or contested areas of Tennessee arbitration jurisprudence.

II. ARBITRATION ESSENTIALS: "ARBITRATION" DEFINED, THE SCOPE OF JUDICIAL REVIEW, AND THE NEED FOR FINALITY

A. "Arbitration" Defined

While not defined in TUAA, "arbitration"—a "matter of contract"[24]—"is a consensual proceeding in which the parties select decision-makers of their own choice and then voluntarily submit their disagreement to those decision-makers for resolution in lieu of adjudicating the dispute in court."[25] Arbitration is a "quasi-judicial proceeding" that is adversarial in nature.[26] Ordinarily, it includes hearings, prior notice to the parties, documentary evidence, and witness testimony.[27] An arbitration award is tantamount to a court judgment and, unless the party in opposition proves in a vacatur proceeding that the award violated the applicable statutory criteria, it will be conclusive as to the parties' rights and liabilities.[28]

23. See infra Section V.I (analyzing cases explaining theory).

24. Frizzell Constr. Co. v. Gatlinburg, L.L.C., 9 S.W.3d 79, 84 (Tenn. 1999) (quoting AT&T Techs., Inc. v. Commc'ns Workers, 475 U.S. 643, 648 (1986)); see also Mengel Co. v. Nashville Paper Prods. & Specialty Workers Union, No. 513, 221 F.2d 644, 647 (6th Cir. 1955) (explaining there is no independent right for a party to require arbitration without the right to have the issue determined by a court).

While, as indicated above, arbitration shares some general traits with conventional civil actions, it also differs significantly on the formalities of litigation. The most prominent distinction is arbitration's generally minimal reliance on the rules of evidence. Accordingly, when parties submit their dispute to arbitration, they "always risk[] procedural and evidentiary shortcuts."[29] Many

---

25. Merrimack Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Batts, 59 S.W.3d 142, 149 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2001); see also Smith v. Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 2 S.W.3d 197, 206 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1999) ("Arbitration . . . is an 'adjudication' of conflicting interests by a neutral third party." (quoting Strozier v. Gen. Motors Corp., 635 F.2d 424, 425 (5th Cir. 1981))); Blount Excavating, Inc. v. Denso Mfg. Tenn., Inc., No. 03A01-9903-CV-00112, 1999 WL 1068678, at *4 (Tenn. Ct. App. Nov. 29, 1999) ("[A]rbitration is '[a] process of dispute resolution in which a neutral third party (arbitrator) renders a decision after a hearing at which both parties have an opportunity to be heard.'" (alteration in original) (quoting Arbitration, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (6th ed. 1990))). TUAA covers only binding arbitration; the parties alternatively may elect to use non-binding arbitration outside the statutory constraints. Id.

26. State v. R.I. Emp't Sec. All., Local 401, 840 A.2d 1093, 1097 (R.I. 2003).

27. Merrimack Mut., 59 S.W.3d at 150. For a judicially-approved instance where the parties used an arbitration-like proceeding but where the parties employed measures to avoid the finality characteristic of arbitration and where an agent of the owner served as an arbitrator, see Blount Excavating, 1999 WL 1068678, at *1; see also Smith v. Smith, 989 S.W.2d 346, 348 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1998) (holding similarly).

28. Americas Ins. v. Seagull Compania Naviera, S.A., 774 F.2d 64, 67 (2d Cir. 1985); Container Tech. Corp. v. J. Gasden Pty., Ltd., 781 P.2d 119, 121 (Colo. App. 1989); Turpin v. Love, 1973 WL 16997, at *4 (Tenn. Ct. App. Aug. 14, 1973) ("[F]indings by the arbitrator . . . [have] the same binding effect upon the [p]laintiff as a judicial determination by a court of competent jurisdiction.").

29. Weber v. Merrill Lynch Pierce Fenner & Smith, Inc., 455 F. Supp. 2d 545, 554 (N.D. Tex. 2006) (quoting Mantle v. Upper Deck Co., 956 F. Supp. 719, 731 (N.D. Tex. 1997)).

years ago, Judge Learned Hand explored the tradeoff a party makes when it selects arbitration over litigation:

> Arbitration may or may not be a desirable substitute for trials in courts; as to that the parties must decide in each instance. But when they have adopted it, they must be content with its informalities; they may not hedge it about with those procedural limitations which it is precisely its purpose to avoid. They must content themselves with looser approximations to the enforcement of their rights than those that the law accords them, when they resort to its machinery.[30]

Two arbitration agreements exist in these proceedings: the one between the parties—often called the "submission"—and the one between the arbitrator(s) and the parties.[31] The submission is the roadmap for the proceedings and defines the issues for decision.[32] The submission may take one of two forms: a stand-alone arbitration agreement or an arbitration clause in the principal contract for the goods or services.[33] Indeed, the submission has such importance that it contains a "presumption" of arbitrability, i.e., the parties have agreed to submit a particular issue to arbitration.[34] A court should not refuse to issue an order to arbitrate unless it may be said with positive assurance that the arbitration clause is not susceptible of an interpretation that covers the asserted dispute.[35]

---

30. Am. Almond Prods. Co. v. Consol. Pecan Sales Co., 144 F.2d 448, 451 (2d Cir. 1944).

31. 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:45 (4th ed. 2001); Christopher R. Drahozal & Samantha Zyontz, Private Regulation of Consumer Arbitration, 79 TENN. L. REV. 289, 295–96 (2012).

32. 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:45 (4th ed. 2001) (discussing submissions in arbitration).

33. THOMAS E. CARBONNEAU, THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF ARBITRATION 48–49 (4th ed. 2012).

34. 1 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 15:2 (3d ed. 2013).

35. Metro Const. Co. v. Cogun Indus., Inc., No. 02A01-9608-CH-00207, 1997 WL 538914, at *3 (Tenn. Ct. App. Sept. 4, 1997) (quoting United Steelworkers v. Mead Corp., 21 F.3d 128, 131 (6th Cir. 1994)); Wachtel v. Shoney's, Inc., 830 S.W.2d 905, 908 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1991). For additional discussion of

Where a party agrees to arbitration, it relinquishes "much" of its right to receive a judicial decision on the merits.[36] Indeed, courts and commentators have characterized arbitration as a type of "forum selection clause."[37] Courts commonly observe that "[a]n agreement to arbitrate does not affect the rights and duties of the parties," but "simply shifts the forum of dispute settlement" for resolving the parties' differences.[38]

The above statement that arbitration "does not affect the rights and duties of the parties"[39] can be misleading because courts and arbitrators have different responsibilities for adhering to statutory and case law principles. While judges are strictly bound by the law, arbitrators operate on a more relaxed standard. Many courts hold that, where a party seeks vacatur on the grounds that the arbitrator—either during the proceedings or in the decision—has made an erroneous legal interpretation, this alleged misapplication of the law, by itself, is not grounds for overturning an arbitral award.[40] To an extent, this problem is alleviated by the doctrine that arbitration awards are not legal precedents and do not bind the courts (or future arbitrators).[41] In numerous succeeding parts, this article will discuss the ramifications of the relaxed legal standards governing arbitration proceedings.

---

arbitrability, see 1 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 15 (3d ed. 2013) (discussing the analysis of determination of issues by court or arbitrator; parties' intention; arbitrable issues—in general; arbitrable issues—presumptions and burden of proof (including broad or restrictive clauses; subject matter; and waiver)).

36. Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 448 (Tenn. 1996) (quoting First Options of Chi., Inc. v. Kaplan, 514 U.S. 938, 942 (1995)).

37. E.g., Scherk v. Alberto-Culver Co., 417 U.S. 506, 519 (1974); Hiro N. Aragaki, Equal Opportunity for Arbitration, 58 UCLA L. REV. 1189 n.221 (2011).

38. E.g., T.R. Mills Contractors, Inc. v. WRH Enters., L.L.C., 93 S.W.3d 861, 868 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2002) (citing Buraczynski v. Eyring, 919 S.W.2d 314, 319 (Tenn. 1996)).

39. See id.

40. See, e.g., Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 451 ("[E]rrors of law or fact, or an erroneous decision of matters submitted to [arbitration] are insufficient to invalidate an award fairly and honestly made." (quoting Turner v. Nicholson Props., Inc., 341 S.E.2d 42, 45 (1986))).

41. See Peoples Sec. Life Ins. v. Monumental Life Ins., 991 F.2d 141, 147 (4th Cir. 1993).

B. The Scope of Judicial Review

In the same vein as the strong policy favoring arbitrability, courts have a "limited role" in reviewing an arbitration decision as the courts follow a "deferential" standard of review.[42] This process is not de novo.[43] As a result, the trial court acts as an appellate court to the arbitrator in vacatur cases,[44] whereby the court does not reweigh the evidence presented to the arbitrator.[45] Similarly, the formal review at the Tennessee Court of Appeals or the Tennessee Supreme Court is not de novo, except that questions of law will be considered without deference to the lower court.[46]

Based on these constraints, the courts' review of an arbitration decision is "one of the narrowest standards of judicial review in all of American jurisprudence."[47] The policy is to avoid the undue "judicialization" of the arbitration process[48] and to ensure that arbitration does not become an additional expensive and time-

42. D & E Constr. Co. v. Robert J. Denley Co., 38 S.W.3d 513, 518 (Tenn. 2001); Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 448, 450; La. Safety Sys., Inc. v. Tengasco, Inc., No. E2000-03021-COA-R3-CV, 2001 WL 1105395, at *5 (Tenn. Ct. App. Sept. 21, 2001). But see Parr v. Tower Mgmt. Co., No. 01A01-9811-CV-00573, 1999 WL 415169, at *4 (Tenn. Ct. App. June 23, 1999) (stating that courts are "severely limited" in their authority to retry the issues parties raise in arbitration cases).

43. AmeriCredit Fin. Servs.. Inc. v. Oxford Mgmt. Servs., 627 F. Supp. 2d 85, 92 n.6 (E.D.N.Y. 2008).

44. 4 AM. JUR. 2d Alternative Dispute Resolution § 206 (2014) (stating the movant must, also, rely upon a statutory or common law ground for vacatur for the trial court to have jurisdiction).

45. Vt. Built, Inc. v. Krolick, 969 A.2d 80, 86 (Vt. 2008).

46. Pugh's Lawn Landscape Co. v. Jaycon Dev. Corp., 320 S.W.3d 252, 258 n.4 (Tenn. 2010). But see Sanders v. Harbor View Nursing & Rehab. Ctr., No. W2014-01407-COA-R3-CV, 2015 WL 3430082, at *3 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2015) ("We review the trial court's conclusions of law de novo. We review the trial court's findings of fact de novo with a presumption of correctness unless the evidence preponderates otherwise." (citation omitted)). By a similar logic, the trial court has no duty of deference to the arbitrator for his conclusions of law. Id.

47. Morgan Keegan & Co. v. Smythe, No. W2010-01339-COA-R3-CV, 2014 WL 2462853, at *2 (Tenn. Ct. App. May 29, 2014) (quoting cases); see also Bronstein v. Morgan Keegan & Co., No. W2011-01391-COA-R3-CV, 2014 WL 1314843, at *2 (Tenn. Ct. App. Apr. 1, 2014).

48. E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. v. Grasselli Emps. Indep. Ass'n of E. Chi., Inc., 790 F.2d 611, 614 (7th Cir. 1986).

consuming layer to the already complex litigation process. "Judicialization" occurs where the process inappropriately lends itself to conventional legal and evidentiary appeals that would render informal arbitration a mere prelude to the more cumbersome and time consuming judicial review process.[49]

As indicated above, the scope of judicial review is narrow. Courts may set aside an arbitration decision only in "very unusual circumstances," and the award will stand unless shown to be "clearly erroneous."[50] The standard for arbitral reversal must be based on statute or the deprivation of a party's due process. A reviewing court cannot consider the merits of an arbitration award even when the aggrieved party alleges that the award is tainted by errors of fact or law or by the arbitrator's misunderstanding or misrepresentation of the contract.[51] Finally, the submission[52] could affect the scope of judicial review. For example, if the parties' agreement states that the arbitrator is the final judge of the admissibility of evidence, and that the ordinary rules of evidence do not apply, the arbitrator's rulings on this point are not reviewable by a subsequent court.[53] In this way, TUAA serves as an "efficient and economical system of alternative dispute resolution."[54]

---

49. See Cat Charter, L.L.C. v. Schurtenberger, 646 F.3d 836, 845 (11th Cir. 2011) (citing Hall St. Assocs. v. Mattel, Inc., 552 U.S. 576, 588 (2008)).

50. See Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 450 (Tenn. 1996) (citing First Options of Chi., Inc. v. Kaplan, 514 U.S. 938, 942 (1995)); see also Cat Charter, 646 F.3d at 842–43 ("[A]rbitrators do not act as junior varsity trial courts where subsequent appellate review is readily available to the losing party." (citing Nat'l Wrecking Co. v. Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, Local 731, 990 F.2d 957, 960 (7th Cir. 1993))); Remmey v. Painewebber, Inc., 32 F.3d 143, 146 (4th Cir. 1994) (finding that parties would cease to use arbitration if courts did not resist the temptation to re-decide arbitral decisions); Nat'l Wrecking Co., 990 F.2d at 960 ("Judicial review of arbitration awards is narrow because arbitration is intended to be the final resolution of disputes."); E.I. DuPont, 790 F.2d at 614 ("[A]n extremely low standard of review is necessary to prevent arbitration from becoming merely an added preliminary step to judicial resolution.").

51. Vt. Built, Inc. v. Krolick, 969 A.2d 80, 86 (Vt. 2008).

52. See supra notes 31–34 and accompanying text.

53. Davis v. Reliance Elec., 104 S.W.3d 57, 63 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2002).

54. Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 450; see also Buraczynski v. Eyring, 919 S.W.2d 314, 318, 318 n.3 (Tenn. 1996) ("[P]ublic policy favors alternative dispute resolution because it is quicker, less expensive and relieves court conges-

Some jurisdictions go even further and state that an arbitration award will not be appealable where the parties (1) contractually agreed to resolve their dispute through binding arbitration and (2) expressly agreed to waive the right of judicial review of the arbitrator's decision.[55] These principles would likely apply in Tennessee because our courts recognize a party's right to waive an appeal.[56]

C. The Need for Finality

The above-mentioned strong pro-enforcement policy advances the core need for finality in arbitration cases, even though "harsh results" can and will occur.[57] The Tennessee Supreme Court has remarked,

> If an arbitrator makes a mistake, either as to law or fact, it is a misfortune of the party, and there is no help for it. There is no right of appeal and the Court has no power to revise the decisions of "judges who are of the parties' own choosing." An [arbitration] award is intended to settle the matter in controversy, and thus save the expense of litigation. If a mistake be a sufficient ground for setting aside an award, it opens a door for coming into court in almost every case; for in nine cases out of ten some mistake either of law or fact, may be suggested by the dissat-tion. . . . [A]dvantages to arbitration . . . [include] finality of decisions and informality of procedure and rules . . . .").

---

55. Hirsh v. Gursky, No. BC182550, 2002 WL 31266350, at *3 (Cal. Dist. Ct. App. Oct. 10, 2002).

56. See Diggs v. DNA Diagnostic Ctr., No. W2012-01617-COA-R3-CV, 2013 WL 3972191, at *4 (Tenn. Ct. App. Aug. 2, 2013) (holding that voluntary dismissal is tantamount to waiving the right of appeal); Metro. Dev. & Hous. Agency v. Hill, 518 S.W.2d 754, 760–61 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1974) (holding that a party cannot appeal from a judgment that they voluntarily recognized the validity of).

57. Motorcarrier Petroleum Grp. v. T. R. Auto Truck Plaza, No. 02A01-9509-CV-00207, 1996 WL 266652, at *2 (Tenn. Ct. App. May 21, 1996).

> isfied party. Thus . . . arbitration, instead of ending would tend to increase litigation.[58]

Obviously, the above passage, in stating there is "no right of appeal," is partially mistaken or at least misleading with regard to TUAA because there is definitely a right of appeal through the vacatur process of Tenn. Code Ann. sections 29-5-313 and 29-5-314. Therefore, the better interpretation of the above passage is that the Tennessee Supreme Court was essentially emphasizing the importance of finality in arbitration.

In another aspect of the need for finality in arbitration, the law advances party autonomy and freedom of contract. A 1997 Tennessee Court of Appeals case observed,

> These parties signed a contract with an arbitration clause. It is for the arbitrator to decide the legal obligations of the parties, based upon the legal principles applicable to the fact of this case. Since the parties agreed to arbitration, it is not for the courts to decide their controversies.[59]

Other courts explicitly acknowledge this freedom of contract policy in their decisions construing the local version of the Uniform Arbitration Act. Thus, according to the Connecticut Supreme Court in L & R Realty v. Connecticut National Bank,[60]

---

58. Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 449, 451 (alterations in original) (quoting Carolina Va. Fashion Exhibitors Inc. v. Gunther, 255 S.E.2d 414, 420 (N.C. Ct. App. 1979)).

59. B.L. Hodge Co. v. Roxco, Ltd., No. 03A01-9704-CH-00144, 1997 WL 644960, at *4 (Tenn. Ct. App. Oct. 16, 1997) (emphasis added); see also Pyburn v. Bill Heard Chevrolet, 63 S.W.3d 351, 357 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2001) ("[P]arties are free to structure an arbitration agreement as they see fit."); Jones v. Cubberley, No. 03A01-9210-CH-00370, 1993 WL 17721, at *1 (Tenn. Ct. App. Jan. 29, 1993) ("Courts are justified in exercising great caution when asked to set aside an arbitration award, which is the product of the theoretically informal, speedy and inexpensive process . . . freely chosen by the parties." (quoting Hooten Const. Co. v. Borseberry Const. Co., 769 P.2d 726, 727 (1989))).

60. 715 A.2d 748, 753 (Conn. 1998); accord Miller v. Miller, 707 N.W.2d 341, 345 (Mich. 2005); Peterson & Simpson v. IHC Health Servs., Inc., 217 P.3d 716, 721 (Utah 2009).

"[a]rbitration agreements illustrate the strong public policy favoring freedom of contract and the efficient resolution of disputes."[61]

It would be a mistake, however, to conclude that TUAA pursues the goal of finality in every aspect. Other objectives besides finality are important. Balanced against the strong finality policy is the need to avoid excessive emphasis on unchangeable outcomes. Some TUAA examples of provisions placing proper emphasis on objectives other than finality are Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-302, which requires written arbitration agreements, and Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-307, which precludes a party from waiving the right to representation by an attorney at an arbitration hearing or other proceeding.[62]

III. TUAA AGREEMENTS, AWARDS, AND RELATED PROCEDURES

A party challenging an arbitration award may seek the relief from a court or the remedy may arise after a court orders a submission to the arbitrators.[63] Upon application of a party, the court under Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-312 shall confirm an award, unless a party, acting within the time limits found in TUAA,[64] urges grounds for vacating, modifying, or correcting the award.[65]

The above statute, in allowing "confirmation," is "primarily a mechanism whereby a court adds its imprimatur to an arbitrator's decision."[66] Put another way, the confirmation of an arbitration award occurs in a summary proceeding where the court converts

---

61. L & R Realty, 715 A.2d at 753; see also THOMAS E. CARBONNEAU, THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF ARBITRATION 36 (4th ed. 2012) ("[C]ontract freedom, [is] a theme that runs through the core of the U.S. law of arbitration.").

62. T.R. Mills Contractors, Inc. v. WRH Enters., L.L.C., 93 S.W.3d 861, 869 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2002).

63. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-310 (2012).

64. See TENN. CODE ANN. §§ 29-5-313 to -314.

65. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-312.

66. United Steel Workers Local Union 978 v. Packaging Corp., No. 1:09-cv-01055, 2010 WL 396353, at *4 (W.D. Tenn. Jan. 27, 2010) (stating a reviewing court under TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-312 is not free to add its own interpretation of the award).

the final arbitration award into the final judgment of the court.[67] Either party to the arbitration decision may invoke vacatur as a remedy[68] but the alleged excessiveness or inadequacy of the award is generally not grounds for appeal absent one of the statutory grounds for challenge, such as fraud, corruption, or other misconduct.[69]

Where the aggrieved party petitions to vacate the award by authority of Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313[70] (discussed above), the prevailing party has no requirement to file a counter petition to confirm. Instead, the prevailing party, in answering the petition to vacate, may include a request for the court to confirm the award.[71] If neither party appeals the trial court's confirmation or vacatur of the award, then neither party has preserved its right to appellate review of the trial court's judgment.[72]

An arbitration decision carries the "same dignity" as a court of competent jurisdiction in matters of res judicata or collateral estoppel.[73] Because of these issues, a party might contend that a subsequent court cannot give preclusive effect (in the sense of collateral estoppel) to an arbitral award if it lacks detailed findings of fact. Concededly, no requirement exists for an arbitrator's detailed findings of fact and conclusions of law unless the parties agree to this documentation requirement in their submission.[74] Nevertheless, courts have found that the absence of detailed findings of fact

67. D.H. Blair & Co. v. Gottdiener, 462 F.3d 95, 110 (2d Cir. 2006); Farmers Crop Ins. All. v. Latux, 422 F. Supp. 2d 898, 899 (S.D. Ohio 2006); 2 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 40:5 (3d ed. 2013).

68. See TENN. CODE ANN. 29-5-313(a)(1) (providing that a "party" upon application may seek the remedy).

69. Id.; see 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:129 (4th ed. 2001).

70. See supra notes 63–65 and accompanying text.

71. Morgan Keegan & Co. v. Smythe, 401 S.W.3d 595, 608 (Tenn. 2013).

72. Pugh's Lawn Landscape Co. v. Jaycon Dev. Corp., 320 S.W.3d 252, 257 (Tenn. 2010) (stating that it is not enough for an agreement to address an appeal from an arbitrator's award).

73. Turpin v. Love, 1973 WL 16997 (Tenn. Ct. App. Aug. 14, 1973) (deciding case based on pre-TUAA law).

74. See infra notes 456–75 and accompanying text.

is not "necessarily fatal" if preclusion can be "necessarily implied from the nature of the claim and award."[75]

TUAA does not address the subject of remands by the court to the arbitrator. As a suggested strategy for the practitioner, FAA case law can provide a helpful analogy. Although the cases are not unanimous, the basic rule should be that remand is proper where the arbitrator is the only ruling body sufficiently close to the facts of the case to resolve award uncertainties, but where the resolution is clear and beyond significant doubt, no remand should be needed.[76]

IV. VACATUR AND MODIFICATION OF AWARDS—OVERVIEW

A. Substantive Requirements

A court's mere disagreement with the arbitrator's decision is not a basis for vacatur.[77] TUAA governs the scope of judicial review of arbitration awards; therefore, a number of decisions pro-

75. In re Beckemeyer, 222 B.R. 318, 321 (Bankr. W.D. Tenn. 1998) (quoting Universal Barge Corp. v. J-Chem, Inc., 946 F.2d 1131, 1137 (5th Cir. 1991)).

76. United Steel Workers Local Union 978 v. Packaging Corp., No. 1:09-cv-01055, 2010 WL 396353 (W.D. Tenn. Jan. 27, 2010) (construing statute); see id. at *7 ("The Sixth Circuit 'has recognized the need for an arbitrator's "clarification of an ambiguous award when the award fails to address a contingency that later arises or when the award is susceptible to more than one interpretation."'"); see also TENN. CODE ANN. § 27-3-128 (2012) (basing remand on statutory grounds); Mut. Fire, Marine & Inland Ins. v. Norad Reinsurance, 868 F.2d 52, 58 (3d Cir. 1989) ("A district court itself should not clarify an ambiguous arbitration award but should remand it to the arbitration panel for clarification. . . . '[R]emand to the arbitrator is the appropriate disposition . . . when an award is patently ambiguous.'" (quoting Oil, Chem. & Atomic Workers It'l Union Locl 4-367 v. Rohm & Hass, 677 F.2d 492, 495 (5th Cir. 1982))). But see id. at 58 ("A remand is inappropriate, however, where it would force a decision of an issue not previously submitted to the arbitrators." (quoting Oil, Chem. & Atomic Workers, 677 F.2d at 495)); Fischer v. CGA Comput. Assocs., 612 F. Supp. 1038, 1041 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (stating that the court should not order a remand where the court can resolve any ambiguities in the award by modification by way of 9 U.S.C. § 11 (2012)).

77. Bangor Gas Co. v. H.Q. Energy Servs. Inc., 695 F.3d 181, 187 (1st Cir. 2012); see also United Steelworkers v. Enter. Wheel & Car Corp., 363 U.S. 593, 599 (1960) ("[C]ourts have no business overruling [the arbitrator] because their interpretation of the contract is different from his.").

vide that TUAA restricts a trial court's review to the statutory circumstances that create grounds for modification or vacation of an arbitration award.[78] Stated more elaborately, the Tennessee Supreme Court has held that (1) an arbitration agreement may not provide for a judicial review of an arbitration award outside TUAA boundaries and (2) TUAA limits the process by which a court may review the arbitrator's award. The upshot is that parties may not make the arbitral decision the judgment or ruling of the trial court and permit an appeal therefrom.[79]

When the case does come up for review, courts presume that an arbitrator has properly performed his duties and "all presumptions and intendments are in favor of an award."[80] Therefore, in an essential strategy, the moving party must allege sufficient facts showing that grounds exist for overturning the arbitrator's award decision.[81]

Where a party files an objection to the award, the court, under Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a), "shall vacate an award" where:

> (A) The award was procured by corruption, fraud or other undue means;
>
> (B) There was evident partiality by an arbitrator appointed as a neutral or corruption in any of the arbi-

---

78. D & E Const. Co. v. Robert J. Denley Co., 38 S.W.3d 513, 518 (Tenn. 2001) (quoting Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 447–48 (Tenn. 1996)). For a possible exception to this doctrine regarding common law arbitration, see infra Section V.H.

79. Pugh's Lawn Landscape Co. v. Jaycon Dev. Corp., 320 S.W.3d 252, 257 (Tenn. 2010). See generally Becky L. Jacobs, Case, Pugh's Lawn Landscape Company, Inc. v. Jaycon Development Corporation*: The Tennessee Court of Appeals Limits the Judicial Review of Arbitration Awards*, 11 TRANSACTIONS: TENN. J. BUS. L. 199 (2009); Tom Cullinan, Note, Contracting For An Expanded Scope of Judicial Review in Arbitration Agreements, 51 VAND. L. REV. 395 (1998) (noting contrariety of decisions).

80. Harmon v. Komisar, 15 Tenn. App. 405 (1932); see also Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 448–49 ("[T]he finality that courts should afford the arbitration process weighs heavily in favor of the award.").

81. Smith v. Spears, No. 05-0586, 2005 WL 5467960 (Tenn. Ch. Ct. 2005).

> trators or misconduct prejudicing the rights of any party;
>
> (C) The arbitrators exceeded their powers;
>
> (D) The arbitrators refused to postpone the hearing upon sufficient cause being shown therefor or refused to hear evidence material to the controversy or otherwise so conducted the hearing, contrary to Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-306 [the statute on hearings], as to prejudice substantially the rights of a party; or
>
> (E) There was no arbitration agreement and the issue was not adversely determined in proceedings under Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-303 [the statute on orders and proceedings] and the party did not participate in the arbitration hearing without raising the objection.[82]

A few of these grounds have extensive case law interpretation while others have minimal explanation. For the lesser-interpreted grounds, it is necessary and proper to refer to case law from other jurisdictions construing their analogous version of the Uniform Arbitration Act.[83] Practitioners deciding on strategy should also know that the Tennessee Court of Appeals has observed that FAA and TUAA contain "virtually identical language establishing the relevant grounds for vacating an arbitrator's decision."[84]

The grounds for vacatur are restricted to "exceptional circumstances" reflecting distinctly unacceptable business conduct.[85] These statutory grounds represent "egregious departures" from the 82. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-313(a) (2012).

83. See TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-320 (stating that Tennessee courts should construe TUAA in light of other jurisdictions considering their version of the Uniform Arbitration Act).

84. Bailey v. Am. Gen. Life & Accident Ins., No. M2003-01666-COA-R3-CV, 2005 WL 3557840, at *8 n.7 (Tenn. Ct. App. Dec. 29, 2005).

85. THOMAS E. CARBONNEAU, THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF ARBITRATION 313 (4th ed. 2012).

parties' arbitration agreement.[86] The United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit in Remmey v. PaineWebber, Inc.,[87] explained at length the policy for limited judicial review in vacatur cases:

> A policy favoring arbitration would mean little, of course, if arbitration were merely the prologue to prolonged litigation. If such were the case, one would hardly achieve the "twin goals of arbitration, namely, settling disputes efficiently and avoiding long and expensive litigation." Opening up arbitral awards to myriad legal challenges would eventually reduce arbitral proceedings to the status of preliminary hearings. Parties would cease to utilize a process that no longer had finality. To avoid this result, courts have resisted temptations to redo arbitral decisions. As the Seventh Circuit put it, "[a]rbitrators do not act as junior varsity trial courts where subsequent appellate review is readily available to the losing party."
>
> Thus, in reviewing arbitral awards, a district or appellate court is limited to determining "whether the arbitrators did the job they were told to do—not whether they did it well, or correctly, or reasonably, but simply whether they did it."

A party will not allege valid grounds for vacating or objecting to the award merely because a court of law or equity could not or would not grant the requested relief.[88] In fact, while arbitrators

---

86. See AmeriCredit Fin. Servs., Inc. v. Oxford Mgmt. Servs., 627 F. Supp. 2d 85, 92 (E.D.N.Y. 2008).

87. 32 F.3d 143, 146 (4th Cir. 1994) (citations omitted); see also Eljer Mfg., Inc. v. Kowin Dev. Corp., 14 F.3d 1250, 1254 (7th Cir. 1994) ("[Arbitration] is a private system of justice offering benefits of reduced delay and expense. A restrictive standard of review is necessary to preserve these benefits and to prevent arbitration from becoming a 'preliminary step to judicial resolution.'").

88. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-313(a)(2), construed in Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 451 (Tenn. 1996).

often have strict limits based on the parties' agreement on what issues they may decide, they can also have a "broad grant of authority to fashion remedies."[89] Where grounds do exist for vacatur, assuming no conflict with the parties' submission, an arbitrator with equitable powers may award declaratory and injunctive relief.[90] Practitioners for prevailing parties are strongly advised to be proactive in their strategy for suggesting creative remedies for capitalizing on a favorable decision.

B. Procedural Requirements

When seeking to vacate an award, a party under TUAA ordinarily must file the application within ninety days after receipt of the award decision.[91] In accordance with Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a), where the objection is based upon corruption, fraud, or other undue means, the party must seek redress within ninety days after the party knows, or should have known, such grounds.[92] If the court denies the application to vacate and no motion to modify or correct the award is pending, the court must confirm the award.[93]

Where the court determines to vacate the award, the court may order an arbitral rehearing under the following criteria.[94]

---

89. Cal-Circuit ABCO, Inc. v. Solbourne Comput., Inc., 848 F. Supp. 1506, 1509 (D. Colo. 1994) (citing decisions).

90. Pyburn v. Bill Heard Chevrolet, 63 S.W.3d 351, 365–66 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2001) (citing Gilmer v. Interstate/Johnson Lane Corp., 500 U.S. 20 (1991)); see also E.R. Tan, Annotation, Availability & Scope of Declaratory Judgment Actions in Determining Rights of Parties, or Powers and Exercise Thereof by Arbitrators, Under Arbitration Agreements, 12 A.L.R. Fed. 3d 854 (1967); M.L. Cross, Annotation, Power of Arbitrators to Award Injunction or Specific Performance, 70 A.L.R. Fed. 2d 1055 (1960).

91. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-313(b).

92. Id. But see Blount Excavating, Inc. v. Denso Mfg. Tenn., Inc., No. 03A01-9903-CV-00112, 1999 WL 1068678, at *5 (Tenn. Ct. App. Nov. 29, 1999) (stating that time limits not controlling where the proceeding lacked the essential characteristic of being an arbitration proceeding under TUAA); Funk v. Target Nat'l Bank/Target Visa, No. E2006-02010-COA-R3-CV, 2007 WL 1555843 (Tenn. Ct. App. May 30, 2007) (noting ninety day required timeframe to apply for application to vacate an arbitration under TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-313(b) (1983), and finding arbitration award void for lack of signature by an arbitrator).

93. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-313(d).

94. Id. § 29-5-313(c).

First, except where the court vacates the award where there was no arbitration agreement and the party did not participate in the hearing without raising an objection, the court may order a rehearing before new arbitrators.[95] If the agreement designates the process for selecting any new arbitrators, the agreement will control on identifying the new arbitrators.[96] If the agreement fails to provide such a provision, the court will select the arbitrators.[97] Second, if the court vacates the award because the arbitrators exceeded their powers, unjustifiably refused to postpone the hearing, or prejudicially refused to hear a party's material evidence, the court may order a rehearing before either the same arbitrators who made the award or their duly appointed successors.[98] The rehearing process must again produce a timely award based on the arbitration agreement and requires a time frame that commences from the date of the order.[99]

Courts should be wary of ordering a rehearing if it would be contrary to the judicial policy of promoting efficiency. Thus, where the rehearing would impose needless delay and cost and would create another round of proceedings where the court must again decide whether to confirm the award decision, such a process "would merely serve to exalt form over substance."[100]

Two concepts, vacatur and correction/modification of awards—are theoretically distinct but often closely related in practice. In addition to, or along with, requesting vacatur, a party may seek correction or modification of an award.[101] Where the movant submits an application for modification or correction within ninety

---

95. Id.

96. Id.; see also id. § 29-5-304 (describing judicial selection of arbitrators).

97. Id. § 29-5-304 (2012) (describing process).

98. Id. § 29-5-313(c).

99. Id.

100. Spector v. Torenberg, 852 F. Supp. 201, 207 (S.D.N.Y. 1994).

101. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-314(c). This statute applies only to the enumerated events. United Steel Workers Local Union 978 v. Packaging Corp. of Am., No. 1:09-cv-01055, 2010 WL 396353, at *4 (W.D. Tenn. Jan. 27, 2010) (distinguishing use of TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-312 on confirmation of awards). See generally 2 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 40:4 (3d ed. 2013) (addressing modification of awards).

days after receipt of the award decision, the court shall modify or correct the award in the following circumstances:

> (1) There was an evident miscalculation of figures or an evident mistake in the description of any person, thing or property referred to in the award;[102]
>
> (2) The arbitrators have awarded upon a matter not submitted to them and the award may be corrected without affecting the merits of the decision upon the issues submitted; or
>
> (3) The award is imperfect in a matter of form, not affecting the merits of the controversy.[103]

In granting the application, the court shall duly modify and confirm the award as corrected. Otherwise, the court must confirm the original award,[104] which in either instance shall be enforceable as any other court judgment or decree.[105] Practitioners should carefully observe the distinctions between "correction/modification" and "vacatur" of the award and make the strategic choice in seeking one or both remedies as necessary.

Practitioners must also be acutely aware of how the appellate courts review other closely related questions about whether these issues pertain to questions of fact or questions of law. The identification of the ruling legal standards is a question of law that Tennessee appellate courts review de novo. Similarly, the application of the law to facts and to mixed questions of law and fact is reviewed de novo.[106] "When the review of an arbitration decision raises a question of law, the [trial] court reviews the question de

---

102. Compare TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-314(a), with 4 AM. JUR. 2D Alternative Dispute Resolution § 224 (2014) (noting the mistake must be apparent on the face of the record and the arbitrator could have corrected the error had it been brought to his attention).

103. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-314(a), (c).

104. Id. § 29-5-314(b).

105. Id. § 29-5-315; see also id. § 29-5-316 (stating rules on judgment roles and docketing); id. § 29-5-319 (rules on making of appeals).

106. Franklin City Bd. of Educ. v. Crabtree, 337 S.W.3d 808, 811 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2010).

novo, as does the court of appeals."[107] A prominent treatise explains the parameters of this question for review:

> Under the de novo standard of review, questions regarding the arbitrability of an issue, the validity and scope of an arbitration agreement, the waiver of arbitration, the [trial] court's grant or denial of a motion to compel arbitration, the [trial] court's grant of summary judgment in a suit to vacate the arbitration award, the district court's confirmation of an award, and the [trial] court's analysis of compliance with statutory requirements are reviewed de novo by the court of appeals.[108]

Under TUAA, appeals as a matter of right to the Tennessee Court of Appeals are taken in the "same manner and to the same extent" as occur with appeals from orders or judgments in the typical civil action.[109] Thus, under Tenn. R. App. Rule 4(a), a party making an appeal as of right must file the action within thirty days after the date of entry of the judgment in question. If the trial court dismissed the action, then Tenn. R. App. Rule 3 comes into play.[110] In a Rule 3 appeal, the parties have "broad latitude" to raise issues, consistent with the other rules of appellate procedure.[111] When the party takes an interlocutory appeal under Tenn. R. App. 9, such as an interlocutory appeal from the trial court's order to partially vacate an arbitration award, the only valid issue is the one(s) the trial court granted a party permission to address in such an interlocutory appeal.[112] Where the trial court has granted a motion to compel arbitration of an issue, the trial court should stay the matter and not

107. 2 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 39:13 (3d ed. 2013).

108. Id. § 39:14.

109. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-319(b).

110. Thompson v. Terminix Int'l Co., No. M2005-02708-COA-R3-CV, 2006 WL 2380598 (Tenn. Ct. App. Aug. 16, 2006).

111. Smith v. Hukowicz, No. M2001-01320-COA-R9-CV, 2003 WL 132483, at *6 (Tenn. Ct. App. Jan. 16, 2003) (quoting Heatherly v. Merrimack Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 43 S.W.3d 911, 914 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2000)).

112. Id.

dismiss it.[113] If the issue regarding arbitration is separable from the rest of the case, the trial court may order a stay for only that issue.[114]

Because a trial court reviewing an arbitration award functions more like an appellate body subject to an extremely narrow standard of review, Tennessee appellate courts do not equate an order vacating an arbitration award and ordering a new arbitration with an order granting a new trial.[115] The Tennessee Supreme Court has succinctly explained the posture of a case where the trial court issues an order vacating an arbitral award:

> An order that vacates an arbitration award and orders a second arbitration is an order "denying confirmation of an award" for the purposes of Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-319(a)(3), regardless of whether the party opposing the petition to vacate the award filed a separate cross-petition for confirmation under Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-312 or whether the trial court has expressly denied confirmation in its written order.[116]

Most courts hold that, where a party does not invoke the right of appeal under the appropriate procedural vehicle, this omission generally will be a waiver of the moving party's rights regarding enforcement of arbitration provided the opposing party was prejudiced thereby.[117]

---

113. Terminix Int'l Co., 2006 WL 2380598, at *3 (stating that an order granting a motion to compel arbitration and to stay the action is not directly appealable under TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-319 (2012)).

114. Id. at *18. While very few cases address this point in Tennessee, a number of other jurisdictions do so more extensively. See 1 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 11:1 (3d ed. 2013).

115. Morgan Keegan & Co. v. Smythe, 401 S.W.3d 595, 611 (Tenn. 2013).

116. Id. at 612; Morgan Keegan & Co. v. Starnes, No. W2012-00687-COA-R3-CV, 2014 WL 2810209, at *4 (Tenn. Ct. App. June 20, 2014). See generally R. A. Vinluan, Annotation, Appealability of Judgment Confirming or Setting Aside Arbitration Award, 7 A.L.R. Fed. 3d 608 (1966) (providing an annotation of federal and state arbitration decisions).

117. Long v. Miller, No. E2006-02237-COA-R3-CV, 2007 WL 2751663, at *7 (Tenn. Ct. App. Sept. 21, 2007) (untimely appeal deemed a waiver).

V. TUAA GROUNDS FOR VACATUR

A. "Vacatur" as a Judicial Control Mechanism

In legal parlance, "vacatur" is the act of annulling or setting aside an entry of record or a judgment.[118] Tennessee appellate decisions have stated that TUAA in Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313, discussed below, contains the exclusive grounds for annulling an award,[119] which means that the parties and courts may not expand (or inferentially restrict) the statutory grounds for review.[120]

A court may not vacate an award merely because it disagrees with the arbitrator[121] or concludes that the dollar value of the award was incorrect.[122] Thus, vacatur is not a vehicle for a court to render a decision based on the judge's view of the equities or of an ideal state of the law.[123] A "real party in interest" type analysis

118. Walter v. Gunter, 788 A.2d 609, 614 n.8 (Md. 2002) (citing BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (5th ed. 1979)). For additional commentary on vacatur, see Thomas H. Oehmke, Appealing Adverse Arbitration Awards, 94 AM. JUR. Trials § 211 (2004); Stephen K. Huber, State Regulation of Arbitration Proceedings: Judicial Review of Arbitration Awards by State Courts, 10 CARDOZO J. CONFLICT RESOL. 509 (2009); Stephen L. Hayford, A New Paradigm for Commercial Arbitration: Rethinking the Relationship Between Reasoned Awards and the Judicial Standards for Vacatur, 66 GEO. WASH. L. REV. 443 (1998); Eric Lucentini, Note, Taking A Fresh Look at Vacatur of Awards Under the Federal Arbitration Act, 7 AM. REV. OF INT'L ARB. 359 (1996); Laird E. Lawrence & Christopher R. Ward, The Availability and Scope of Appeal of Arbitration Awards Under the Federal, Uniform and State Acts, AM. BAR ASS'N BRIEF, Spring 2000, at 32; Marc S. Dobin, Appealing the Unappealable: Vacating Arbitration Awards, AM. BAR ASS'N BRIEF, Fall 1996, at 69.

119. Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 448–49 (Tenn. 1996); Davis v. Reliance Elec. Indus., 104 S.W.3d 57, 61 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2002) (stating that courts are "limited to the statutory grounds").

120. Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 448–49.

121. Id.; Adams TV of Memphis, Inc. v. Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers, Local 474, No. 48639 T.D, 1996 WL 590434, at *2 (Tenn. Ct. App. Oct. 15, 1996); see also Lagstein v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's, London, 607 F.3d 634, 642 (9th Cir. 2010) (stating that courts will not vacate an award just because the court might have interpreted the contract differently); Emp'rs Ins. of Wausau v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. of Pittsburgh, 933 F.2d 1481, 1486 (9th Cir. 1991) (noting that no authority exists to vacate an award because of an arbitrator's alleged error in contract interpretation).

122. Lagstein, 607 F.3d at 641.

123. Stead Motors of Walnut Creek v. Auto. Machinists Lodge No. 1173, 886 F.2d 1200, 1204 (9th Cir. 1989) (en banc).

governs which claimant can bring a vacatur case; thus, a corporate relationship can be sufficient depending on the facts to permit a corporation that is not a party to the arbitration agreement to bring a claim that belongs to an affiliated entity.[124]

The theme of vacatur is that parties are entitled to a fair hearing, but not a perfect one.[125] Vacatur of an award is designed to occur in "rare instances;"[126] one case even mentions the "severe remedy of vacatur."[127] Where the record reveals as little as a "barely colorable" justification for the arbitration decision, courts typically will sustain the outcome,[128] even if the court is convinced that the arbitrator made the "wrong call" on the law.[129]

Courts view vacatur through the lens of deciding arbitration cases expeditiously and at lower cost than ordinary litigation.[130] Therefore, as one commentator observes, "Anyone attempting to vacate an arbitrator's decision has an uphill battle inasmuch as it is the stated policy of the courts to give every intendment of validity to an award."[131] No statistics were found regarding the relative merits in Tennessee of arbitration versus litigation in terms of outcomes and lower cost.

In deciding vacatur, the trial court should make findings of fact and conclusions of law. The trial court must "accord defer-

---

124. In re Fried, Krupp, GmbH, Krupp Reederei Und Brennstoff-Handel-Seeschiffarht, 674 F. Supp. 1022, 1026 n.1 (S.D.N.Y. 1987).

125. Emp'rs Ins. Of Wasau, 933 F.2d at 1491.

126. See Wachtel v. Shoney's, Inc., 830 S.W.2d 905, 909 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1991) (citing Ierna v. Arthur Murray Int'l, Inc., 833 F.2d 1472, 1476–77 (11th Cir. 1987)).

127. Lagstein, 607 F.3d at 647; see also THOMAS E. CARBONNEAU, THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF ARBITRATION 58 (4th ed. 2012) ("Vacatur . . . is exceedingly unlikely to occur.").

128. In re Andros Compania Maritima, 579 F.2d 691, 704 (2d Cir. 1978); F. Hoffman-La Roche Ltd. v. Qiagen Gaithersburg, Inc., 730 F. Supp. 2d 318, 326 (S.D.N.Y. 2010).

129. F. Hoffman-La Roche Ltd., 730 F. Supp. 2d at 326.

130. Cat Charter, L.L.C. v. Schurtenberger, 646 F.3d 836, 846 (11th Cir. 2011).

131. Neil A. Helfman, Establishing Statutory Grounds to Vacate an Arbitration Award in Nonjudicial Arbitration, 27 AM. JUR. 3D Proof of Facts § 103 (1994).

ence" to the arbitrator's award,[132] which means that the scope of review is "narrow" and "limited."[133] One reason for this judicial deference is that the parties have contracted to have the dispute settled by the arbitrator, and therefore, they have agreed to accept his view of the facts and the meaning of the contract.[134] Where a trial court considers the award in light of a motion to vacate, it will consider "evidence of fairness incident to the arbitration."[135] Furthermore, in conformance with general principles of appellate review, a party may not acquiesce in the arbitration proceeding without objection and then, disappointed by the result, raise a complaint before the court that the party could earlier have presented to the arbitrator.[136]

Another strong reason counsels against liberal grounds for overturning an arbitral decision: the reviewing court is not considering a decision of another person or board that is part of the state's governmental apparatus. The United States Supreme Court observed in Alexander v. Gardner-Denver Co.,

> A proper conception of the arbitrator's function is basic. He is not a public tribunal imposed upon the parties by superior authority which the parties are obliged to accept. He has no general charter to administer justice for a community which transcends

---

132. Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 448 (Tenn. 1996); La. Safety Sys., Inc. v. Tengasco, Inc., No. E2000-03021-COA-R3-CV, 2001 WL 1105395, at *4–5 (Tenn. Ct. App. Sept. 21, 2001).

133. Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 448; see also Anderman/Smith Operating Co. v. Tenn. Gas Pipeline Co., 918 F.2d 1215, 1218 (5th Cir. 1990) ("[J]udicial review of an arbitration award is extraordinarily narrow and this Court should defer to the arbitrator's decision when possible." (quoting Antwine v. Prudential Bache Sec. Inc., 899 F.2d 410, 413 (5th Cir. 1990))).

134. Bull HN Info. Sys., Inc. v. Hutson, 229 F.3d 321, 330 (1st Cir. 2000) (citing United Paperworkers Int'l Union v. Misco, Inc., 484 U.S. 29, 37–38 (1987)). For an extensive discussion of this issue in Tennessee, see Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 452.

135. Jones v. Cubberley, No. 03A01-9210-CH-00370, 1993 WL 17721, at *1 (Tenn. Ct. App. Jan 29, 1993) (stating that an evidentiary hearing is not required when the movant is merely attempting to retry the merits of the arbitration).

136. Parr v. Tower Mgmt. Co., No. 01A01-9811-CV-00573, 1999 WL 415169, at *4 (Tenn. Ct. App. June 23, 1999).

> the parties. He is rather part of a system of self-government created by and confined to the parties. He serves their pleasure only, to administer the rule of law established by their collective agreement.[137]

Because it is "axiomatic" that no state action occurs with the conduct and rulings of a private arbitrator, arbitration procedures are not susceptible to a constitutional due process challenge.[138]

While the courts routinely emphasize the need for speed and cost savings as the driving policy for limited vacatur review,[139] Tennessee courts infrequently mention (if at all) an important countervailing policy. Even conceding that the arbitrator is not a public officer, the party prevailing in the arbitration can invoke the coercive power of the state to enforce the judgment. To this extent, the arbitrator is an adjunct of the state and the law must account for this involvement.

Several sister jurisdictions give more weight to the public policies that flow from the arbitrator's de facto status as part of the governmental apparatus. As the District of Columbia Court of Appeals observed in Wolf v. Sprenger & Lang, PLLC, a necessary counterweight to arbitral speed and efficiency is "the need to establish justified confidence in arbitration among the public."[140] A New Jersey case also emphasizes that "it is our strongly held view that honest, fair and impartial arbitration is as important as the fi-

---

137. 415 U.S. 36, 52 n.16 (1974) (quoting Harry Shulman, Reason, Contract, and Law in Labor Relations, 68 HARV. L. REV. 999, 1016 (1955)).

138. See Davis, 59 F.3d at 1190. ("[T]he state action element of a due process claim is absent in private arbitration cases.") (citing Fed. Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Air Fla. Sys., Inc., 822 F.2d 833, 842 n.9 (9th Cir. 1987)). The Uniform Arbitration Act procedures are constitutional. See 1 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 7:3 (3d ed. 2013); Jean R. Sternlight, Creeping Mandatory Arbitration: Is It Just?, 57 STAN. L. REV. 1631 1642–43 (2005) (stating that there is no violation of Fourteenth Amendment due process or Seventh Amendment jury trial guaranty).

139. E.g., Cat Charter, L.L.C. v. Schurtenberger, 646 F.3d 836, 846 n.17 (11th Cir. 2011); Schmidt v. Finberg, 942 F.2d 1571, 1573 (11th Cir. 1991).

140. 86 A.3d 1121, 1133 (D.C. 2013) (quoting Bolton v. Bernabei & Katz, P.L.L.C., 954 A.2d 953, 959 (D.C. 2008).

nality of arbitration."[141] As the Vermont Supreme Court has stated,

> To the extent that justified confidence in arbitration is established, it can only aid the courts in meeting the public's need for speedy, inexpensive and fair dispute resolution. The courts must respect an arbitrator's determinations; otherwise, those determinations will merely add another expensive and time consuming layer to the already complex litigation process. If the courts merely rubber-stamp arbitrators' decisions, however, litigants will hesitate to entrust their affairs to arbitration. It is this delicate balance which courts reviewing arbitration decisions must strive to attain.[142]

Because the run of Tennessee cases omit this co-equal policy governing vacatur, a strong argument exists that such decisions fail to capture the full function of vacatur in arbitration matters.

B. Record Review in Vacatur Cases

Parties may arrange for a verbatim transcript of the arbitration hearing.[143] Because TUAA does not require a transcript, parties might bypass the opportunity, creating a situation where an appellate court must review cases without this information.[144] Consistent with TUAA's narrow standard of review, a 1999 Tennessee Court of Appeals opinion said that the likely outcome with a trial record that lacks a transcript of the proceedings is that the appellate court will have "no basis" to find that the decision below was "clearly erroneous" as to warrant reversal.[145] Along the same

---

141. Barcon Assocs. v. Tri-Cnty. Asphalt Corp., 430 A.2d 214, 219 (N.J. 1981).

142. R. E. Bean Constr. Co. v. Middlebury Assocs., 428 A.2d 306, 309 (Vt. 1980) (emphasis added).

143. Parr v. Tower Mgmt. Co., No. 01A01-9811-CV-00573, 1999 WL 415169, at *6–7 (Tenn. Ct. App. June 23, 1999).

144. See id.

145. Id. at *7 (quoting Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 449 (Tenn. 1996)); s*ee also* Kline v. O'Quinn, 874 S.W.2d 776, 783 (Tex. App. 1994) (noting that without a transcript of the arbitration proceedings, a court must presume that "adequate evidence" supports the award).

lines, a Wyoming arbitration decision states that absent a record, the court must presume that the evidence was sufficient and that the arbitrator was fair and impartial and acted within his legal authority.[146]

A related issue is that TUAA has no requirement for arbitrator findings of fact and rulings of law. The arbitral decision could be as minimal as a lump sum award with no accompanying rationale.[147] A leading 1996 Tennessee Supreme Court decision, Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., expresses concerns that a different and overly-burdensome standard to make more elaborate findings and conclusions would encourage appellate courts to review de novo the trial court's rulings on vacatur and undercut the goal of speedy and efficient resolution of controversies:

> The agreement in this case provided that the arbitrators were not required to make written findings of fact and law. Such is normally the case. Thus, under usual circumstances, any ground for vacating or modifying the arbitration award will usually appear on the face of the award, not within the transcript. It would be unfair and incongruous to hold that an arbitration award in hearings in which a transcript was made is more open to attack than in a case in which no transcript was made. Thus, the case under submission was no more open to review by the trial court than was any other arbitration case.
>
> . . . .

---

146. In re Wyo. Game & Fish Comm'n, 773 P.2d 941, 994–95 (Wyo. 1989); see also Anzilotti v. Gene D. Liggin, Inc., 899 S.W.2d 264, 267 (Tex. App. 1995) ("Without a record, we are to presume that adequate evidence was presented to support the arbitrator's award."); Rutter v. McLaughlin, 612 P.2d 135, 136 (Idaho 1980) (missing portions of a record are presumed to support the arbitrator's decision).

147. See in re Koch Oil, S.A. & Transocean Gulf Oil Co., 751 F.2d 551, 554 (2d Cir. 1985); Kurt Orban Co. v. Angeles Metal Sys., 573 F.2d 739, 740 (2d Cir. 1978) ("Arbitrators are not required to disclose the basis upon which their awards are made . . . . [C]ourts will not look beyond the lump sum award in an attempt to analyze the reasoning processes of the arbitrators." (citation omitted)).

> "The very purpose of arbitration is to avoid the courts insofar as the resolution of the dispute is concerned. The object is to avoid what some feel to be the formalities, the delay, the expense and vexation of ordinary litigation. Immediate settlement of controversies by arbitration removes the necessity of waiting out a crowded court docket . . . .
>
> Arbitration's desirable qualities would be heavily diluted, if not expunged, if a trial court reviewing an arbitration award were permitted to conduct a trial de novo."[148]

Put another way, courts disdain "[t]hinly veiled attempts to obtain appellate review of an arbitrator's decision" on the merits in the guise of a vacatur inquiry.[149]

The Arnold decision is in line with the common statement that, "[g]enerally, arbitrators are no more obligated to give reasons for an award than is a jury required to explain a verdict."[150] The law also provides that "it is not the function of courts to agree or disagree with the reasoning of the arbitrator[]," but only to assess the decision, and therefore, it becomes much less important for the reviewing court to analyze the arbitrator's rationale.[151] Because an arbitrator can make an award based on broad principles of fairness and equity, courts have concluded that to require detailed factual and legal conclusions would deprive the arbitrator of this discre-

148. Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 449 (quoting Boyd v. Davis, 897 P.2d 1239, 1242 (Wash. 1995)); see also Stephen L. Hayford, Law in Disarray: Judicial Standards for Vacatur of Commercial Arbitration Awards, 30 GA. L. REV. 731, 735 (1996) (noting same approach nation-wide).

149. Flexible Mfg. Sys. Pty. Ltd. v. Super Prods. Corp., 86 F.3d 96, 100 (7th Cir. 1996) (quoting Gingiss Int'l, Inc. v. Bormet, 58 F.3d 328, 333 (7th Cir. 1995)).

150. Nat'l Ave. Bldg. Co. v. Stewart, 910 S.W.2d 334, 349 (Mo. Ct. App. 1995); see also Atkinson v. Sinclair Ref. Co., 370 U.S. 238, 245 n.4 (1962) (making a similar statement).

151. Guardian Builders, LLC v. Uselton, 154 So. 3d 964, 968 (Ala. 2014); see also 2 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 30:6 (3d ed. 2013) ("The general rule is that arbitrators need not provide any reasons for their award, and if the the [sic] award is rationally inferable from the facts it must be confirmed.").

tion and would convert the vacatur process into a misguided search for mistake of law or fact in the decision.[152] The Tennessee Supreme Court in the Arnold case emphatically stated this approach is not permissible:

> Courts, thus, do not sit to hear claims of factual or legal error by an arbitrator as an appellate court does in reviewing decisions of lower courts. If the courts were free to intervene on these grounds, the speedy resolution of grievances by private mechanisms would be greatly undermined. As long as the arbitrator is, arguably, construing or applying the contract and acting within the scope of his authority, the fact that a court is convinced he committed serious error does not suffice to overturn his decision.[153]

The standard is so liberal that no requirement exists for the arbitrator to provide precise mathematical calculations of the damages.[154]

Is there an out for the parties to modify the rules on arbitrator explanations for the decision? It will aid the analysis on this point by looking to similar arbitration statutes in other jurisdictions. As indicated above, while an arbitrator does not necessarily exceed his authority under the FAA, 9 U.S.C. § 10(a)(4), when he fails to provide reasons for the award, he can still exceed his authority by failing to render an award in the form required by the arbitration agreement.[155] Thus, for example, the arbitrator can exceed his authority by disregarding a requirement in the parties' submission to make findings of fact and conclusions of law.[156] If

152. See Payton v. Jackson, 756 S.E.2d 555, 557–58 (Ga. Ct. App. 2014).

153. Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 449.

154. Dominion Video Satellite, Inc. v. Echostar Satellite L.L.C., 430 F.3d 1269, 1278 (10th Cir. 2005). Expert witnesses might be needed on damages and a pre-hearing brief could also be advisable. See Meyers Assocs., LP v. Goodman, No. 3:14-cv-1174, 2014 WL 5488761, at *13–14 (M.D. Tenn. Oct. 29, 2014) (praising this practice).

155. See A.G. Edwards & Sons, Inc. v. McCollough, 967 F.2d 1401, 1403 (9th Cir. 1992).

156. See Cat Charter, L.L.C. v. Schurtenberger, 646 F.3d 836, 843 n.14 (11th Cir. 2011) (rejecting criticism of a federal district court in a different circuit that it would not be possible for an arbitrator to exceed his powers by not the agreement requires a "reasoned award," such an award can express varying levels of detail that constitutes more than a simple result but less than full-fledged findings of fact and conclusions of law.[157] A fair reading of the above quoted term, nothing else appearing, is that the arbitrator must document an award listing or mentioning expressions or statements that justify his decision.[158] These FAA decisions are good analogous authority in TUAA matters.

The absence of a transcript could create another adverse consequence for claimants. Assume that a transcript exists in fact, but is not part of the record on appeal; accordingly, when a moving party fails to file an available transcript of the proceedings, the appeal can be frivolous under Tenn. Code Ann. section 27-1-122. The result could be that a court may award an appropriate level of damages against the appellant, which can include interest on the judgment and the appellee's expenses.[159]

C. Award Procured by Corruption, Fraud or Other Undue Means (TENN. CODE ANN. Section 29-5-313(a)(1)(A))

No Tennessee cases were found interpreting Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(A), where an award was procured by corruption, fraud, or other undue means. The most that can be said is that several pre-TUAA decisions from nineteenth century Tennessee courts disapprove of fraudulent arbitral awards.[160] While Tennessee cases largely fail to consider modern-day vacatur based doing enough (quoting ARCH Dev. Corp. v. Biomet, Inc., No. 02-C-9013, 2013 WL 21697742, at *4 n.4 (N.D. Ill. July 30, 2003))); see also 2 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 34:7 (3d ed. 2013) ("Of course, the parties may, by agreement, require that arbitrators include findings of fact and conclusions of law, and the failure to provide them may subject the award to attack because the arbitrators had exceeded their powers.").

---

157. Cat Charter, 646 F.3d at 844; s*ee also* House v. Vance Ford-Lincoln-Mercury, Inc., 328 P.3d 1239, 1246 (Okla. Civ. App. 2014) (noting standards for detail when the parties' submission required a "reasoned award").

158. Cat Charter, 646 F.3d at 845 n.16 (citing the "sparse precedent" addressing the nature of a "reasoned award").

159. Long v. Miller, No. E2006-02237-COA-R3-CV, 2007 WL 2751663, at *10 (Tenn. Ct. App. Sept. 21, 2007).

160. See, e.g., Mathews v. Mathews, 48 Tenn. (1 Heisk.) 669, 674–75 (1870) (stating one party's threat to prosecute the other party for perjury qualified as fraudulent conduct justifying the set aside of the arbitration award).

on corruption, fraud, or other undue means, other jurisdictions construing similar arbitration statutes have set down some well-settled principles.

1. Corruption

Corruption is "the state of being corrupt; a perversion of integrity; bribery," and "corrupt" means "guilty of dishonest practices, as bribery; lacking integrity; crooked: a corrupt judge."[161] The referenced language apparently means the corruption of a party, witness, arbitrator, or other person involved in the proceedings.[162] No Tennessee decisions were found on this theory, and the case law from other jurisdictions is scant as well. The most likely reason is that courts apparently treat "corruption" as a synonym for "fraud."[163]

The above referenced duplication of terminology appears in other grounds under Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1). Thus, both Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(A) ("award procured by corruption") and Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(B) ("evident partiality . . . corruption") mention "corruption" by the arbitrator. This repeat of like terminology causes confusion. The law and practice of arbitration in Tennessee would be enhanced if the General Assembly clarified Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313 by making clear, non-overlapping grounds for vacatur.

2. Fraud

To the extent it can be differentiated from "corruption," "fraud" requires proof of "bad faith" during the arbitral proceedings, such as bribery, undisclosed arbitrator bias, or willfully destroying or withholding evidence.[164] The movant must establish the following elements of fraud: (1) proof by clear and convincing evidence, (2) the claimant's exercise of due diligence prior to or during the arbitration would not have revealed the fraud, and (3) a material relation existed with respect to an issue in the arbitration such that the fraud prevented the complaining party from fully and fairly presenting his case (which differs from whether the outcome would have been different had the fraud not occurred).[165] The fraud must be willful and deliberate but this category would exclude constructive fraud, quasi-fraud, or any other merely fraud-like conduct.[166]

161. Las Palmas Med. Ctr. v. Moore, 349 S.W.3d 57, 69 (Tex. App. 2010) (quoting WEBSTER'S NEW UNIVERSAL UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY 454, 455 (2003)).

162. See William H. Hardie, Jr., Judicial Review of Arbitration Awards in the Alabama Courts, 69 ALA. LAW. 435, 436 (2008).

163. See generally Andrew M. Campbell, Annotation, Construction and Application of § 10(a)(1)–(3) of Federal Arbitration Act (9 U.S.C.A. § 10(a)(1)–(3)) Providing for Vacating of Arbitration Awards Where Award Procured by Fraud, Corruption, or Undue Means, Where Arbitrators Evidence Partiality or Corruption and Where Arbitrators Engage in Particular Acts of Misbehavior, 141 A.L.R. Fed. 1 (1997).

Fraud is difficult to prove in vacatur cases because the claimant will often experience serious challenges in proving the alleged conduct directly influenced the outcome.[167] Based on the strong policy favoring arbitration, and to preserve finality,[168] there needs to be "an extremely high degree of improper conduct," more so than the common law variety of fraud.[169] The party alleging fraud also must show that the fraud was not discoverable with due diligence before or during the arbitration proceeding.[170] One variety (among numerous possible circumstances) where an award will be procured by fraud would be where the arbitrator engaged in numerous ex parte contacts with one of the parties and this arbitra-

---

164. MPJ v. Aero Sky, L.L.C., 673 F. Supp. 2d 475, 494 (W.D. Tex. 2009) (citations omitted).

165. MidAmerican Energy Co. v. Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers Local 499, 345 F.3d 616, 622 (8th Cir. 2003); see Hardeman v. Burge, 18 Tenn. (1 Yer.) 202, 204–05 (1836) (noting that an allegation of arbitrator corruption and misconduct must be proven by clear and conclusive evidence, especially when there has been a long lapse of time).

166. Barber v. Union Carbide Corp., 304 S.E.2d 353, 357 (W. Va. 1983).

167. See Delta Mine Holding Co. v. AFC Coal Props., Inc., 280 F.3d 815, 822–23 (8th Cir. 2001).

168. Dogherra v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 679 F.2d 1293, 1297 (9th Cir. 1982) (courts "must be slow" to vacate an award based on fraud).

169. Pac. & Arctic Ry. & Navigation Co. v. United Trans. Union, 952 F.2d 1144, 1148 (9th Cir. 1991); see United Trans. Union v. BNSF Ry. Co., 710 F.3d 915, 931 (9th Cir. 2013).

170. MidAmerican Energy Co., 345 F.3d at 622 (citation omitted); Bonar v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 835 F.2d 1378, 1383 (11th Cir. 1988) (citation omitted).

tor showed "complete unwillingness to respond, and indifference, to any evidence or argument" in support of the other party's positions.[171] The word "procured" in Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(A) implements the legislative intent for "a nexus between the alleged fraud and the basis for the [arbitral] decision."[172]

One frequent point of contention in the decisional law is whether the amount of the award alone can evidence arbitrator fraud or corruption. A prominent treatise observes, "To justify setting aside an award based on its inadequacy, the inadequacy must be so strong, gross, and manifest that it would be impossible to state it to a person of common sense without producing an exclamation about its unfairness."[173]

Other issues exist under this type of statute. One common variety of fraud as a basis for vacatur is where a party submits false testimony or other evidence or effects a fraudulent concealment of relevant facts.[174] By contrast, improper non-disclosures of documents during pre-hearing discovery will not suffice for "fraud."[175] It bears noting that as with a number of grounds for vacatur, the same act can qualify under more than one statutory theory. Thus, for example, an ex parte conversation between the arbitrator and 171. See United Trans. Union, 952 F.2d at 1148; see also Remmey v. PaineWebber, Inc., 32 F.3d 143, 149 (4th Cir. 1994) ("[T]he party seeking a vacation of an award on the basis of ex parte conduct must demonstrate that the conduct influenced the outcome of the arbitration." (quoting M & A Elec. Power Co-op v. Local Union No. 702, 977 F.2d 1235, 1237 (8th Cir. 1992))); Emp'rs Ins. of Wausau v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co., 933 F.2d 1481, 1490–91 (9th Cir. 1991) (moving party must prove prejudice resulting from the ex parte conduct). But see Spector v. Torenberg, 852 F. Supp. 201, 210 n.9 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) ("[T]he burden may shift to the party seeking confirmation [of the award] to demonstrate the absence of prejudice if the party seeking vacatur makes a preliminary showing that the ex parte contacts were carried out in [a] secretive or conspiratorial manner.").

---

172. Forsythe Int'l, S.A. v. Gibbs Oil Co. of Tex., 915 F.2d 1017, 1022 (5th Cir. 1990).

173. 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:131 (4th ed. 2001) (citing Second Soc'y of Universalists in Town of Bos. v. Royal Ins., 109 N.E. 384 (Mass. 1915)).

174. George Chamberlin, Cause of Action to Vacate Arbitration Award on Ground of Corruption, Fraud, or Undue Means in Procuring Award, in 2 CAUSES OF ACTION 2D § 5 (2d ed. 1993).

175. See Pontiac Trail Med. Clinic, P.C. v. PaineWebber, Inc., No. 9201972, 1993 WL 288301, at *4 (6th Cir. 1993) (unpublished table opinion).

another person could also qualify as arbitrator misconduct under Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(B).[176] Tennessee law is unclear on whether a court may set aside an arbitration award where a party, and not the arbitrator, commits the fraud procuring the award.[177] The federal cases do not appear to draw this distinction to excuse a party's misconduct.[178]

3. Undue Means

The phrase "undue means" in a statute allowing vacatur of an arbitration award "signifies '[conduct] akin to fraud and corruption.'"[179] The irregularity for "undue means" must have caused "an unjust, inequitable, or unconscionable award."[180] Some authorities require conduct that involves immoral or illegal grounds.[181] An example could be where the party has obtained an award by improper intimidation or threats against the arbitrator.[182]

The Mississippi Supreme Court has ruled that the quoted term means "nefarious conduct" that "equals intentional malfeasance" which differs from "an incorrect or sloppy conclusion of law,"[183] "simple [errors] of law or fact"[184] or "sloppy or overzeal-

---

176. See 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:133 (4th ed. 2001).

177. Bishof v. Yarbrough Constr. Co., C.A. No. 02A01-9411-CH-00256, 1996 WL 490629, at *4 n.1 (Tenn. Ct. App. Aug. 29, 1996). But see 4 AM. JUR. 2D Alternative Dispute Resolution § 227 (2015) (stating that an award may be set aside when one party had ex parte communications with an arbitrator on material issues).

178. See, e.g., Bonar v. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., 835 F.2d 1378, 1383 n.7 (11th Cir. 1988) (stating "no doubt" that the perjury of a witness constitutes fraud under the FAA).

179. Spiska Eng'g, Inc. v. SPM Thermo-Shield, Inc., 678 N.W.2d 804, 806 (S.D. 2004) (citation omitted); see Drinane v State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins., 584 N.E.2d 410, 414 (Ill. App. Ct. 1991).

180. Trombetta v. Raymond James Fin. Servs., Inc., 907 A.2d 550, 570 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2006) (citation omitted).

181. A.G. Edwards & Sons, Inc. v. McCollough, 967 F.2d 1401, 1403 (9th Cir. 1992) (citation omitted); AmeriPath, Inc. v. Hebert, No. 05-12-00321-CV, 2014 WL 3827834, at *15 (Tex. Ct. App. Aug. 14, 2014) (citation omitted).

182. 2 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION §§ 27:6 to 27:8 (3d ed. 2013).

183. Robinson v. Henne, 115 So. 3d 797, 802 (Miss. 2013) (citation omitted); see also Doctor's Assocs. v. Windham, 81 A.3d 230, 237 (Conn. App. Ct.

ous lawyering."[185] As stated more elaborately by the Wisconsin Supreme Court, "[O]ne must conclude the term 'undue means' to include a more comprehensive area of acts of fraud and corruption while simultaneously restricting such expanded area of acts to those acts which are inappropriate, unjustified or improper methods of procuring an arbitration award."[186]

By contrast, "undue means" will be absent where the unfair conduct was ancillary or collateral to the award[187] or where the arbitrator considered evidence that was "merely legally objectionable."[188] Where a party offers a defense (or claim) that the arbitrator decides lacks merit, but another party calls this party's behavior "undue means," this conduct is part of the business of litigation and has no necessary connotation of wrongfulness or immorality.[189] If the party opposite had sufficient notice of the other party's (or the arbitrator's) alleged misdeeds and through due diligence could have avoided their impact, "undue means" would be absent as well.[190]

D. Evident Partiality by an Appointed Neutral Arbitrator or Corruption in any Arbitrators or Misconduct Prejudicing the Rights of Any Party (TENN. CODE ANN. Section 29-5-313(a)(1)(B))

Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(B) is confusing because it lumps together three different types of misconduct, several of which are already covered under other statutes. Thus, the 2013) ("[T]o establish 'undue means' . . . a party must prove 'nefarious intent or bad faith' . . . or conduct that is 'immoral if not illegal.'" (quoting McCollough, 967 F.2d at 1403)).

---

184. Robinson, 115 So. 3d at 802.

185. Barcume v. City of Flint, 132 F. Supp. 2d 549, 556 (E.D. Mich. 2001) (quoting McCollough, 967 F.2d at 1403).

186. City of Manitowoc v. Manitowoc Police Dept., 236 N.W.2d 231, 238 (Wis. 1975).

187. See Taheri Law Grp., A.P.C. v. Sorokurs, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 634, 639–40 (Cal. Dist. Ct. App. 2009).

188. Am. Postal Workers Union v. U.S. Postal Serv., 52 F.3d 359, 362 (D.C. Cir. 1995) (citation omitted).

189. A.G. Edwards & Sons, Inc. v. McCollough, 967 F.2d 1401, 1404 (9th Cir. 1992).

190. Nolan v. Kenner, 250 P.3d 236, 238 (Ariz. Ct. App. 2011); see Conoco, Inc. v. Oil, Chem. & Atomic Workers Int'l Union, 26 F. Supp. 2d 1310, 1320 (N.D. Okla. 1998) (citation omitted).

statute in paragraph (a)(1)(B) covers awards reflecting "corruption" or "misconduct," which is also partially the province of paragraph (a)(1)(A). Another difference is that paragraph (a)(1)(B) applies a "prejudice" requirement for arbitrator "corruption" or "misconduct," but paragraph (a)(1)(A) has no requirement for "prejudice" for awards procured through fraud, corruption, or other undue means. The General Assembly should streamline these factors to avoid this duplication and uncertainty.

The remainder of this part of the article will focus on "evident partiality" from Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(B), which is unmentioned in any other provision of Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1).[191]

1. "Evident Partiality" Defined

An essential attribute of arbitration is a neutral and impartial arbitrator.[192] Courts should be highly scrupulous in assessing the impartiality of arbitrators, even more so than their review of the qualifications of judges. The rationale is that the former class of persons have "free rein" to decide the law and the facts, and arbitral decisions are largely exempt from appellate review.[193] Notably, no requirement exists that the award also be unjust to establish this ground for vacatur.[194] A trial court considering a motion for vacatur on this basis has "sound discretion" to decide the issue.[195]

As just indicated, arbitral discretion is not unlimited under either TUAA or the FAA,[196] but complete impartiality or absolute 191. The references to "corruption" and "misconduct" in TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-313(a)(1)(B) (2012) have the same interpretation as under TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-313(a)(1)(A) (2012).

192. Team Design v. Gottlieb, 104 S.W.3d 512, 520 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2002) (citation omitted). See generally 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:132 (4th ed. 2001) ("At common law, an award could be vacated if the arbitrator engaged in simple bias . . . .").

193. Commonwealth Coatings Corp. v. Cont'l Cas. Co., 393 U.S. 145, 149 (1968).

194. 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:132 (4th ed. 2001).

195. Torres v. Piedmont Builders, Inc., 686 S.E.2d 464, 466 (Ga. Ct. App. 2009) (footnote omitted).

196. See TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-313(a)(1)(B) (2012); 9 U.S.C. § 10(a)(3) (2012).

disinterestedness is not the test.[197] Arbitrators are also not subject to the same standard for disqualification as applies to Article III judges in the federal court system.[198] Because proof of actual bias and outright chicanery "is often impossible to obtain," the majority of courts in the United States do not require this high level of proof for arbitrator bias.[199] Instead, the prevailing test, as in Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(B), is "evident partiality."[200] Given the nature of the non-disclosure, evident partiality will be found "where a reasonable person would have to conclude that an arbitrator was partial to one party to the arbitration."[201]

The claimant should prevail on an "evident partiality" vacatur challenge where the arbitrator either has an actual conflict or he knows of, but does not disclose, facts that would lead a reasonable person to believe that a potential conflict exists.[202] The "evident partiality" comes from the nondisclosure itself, regardless of whether the underlying information of its own force establishes partiality or bias.[203]

The Tennessee Court of Appeals succinctly summarized the standard for this ground of vacatur:

> [T]he party challenging the arbitrators' decision must show that a reasonable person would have to conclude that an arbitrator was partial to the other party to the arbitration. The challenging party carries the burden to establish specific facts that indi-

197. Ditto v. RE/MAX Preferred Props., Inc., 861 P.2d 1000, 1003 (Okla. Civ. App. 1993) (citation omitted).

198. Morelite Constr. Corp. v. N.Y.C. Dist. Council Carpenters Benefit Funds, 748 F.2d 79, 82–83 (2d Cir. 1984).

199. Carina Int'l Shipping Corp. v. Adam Mar. Corp., 961 F. Supp. 559, 568 (S.D.N.Y. 1997).

200. Morelite, 748 F.2d at 84.

201. Id.; see also 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:73 (4th ed. 2001) (addressing arbitrator's required scope of disclosure); 2 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION §§ 25:9 to 25:18 (3d ed. 2013).

202. Gianelli Money Purchase Plan & Tr. v. ADM Inv'r Servs., 146 F.3d 1309, 1312 (11th Cir. 1998).

203. Burlington N. R.R. v. TUCO, Inc., 960 S.W.2d 629, 636 (Tex. 1997) (citing Commonwealth Coatings Corp. v. Cont'l Cas. Co., 393 U.S. 145, 147 (1968)).

> cate improper motives on the part of the arbitrator. The alleged partiality must be direct, definite, and capable of demonstration, and an amorphous institutional predisposition toward the other side is not sufficient because that would simply be the appearance-of-bias standard that [the Sixth Circuit] [has] previously rejected. [T]he question before this Court is whether the party challenging the arbitrators' decision has carried its heavy burden to establish specific facts that indicate improper motives on the part of the arbitrator.[204]

The arbitrator's volitional conduct is needed to prove such grounds.[205] An objective test will apply; the arbitrator's decision must reflect that a "reasonable person would have to conclude that an arbitrator was partial to the other party in the arbitration."[206] Partiality also requires more than inference or supposition.[207] An excellent way to draw the ire of the courts in this area is where counsel for a moving party makes repetitive and pejorative charges of arbitrator partiality that amount to a "drumfire of charges" barren of factual support that only satisfy the emotional needs of such counsel and their clients and defeat the whole purpose of arbitration.[208] On the other hand, when entered into evidence in a judicial proceeding, an arbitrator's self-serving declaration that he tried the

---

204. Bronstein v. Morgan Keegan & Co., No. W2011-01391-COA-R3-CV, 2014 WL 1314843, at *10–11 (Tenn. Ct. App. Apr. 1, 2014) (citations and internal quotations omitted) (alteration in original); see also Morgan Keegan & Co., v. Starnes, No. W2012-00687-COA-R3-CV, 2014 WL 2810209, at *9–10 (Tenn. Ct. App. June 20, 2014) (adopting FAA case law assessing arbitrator evident partiality).

205. See Tarpley v. Searcy, No. M2000-03094-COA-R3-CV, 2002 WL 870089, at *3–4 (Tenn. Ct. App. May 7, 2002) (noting that an arbitrator was not evidently partial to a party where he was unaware at the time of the case that the party was married to his nephew's ex-wife).

206. Bronstein, 2014 WL 1314843, at *2 (citing Uhl v. Komatsu Forklift Co., 512 F.3d 294, 306 (6th Cir. 2008)); see also Morelite, 748 F.2d at 84.

207. Bronstein, 2014 WL 1314843, at *10.

208. See Hunt v. Mobil Oil Corp., 654 F. Supp. 1487, 1495 (S.D.N.Y. 1987).

case in a fair manner irrespective of the appearance of bias will not necessarily remove the taint.[209]

An award regular on its face may be overturned for statutorily-covered arbitrator misconduct and a reviewing court may consider evidence on this issue extrinsic to the arbitrator's decision.[210] A significant caveat, however, is that where the moving party raises a legitimate issue of undue arbitrator partiality, a court should permit at least limited discovery of the arbitrator.[211] In this way, the moving party will have a fair opportunity to explore the relationship at issue between the arbitrator and the other party.[212]

A panel of arbitrators presents some unique issues on this topic of arbitrator misconduct. The panel can consist of party appointed arbitrators and neutral arbitrators.[213] Notably, this basis for arbitrator disqualification does not necessarily apply to party-appointed arbitrators whom the courts expect to be partial (and perhaps even partisan) to the side recommending the arbitrator's appointment.[214] This test applies only to arbitrators that the parties accept as neutral decision makers.[215] Neutral arbitrators are not the

---

209. 6 C.J.S. Arbitration § 207 (2014).

210. 4 AM. JUR. 2D Alternative Dispute Resolution § 217 (2014); see also Team Design v. Gottlieb, 104 S.W.3d 512, 518 n.7 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2002) (stating an award regular on its face cannot be impeached but may be challenged upon objections that go to the alleged misbehavior of the arbitrators).

211. Kauffman v. Haas, 318 N.W.2d 572, 574 (Mich. Ct. App. 1982).

212. Id.

213. Winfrey v. Simmons Foods, Inc., 495 F.3d 549, 551 (8th Cir. 2007).

214. Id. at 552; Tate v. Saratoga Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 216 Cal. App. 3d 843, 858 (1989) ("[B]ias in a party arbitrator is expected and furnishes no ground for vacating an arbitration award, unless it amounts to 'corruption.'"); see also ATSA of Cal., Inc. v. Cont'l Ins. Co., 702 F.2d 172, 175 (9th Cir. 1983) (permitting partisan arbitrators). Under the ABA/AAA Code of Ethics, a party-appointed neutral arbitrator is subject to the same duty of disclosure as any other neutral arbitrator. THE CODE OF ETHICS FOR ARBITRATORS IN COMMERCIAL DISPUTES CANON 2 (AM. BAR ASS'N 1983).

215. Sunkist Soft Drinks, Inc. v. Sunkist Growers, Inc., 10 F.3d 753, 759 (11th Cir. 1993) (deeming it unobjectionable where the party-appointed arbitrator consulted with the party about evidence of record after the former's appointment and before the hearing); see also U.S. Care, Inc. v. Pioneer Life Ins. Co., 244 F. Supp. 2d 1057, 1064 (C.D. Cal. 2002) (citing cases establishing a lower duty of disclosure for party-appointed arbitrators).

agent of either party and they sit in a quasi-judicial capacity.[216] At the same time, however, party-appointed arbitrators, consistent with the parties' submission, are still required to act in good faith and with integrity and fairness.[217] Consistent with the liberal policy favoring arbitration of disputes, a court may appoint a substitute arbitrator after upholding vacatur against the award based on arbitrator bias.[218]

2. Evidence of Partiality

The relationship raising concerns of arbitrator partiality must be so substantial personally, socially, professionally, or financially from the perspective of a reasonable member of the public aware of all the facts that the relationship casts serious doubt on the arbitrator's impartiality.[219] Consistent with the overarching policy that judicial review of arbitration awards is "narrowly limited," along with the presumption that awards shall be confirmed, the evident partiality basis for vacatur must be "strictly construed."[220]

Courts are "not quick" to set aside an award for the arbitrator's failure to disclose information linking the arbitrator in a relationship with a party,[221] even if such non-disclosure might have violated current ethical norms for arbitrators.[222] The evidence for a meritorious claim must be "direct, definitive and capable of demonstration" versus being merely "remote, uncertain and specu-

---

216. See Carroll v. Alsup, 64 S.W. 193, 197 (Tenn. 1901); Cowan v. Murch, 37 S.W. 393, 395 (Tenn. 1896).

217. Sunkist, 10 F.3d at 759.

218. Third Nat. Bank in Nashville v. WEDGE Grp., Inc., 749 F. Supp. 851, 855 (M.D. Tenn. 1990).

219. Midwest Generation EME, L.L.C. v. Continuum Chem. Corp., 768 F. Supp. 2d 939, 950–51 (N.D. Ill. 2010); Mahnke v. Super. Ct., 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 197, 206–07 (Cal. Dist. Ct. App. 2009).

220. Gianelli Money Purchase Plan & Tr. v. ADM Inv'r Servs., 146 F.3d 1309, 1312 (11th Cir. 1998).

221. In re Andros Compania Maritima, 579 F.2d 691, 700 (2d Cir. 1978); Sanford Home for Adults v. Local 6, IFHP, 665 F. Supp. 312, 317–18 (S.D.N.Y. 1987).

222. Sanford Home for Adults, 665 F. Supp. at 318 (noting that the violation under review was "at worst" a "technical violation").

lative."[223] Again, the parties' submission is important in this area, especially when the document establishes ethical rules for arbitrator conduct as a component of the ground rules for the proceeding.

A court will not vacate an award where the only evidence of partiality is that the arbitrator's decision was unfavorable to the complaining party.[224] Arbitrators are empowered to decide what is relevant, material, and cumulative and to determine the rules of procedure.[225] Similarly, the courts have concluded that alleged procedural or evidentiary errors, by themselves, have little or no probative weight that will show bias.[226] Indeed, courts are deferential in this area toward arbitrators to the point that they place their "faith in the 'deterrent value' of an arbitrator's concern for his 'professional reputation,' 'especially where the arbitrator is a lawyer.'"[227] Courts are also sensitive to the prospect that an overly lenient standard of evident partiality could encourage parties to conduct background investigations of arbitrators, which would serve to increase the cost and decrease the finality of arbitration.[228] Another inevitable consequence of such investigations is they would tend to harass arbitrators and to deter them from accepting such service in the future.[229]

---

223. Gianelli, 146 F.3d at 1312 (quoting Middlesex Mut. Ins. Co. v. Levine, 675 F.2d 117, 1202 (11th Cir. 1982)); Tamari v. Bache Halsey Stuart Inc., 619 F.2d 1196, 1200 (7th Cir. 1980); see also New Regency Prods., Inc. v. Nippon Herald Films, Inc., 501 F.3d 1101, 1110 (9th Cir. 2007) ("[C]ourts have rejected claims of evident partiality based on long past, attenuated or insubstantial connections between a party and an arbitrator.").

224. 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:132 (4th ed. 2001).

225. See Commercial Risk Reinsurance Co. v. Sec. Ins. Co. of Hartford, 526 F. Supp. 2d 424, 428 (S.D.N.Y. 2007).

226. See Areca, Inc. v. Oppenheimer & Co., 960 F. Supp. 52, 56–57 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) ("[F]ederal courts have concluded that evident partiality may not be shown by alleged procedural or evidentiary errors, by legitimate efforts to move the case along, or by failure to follow the rules of evidence." (quoting Sisti v. Merrill, Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, No. 91 00102-R, 1991 WL 575874, at *3 (E.D. Va. Apr. 22, 1991))).

227. Sanford Home for Adults, 665 F. Supp. at 318 (quoting Merit Ins. Co. v. Leatherby Ins. Co., 714 F.2d 673, 681 (7th Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 1009 (1983)).

228. Merit Ins. Co., 714 F.2d at 683.

229. See id.

The fact patterns regarding arbitrator misconduct are highly varied.[230] The courts will examine whether there are inferences from objective facts that do not comport with arbitral impartiality.[231] A party need not necessarily show proof of "actual bias," but the evidence must go beyond the mere "appearance of bias."[232] Some criteria relevant to the determination of evident partiality are: (1) any personal interest, pecuniary, or otherwise the arbitrator has in the proceeding; (2) the directness of the relationship between the arbitrator and the party he is alleged to favor; (3) the connection of the relationship to the arbitration; and (4) the proximity in time between the relationship and the arbitration proceeding.[233] Another factor can be the "peculiar commercial practices in the geographic area."[234] Most decisions indicate that a court has no general power to intervene in an ongoing arbitration case, such as a ruling during the proceedings that the judge deems the arbitrator unfairly biased.[235]

---

230. See 4 AM. JUR. 2D Alternative Dispute Resolution § 220 (2014) (noting fact patterns showing or not showing partiality).

231. Pitta v. Hotel Ass'n of N.Y. City, Inc., 806 F.2d 419, 423 (2d Cir. 1986).

232. Applied Indus. Materials Corp. v. Ovalar Makine Ticaret Ve Sanayi, A.S., 492 F.3d 132, 137 (2d Cir. 2007); see also Remmey v. PaineWebber, Inc., 32 F.3d 143, 148 (4th Cir. 1994) (stating that arbitrators "are not held to the ethical standards required of Article III judges" (quoting Peoples Sec. Life Ins. v. Monumental Life Ins., 991 F.2d 141, 146 (4th Cir.1993))); Commonwealth Coatings Corp. v. Cont'l Cas. Co., 393 U.S. 145, 150 (1969) (White, J., concurring) (allowing disqualification of arbitrators based on a mere appearance of bias would unnecessarily "disqualify the best informed and most capable potential arbitrators") (relied upon in Morelite Constr. Corp. v. N.Y. City Dist. Council Carpenters Benefit Funds, 748 F.2d 79, 83 n.3 (2d Cir. 1984)); Woods v. Saturn Distrib. Corp., 78 F.3d 424, 427 (9th Cir. 1996) (requiring "reasonable impression of bias"); Sidarma Societa Italiana Di Armamento Spa, Venice v. Holt, 515 F. Supp. 1302, 1307 (S.D.N.Y. 1981) (finding that it is not enough that the arbitrator's perspective on the case is colored by his personal business experience or that the arbitrator might expect future business from the parties before him).

233. Consol. Coal Co. v. Local 1643, United Mine Workers of Am., 48 F.3d 125, 130 (4th Cir. 1995); Sanford Home for Adults v. Local 6, IFHP, 665 F. Supp. 312, 320 (S.D.N.Y. 1987).

234. Carina Int'l Shipping Corp., 961 F. Supp. 559, 568 (S.D.N.Y. 1997); Morelite, 748 F.2d at 84.

235. Compare W.J. Dunn, Annotation, Disqualification of Arbitrator by Court or Stay of Arbitration Proceedings Prior to Award, on Ground of Interest,

A good example of an insubstantial connection between the arbitrator and a party that does not show undue partiality occurred in Morgan Keegan & Co., Inc. v. Starne.[236] In this case, the arbitrator and a party had a superficial, professional acquaintanceship where they were employed by the same company in different cities more than twenty years before the arbitration.[237] Another situation that is more trivial than probative is where the arbitrator appeared disinterested, shrugged his shoulders, discouraged further statements from the claimant, or even was abrasive.[238] Further, no impropriety exists where the arbitrator merely asks questions of witnesses (which can include cross-examination) to facilitate the proceedings.[239]

3. Arbitrator's Duty of Self-Investigation and Disclosure

The arbitrator can have a legal obligation as required by an arbitral contract or the parties' submission to make a reasonable investigation of nontrivial facts pertaining to his fitness to serve and to disclose to the parties any relationship that raises a question of bias.[240] Where the arbitrator breached the duty of self-Bias, Prejudice, Collusion or Fraud of Arbitrators, 65 A.L.R.2d 755 (1959) (noting that in some jurisdictions, a court may intervene in the arbitration pursuant to its general equity powers), with Metro. Prop. & Cas. Ins. Co. v. J.C. Penney, 780 F. Supp. 885, 894–96 (D. Conn. 1991) (finding no categorical prohibition against disqualification of an arbitrator prior to the conclusion of the arbitration) (citing cases)).

---

236. No. W2012-00687-COA-R3-CV, 2014 WL 2810209 (Tenn. Ct. App. June 20, 2014) (stating that small talk between the arbitrator and a participant during breaks in the proceedings is not evidence of bias or evident partiality).

237. Id. at *10.

238. See Nasta v. Paramount Pictures Corp., No. 87 Civ. 1599 (WK), 1991 WL 183353, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 11, 1991).

239. See Butler v. Boyles, 29 Tenn. 155, 155 (1849); Burton v. Cruise, 118 Cal. Rptr. 3d 613, 622 (Cal. Dist. Ct. App. 2010) (noting the "conversational" nature of some arbitration proceedings); see also Spector v. Torenberg, 852 F. Supp. 201, 209 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) ("[A]n arbitrator is not precluded from developing views regarding the merits of a dispute early in the proceedings, and an award will not be vacated because he expresses those views.").

240. See New Regency Prods., Inc. v. Nippon Herald Films, Inc., 501 F.3d 1101 (9th Cir. 2007) (stating that the arbitrator's lack of actual knowledge of the presence of a conflict does not excuse non-disclosure where the arbitrator has reason to believe that a non-trivial conflict of interest might exist). But see investigation, vacatur will be appropriate only where the undisclosed conflict was "real and 'not trivial.'"[241] The arbitrator's failure to disclose a financial or personal relationship, apart from the actual potential for a conflict, may establish the claim of bias.[242]

Lower courts have echoed Justice White's concurring opinion in the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Commonwealth Coatings Corp. v. Continental Casualty Co.,[243] that "arbitrators would be well advised if they desired their decision not to be subject to the kind of attack here involved if they did as admonished by Mr. Justice White [to] 'err on the side of disclosure.'"[244] Tennessee courts also have stated that a party may waive this ground for relief for purposes of vacatur when the party knowingly remains silent about this problem during the proceedings, raises no objection to the arbitrator's alleged bias, but decides to complain after the arbitrator issues a decision adverse to that person.[245]

Gianelli Money Purchase Plan & Tr. v. ADM Inv'r Servs., 146 F.3d 1309, 1313 (11th Cir. 1998) (adopting per se rule that a finding of evident partiality will be absent where the arbitrator lacked "actual knowledge of the information upon which an alleged 'conflict' was founded"). For a comprehensive summary of the case law on arbitrator disclosure of the relationship this official has with the parties, see Hobet Mining, Inc. v. Int'l Union, United Mine, 877 F. Supp. 1011 (S.D. W. Va. 1994).

241. New Regency Prods, Inc., 501 F.3d at 1110 (citation omitted) (quoting ANR Coal Co. v. Cogentrix of N.C., Inc., 173 F.3d 493, 499 n.4 (4th Cir. 1999)).

242. Toyota of Berkeley v. Auto. Salesman's Union, 834 F.2d 751, 756 (9th Cir. 1987) (citing Sheet Metal Workers Int'l Ass'n v. Kinney Air Conditioning, 756 F.2d 742, 746 (9th Cir. 1985); Merit Ins. v. Leatherby Ins., 714 F.2d 673, 678 (7th Cir. 1983); Ormsbee Dev. Co. v. Grace, 668 F.2d 1140, 1149 (10th Cir. 1982)).

243. 393 U.S. 145, 150 (1968) (White, J., concurring).

244. U.S. Wrestling Fed'n v. Wrestling Div. of AAU, Inc., 605 F.2d 313, 319 (7th Cir. 1979).

245. Bailey v. Am. Gen. Life & Accident Ins., No. M2003-01666-COA-R3-CV, 2005 WL 3557840, at *5 (Tenn. Ct. App. Dec. 29, 2005); see also Cook Indus. v. C. Itoh & Co., 449 F.2d 106, 107–08 (2d Cir. 1971) (stating that an "[a]ppellant cannot remain silent, raising no objection during the course of the arbitration proceeding, and when an award adverse to him has been handed down complain of a situation of which he had knowledge from the first").

E. The Arbitrators Exceeded Their Powers (TENN. CODE ANN. Section 29-5-313(a)(1)(C))

1. The Statutory Standards

An arbitration award must "draw its essence from the agreement of the parties."[246] Because arbitration is "a matter of consent, not coercion," parties are "generally free" to structure their contracts as they deem appropriate and to specify the ground rules governing the arbitration.[247] In keeping with this statement, the Tennessee Supreme Court has said that parties "cannot be forced to arbitrate claims that they did not agree to arbitrate."[248] From the above doctrine comes the rule that the arbitrator's scope of authority regarding the issues in the case depends on the terms of the parties' arbitration agreement.[249] It bears emphasis that this ground for challenge considers only whether the arbitrator exceeded his delegated powers, which inquiry differs from the merits of his decision.[250]

An arbitrator's authority depends upon the matters that the parties' agreement either covers expressly or that are implied by necessity.[251] A number of decisions recognize that the arbitrator's 246. Wasco, Inc. v. R.P. Indus., Inc., No. 01-A-01-9407-CH00343, 1994 WL 706663, at *3 (Tenn. Ct. App. Dec. 21, 1994) (citing Int'l Talent Grp., Inc. v. Copyright Mgmt., Inc., 769 S.W.2d 217 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1988)).

---

247. Frizzell Constr. Co. v. Gatlinburg, L.L.C., 9 S.W.3d 79, 84 (Tenn. 1999) (quoting Volt Info. Scis., Inc. v. Bd. of Trs., 489 U.S. 468, 479 (1989)).

248. Id. at 84, cited in T.R. Mills Contractors, Inc. v. WRH Enters., L.L.C., 93 S.W.3d 861, 870 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2002) (stating that an "indirect agreement to arbitrate is enforceable as long as it is clear"). This principle coincides with the common law (pre-TUAA) rule. See, e.g., Mays v. Myatt, 62 Tenn. 309 (1874).

249. D & E Constr. Co. v. Robert J. Denley Co., 38 S.W.3d 513, 518 (Tenn. 2001); Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 450 (Tenn. 1996); Int'l Talent Grp. v. Copyright Mgmt. Co., 769 S.W.2d 217, 218 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1988); see also Williams Holding Co. v. Willis, 166 S.W.3d 707, 711 (Tenn. 2005); Davis v. Reliance Elec., 104 S.W.3d 57, 61 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2002) ("[S]o long as the arbitrator is acting within his scope of authority, 'the fact that a court is convinced he committed serious error does not suffice to overturn his decision.'" (quoting Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 449)).

250. Gordon Sel-Way, Inc. v. Spence Bros., 475 N.W.2d 704, 710 (Mich. 1991).

251. Quinn v. Nafta Traders, Inc., 257 S.W.3d 795, 799 (Tex. App. 2008).

jurisdiction is defined by both the contract containing the arbitration clause and the submission agreement that illuminates that agreement.[252] Accordingly, an arbitrator exceeds his power "when he rules on issues not submitted to him by the parties"[253] or "grant[s] relief not authorized in the arbitration agreement."[254] Thus, for example, an arbitration clause in an employment contract does not necessarily require the employee to submit a complaint under the Tennessee Human Rights Act to arbitration.[255]

In assessing the issue of party intent in a submission or contract, courts often consider the correspondence regarding the terms in the demand for arbitration and related documents.[256] Where the clause broadly requires the arbitration of all disputes arising from the agreement—unlike a narrower clause that limits arbitration to specific disputes—the clause reaches all aspects of the parties' agreement[257] and the presumption favoring arbitrability applies even more strongly.[258] These principles stem from case law that courts are "to give as broad a construction to an arbitration agreement as the words and intentions of the parties, drawn from 252. Executone Info. Sys., Inc. v. Davis, 26 F.3d 1314, 1323 (5th Cir. 1994) (noting that by their conduct parties can agree to submit an issue to the arbitrator that they were not compelled to submit according to their agreement); D & E Const., 38 S.W.3d at 518 ("[T]he scope of an arbitrator's authority 'is determined by the terms of the agreement between the parties which includes the agreement of the parties to arbitrate the dispute.'" (quoting Int'l Talent Grp., 769 S.W.2d at 218).

---

253. Vt. Built, Inc. v. Krolick, 969 A.2d 80, 87 (Vt. 2008) (quoting Hoeft v. MVL Grp., 343 F.3d 57, 71 (2d Cir. 2003)).

254. Morgan Stanley & Co. v. Core Fund, 884 F. Supp. 2d 1229, 1231 (M.D. Fla. 2012).

255. Brown v. KareMor Int'l, Inc., No. 01A01-9807-CH-00368, 1999 WL 221799, at *2 (Tenn. Ct. App. Apr. 19, 1999).

256. See Genesco, Inc. v. T. Kakiuchi & Co., 815 F.2d 840, 846 (2d Cir. 1987); Costle v. Freemont Indem. Co., 839 F. Supp. 265, 273 (D. Vt. 1993).

257. Neal v. Hardee's Food Sys., 918 F.2d 34, 37–38 (5th Cir. 1990).

258. AT&T Techs., Inc. v. Commc'ns Workers of Am., 475 U.S. 643, 650 (1986); McDonnell Douglas Fin. Corp. v. Pa. Power & Light Co., 858 F.2d 825, 832 (2d Cir. 1988). For a decision reconciling an agreement containing both a narrow and a broad arbitration clause, see Blue Tee Corp. v. Koehring Co., 999 F.2d 633 (2d Cir. 1993).

their expressions, will warrant, and to resolve any doubts in favor of arbitration."[259]

Where a claimant in a contract dispute alleges that the arbitrator exceeded his authority, the record must show that the arbitrator did not rely upon his personal opinion about the parties' contractual intent or on his own conceptions of sound public policy.[260] Instead, the courts will decide the scope of arbitrator authority by interpreting the arbitration terms of the agreement under "ordinary state law principles" of party intent.[261] In deciding whether the arbitrator exceeded his authority, courts resolve "any doubts in favor of arbitration."[262] In fact, arbitration "should not be denied unless it may be said with positive assurance that the arbitration clause is not susceptible of an interpretation that covers the asserted dispute. Doubts should be resolved in favor of coverage."[263] FAA decisions on this point are persuasive authority in TUAA cases.

2. Role of Contract Interpretation

The controlling issue is not whether the arbitrator construed the parties' contract correctly, "but whether he construed it at all."[264] Where an arbitration clause covers a specific type(s) of dispute(s), a court cannot require arbitration on claims outside that scope; thus, for example, where the clause covers "all factual disputes" between the parties, the clause cannot compel arbitration of 259. See Wachtel v. Shoney's Inc., 830 S.W.2d 905, 908 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1991).

260. See Wolf v. Sprenger + Lang, P.L.L.C., 86 A.3d 1121, 1133–34 (D.C. 2013).

261. T.R. Mills Contractors, Inc. v. WRH Enters., L.L.C., 93 S.W.3d 861, 870 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2002); see also McAllister Bros. v. A & S Transp. Co., 621 F.2d 519, 524 (2d Cir. 1980) ("[O]rdinary principles of contract and agency determine which parties are bound by an agreement to arbitrate.").

262. Hardaway v. Goodwill, 1994 WL 585767, at *2 (Tenn. Ct. App. Oct. 19, 1994) (quoting Wachtel, 830 S.W.2d at 908).

263. Taylor v. Butler, 142 S.W.3d 277, 281 (Tenn. 2004) (quoting United Steelworkers of Am. v. Warrior & Guilf Navigation Co., 363 U.S. 574, 582–83 (1960)); see also 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:22 (4th ed. 2001).

264. Oxford Health Plans, L.L.C. v. Sutter, 133 S. Ct. 2064, 2071 (2013).

all legal and factual matters in dispute between the parties.[265] Another example of such a limitation is an arbitrator may not award relief in excess of the dollar limit the parties accepted in their agreement.[266] Tennessee courts also recognize that when the parties employ a broad arbitration clause covering numerous items, it will be correspondingly more difficult for a party to argue that a dispute is outside the agreement.[267] The above doctrines are entrenched in Tennessee arbitration jurisprudence, predating TUAA by many years.[268]

In labor disputes, arbitrators frequently construe collective bargaining agreements; so long as the arbitrator draws his interpretation "from the essence" of the agreement (which concept is interpreted "expansively")[269] and he does not "dispense his own brand of industrial justice," the arbitrator's decision will likely stand.[270] While the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947, as amended, (and not the FAA) governs labor arbitration,[271] the same approach exists in commercial arbitration.[272] Accordingly, the collective 265. Encompass Ins. v. Hagerty Ins. Agency, No. 1:08-cv-337, 2009 WL 160776, at *11 (W.D. Mich. Jan. 22, 2009).

266. Int'l Talent Grp. v. Copyright Mgmt., 769 S.W.2d 217, 219 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1988).

267. See Bodor v. Green Tree Servicing, L.L.C., No. M2007-00308-COA-R10-CV, 2007 WL 2409675, at *2 (Tenn. Ct. App. Aug. 24, 2007).

268. See Jackson v. Chambers, 510 S.W.2d 74, 76 (Tenn. 1974) ("The arbitrators had no authority to go in their inquiries beyond the powers delegated by the terms of the submission." (citing Mays v. Myatt, 62 Tenn. 309 (1874))).

269. Executone Info. Sys., Inc. v. Davis, 26 F.3d 1314, 1324–25 (5th Cir. 1994); s*ee also* Mich. Mut. Ins. v. Unigard Sec. Ins., 44 F.3d 826, 830–31 (9th Cir. 1995) ("[A]n award does not draw its essence from the contract if the arbitrators exceeded their powers in crafting the award, if the award is contrary to public policy, or if the arbitrators acted in manifest disregard of the law" (citing Local Joint Exec. Bd. of Las Vegas v. Riverboat Casino, Inc., 817 F.2d 524, 527 (9th Cir. 1987))); Int'l Bd. of Teamsters, Local 519 v. United Parcel Serv., 275 F. Supp. 2d 944, 951–52 (E.D. Tenn. 2001), vacated on other grounds, 335 F.3d 497 (6th Cir. 2003) (discussing the "essence" of the agreement).

270. Int'l Talent Grp., 769 S.W.2d at 220 (quoting Swift Indus., Inc. v. Botany Indus., Inc., 466 F.2d 1125, 1129–30 (3d Cir. 1972)).

271. See THOMAS E. CARBONNEAU, THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF ARBITRATION 38 n.105, 86–94 (4th ed. 2012).

272. Johnson Controls, Inc. v. Edman Controls, Inc., 712 F.3d 1021, 1026 (7th Cir. 2013). Section One of the FAA does not apply to employment contracts, but this exclusion is itself narrowly construed. See THOMAS E.

bargaining cases may properly be cited as persuasive authority on cognate issues in commercial arbitration cases. Courts commonly cite labor arbitration cases, which are subject to the federal common law of labor relations, in arbitration cases subject to the FAA.[273]

A less-frequently cited, but equally valid, doctrine is that, even where an arbitration agreement does not cover a particular issue, the parties, by their knowing conduct during arbitration, may agree to send an issue to the arbitrator for resolution.[274] As an FAA decision pointed out,

> It is a fundamental contract principle that a contract provision may be modified by the actions or expressions of the parties. The practical construction or interpretation of a contract by the parties is an important indication of the intent of the parties and courts give great weight to such interpretations. "Few things can better evidence the meaning of a contract than the actions of the parties themselves."[275]

As indicated above, the most common question on this theory of vacatur is whether the arbitrator has stayed within the bounds of his appointed authority. Under the analogous FAA, the decisions have "consistently accorded the narrowest of readings" on whether the arbitrator has exceeded his powers.[276] Although some courts hold that the arbitrator's interpretation of the scope of his conferred authority does not bind a reviewing court, other decisions state that the parties, by consent, may confer this authority on

---

CARBONNEAU, THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF ARBITRATION 127–47 (4th ed. 2012).

273. See Stephen J. Ware, Vacating Legally-Erroneous Arbitration Awards, 6 Y.B. ON ARB. & MEDIATION 56 (2014) (analyzing cases).

274. Gvozdenovic v. United Air Lines, Inc., 933 F.2d 1100, 1105 (2d Cir. 1991); Carey v. Conn. Gen. Life Ins., 93 F. Supp. 2d 165, 168 (D. Conn. 1999).

275. Globe Transp. & Trading (U.K.) Ltd. v. Guthrie Latex, Inc., 722 F. Supp. 40, 44 (S.D.N.Y. 1989) (citations omitted) (quoting Ottley v. Palm Tree Nursing Home, 493 F. Supp. 910, 914 (S.D.N.Y. 1980)).

276. ReliaStar Life Ins. of N.Y. v. EMC Nat'l Life Co., 564 F.3d 81, 85 (2d Cir. 2009); DiRussa v. Dean Witter Reynolds Inc., 121 F.3d 818, 824 (2d Cir. 1997).

the arbitrator.[277] In any event, the arbitrator's determination of the scope of his delegated authority must be subservient to the terms of the arbitration agreement.[278] On the other hand, the better view is that courts are not bound by an arbitration agreement stating the award shall be final on all questions of law and fact. The reason is that such a term effectively deprives an aggrieved party of its statutory right to seek vacatur of an improper award.[279]

3. Ambiguity in Arbitration Agreements/Arbitrator Decisions

A number of cases address whether a vacatur action may lie because the arbitrator's award decision is ambiguous. A mere ambiguity in an opinion accompanying an arbitration award on whether the arbitrator exceeded his authority is insufficient for vacatur.[280] Another fertile area for litigation, discussed below, is whether vacatur is available where the parties' submission or the arbitration agreement was ambiguous on which issues are arbitrable.[281]

Under settled law, courts must strongly consider the policy favoring arbitration and construe any ambiguities on arbitrability in favor of arbitration.[282] Another principle of interpretation that can reconcile conflicting contractual language is that a court may order

---

277. Globe Transp., 772 F. Supp. at 45.

278. See Synergy Gas Co. v. Sasso, 853 F.2d 59, 63–64 (2d Cir. 1988) ("[T]he 'scope of authority of arbitrators generally depends on the intention of the parties to an arbitration, and is determined by the agreement or submission.'" (quoting Ottley v. Schwartzberg, 819 F.2d 373, 376 (2d Cir. 1987)).

279. See United States v. Farragut, 89 U.S. 406 (1874). But see Swenson v. Bushman Inv. Props., Ltd., 870 F. Supp. 2d 1049, 1054–56 (D. Idaho 2012) (noting that there is a split of authority in the circuits); 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:128 (4th ed. 2001) (favoring the view that parties may waive their right to an appeal).

280. United Steelworkers v. Enter. Wheel & Car Corp., 363 U.S. 593, 598 (1960).

281. See infra Section V.E.4.

282. Volt Info. Scis., Inc. v. Bd. of Trs., 489 U.S. 468, 475 (1989); Local Union No. 336 v. Detroit Gasket & Mfg. Co., 521 F. Supp. 39, 40 (E.D. Tenn. 1981) ("Consequently, although the parties are bound to arbitrate only those disputes they have agreed to arbitrate, all doubts or ambiguities must be resolved in favor of arbitration." (citing Controlled Sanitation Corp. v. Dist. 128, 524 F.2d 1324 1328 (3d Cir. 1975)).

arbitration of claims under one agreement that is part of a larger agreement containing an arbitration clause.[283] A court may even go so far as to conclude that the "nature of the award itself" may cure the ambiguity.[284]

The easiest way to avoid an ambiguity on arbitrability is, if a party believes that an agreement on a particular issue should not be subject to arbitration, it can say so in the contract.[285] In keeping with the policy to uphold arbitration awards wherever possible, if the arbitration decision goes beyond a mere ambiguity and is so ambiguous that the award cannot be interpreted, the courts may not vacate but should be able to remand the case to the arbitrator(s) below for clarification.[286]

A sound reason exists for requiring a substantive, material ambiguity for vacatur instead of a technical one. First, submissions by the parties and opinions prepared by arbitrators rarely reach the level of sophistication characteristic of judges. It would be unrealistic to expect that the parties in their agreement, or the arbitrator(s) in their opinions, can avoid all uncertainty or lack of clarity. If the rule were otherwise, parties dissatisfied with the award decision would simply go on a hunt for ambiguity in the agreement or the opinion and compel courts to overturn the award for apparently harmless errors. Second, if the broader rule were the standard, it would prompt arbitrators to "play it safe by writing

---

283. Frounfelker v. Identity Grp., No. M2001-02542-COA-R3-CV, 2002 WL 1189299, at *4 (Tenn. Ct. App. June 5, 2002); see also Dickson Cty. v. Bomar Constr. Co., 935 S.W.2d 413, 415 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1996) (declining to interpret two clauses to find a repugnancy on whether the parties had agreed to arbitration but, instead, decided to reconcile the language that showed an agreement to arbitrate).

284. Sheet Metal Workers Int'l Ass'n Local Union No. 420 v. Kinney Air Conditioning Co., 756 F.2d 742, 745 (9th Cir. 1985).

285. Frounfelker, 2002 WL 1189299, at *4.

286. Emp'rs Ins. of Wausau v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins., 933 F.2d 1481, 1488 n.6 (9th Cir. 1991); Refino v. Feuer Transp., Inc., 480 F. Supp. 562, 565 (S.D.N.Y. 1979). But see United Paperworkers Int'l Union v. Misco, Inc., 484 U.S. 29, 40 n.10 (1987); Westvaco Corp. v. Local 579, United Paperworkers, Int'l Union, Civ. A. No. 90-30091-F, 1992 WL 121372, at *9 (D. Mass. Mar. 5, 1992) (noting that when a court vacates an arbitration award, it should not resolve the merits of the dispute but should, when possible, remand the case to the arbitrator). The legal status of remands in Tennessee arbitration is unclear. See infra note 475 and accompanying text.

no supporting opinions. . . . This would be undesirable for a well-reasoned opinion would engender confidence in the integrity of the process and aid in clarifying the underlying agreement."[287] Thus, courts will resolve any ambiguity in the award decision, if possible, in favor of an interpretation that supports confirmation of the award.[288] In fact, courts go so far as to say that "'[t]he showing required to avoid confirmation' of an arbitration award 'is very high.'"[289]

4. Gaps in Arbitration Agreements/Arbitrator Decisions

Another problem related to ambiguity is what course of action should an arbitrator take when the submission is silent on the precise question in controversy? Although some case law supports the view that "arbitrators cannot change or alter the terms of a contract between the parties,"[290] other decisions indicate the arbitrator may "look beyond the written contract" if the contract has such a gap.[291] When facing such a contractual gap, the arbitrator can overcome potential objections that he lacked the authority to decide such questions if he relies on established precepts of contract construction. Similar principles govern arbitration agreements and arbitrator decisions.

Although some Tennessee decisions reference the principles of contractual ambiguity to resolve the problem of missing language,[292] the more appropriate approach is that a gap in an

---

287. United Steelworkers v. Enter. Wheel & Car Corp., 363 U.S. 593, 598 (1960).

288. Pompano-Windy City Partners, Ltd. v. Bear Stearns & Co., 794 F. Supp. 1265, 1272 (S.D.N.Y. 1992) (citing decisions).

289. Morgan Keegan & Co. v. Starnes, No. W2012-00687-COA-R3-CV, 2014 WL 2810209, at *10 (Tenn. Ct. App. June 20, 2014) (quoting Merit Ins. Co. v. Leatherby Ins. Co., 714 F.2d 673, 681 (7th Cir. 1983)).

290. Stokely-Van Camp, Inc. v. United Steelworkers, Local Union No. 7198, 480 F. Supp. 48, 49 (E.D. Tenn. 1971).

291. Delta Queen Steamboat Co. v. Dist. 2 Marine Eng'rs Beneficial Ass'n, 889 F.2d 599, 602 (5th Cir. 1979).

292. See Adams TV of Memphis, Inc. v. Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers, Local 274, 932 S.W.2d 932, 935 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1996) (stating that where a collective bargaining agreement provided that an employee could be discharged for just cause, but was silent on the procedures, the arbitrator properly devised the procedures).

agreement or a decision cannot be interpreted one way or another because there is no language to construe.[293] The whole point of a gap is that there is no coverage for the particular issue. The better view is the document can be saved, however, where established notions of offer and acceptance can overcome the contractual silence. Alternatively, the Restatement (Second) of Contracts, Section 208, can provide a solution. The Restatement states that when the bargain is sufficiently defined to be a contract, but they have not agreed on a point essential to the determination of their rights and duties, a court (and inferentially an arbitrator) may supply a term that is reasonable under the circumstances.[294]

Another alternative to resolve an interpretive gap is the case law doctrine that a contract term may be implied, even though not stated expressly, when the reviewing authority can "plainly determine from the agreement that the obligation or duty was necessarily or indispensably included within the contemplation of the parties so that they deemed it unnecessary or too obvious to mention, or where the term is needed to give effect to the bargain."[295] Lastly, some decisions authorize "equitable considerations in resolving a dispute on which the contract is silent."[296] This approach would find favor under the broad principle that the courts in deciding arbitration disputes may rely upon equitable and policy considerations.[297] Further, this approach comports with the judicial policy to uphold arbitration awards "whenever possible."[298]

5. Limits on Grants of Relief

An arbitrator may still act within his authority, and the award will not be vacated under Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(C), even if a court could not grant the same relief in sim-

---

293. See 21 STEVEN W. FELDMAN, TENNESSEE PRACTICE SERIES: CONTRACT LAW AND PRACTICE § 8:57 (2006) (citing authorities).

294. See id. § 8:58.

295. See id. § 8:21.

296. Exec. Life Ins. of N.Y. v. Alexander Ins., 999 F.2d 318, 320 (8th Cir. 1993).

297. Id.

298. City of Des Plaines v. Metro. All. of Police, Chapter No. 240, 30 N.E.3d 598, 603 (Ill. App. Ct. 2015).

ilar circumstances.[299] Perhaps the best example of this scenario is that while a court may not ignore the applicable law in granting relief to a party, arbitrators making a fair and honest decision do not operate under the same constraint. "As long as the arbitrator is, arguably, construing or applying the contract and acting within the scope of his authority, the fact that a court is convinced he committed serious error does not suffice to overturn his decision."[300]

Courts further advise that the issue is not whether the arbitrator got the contract's meaning right or wrong. The arbitrator's construction will be upheld, no matter "good, bad, or ugly."[301] Putting it more bluntly, no requirement exists for an arbitrator to follow the law in resolving the dispute[302] because courts simply review whether the arbitrator acted within his powers and not whether he did so correctly.[303] The parties contracted for the arbitrator's opinion, so they must live with the consequences of their agreement, however mistaken the arbitrator's decision.[304] A different approach "opens the door to the full-bore legal and evidentiary appeals that can 'rende[r] informal arbitration merely a prelude to a more cumbersome and time-consuming judicial review process.'"[305] Where so inclined, and nothing else appearing, the 299. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-313(a)(2) (2012), cited in D & E Constr. Co. v. Robert J. Denley Co., No. 02A01-9812-CH-00358, 1999 WL 685883, at *3 (Tenn. Ct. App. Sept. 3, 1999); see also Compania Chilena de Navegacion Interoceanica v. Norton, Lilly & Co., 652 F. Supp. 1512, 1516 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (stating that arbitrators have "broad discretion in fashioning remedies" and may grant equitable relief that a court could not).

---

300. Millsaps v. Robertson-Vaughn Constr. Co., 970 S.W.2d 477, 480 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1997) (quoting Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 449 (Tenn. 1996)).

301. S. Commc'ns Servs., Inc. v. Thomas, 720 F.3d 1352, 1360 (11th Cir. 2013).

302. Berglund v. Arthroscopic & Laser Surgery Ctr. Of San Diego, L.P., 187 P.3d 86, 91 (Cal. 2008).

303. Anthony v. Kaplan, 918 S.W.2d 174, 177 (Ark. 1996).

304. Oxford Health Plans L.L.C. v. Sutter, 133 S. Ct. 2064, 2070–71 (2013); United Steelworkers v. Enter. Wheel & Car Corp., 363 U.S. 593, 599 (1960).

305. Hall St. Assocs. v. Mattel, Inc., 552 U.S. 576, 588 (2008) (quoting Kyocera Corp. v. Prudential-Bache Trade Servs., Inc., 341 F.3d 987, 998 (9th Cir. 2003)) (stating the general goal for arbitration).

arbitrator may even decide the case on "broad principles of fairness and equity."[306]

The arbitrator's choice of remedy in vacatur cases merits more deference than his reading of the underlying contract.[307] Thus, if the arbitrator is so inclined, he may order specific performance of the contract.[308] The only exception is that a remedy will be off the table if the arbitration agreement or the parties' submission expressly or implicitly forbids the remedy or if the agreement states that another remedy shall be exclusive.[309] When the claimant receives an award, practitioners, in devising their strategy, should be prepared to suggest beneficial avenues of relief that the arbitrator might otherwise overlook.

F. The Arbitrators Refused to Postpone the Hearing Upon Sufficient Cause or Refused to Hear Material Evidence at the Hearing or Otherwise Conducted the Hearing as to Prejudice Substantially the Rights of a Party (TENN. CODE ANN. Section 29-5-313(a)(1)(D))

1. Party Discretion and Rules of Procedure

Before striking their deal, parties to a prospective arbitration rarely bargain about arbitration terms because few rational parties would enter into a contract they think will descend into disagreement and dispute. To minimize the potential for disputes and other difficulties, many parties in arbitrations employ standard forms and procedures, such as the standard agreements and uniform rules of the American Arbitration Association, the American Bar Association Code of Ethics for Arbitrators in Commercial Disputes, and like organizations. These standard forms alleviate to 306. Payton v. Jackson, 756 S.E.2d 555, 557 (Ga. Ct. App. 2014) (quoting Barron Reed Constr. v. 430 L.L.C., 622 S.E.2d 83, 85 (Ga. Ct. App. 2005)).

---

307. Timegate Studios, Inc. v. Southpeak Interactive, L.L.C., 713 F.3d 797, 803 (5th Cir. 2013) ("The remedy lies beyond the arbitrator's jurisdiction only if there is no rational way to explain the remedy handed down by the arbitrator as a logical means of furthering the aims of the contract." (quoting Executone Info. Sys., Inc. v. Davis, 26 F.3d 1314, 1325 (5th Cir. 1994))).

308. 2 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 35:3 (3d ed. 2013).

309. Sverdrup/ARO, Inc. v. Int'l Assoc. of Machinists, 532 F. Supp. 143, 146 (E.D. Tenn. 1980).

an extent any unfairness or inconsistency potentially resulting from the arbitrator's administration of the applicable procedures. These formats also save parties from predicting what could be issues difficult to forecast at the time of award.[310] Although these rules and procedures "do not have the force of law,"[311] once the claimant and respondent adopt these rules (nothing else appearing), the parties are bound by them.[312]

In arbitration, the parties may agree upon "virtually any procedure they desire" absent illegality or violation of public policy.[313] A rebuttable presumption of fairness attaches to those mutually adopted procedures.[314] Thus, nothing wrong exists with an informal and even relaxed hearing atmosphere.[315] If they choose, parties can dispense with a hearing.[316] They even may provide for a specific arbitration process that would exclude a hearing.[317] Nevertheless, absent such a valid waiver or the failure to provide for a specific arbitration process that lacks a hearing, Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-306 is mandatory on the hearing procedure. This lengthy statute provides in pertinent part: "The parties are entitled to be heard, to present evidence material to the controversy and to cross-examine witnesses appearing at the hearing."[318]

---

310. Alan R. Gilbert, Annotation, Refusal of Arbitrators to Receive Evidence, or to Permit Briefs or Arguments, or Particular Issues as Grounds for Relief from Award, 75 A.L.R.3d 132 (1977). But see 1 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 8:18 (3d ed. 2013) (discussing battle of the forms under U.C.C. 2-207); 21 STEVEN W. FELDMAN, TENNESSEE PRACTICE SERIES: CONTRACT LAW AND PRACTICE §§ 4:34 to 4:36 (2006) (discussing Tennessee law on U.C.C. 2-207).

311. Merit Ins. v. Leatherby Ins., 714 F.2d 673, 680 (7th Cir. 1983).

312. See Reeves Bros., Inc. v. Capital Mercury Shirt Corp., 962 F. Supp. 408, 411 (S.D.N.Y. 1997); see also 1 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION, §§ 5:1 TO 5:21 (3d ed. 2013) (giving an overview of arbitrator ethical considerations).

313. Searcy v. Herold, No. M2003-02037-COA-R3-CV, 2005 WL 2387159, at *3 (Tenn. Ct. App. Sept. 28, 2005) (citing Team Design v. Gottlieb, 104 S.W.3d 512, 517–18 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2002)).

314. Woods v. Saturn Distrib. Corp., 78 F.3d 424, 428 (9th Cir. 1996).

315. Remmey v. PaineWebber, Inc., 32 F.3d 143, 148–49 (4th Cir. 1994).

316. See 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:94 (4th ed. 2001) (addressing a party's waiver of a hearing).

317. Id.

318. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-306(2) (2012).

In essence, the statutory hearing promised by TUAA in Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-306 will become a contract term implied by law irrespective of its physical omission from the agreement.[319] By contrast, while a party has no pre-hearing statutory right to discovery of potentially relevant evidence,[320] where the parties' agreement provides for discovery or the arbitrator otherwise allows discovery, an arbitrator's prejudicial discovery rulings can be grounds for vacatur when they were in bad faith or so grossly incorrect as to amount to affirmative misconduct.[321]

2. Burden of Proof

Where the party alleges that the arbitrator acted improperly in failing to postpone the hearing for what the party deemed to be good cause—which is grounds for complaint under Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(D)—the burden of proof is high. In addition to showing that the arbitrator's decision "substantially prejudiced" the party's rights, the movant must show that the alleged arbitral misconduct stemmed from bad faith or gross error and caused the denial of "fundamental fairness" of the arbitration itself.[322]

The burden is high in part because courts give arbitrators "a degree of discretion" in deciding whether to grant a requested

---

319. See generally Wasco, Inc. v. R.P. Indus., No. 01-A-01-9407-CH00343, 1994 WL 706663, at *3 (Tenn. Ct. App. Dec. 21, 1994) ("Laws affecting either the construction, enforcement or discharge of a contract which subsist at the time and place of the making of a contract and where it is to be performed, enter into and form part of it as fully as if they had been expressly referred to or incorporated in its terms."); see also 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:24 (4th ed. 2001) ("In statutory arbitration, the terms of the statute are by implication a part of the arbitration agreement.").

320. Reece v. U.S. Bancorp Piper Jaffray, Inc., 80 P.3d 1088, 1092 (Idaho 2003).

321. See United Paperworkers Int'l Union v. Misco, Inc., 484 U.S. 29, 40 (1987) (reversing the lower court's granting of a motion to vacate because, even assuming "that the arbitrator erred in refusing to consider the disputed evidence, his error was not in bad faith or so gross as to amount to affirmative misconduct").

322. Bisnoff v. King, 154 F. Supp. 2d 630, 635–37 (S.D.N.Y. 2001); Transit Cas. Co. v. Trenwick Reinsurance Co., 659 F. Supp. 1346, 1354 (S.D.N.Y. 1987).

postponement.[323] The movant also must show by clear and convincing proof that the arbitrator abused that discretion insofar as his decision precluded the party from making a full presentation of its case[324] by foreclosing "pertinent and material evidence."[325] The other reason the burden is high is that, with fewer procedural rules, arbitrators can conduct the proceedings quicker and cheaper.[326]

3. Arbitrator Discretion in Allowing Evidence

Cases construing a similar ground for vacatur under the FAA or the Uniform Arbitration Act illustrate the narrow scope of the policy of Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(D) in regard to the receipt of evidence. Because arbitrators are not required to follow "all the niceties" observed in conventional litigation,[327] the rules of evidence are typically relaxed in arbitration hearings.[328] Thus, for example, arbitrators are not bound by the parol evidence rule,[329] and hearsay proof can be proper.[330] Accordingly, the arbi-

---

323. Naing Int'l Enters. v. Ellsworth Assocs., 961 F. Supp. 1, 3 (D.D.C. 1997).

324. Roe v. Cargille, Inc., 333 F. Supp. 2d 808, 815 (W.D. Ark. 2004).

325. Naing, 961 F. Supp. at 3.

326. Ebasco Constructors, Inc. v. Ahtna, Inc., 932 P.2d 1312, 1315–16 (Alaska 1997) (stating that the review of an arbitrator's procedural decisions should be extremely deferential and observing that challenges are rarely successful to arbitrator determinations to deny a continuance); see also Sheet Metal Workers Int'l Ass'n Local No. 162 v. Jason Mfg., Inc., 900 F.2d 1392, 1398 (9th Cir. 1990) (observing that a party must have good cause for requesting a continuance but that the "arbitrary denial" of a continuance request "may" serve as a ground for vacatur). For the Tennessee decisions on a trial court's discretion to rule on a motion for continuance, an apt analogy in arbitration cases, see Box v. Gardner, No. W2012-00631-COA-R3-CV, 2012 WL 6697579, at *3 (Tenn. Ct. App. Dec. 26, 2012).

327. Tempo Shain Corp. v. Bertek, Inc., 120 F.3d 16, 20 (2d Cir. 1997) (quoting Bell Aerospace Co. Div. of Textron v. Local 516, 500 F.2d 921, 923 (2d Cir. 1974)).

328. Bordonaro v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, 805 N.E.2d 1138, 1140 (Ohio Ct. App. 2004).

329. Dominick & Dominick, Inc. v. Inv'r Servs. & Savs. Corp., No. 86 Civ. 7265 (MGC), 1991 WL 143716, at *6 (S.D.N.Y. 1991).

330. Barker v. Gov't Emps. Ins., 339 F. Supp. 1064, 1067 (D.D.C. 1972) (quoting Petroleum Separating Co. v. Interamerican Ref. Corp., 296 F.2d 124, 124 (2d Cir. 1961)).

trator's use of the wrong evidentiary standard or his acceptance of evidence otherwise inadmissible in court will not necessarily justify vacatur.[331]

This policy for relaxed procedural rules dates back to the common law of arbitration.[332] Courts are lenient in this area because parties typically select arbitrators for their special skill or knowledge of the subject matter, not necessarily for their legal acumen.[333] Indeed, the parties may select arbitrators for the very reason that they may need little or no evidence to make a particular finding on either the fact of liability or compensation due the claimant:

> In general, arbitrators who are selected because of their special fitness or knowledge may, in the absence of other restrictions, rely wholly or partly on their knowledge or on information they may possess. Unlike a court or jury, which is to rely only on the facts presented by witnesses at a trial, arbitrators may draw on their personal knowledge in making an award. Thus, evidence need not necessarily be heard where experts are chosen as arbitrators and the parties rely on the knowledge of those experts in making the award.[334]

A related issue is that arbitrators have no requirement to allow parties the leeway to introduce every item of relevant proof; the guidance is that the arbitrators need only have "enough evidence to make an informed decision."[335] Therefore, arbitrators

---

331. State Dep't of Ins. v. First Floridian Auto & Home Ins., 803 So. 2d 771, 776 (Fla. Dis. Ct. App. 2001). Cf. Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. v. Deislinger, 711 S.W.2d 771, 772 (Ark. 1986) (noting that the mere exclusion of evidence otherwise admissible in court is not grounds for vacatur); City of Fairbanks Mun. Utils. Sys. v. Lees, 705 P.2d 457, 461 (Alaska 1985) (stating that the exclusion of evidence is grounds for vacatur when the result is the "complete omission of critical evidence").

332. See Ryan v. Reed Air Filter Co., 11 Tenn. App. 472 (1930).

333. 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:79 (4th ed. 2001).

334. Id.

335. A.S. Seateam v. Texaco Pan., Inc., No. 97 CIV. 0214(MBM), 1997 WL 256949, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. May 16, 1997).

have "broad discretion" to decide whether additional evidence is necessary or would merely prolong the proceedings.[336] As just indicated, courts will balance the policies of arbitrators' needing sufficient evidence to make an informed decision versus the policy against compromising the speed and efficiency of arbitration.[337]

The upshot is that arbitrators are not bound to hear all of the evidence that the party wishes them to consider; however, the arbitral panel must give each of the parties to the dispute, consistent with a party's right to a "fair hearing," an adequate opportunity to present its evidence and arguments.[338] Even when the evidence is pertinent, material, and admissible, a reviewing court considering a requested vacatur based on the arbitrator's exclusion of such evidence must find that the arbitrator's exclusion was both prejudicial to the proffering party and inconsistent with fundamental fairness.[339] "Prejudice" in this context means that the moving party must show that, but for the arbitrator's mistaken ruling on the receipt of evidence, the arbitrator should have made a different 336. 563 Grand Med. P.C. v. N.Y. State Ins. Dep't, 787 N.Y.S.2d 613, 616 (N.Y. 2004); see also Lessin v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 481 F.3d 813, 817 (D.C. Cir. 2007) (stating that an arbitrator has the authority to decide whether proffered evidence is merely cumulative).

---

337. See Areca, Inc. v. Oppenheimer & Co., 960 F. Supp. 52, 54–55 (S.D.N.Y. 1997).

338. Forsythe Int'l, S.A. v. Gibbs Oil Co. of Tex., 915 F.2d 1017, 1023 (5th Cir. 1990); Hoteles Condado Beach v. Union De Tronquistas Local 901, 763 F.2d 34, 39 (1st Cir. 1985); see also Hall v. Cable Lock Found. Repair, Inc., 80 So. 3d 1157, 1161 (La. Ct. App. 2011) (stating that an arbitrator has discretion on whether to qualify a witness as an expert).

339. Emp'rs Ins. of Wausau v. Nat'l Fire Ins., 933 F.2d 1481, 1490 (7th Cir. 1991) ("[A] showing of prejudice is a prerequisite to relief based on an arbitration panel's evidentiary rulings."); Sherrock Bros. v. DaimlerChrysler Motor Co., 465 F. Supp. 2d 384, 394 (M.D. Pa. 2006) ("[O]nly the most egregious error which adversely affects the rights of [a] party constitutes misconduct in refusing to hear evidence pertinent and material to the controversy." (quoting Grosso v. Barney, No. 03-MC-115, 2003 WL 22657305, at *6 (E.D. Pa. Oct. 24, 2003))); AT&T Corp. v. Tyco Telecomm. (U.S.) Inc., 255 F. Supp. 2d 294, 303 (S.D.N.Y. 2003); see also Shearson Hayden Stone Inc. v. Liang, 653 F.2d 310, 313 (7th Cir. 1981) ("The Arbitration Act does not allow vacation of an award for new evidence."); Nationwide Mut. Ins. v. First State Ins., 213 F. Supp. 2d 10, 19 (D. Mass. 2002) (stating that there is no requirement for arbitrators to consider newly discovered evidence).

award.[340] Accordingly, courts will grant vacatur on this ground only with "the most egregious error" that prejudices the aggrieved party's right to a fair hearing.[341] Notably, such error does not include allegations based on newly discovered evidence.[342]

Some special rules govern in this area. One rule of evidence peculiar to arbitration cases is that an arbitrator's award in a prior arbitration case—even between the same parties—is not necessarily precedential and does not preclude either party from raising the same issues subsequently.[343] Another requirement is that, to preserve a ground of error in anticipation of a hearing in court, the aggrieved party, during the proceeding, must have made clear its objection and tendered an offer of proof during the arbitration process.[344] Reviewing courts will not consider challenges to an arbitrator's findings on witness credibility.[345]

Another predicate for preserving an argument for judicial review is that the record must show that the appellant requested this opportunity to submit additional evidence and the arbitrator denied the movant this right.[346] Thus, in a 2000 Tennessee Court of Appeals decision, the appellant argued that it had witnesses ready to testify and that the arbitration panel improperly refused to hear this evidence.[347] The problem for the plaintiff was that the record failed to show that the plaintiff requested this opportunity to

---

340. Emp'rs Ins. of Wausau, 933 F.2d at 1490.

341. Hunt v. Mobil Oil Corp., 654 F. Supp. 1487, 1512 (S.D.N.Y. 1987).

342. 2 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 38:26 (3d ed. 2013).

343. See Westvaco Corp. v. Local 579, United Paperworkers, Int'l Union, Civ. A. No. 90-30091-F, 1992 WL 121372, at *7 (D. Mass. Mar. 5, 1992).

344. See Terk Techs. Corp. v. Dockery, 86 F. Supp. 2d 706, 709 (E.D. Mich. 2000); Farm Constr. Serv., Inc. v. Robinson, 487 N.E.2d 873, 873 (Mass. Ct. App. 1986); Alan R. Gilbert, Annotation, Refusal of Arbitrators to Receive Evidence, or to Permit Briefs or Arguments, on Particular Issues as Grounds for Relief from Award, 75 A.L.R.3d 132 (1977).

345. Fairbanks Mun. Utils. Sys. v. Lees, 705 P.2d 457, 462 (Alaska 1985) (stating that, absent a showing of corruption, fraud, or undue means in obtaining an arbitration award, an arbitrator's failure to consider credibility evidence pertaining to a party is insufficient to establish vacatur).

346. Rebound Care Corp. v. Universal Constructors, Inc., No. M1999-00868-COA-R3-CV, 2000 WL 758610, at *8 (Tenn. Ct. App. June 13, 2000).

347. Id.

present the witnesses or that the panel ruled to the contrary.[348] Accordingly, the court of appeals rejected the appellant's assignment of error.

This ground from Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(D) is sometimes closely related to the ground that the arbitrator was guilty of misconduct at the proceedings as provided in Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(B). Thus, in other jurisdictions, courts have upheld vacation of an award where the arbitrator improperly and prejudicially refused to grant an adjournment at the hearing, thereby preventing the party from submitting material evidence on its behalf.[349] These cases also would be sound authority in Tennessee.

G. No Arbitration Agreement Existed and the Issue was Not Adversely Determined at the Proceeding and the Party Participating in the Hearing Raised an Objection (TENN. CODE ANN. Section 29-5-313(a)(1)(E))

In Louisiana Safety Systems, Inc. v. Tengasco, the Tennessee Court of Appeals explained vacatur as allowed under Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(E):[350]

> The purpose behind the statute is straightforward. The statute prohibits a party from claiming no arbitration agreement exists without first giving the trial court or the arbitrator an opportunity to decide before arbitration whether an arbitration agreement does in fact exist. . . . Once an unfavorable award was made, [a party] cannot then claim there was no agreement to arbitrate. Litigants are not allowed to submit issues to arbitration without objecting on the basis that no arbitration agreement exists, and then object if an adverse award is handed down. Such a

---

348. Id.

349. See 4 AM. JUR. 2D Alternative Dispute Resolution § 218 (2014) (citing Woodco Mfg. Corp. v. G.R. & R. Mfg., Inc., 378 N.Y.S.2d 504 (N.Y. App. Div. 1976)).

350. No. E2000-03021-COA-R3-CV, 2001 WL 1105395 (Tenn. Ct. App. Sept. 21, 2001).

> "lie and wait" attitude would eviscerate the arbitration process.[351]

If the arbitration agreement were voidable at the option of the party, such as where an infant lacks capacity and does not ratify the transaction, this circumstance would be an example of "no arbitration agreement" under the statute.[352] Regarding the theory of vacatur, a party waives any claimed error made during the course of arbitration by failing to voice a specific objection before the arbitrator.[353]

H. Common Law (Non-Statutory) Grounds for Vacatur

Tennessee has a long history of arbitration rules and procedures. These decisions predate the TUAA by many years with cases decided well before the turn of the 20th century. The question becomes whether the common law grounds for vacatur from that era are good law in the 21st century.

The status of common law, as opposed to statutory, arbitration is uncertain in Tennessee. The 1968 Tennessee Supreme Court case of Meirowsky v. Phipps[354] upheld the common law rule that a party can revoke an agreement to arbitrate future disputes at any time before the arbitrator has rendered a valid award. The Tennessee Supreme Court as late as 1976 fully endorsed Meirowsky.[355] Notably, the cases yet to be overruled show Tennessee courts have applied common law arbitration since the early nineteenth century (as will be seen below).[356] It also follows that if 351. Id. at *6; see also Anderson Cty. v. Architectural Techniques Corp., No. 03A01-9303-CH-00110, 1993 WL 346473, at *5 (Tenn. Ct. App. Sept. 9, 1993) ("There [was] no proof in this record that the appellants 'did not participate in the arbitration hearing without raising the objection' [that there was no arbitration agreement].").

---

352. 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:136 (4th ed. 2001).

353. Id. at § 57:95.

354. 432 S.W.2d 885, 887 (Tenn. 1968) (stating that with existing disputes, a party could be subject to an action for damages for breach of the agreement).

355. Cavalier Ins. v. Osment, 538 S.W.2d 399, 403 (Tenn. 1976). For additional discussion of common law arbitration, see 4 AM. JUR. 2D Alternative Dispute Resolution § 207 (2014).

356. See infra notes 379–93 and accompanying text.

common law arbitration survives, then common law grounds for vacatur remain viable.

Prior to TUAA, the Tennessee Supreme Court in a 1974 decision approved the long-standing notion of common law arbitration with regard to agreements to arbitrate future disputes.[357] Accordingly, where the agreement to arbitrate was never entered of record in any court, "[t]he common law is applicable."[358] In the last case to consider the continuing vitality of Meirowsky, the Tennessee Supreme Court in 1982 did not address this question.[359] Notably, when the Tennessee Supreme Court issued *Meirowsk*y, as well as in earlier decisions,[360] common law arbitration coexisted with a pre-TUAA statutory program on arbitration for existing disputes.[361] This line of authority—which has not been overruled—indicates that the Tennessee Supreme Court sees no inherent conflict with a dual track system of common law and statutory arbitral remedies—including vacatur.

Recent pronouncements from Tennessee appellate decisions are that TUAA's legislative intent is to "severely limit judicial review of arbitration awards" and to limit the grounds for vacatur to the express grounds in the statutes.[362] These observations would tend to indicate that the common law version of arbitration (and common law vacatur) is extinct and supplanted by statute. In 357. Jackson v. Chambers, 510 S.W.2d 74 (Tenn. 1974).

---

358. Id. at 76.

359. Tenn. River Pulp & Paper Co. v. Eichleay Corp., 637 S.W.2d 853, 856 (Tenn. 1982). A modern day Tennessee decision appears to leave open the possibility of common law arbitration. See Cannon Cty. Bd. of Educ. v. Wade, No. M2006-02001-COA-R3-CV, 2008 WL 3069466, at *5 n.6 (Tenn. Ct. App. July 31, 2008) ("[W]e need not resolve the question of [whether common law] standards . . . apply in lieu of those established in statute or opinions based on statute.").

360. See infra notes 379–93 and accompanying text.

361. TENN. CODE ANN. §§ 29-5-301 to -320 (2012).

362. Warbington Constr., Inc. v. Franklin Landmark, L.L.C., 66 S.W.3d 853, 858 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2001); Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 450 (Tenn. 1996). In Tuetken v. Tuetken, 320 S.W.3d 262, 270 (Tenn. 2010), the Tennessee Supreme Court reaffirmed its holding in Pugh's Lawn Landscape Co. v. Jaycon Dev. Corp., 320 S.W.3d 252 (Tenn. 2010), stating: "We take this opportunity to reaffirm our holding in Pugh's that the judicial review of an arbitrator's award is confined to the grounds enumerated in the TUAA." Tueken, 320 S.W.3d at 270.

actuality, a number of sister court decisions have considered this precise question on the relation of common law and statutory arbitration. The cases are of two minds on this point.

Some jurisdictions hold that because arbitration statutes are in derogation of the common law and shall be strictly construed, common law (non-statutory) grounds are not available.[363] Some policy reasons for this position are that there would be increased judicial disapproval of awards and that even the prospect of greater judicial disapproval would increase costs, reduce efficiencies, and undermine the finality of arbitration awards.[364] The many definitions of common law arbitration would also increase the difficulty of deciding whether such a basis for vacatur has merit.[365]

As will be explained in greater detail below,[366] the better view is that common law arbitration (and common law vacatur) survives in Tennessee as a supplement to statutory arbitration. A more searching review based on the common law could properly serve as a basis for vacating or modifying arbitration awards. As the United States Supreme Court in its 2008 decision of Hall Street Associates, L.L.C. v. Mattel, Inc.[367] said, "The FAA is not the only way into court for parties wanting review of arbitration awards: they may contemplate enforcement under state statutory or common law, for example, where judicial review of different scope is arguable."[368] Because the Tennessee Supreme Court in 2010 specifically endorsed the Hall Street reasoning and rationale in Pugh's Lawn Landscape Co. v. Jaycon Development Corp.[369] as a "guide" for Tennessee arbitration jurisprudence, a good argument exists that if the common law arbitration (and vacatur) theory survives at the federal level, it continues to co-exist as a form of non-statutory vacatur under Tennessee law.

---

363. 4 AM. JUR. 2D Alternative Dispute Resolution § 207 (2014).

364. Coors Brewing Co. v. Cabo, 114 P.3d 60, 65 (Colo. App. 2004).

365. Id. at 61.

366. See infra notes 371–78 and accompanying text.

367. 552 U.S. 576 (2008).

368. Id. at 590 (emphasis added).

369. 320 S.W.3d 252, 258 (Tenn. 2010); see also id. at 259 ("Parties 'may contemplate enforcement under state statutory or common law, for example, where judicial review of different scope is arguable.'" (quoting Hall St. Assocs., 552 U.S. at 590).

Although no post-TUAA decision squarely addresses the point, this conclusion in favor of dual track statutory and common law arbitration (and vacatur) rests on settled rules of Tennessee statutory construction. As stated by a respected authority, where a state law abolishes common law arbitration, common law arbitration is no longer viable, but where no repeal or modification is evident from the legislation, "that state continues to recognize common law arbitration."[370] This is exactly what happened with TUAA, which is silent on any wholesale abolishment of the common law remedy of arbitration. Indeed, as far back as 1873, in considering whether common law arbitration survived the enactment of a statutory arbitration regime, the Tennessee Supreme Court explicitly answered the question in the affirmative—and the case has never been overruled.[371]

While as indicated above, the issue of common law arbitration is very much open in Tennessee, the most reliable guide to legislative intent is if the relevant statute does not abrogate the common law action, the remedies become cumulative.[372] Our courts have stated, "[W]here a common law right exists, and a statutory remedy is subsequently created, the statutory remedy is cumulative unless expressly stated otherwise." Further, the Legislature is presumed to know the state of the law on the subject under consideration at the time it enacts legislation.[373] Applying these precepts solves the conundrum because TUAA has no express repeal of the common law arbitral remedy.

---

370. 1 THOMAS H. OEHMKE & JOAN M. BROVINS, COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 4:8 (2014).

371. Meirowsky v. Phipps, 432 S.W.2d 885, 886 (Tenn. 1968); Halliburton v. Flowers, 59 Tenn. 25 (1873) (holding that the provisions of the Code as to arbitration have added to, not abrogated, the common law upon the subject). See generally 6 C.J.S. Arbitration §§ 4, 7 (2014) (noting rule in some jurisdictions that statutory arbitration does not abrogate common law arbitration but that the statutory and common law methods of arbitration are distinct, concurrent, supplementary, and cumulative remedies aiming at the same result); 1 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 6:2 (3d ed. 2013); Sturges & Reckson, Common-Law and Statutory Arbitration: Problems Arising from Their Coexistence, 46 MINN. L. REV. 819 (1962).

372. Halliburton, 59 Tenn. at 25.

373. Hodges v. S.C. Toof & Co., 833 S.W.2d 896, 899 (Tenn. 1992). The legislature frequently provides that a given statutory remedy is exclusive, but it did not make this statement for TUAA. See id. at 899 n.1.

For the same reasons, where statutory and common law arbitration co-exist, a party may be entitled to invoke common law arbitration (and vacatur) where statutory arbitration is unavailable.[374] Importantly, where the agreement to arbitrate does not clearly address whether the arbitration statute or the common law doctrine applies, "[t]hen common law rules control the review of an award."[375] Adding further weight to these arguments, several respected commentaries classify Tennessee as recognizing common law arbitration.[376]

Perhaps the most compelling argument why common law arbitration (and vacatur) survive in Tennessee comes from the history of the Uniform Arbitration Act, which was first promulgated in 1955 and which the General Assembly adopted in TUAA (Tennessee has not enacted the Revised Uniform Arbitration Act of 2000). As one authority observes,

> The Uniform Arbitration Act (UAA) 1955 did not explicitly either preserve or exclude common-law arbitration; it was simply silent on the subject. Significantly, however, the Committee of the Whole on the Uniform Arbitration Act stated that the Uniform Act was not intended to abrogate common-law arbitration. Thus, the general rule remains that existing 374. 1 THOMAS H. OEHMKE & JOAN M. BROVINS, COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 4:8 (2014). For one state's experience recognizing the dual track system, see L.H. Lacy Co. v. City of Lubbock, 559 S.W.2d 348, 351 (Tex. 1977) ("[C]ommon law arbitration continues to be a viable alternative to the statutory method."); Blue Cross Blue Shield of Tex. v. Juneau, 114 S.W.3d 126, 134 n.5 (Tex. Ct. App. 2003) (discussing that common law arbitration was never abolished, however, although arbitration agreements are presumed to arise under the statute unless the parties provide otherwise); Monday v. Cox, 881 S.W.2d 381, 385 n.1 (Tex. Ct. App. 1994); see also Wold Architects & Eng'rs v. Strat, 713 N.W.2d 750 (Mich. 2006).

---

375. 1 THOMAS H. OEHMKE & JOAN M. BROVINS, COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 4:8 (2014).; see 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:7 (4th ed. 2001).

376. 1 THOMAS H. OEHMKE & JOAN M. BROVINS, COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 4:8 (2014) (citing Jackson v. Chambers, 510 S.W.2d 74 (Tenn. 1974)); see also 3 TENN. JUR. Arbitration and Award § 2 ("However the statutes have added to and not abrogated the common law on this subject.").

> common-law remedies are not abrogated unless such an intention is clearly expressed.[377]

As mentioned above, the Tennessee General Assembly has never repealed common law arbitration, which means a strong argument exists that the usual principle of preserving both the common law and statutory procedures remain alive and well in Tennessee. Practitioners should strongly consider the strategy of arguing in the alternative that common law vacatur is a basis for overturning an arbitral award—even when they participate in TUAA proceedings.

What, then, are the contours of common law arbitration and its vacatur component in Tennessee? The principles from common law arbitration closely resemble many TUAA concepts. This correspondence explains why contemporary courts in TUAA decisions continue to cite cases relying on common law arbitration rules.[378] Perhaps the most fundamental refrain that has current day resonance is this quote from an 1874 Tennessee Supreme Court decision: "[A]rbitrators have no authority to go in their inquiries beyond the powers delegated by the terms of the submission."[379] In other examples of common law arbitration doctrines that could also support or oppose vacatur (some of which are either very similar or dissimilar to TUAA grounds), earlier Tennessee court decisions stated:

---

377. THOMAS H. OEHMKE & JOAN M. BROVINS, Arbitration Award Vacatur & Confirmation at Common Law—A 21st Century Option, 112 AM. JUR. Trials 365 (2009) (emphasis added) (examining common law arbitration in comparison to statutory arbitration, including grounds for overturning an arbitral award).

378. See, e.g., Team Design v. Gottlieb, 104 S.W.3d 512, 518 n.7 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2002) (citing Jocelyn v. Donnel, 7 Tenn. (Peck) 274, 275 (1823)).

379. Mays v. Myatt, 62 Tenn. 309 (1874); see also Smith v. Kincaid, 26 Tenn. 28, 28–29 (1846) (stating that where parties to a suit submit the matter in controversy to arbitration, the arbitrators can make no award on matters not involved in the suit, except by express agreement of the parties). But see TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-313(a)(1)(C) (2012) (allowing vacatur when the arbitrator "exceeded [his] powers").

(1) A party waives an objection to a disqualified arbitrator by appearing before the board and taking part in the arbitration without objection;[380]

(2) An arbitration award is not required to itemize the findings, unless the parties agree otherwise in their submission;[381]

(3) If the arbitrators depart from the parties' agreement in a material way or fail to act as a body, an arbitration award can be void;[382]

(4) If the parties' arbitration agreement states that the arbitrators are required to comply with the applicable law, a reviewing court is authorized to determine whether the arbitrators have drawn the proper legal conclusions;[383]

---

380. Graham v. Bates, 45 S.W. 465, 466 (Tenn. Ch. App. 1898); see also Dougherty v. McWhorter, 15 Tenn. 239 (1934) (participating party did not object in a proceeding where the arbitrator was a relative of the opposing party).

381. Graham, 45 S.W. at 466.

382. Palmer v. Van Wyck, 21 S.W. 761, 761–64 (Tenn. 1893); Reynolds v. Reynolds, 15 Ala. 398, 403 (1849) (following common law rule). But see Memphis & Charleston R.R. Co. v. Pillow, 56 Tenn. 248, 249–54 (1872) (stating that all arbitrators must concur in an award to make it binding, unless the parties' agreement says otherwise); Smith v. Kincaid, 26 Tenn. 28, 28–29 (1846) (noting that arbitrators cannot make an award on matters not involved in a lawsuit except where based on the parties' express agreement); Toomey v. Nichols, 53 Tenn. 159, 162 (1871) (stating that an award is a nullity unless it strictly conforms to the submission, and the judgment is a nullity unless it conforms to the award).

383. Galbraith v. Lunsford, 9 S.W. 365, 366 (Tenn. 1888); Powell v. Riley, 83 Tenn. 153, 156 (1885); see also Nance's Lessee v. Thompson, 33 Tenn. 321, 325 (1953) (noting that an award may be set aside where the arbitrators attempt to decide a mixed question of law and fact, and the award shows on its face that they have mistaken the law); State v. Ward, 56 Tenn. (9 Heisk.) 100, 116 (1871) (stating that if the parties' agreement states that arbitrators will follow the law, then if the arbitrators clearly mistake the law, the award may be set aside); Fain v. Headrick, 44 Tenn. (4 Cold.) 327 (1867) (supporting a similar statement); Conger v. James, 32 Tenn. (2 Swan) 213, 216 (1852) (supporting a similar statement). But see Jocelyn v. Donnel, 7 Tenn. (Peck) 274, 274–75 (1823) (stating that arbitrators are to decide the case based on their own notions of equity and conscience and are not restricted to legal precedents or positive rules of law); id. (holding that a court may set aside an award where evidence exists of the receipt of "illegal evidence").

(5) A reviewing court may overturn an award based on a charge of arbitrator partiality;[384]
(6) The proof must be clear and conclusive that an arbitrator has issued an award tainted by arbitrator corruption and misconduct;[385]
(7) Arbitrators have greater discretion than law courts in deciding disputes;[386] and
(8) Parties cannot agree to judicial review that contradicts the rules of arbitration.[387]

Common law arbitration could favor either party to the case. An award that a court might deem voidable under TUAA because it fails to comply with its provisions could be valid (and enforceable) under the common law.[388] A respected commentator observes:

> [W]here an arbitration agreement falls within the scope of the arbitration statute of a state, and is enforceable under the statute, it is not necessary to decide whether the agreement is enforceable under common law, but an award that may be voidable under the statute because it fails to comply with its provisions may be valid under the common law.[389]

The common-law grounds for vacating an arbitration award are fraud, misconduct, or gross mistake. The meaning of fraud and misconduct are evident enough whereas a gross mistake is a mis-

---

384. Butler v. Boyles, 29 Tenn. (10 Hum.) 155, 155 (1849) (recognizing ground but rejecting plaintiff's allegation on the facts).

385. Hardeman v. Burge, 18 Tenn. (10 Yer.) 202, 205 (1836). But see Dougherty v. McWhorter, 15 Tenn. (7 Yer.) 239 (1834) (finding that evidence of corruption was insufficient).

386. Ezell v. Shannon, 3 Tenn. Cas. 609, 611 (1875).

387. Bone v. Rice, 38 Tenn. (1 Head.) 149, 151–52 (1858).

388. 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:24 (4th ed. 2001). For additional discussion of the common law principles of arbitration, with some slight variations between the jurisdictions, see Thomas H. Oehmke. & Joan M. Brovins, Arbitration Award Vacatur & Confirmation at Common Law—A 21st Century Option, 112 AM. JUR. Trials 365 (2009).

389. 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:24 (4th ed. 2001).

take that implies bad faith or a failure to exercise honest judgment and results in a decision that is arbitrary and capricious. No matter how erroneous, when the arbitrator's judgment is based on honest consideration of conflicting claims, this decision will not be arbitrary and capricious.[390] The sharpest conflict between common law and statutory arbitration is the principle that in common law arbitration, if the agreement says the arbitrator will adhere to the law and he does not, the decision will necessarily be improper, but the rule is the opposite in statutory arbitration.[391]

Many court decisions construing the FAA have followed what a number of modern-day courts consider to be two common law (judge-originated) grounds for reviewing an arbitration award: (1) the award occurred in "manifest disregard of the law" or (2) the award violated the public policy of the local state jurisdiction.[392] These two lines of authority merit extended discussion in the sections below.

I. "Manifest Disregard of the Law"

In numerous decisions, federal and state courts have addressed whether a party may allege grounds for vacatur above and beyond the explicit statutory reasons. The chief area of disagreement is whether a claimant may file a valid vacatur complaint because the arbitrator's decision was in "manifest disregard of the law."

One source of confusion is that several variations exist for this theory of overturning an arbitral award. Nevertheless, a working definition of "manifest disregard of the law" is that

> A successful challenge . . . depends upon the challenger's ability to show that the award is "(1) unfounded in reason and fact; (2) based on reasoning so palpably faulty that no judge, or group of judges, ever could conceivably have made such a ruling; or

---

390. Werline v. E. Tex. Salt Water Disposal Co., 209 S.W.3d 888, 897–98 (Tex. App. 2006).

391. See Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 450 (Tenn. 1996).

392. See Warbington Constr., Inc. v. Franklin Landmark, L.L.C., 66 S.W.3d 853, 857–58 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2001).

> (3) mistakenly based on a crucial assumption that is concededly a non-fact."[393]

Another well-known principle within the "manifest disregard of the law" doctrine in vacatur cases is that "manifest disregard" is not "mere error in the law or failure on the part of the arbitrators to understand or apply the law" but "may be found if the arbitrator understood and correctly stated the law but proceeded to ignore it."[394]

In 2008, before the United States Supreme Court decided Hall Street Associates, L.L.C. v. Mattel, Inc.,[395] the federal circuits were split on whether the FAA grounds for judicial review are exclusive or whether the common law "manifest disregard of the law" theory is viable (addressed below).[396] Much controversy continues to surround the availability of this common law rule—there are even indications the rule is statutory and not common law.[397]

The United States Supreme Court in Hall Street decided the FAA provides the exclusive criteria for review of arbitration awards and disallows parties from expanding or heightening the scope of review by agreement to permit, among other matters, the manifest disregard theory.[398] At the same time, the Court left the door ajar for such expanded agreements outside the FAA when it said that federal law does not preclude states from using "more searching review based on authority outside the [federal] statute," 393. Advest, Inc. v. McCarthy, 914 F.2d 6, 8–9 (1st Cir. 1990) (quoting Local 1445, United Food and Commercial Workers v. Stop & Shop Cos., 776 F.2d 19, 21 (1st Cir. 1985)). The same Advest decision states a different standard for the same concept: "[T]here must be some showing in the record, other than the result obtained, that the arbitrators knew the law and expressly disregarded it." Id. at 9 (quoting O.R. Secs., Inc. v. Prof'l Planning Assocs., 857 F.2d 742, 747 (11th Cir. 1988)).

---

394. Willemijn Houdstermaatschappij, BV v. Standard Microsystems Corp., 103 F.3d 9, 12 (2d Cir. 1997) (citations omitted).

395. 552 U.S. 576 (2008).

396. See infra notes 530–38 and accompanying text.

397. In at least one circuit, the court defined the quoted phrase "so narrowly that it fits comfortably under the first clause of the fourth statutory ground—'where the arbitrators exceeded their powers' . . . [because] we have confined it to cases in which arbitrators 'direct the parties to violate the law.'" Wise v. Wachovia Sec., L.L.C., 450 F.3d 265, 268–69 (7th Cir. 2006) (citing decisions).

398. Hall St. Assocs., 552 U.S. at 583–87.

including "state statutory or common law."[399] The California Supreme Court has used this qualification to hold that under state law, a court may review the merits of an arbitration award where the contracting parties expressly agree that the arbitrators have no authority to commit errors of law and a reviewing court may vacate the award or correct it on appeal for legal error.[400]

In a comprehensive opinion, the Mississippi Supreme Court, in Robinson v. Henne,[401] has construed the viability of the manifest disregard of the law exception after Hall Street. The Robinson court summarized the United States Supreme Court's holding as making clear that if the manifest disregard doctrine is still viable, it is not a common law authority, but must come within the terms of the FAA.[402] Because the Supreme Court in Hall Street stated that "maybe the term 'manifest disregard' . . . merely referred to the statutory grounds collectively, rather than adding to them,"[403] the Robinson decision observed that this lack of clarity in Hall Street has resulted in the federal circuits having reached differing conclusions on whether such grounds are allowed in vacatur cases.[404] The Robinson court further noted that state courts also have gone both ways on the issue.[405]

The next source of confusion is that the United States Supreme Court, in its decisions post-Hall Street, has said it has yet to decide whether the manifest disregard doctrine is viable. In the most recent pronouncement, Stolt-Nielsen S.A. v. AnimalFeds International Corp., the United States Supreme Court observed, "We do not decide whether 'manifest disregard' survives our decision in [Hall Street] as an independent grounds for review or as a judicial

399. Id. at 590 (emphasis added).

400. See Cable Connection, Inc. v. DIRECTV, Inc., 190 P.3d 586, 604 (Cal. 2008).

401. 115 So. 3d 797 (Miss. 2013).

402. Id. at 801 (citing cases).

403. Hall St. Assocs., 552 U.S. at 585.

404. Robinson, 115 So. 3d at 801 (analyzing decisions).

405. Id. at 800–02 ("State courts have split on the question with some jurisdictions applying the reasoning to their own state arbitration statutes. Texas, Alabama, and New York no longer recognize the doctrine, but California, Wisconsin, and Georgia still believe it to be valid.") (analyzing Hall St. Assocs., 552 U.S. at 584).

gloss on the enumerated grounds for vacatur set forth in 9 U.S.C. § 10."[406]

Tennessee courts have addressed the viability of this defense. In its Arnold decision, the Tennessee Supreme Court strongly indicated that a party under TUAA may not rely upon the arbitrator's "manifest disregard of the law" as grounds for relief.[407] In the words of a subsequent Tennessee Court of Appeals decision considering this issue under the FAA, "We find that Arnold evidences an intent to severely limit judicial review of arbitration awards in Tennessee. As a result, we decline to adopt the non-statutory grounds of 'manifest disregard' and public policy for reviewing arbitration awards."[408] Because other Tennessee cases construing TUAA necessarily indicate that only the statutory grounds for vacatur are available in Tennessee, it would appear that the "manifest disregard" principle is unacceptable as a statutory basis for relief.[409]

While expressing some uncertainty, the most recent Sixth Circuit case law indicates that manifest disregard in FAA cases is still a valid common law vacatur standard.[410] This differing state and federal treatment creates a dilemma. Tennessee federal and state courts construing the FAA and state courts applying the TUAA must follow opposite positions on this heavily litigated issue, which only creates challenges for Tennessee counsel and their clients depending on the happenstance of whether the case falls within the FAA or TUAA.[411]

406. Stolt-Nielsen S.A. v. AnimalFeeds Int'l Corp., 559 U.S. 662, 672 n.3 (2010).

407. Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 449 (Tenn. 1996).

408. Warbington Constr., Inc. v. Franklin Landmark, L.L.C., 66 S.W.3d 853, 859 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2001).

409. See Chattanooga Area Reg'l Transp. Auth. v. Local 1212 Amalgamated Transit Union, 206 S.W.3d 448, 451 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2006) ("An arbitration award cannot be vacated because the arbitrator made a mistake of fact or law, and it also cannot be vacated because it is irrational." (citing Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 450)).

410. See Shafer v. Multiband Corp., 551 F. App'x 814, 819 n.1 (6th Cir. 2014); see also Meyers Assocs., v. Goodman, No. 3:14-cv-1174, 2014 WL 5488761, at *5 n.11 (M.D. Tenn. Oct. 29, 2014) (providing a comprehensive discussion of manifest disregard doctrine).

411. Note that if the state court is applying FAA and not TUAA, then the Sixth Circuit view would likely govern. But see supra notes 10–11 and accom-

J. Violation of Public Policy

In a theory with "obvious parallels" to the "manifest disregard" doctrine,[412] the United States Supreme Court accepted the "public policy" ground for reviewing arbitration awards in W.R. Grace & Co. v. Local Union 759, International Union of the United Rubber Workers.[413] The usual rationale for vacating an award on this theory stems from a court's common law power to refuse enforcement of an arbitration contract—just as with any other contract—that violates public policy or law.[414] This inquiry is separate from whether the award decision was incorrect.[415]

The party alleging this ground must show (1) a well-defined and dominant public policy and (2) a sufficient link—also called a "nexus"—between enforcement of the award and violation of the particular policy to support the court's refusal to confirm the award.[416] Public policy grounds would exclude vague concerns that enforcement of arbitration awards would create "intolerable incentives to disobey court orders."[417]

A leading treatise makes an important point regarding the nature of the public policy that can qualify as grounds for overturning an award:

---

panying text (stating that Tennessee state courts must apply the FAA in cases under the FAA for a contract arising from interstate commerce).

412. Stephen L. Hayford, Law in Disarray: Judicial Standards for Vacatur of Commercial Arbitration Awards, 30 GA. L. REV. 731, 783 (1996).

413. 461 U.S. 757, 766 (1983); see also United Paperworkers Int'l Union v. Misco, Inc., 484 U.S. 29, 42 (1987).

414. W.R. Grace & Co. v. Local Union 759, Int'l Union of United Rubber, Cork, Linoleum, and Plastic Workers, 461 U.S. 757, 766 (1983). The Uniform Arbitration Act does not recognize the public policy theory as grounds for vacatur. Ariz. Elec. Power Coop., Inc. v. Berkeley, 59 F.3d 988, 991 (9th Cir. 1995). Most jurisdictions view this exception as a judicially-created or common law basis for vacatur. 2 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 38:24 (3d ed. 2013).

415. 4 AM. JUR. 2D Alternative Dispute Resolution § 216 (2014).

416. Dean Foods Co. v. United Steelworkers, 911 F. Supp. 1116, 1125 (N.D. Ind. 1995); c.f. U.S. Postal Serv. v. Nat'l Ass'n of Letter Carriers, 330 F.3d 747, 751 (6th Cir. 2003) ("Public policy must be determined from laws and legal precedents, not general considerations of public interest.").

417. Emp'rs Ins. of Wausau v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. of Pittsburg, 933 F.2d 1481, 1488 n.5 (9th Cir. 1991).

> In attacking the award on the basis of its violation of public policy, distinctions should be made between violations of arbitration policy and violations of policy regarding the substance of the controversy. Public policy on the arbitration process is generally set forth in its entirety in the arbitration statute; normally courts need go no further. On the other hand, in determining whether an arbitrator's award contravenes public policy on a substantive issue, the court looks to constitutional, judicial and statutory authority.[418]

The U.S. Supreme Court has narrowly construed the public policy ground for challenging arbitral contract awards, observing that "general considerations of supposed public interests" are insufficient.[419]

Several federal circuit and state courts also have recognized public policy as a common law ground for vacatur,[420] but other states, such as Tennessee, oppose this view.[421] The opposing theory would be that this ground undermines the finality of arbitration decisions and opens the doors to routine sustained appeals.[422] This point becomes clearer when one considers that many—if not most—losing parties could argue that all statutory errors committed by the arbitrator offend public policy.

In line with the opposing view, the Tennessee Court of Appeals in the Arbington decision relied on the Tennessee Supreme Court's 1996 decision in Arnold rejecting the public policy ground. According to these Tennessee decisions, the strong doctrine favor-

---

418. 2 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 38:24 (3d ed. 2013).

419. United Paperworkers Int'l Union v. Misco, Inc., 484 U.S. 29, 43 (1987) (quoting W.R. Grace & Co., 461 U.S. at 765; 4 AM. JUR. 2D Alternative Dispute Resolution § 215 (2014).

420. Warbington Constr., Inc. v. Franklin Landmark, L.L.C., 66 S.W.3d 853, 857–58 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2001) (citing decisions).

421. See Warbington, 66 S.W.3d at 857–58; 4 AM. JUR. 2D Alternative Dispute Resolution § 214 (2014).

422. Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 451 (Tenn. 1996) (citing Carolina Va. Fashion Exhibitors, Inc. v. Gunter, 255 S.E.2d 414, 420 (N.C. Ct. App. 1979)).

ing arbitration requires the rejection of the public policy rationale for vacating an arbitration award.[423] The likely driving concern is that courts wish to avoid sub silentio review of the arbitrator's view of the case on the merits.[424]

Other Tennessee cases, however, support the interpretation that an arbitrator's violation of public policy is a ground for complaint, either as an independent common law ground or as a subset of the ground in Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313 forbidding arbitrators from exceeding their powers. Thus, in Lawrence County Education Ass'n v. Lawrence County Board of Education,[425] the same Tennessee Supreme Court in 2007 that in 1996 had earlier authored Arnold broadly stated that "public policy considerations" forbid arbitrators from acting "in contravention of statutes."[426] The Lawrence court also said in unqualified language that an arbitrator's decision "may be vacated where the arbitrator exceeds [his] powers."[427] These statements also advance settled law that courts should refuse to enforce a contract that violates public policy.[428] To date, this conflict remains unresolved in the Tennessee decisions.

---

423. Warbington, 66 S.W.3d at 858–59 (citing Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 452).

424. See C&D Techs., Inc. v. Int'l Ass'n of Heat and Frost Insulators & Asbestos Workers, 303 F. Supp. 2d 468, 470–71 (S.D.N.Y. 2004); BBF, Inc. v. Alstom Power, Inc., 645 S.E.2d 467, 469–70 (Va. 2007) (stating that courts may not consider whether the arbitrator's decision was "legally correct" but only whether the arbitrator "had the power" to decide the case).

425. 244 S.W.3d 302 (Tenn. 2007).

426. Id. at 318 (applying rule to collective bargaining arbitration).

427. Id. at 318–19 (quoting TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-313(a)(3) (2012)).

428. Whitley v. White, 140 S.W.2d 157, 161 (Tenn. 1940) ("The authorities from the earliest time to the present unanimously hold that no court will lend its assistance in any way towards carrying out the terms of an illegal contract." (citation omitted)). Modern day cases construing the FAA have used the same reasoning in uphold vacatur based on a public policy violation. See United Paperworkers Int'l Union v. Misco, Inc., 484 U.S. 29, 42 (1987) (citing the "basic notion that no court will lend its aid to one who founds a cause of action upon an immoral or illegal act").

VI. CRITIQUE OF VACATUR UNDER TENNESSEE ARBITRATION LAW

A. The Superiority of Arbitration Over Litigation: Fact or Fiction?

The Tennessee Supreme Court has endorsed the unqualified proposition that arbitration is a superior method of dispute resolution over litigation. In turn, this perceived aspect of arbitration drives the numerous pro-arbitration case law legal doctrines underlying TUAA, including the deliberately high bar for plaintiffs to overcome in seeking vacatur. Thus, in Arnold v. Morgan, Keegan & Co.,[429] the leading case on vacatur in arbitration, the court said that TUAA was designed to promote settlement in bypassing the courts.[430] The court also accepted without question the superiority of arbitration over litigation:

> [A]rbitration is attractive because it is a more expeditious and final alternative to litigation.
>
> The very purpose of arbitration is to avoid the courts insofar as the resolution of the dispute is concerned. The object is to avoid what some feel to be the formalities, the delay, the expense and vexation of ordinary litigation. Immediate settlement of controversies by arbitration removes the necessity of waiting out a crowded court docket . . . .[431]

The problem with the Arnold analysis is that our courts have built an extensive body of law without any empirical support for the critical finding that arbitration is superior to litigation in terms of formalities, delay, expense, and vexation to the parties.

A number of commentators have challenged the notion that arbitration is necessarily a more cost effective and efficient means of case disposition superior to conventional litigation. After making a careful empirical analysis, Professor Thomas J. Stipanowich has observed, "[T]he arbitration experience has become increasing-

---

429. 914 S.W.2d 445.

430. Id. at 448–49.

431. Id. at 445 (quoting Boyd v. Davis, 897 P.2d 1239, 1242 (Wash. 1995).

ly similar to civil litigation, and arbitration procedures have become increasingly like the civil procedures they were designed to supplant, including prehearing discovery and motion practice," and observes that "arbitration generally is as expensive [as litigation] . . . less predictable, and not appealable."[432] Professor Christopher Drahozal similarly observes that the upfront costs of arbitration will in many cases be higher than, and at best the same as, the upfront costs in litigation.[433] Regarding the supposed superiority of arbitration over litigation, Professor W. Mark C. Weidemaier concludes that the evidence regarding outcomes in arbitration versus litigation "is mixed."[434] Next, as stated in Williston on Contracts,

> It should be noted, however, that arbitration is not invariably "a simple, expeditious or inexpensive method of adjudicating commercial controversies." Arbitration fees may be prohibitively high and substantially deter a worker from enforcing his or her statutory employment rights; therefore, an employer may be required to bear these costs as the quid pro quo for an agreement to arbitrate employment disputes. Thus, it is necessary to compare the direct costs of arbitration—which may be high, since the parties may be required to pay filing and administrative fees, the arbitrators' compensation and travel expenses, and expenses for the rental of facilities—to the indirect costs of litigation, including billable hours of attorney time incurred in discovery, pretrial hearings, motions related to the evidence, and the trial itself.[435]

---

432. Thomas J. Stipanowich, Arbitration: The "New Litigation", 2010 U. ILL. L. REV. 1, 9 (citing Thomas J. Stipanowich, ADR and the "Vanishing Trial": The Growth and Impact of "Alternative Dispute Resolution", 1 J. EMPIRICAL LEGAL STUD. 843, 895 (2004)).

433. Christopher R. Drahozal, Arbitration Costs and Forum Accessibility: Empirical Evidence, 41 U MICH. J.L. REFORM 813, 815 (2008).

434. W. Mark C. Weidemaier, Judging-Lite: How Arbitrators Use and Create Precedent, 90 N.C. L. REV. 1091, 1108–09 n.69 (2012).

435. 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:11 (4th ed. 2001) (citations omitted); 2 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL

Some judges are also starting to doubt the supposed truism of arbitral superiority over litigation. A South Carolina federal district judge has written,

> In this court's view, the longstanding federal policy favoring arbitration perhaps should be revisited. The policy arose during a time when a reasonable percentage of federal cases went to trial and a burgeoning federal case load made arbitration an attractive, less expensive, and quicker form of dispute resolution. Today, it appears that the arbitration dockets may be more congested than the dockets of most federal district courts. On several occasions in recent years, when this court has granted a motion to compel arbitration, retaining the case on its docket so that the award can be formalized in a judgment, the arbitration process has required two to three years to run its course. This court would have been able to provide a much quicker forum for the resolution of those disputes.[436]

These preliminary observations warrant deeper study, but they should at least raise serious questions about the supposed superiority of arbitration over litigation in terms of efficiency and the advantages to the parties. Tennessee courts seem to give short shrift to the absence of well-conducted empirical studies in Tennessee (and elsewhere) in this regard.

Where a legal policy giving great weight to arbitration as a superior conflict resolution device lacks verifiable support, the legal doctrine becomes suspect. As courts have stated in other contexts, "A doctrine that is explained as if it were an empirical proposition but for which there is only limited empirical support is both ARBITRATION § 48:2 (3d ed. 2013). For other commentary strongly questioning the received wisdom that arbitration is superior to litigation in dispute resolution, see Theodore Eisenberg & Geoffrey P. Miller, The Flight From Arbitration: An Empirical Study of Ex Ante Arbitration Clauses in the Contracts of Publicly Held Companies, 56 DEPAUL L. REV. 335 (2007).

436. Cox v. Time Warner Cable, Inc., C/A No. 4:12-cv-03407-JFA, 2013 WL 5469992, at *1 n.1 (D.S.C. Sept. 30, 2013) (emphasis added) (citations omitted).

inherently unstable and an easy mark for critics."[437] Accordingly, the time has come for Tennessee courts to reexamine the many pro-arbitration case law policies that support (and are supposedly derived from) TUAA, including the difficult standard for vacatur. If a principle no longer has (and maybe never had) empirical backing, then the highly pro-arbitration TUAA cases making casual empirical assumptions about the plusses of these non-judicial proceedings need in-depth reconsideration.

B. TUAA's Judicial Gloss

Besides lacking empirical support in key respects, the Tennessee vacatur decisions have gone well beyond the literal terms of the statutory scheme and have added a substantial gloss to TUAA. Nothing in TUAA states that courts in vacatur cases must employ an extremely narrow and deferential standard of review—the words "severely" limited are a common judicial fixture[438]—or that awards will stand except in "very unusual circumstances."[439] Nothing in TUAA states that courts in vacatur cases cannot consider the merits of the arbitral award or assess whether the arbitrator has committed a significant error of law or fact. Lastly, nothing in TUAA specifically supports the case law doctrine establishing a "heavy presumption of arbitrability"[440] or that a court must enforce an order to arbitrate "unless it may be said with positive assurance that the arbitration clause is not susceptible to an interpretation that covers the asserted dispute."[441] Nonetheless, Tennessee courts routinely advance these principles merely by citing other cases that 437. State v. Novembrino, 519 A.2d 820, 848 (N.J. 1987).

---

438. E.g., Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 448 (Tenn. 1996); Millsaps v. Robertson-Vaughn Const. Co., 970 S.W.2d 477, 480 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1997).

439. E.g., Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 448 (citing First Options of Chi., Inc. v. Kaplan, 514 U.S. 938, 942 (1995)); Davis v. Reliance Elec., 104 S.W.3d 57, 61 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2002).

440. E.g., Pyburn v. Bill Heard Chevrolet, 63 S.W.3d 351, 357 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2001); Dale Supply Co. v. York Int'l Corp., No. M2002-01408-COA-R3-CV, 2003 WL 22309461, at *4 (Tenn. Ct. App. Apr. 9, 2003).

441. E.g., Taylor v. Butler, 142 S.W.3d 277, 281 (Tenn. 2004) (quoting United Steelworks v. Warrior & Gulf Navigation Co., 363 U.S. 574, 582–83 (1960)); Metro Const. Co. v. Cogun Indus., Inc., No. 02A01-9608-CH-00207, 1997 WL 538914, at *3 (Tenn. Ct. App. Sept. 4, 1997).

make these statements. Significantly, no cases were found where a court identified the statutory source for these precepts.

The counterargument might be that "[a]rbitration's desirable qualities would be heavily diluted, if not expunged, if a trial court reviewing an arbitration award were permitted to conduct a trial de novo."[442] This argument proves too much; this article advocates that the courts in TUAA cases obey the legislative intent and apply the rule in Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-319(b) that appeals in TUAA cases "shall be taken in the same manner and to the same extent as from orders or judgments in a civil action." The quoted language comes from TUAA, which says specifically that all arbitration appeals from Tennessee trial courts to the appellate courts are governed by such a standard.[443] Thus, any common law doctrine mentioned above without a statutory anchor lacks the traditional forms of legal support and persuasiveness. Nothing else appearing, the courts are relying on pure policy preferences for doctrines having the effect of narrowing—and practically eliminating—a party's ability to overturn an arbitral award.

Stripped of the courts' circular reliance on their own opinions, our courts as adjudicators have encroached upon the legislature's function. Courts are not properly arbitration policy makers, but serve only to resolve disputes about the application of statutory rules of arbitration to live cases and controversies. The question must then be asked, what legal basis do courts have to support the conclusion that "courts have long noted that judicial review of an arbitration decision is 'one of the narrowest standards of judicial review in all of American jurisprudence[?]'"[444] My answer is that mere policy cannot drive statutory interpretation. Because of the separation of powers provision in the state constitution, Tennessee appellate courts must remain adjudicators and not venture forth as policy makers.[445]

---

442. Davis, 104 S.W.3d at 61 (quoting Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 449).

443. See TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-319(b) (2012) ("The appeal shall be taken in the manner and to the same extent as from orders or judgments in a civil action.").

444. Bronstein v. Morgan Keegan & Co., No. W2011-01391-COA-R3-CV, 2014 WL 1314843, at *2 (Tenn. Ct. App. Apr. 1, 2014) (quoting Uhl v. Komatsu Forklift Co., 512 F.3d 294, 305 (6th Cir. 2008)).

445. See Nashville Ry. & Light Co. v. Lawson, 229 S.W. 741, 744 (Tenn. 1921) ("This court can know nothing of public policy except from the Constitu-

The Tennessee Supreme Court bypassed an excellent opportunity to address this critical issue of the scope of review in Arnold v. Morgan Keegan and Co.,[446] but the court ingrained the confusion more deeply. In this frequently cited case, the Tennessee Supreme Court said, "The limiting language of the statutes governing vacation and modification of arbitration awards evidences an intent to limit severely the trial court's authority to retry the issues decided by arbitration."[447] Importantly, the Arnold court cited no statutes or in-state common law doctrine for these propositions of "severe" statutory construction but merely drew a policy conclusion.[448]

Oddly enough, the Arnold court most strongly relied on a New Mexico Supreme Court decision applying New Mexico, and not Tennessee, law for this outcome.[449] Thus, Tennessee courts also have yet to explain why the arbitrators have not "exceeded their powers" as forbidden by Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(C) where arbitrators merely "arguably" construe or ap-tion and the laws, and the course of administration and decision." (quoting United States v. Vassar, 72 U.S. 462, 469 (1866))); City of Memphis v. Hargett, No. M2012-02141-COA-R3-CV, 2012 WL 5265006, at *5 (Tenn. Ct. App. Oct. 25, 2012) (citing TENN. CONST. art. II, §§ 1–2); see also Hodge v. Craig, 382 S.W.3d 325, 337 (Tenn. 2012) ("The determination of this state's public policy is primarily the prerogative of the General Assembly." (citations omitted)); Cavender v. Hewitt, 239 S.W. 767, 768 (Tenn. 1921) ("All questions of policy are for the determination of the Legislature, and not for the courts . . . . Where courts intrude into their decrees their opinion on questions of public policy, they in effect constitute the judicial tribunals as lawmaking bodies in usurpation of the powers of the Legislature." (citation omitted)); cf. Taylor v. Beard, 104 S.W.3d 507, 511 (Tenn. 2003) ("[T]he judiciary may determine 'public policy in the absence of any constitutional or statutory declaration'" (quoting Alcazar v. Hayes, 982 S.W.2d 845, 851 (Tenn. 1998))).

---

446. 914 S.W.2d 445, 445 (Tenn. 1996).

447. Id. at 448.

448. Adams TV of Memphis, Inc. v. Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers, Local 474, 932 S.W.2d 932, 934 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1996) (construing Arnold forthrightly). Adams TV commented that the Tennessee Supreme Court based its principle of limited judicial review in arbitration cases "upon the policy of providing finality of arbitration awards." Id. (emphasis added). Thus, the Adams court implicitly acknowledged the reality that Arnold is a non-statutory policy based decision versus a rule-based decision. Id.

449. Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 449 (citing Hooten Constr. Co. v. Borsberry Constr. Co., 769 P.2d 726, 727 (N.M. 1989)).

ply the contract, but still commit "serious error" in contract interpretation.[450] When Tennessee courts construe a statute, their task is to:

> [C]arry out legislative intent without broadening or restricting the statute beyond its intended scope. [Courts] start by looking to the language of the statute, and if it is unambiguous, [they] apply the plain meaning and look no further. In doing so, [they] must avoid any forced or subtle construction that would limit or extend the meaning of the language.[451]

By adding policies and doctrines that TUAA does not expressly reflect, our courts have inappropriately applied a layer of commands and policies to unambiguous legislative enactments. Put another way, "[i]f the Legislature has clearly expressed its intent in the language of a statute, that statute must be enforced as written, free of any 'contrary judicial gloss.'"[452]

Of course, the courts' answer to this argument would be that even if courts have misapplied TUAA, the maxim that "the fact that the legislature has not expressed disapproval of a judicial construction of a statute is persuasive evidence of legislative adoption of the judicial construction."[453] The argument would be "[t]he legislature is presumed to know the interpretation which courts make of its enactments."[454] In this circumstance, it must be acknowledged that the General Assembly has not intervened and modified the statutes to overrule the post-1983 decisions so construing TUAA. Nevertheless, the Tennessee case law gloss rests on a shaky foundation based on the courts taking on legislative

---

450. Id. at 448–51.

451. West v. Schofield, No. M2014-00320-COA-R9-CV, 2014 WL 4815957, at *6 (Tenn. Ct. App. Sept. 29, 2014) (citations omitted) (internal quotations omitted).

452. See Dep't of Agric. v. Appletree Mktg., L.L.C., 779 N.W.2d 237, 241 (Mich. 2010) (quoting Morales v. Auto-Owners Ins., 672 N.W.2d 849 (Mich. 2003) (stating principle)).

453. Hamby v. McDaniel, 559 S.W.2d 774, 776 (Tenn. 1977).

454. Sw. Tenn. Elec. Membership Corp. v. City of Jackson, 359 S.W.3d 590, 603 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2012) (quoting Hamby, 559 S.W.2d at 776).

prerogatives through a partial adverse possession of the Tennessee Code.

C. Judicial Review, Transcripts, and Arbitrator Findings of Fact/Conclusions of Law

For vacatur to be an effective remedy, and not an impossible dream for claimants, there must be a sufficient record of the arbitral proceedings that a trial or appellate court can examine with confidence. As stated above, unless the agreement or a statute provides otherwise, Tennessee courts see nothing wrong or unfair that the record for an arbitration decision is missing a transcript on appeal or that the award might lack findings of fact or of law.[455] The Tennessee Supreme Court said in Arnold,

> The agreement in this case provided that the arbitrators were not required to make written findings of fact and law. Such is normally the case. Thus, under usual circumstances, any ground for vacating or modifying the arbitration award will usually appear on the face of the award, not within the transcript. It would be unfair and incongruous to hold that an arbitration award in hearings in which a transcript was made is more open to attack than in a case in which no transcript was made. Thus, the case under submission was no more open to review by the trial court than was any other arbitration case.[456]

The practical (and adverse) effects of this doctrine is that it "greatly restricts" a court's ability to review the arbitral decision, it invites "speculation" on the arbitrator's rationale, and it "emasculates effective judicial review."[457]

The problem is more serious where the award lacks any sort of valid contemporaneous explanation. Here, the reviewing

---

455. See supra Section V.B.

456. Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 449 (Tenn. 1996).

457. Chasser v. Prudential-Bache Secs., 703 F. Supp. 78, 79 (S.D. Fla. 1988). A prominent treatise takes a different perspective on use of transcripts in arbitration but does concede that the issue has long been a matter of debate and that they are advisable in technical or complex cases. 2 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 29:18 (3d ed. 2013).

court frequently confirms the award because the precedents allow it to conclude that the arbitrator's "true intent is apparent" or that the grounds for the award "can be inferred from the facts."[458] If it is proper for an arbitrator's award to be as brief as stating a dollar award for damages, an aggrieved claimant (contrary to Arnold) has little or no possible basis to determine the grounds for challenge merely from a number on a piece of paper.

Given the minimal information that can accompany an arbitration award decision, a real danger exists that the reviewing court's opinion will cure a deficient arbitral decision by supplying a post-hoc justification. The cases reveal the problems with how the courts have used this last-mentioned questionable judicial savings mechanism. A 2013 District of Columbia district court decision stated that a court under the FAA "is not at liberty to make assumptions as to the arbitral Tribunal's logic."[459] Yet, in the same opinion the court approved a post-hoc rationale when it stated that "an award must be confirmed even where the reasoning is 'deficient or non-existent,' provided that 'any justification [for the decision] can be gleaned from the record.'"[460] The problem with this federal district court decision is that no substantive distinction exists between an award based on impermissible "assumptions"—which the court condemned—and an award based on permissible "gleanings"—which the court approved.[461] Succinctly put, the line cannot be drawn that finely.

In defending the sufficiency of the arbitrator's reasoning, another court unapologetically said that an arbitrator's "improvident, even silly factfinding does not provide a basis for a reviewing court's to refuse to enforce an award."[462] As a federal appeals court judge observed in a concurring opinion in another appellate case, the truth is that when an arbitrator makes an award without a 458. First Interregional Equity Corp. v. Haughton, 842 F. Supp. 105, 110 (S.D.N.Y. 1994) (citations omitted).

459. ARMA, S.R.O. v. BAE Sys. Overseas, Inc., 961 F. Supp. 2d 245, 261 (D.D.C. 2013) (construing 9 U.S.C. § 10(a)(1) (2012)).

460. Id. at 261 (quoting Kurke v. Oscar Gruss & Son, Inc., 454 F.3d 350, 354 (D.D.C. 2006)).

461. See id. (making this distinction).

462. Questar Capital Corp. v. Gorter, 909 F. Supp. 2d 789, 799 (W.D. Ky. 2012) (quoting Major League Baseball Players Ass'n v. Garvey, 532 U.S. 504, 509 (2001)).

satisfactory explanation, courts become participants in a "judicial snipe hunt" as they become a "rubber stamp" for unexplained or unsupported arbitrator decisions.[463]

Recognizing these potential flaws, not all jurisdictions let the arbitrators off the hook so easily. For example, Connecticut courts in adjudicating state arbitral awards reason that, because reviewing courts frequently lack access to a transcript of the proceedings, "it is particularly important and incumbent upon arbitrators to make express reference to the specific evidence on which they rely in support of their findings of fact, as opposed to simply making conclusory statements."[464] Further, as an FAA case has observed, "[W]hen the arbitrators do not give their reasons [for arbitral decisions], it is nearly impossible for the court to determine whether they acted in disregard of the law."[465]

Courts defending the current approach on findings of fact/law argue that imposing a requirement upon the arbitrator to explain his decision (absent the parties' agreement otherwise) "[w]ould serve only to perpetuate the delay and expense which arbitration is meant to combat."[466] This rationale is unconvincing because a concise but complete arbitral decision is hardly wasteful of resources. An adequate decision explaining the arbitrator's rationale brings credibility and transparency to the process and instills confidence in the participants that each has received fair

---

463. Federated Dep't Stores, Inc. v. J.V.B. Indus., Inc., 894 F.2d 862, 871 (6th Cir. 1990) (Martin, J., concurring); see also Matteson v. Ryder Sys., Inc., 99 F.3d 108, 113 (3d Cir. 1996) ("[C]ourts are neither entitled nor encouraged simply to 'rubber stamp' the interpretations and decisions of arbitrators.").

464. State v. AFSCME, Local 391, 69 A.3d 927, 939 (Conn. 2013).

465. Prudential-Bache Secs., Inc. v. Tanner, 72 F.3d 234, 240 (1st Cir. 1995); O.R. Secs., Inc. v. Prof'l Planning Assocs., 857 F.2d 742, 747 (11th Cir. 1988); see also Dominick & Dominick Inc. v. Inv'r Servs. & Savs. Corp., No. 86 Civ. 7265 (MGC), 1991 WL 143716, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. July 22, 1991) ("The absence of a statement of reasons does not support [an] argument that the arbitrators based their decision on a particular finding or theory."). But see Alexander v. Gardner-Denver Co., 415 U.S. 36, 57–58 (1974) (observing that no requirement exists under the FAA for arbitrator findings of fact or conclusions of law). See generally R. D. Hursh, Annotation, Necessity that Arbitrators, in Making Award, Make Specific or Detailed Findings of Fact or Conclusions of Law, 82 A.L.R.2d 969 (1962).

466. Eljer Mfg., Inc. v. Kowin Dev. Corp., 14 F.3d 1250, 1254 (7th Cir. 1994).

treatment.[467] In fact, an explanation requirement would actually improve the efficiency of arbitration by giving the parties and reviewing courts the insights on what guided the arbitrator's thought processes. It also proves too little for courts to reason that if parties to arbitration wish a more detailed arbitral opinion, they should clearly state in the agreement the degree of specificity required.[468]

The current regime on arbitral transcripts and findings of fact/law harms the utility of the process because it encourages arbitrators to render careless and incorrect decisions secure in the belief that reviewing courts will likely supply judicial first aid as needed by providing legally defensible rationales by citing the "gleanings" from the record.[469] Such judicial repair work also invites courts to provide rationales and justifications that the arbitrator might never have considered, thus turning courts into super-arbitrators.[470]

In their vigor to defend what should otherwise be dubious award decisions, some courts display a puzzling reticence to remand the case to an arbitrator for additional findings. The better view is that "[i]t is entirely appropriate for a [trial] court to direct arbitrators to explain their awards."[471] This technique advances the fairness of the arbitral system because it "avoids any judicial guessing" about the rationale for the award and gives the parties "what they bargained for—a clear decision from the arbitrator."[472] Nevertheless, a 1989 decision of the United States Court of Ap-

---

467. See R. E. Bean Constr. Co. v. Middlebury Assocs., 428 A.2d 306, 309 (Vt. 1980) ("To the extent that justified confidence in arbitration is established, it can only aid the courts in meeting the public's need for speedy, inexpensive and fair dispute resolution.").

468. Questar Capital Corp. v. Gorter, 909 F. Supp. 2d 789, 822 (W.D. Ky. 2012).

469. See ARMA, S.R.O. v. BAE Sys. Overseas, Inc., 961 F. Supp. 2d 245, 261 (D.D.C. 2013) (using this mode of analysis to uphold an arbitral award).

470. See State Sys. of Higher Educ. v. State College Univ. Prof'l Ass'n, 743 A.2d 405, 413 (Pa. 1999).

471. Sargent v. Paine Webber, Jackson & Curtis, Inc., 674 F. Supp. 920, 923 (D.D.C. 1987), rev'd, 882 F.2d 529 (D.C. Cir. 1989); accord Falcon Steel Co. v. HCB Contractors, Inc., Civ. A. No. 11557, 1991 WL 50139, at *2 (Del. Ch. Apr. 4, 1991) (citations omitted).

472. Sargent, 674 F. Supp. at 923; see also Hilib, Rogal & Hobbs Co. v. Golub, No. 3:05cv574, 2006 WL 2403390, at *6–7 (E.D. Va. Aug. 18, 2006) (citing an extensive collection of approving remands).

peals for the District of Columbia Circuit ("D.C. Circuit") rejected that procedure for a damages award lacking backup calculations, reasoning that remand for an explanation of an award "would unjustifiably undermine the speed and thrift sought to be obtained by the 'federal policy favoring arbitration.'"[473] What the D.C. Circuit missed in this case is that an appellate court will have little insight in what it is being asked to enforce if serious doubt exists on the rationale that the arbitrator or trial court used to reach its decision.

No Tennessee cases were found addressing the trial court's authority to order a remand to the arbitrator. Because the case law in Tennessee on remands is unclear, practitioners should rely on general case law principles in advocating this remedy. The United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has ruled that "[a] remand is proper . . . at common law . . . to clarify an ambiguous award or to require the arbitrator to address an issue submitted to him but not resolved by the award."[474]

D. Misreading "Exceeding" Arbitrator "Powers" (TENN. CODE ANN. Section 29-5-313(a)(1)(C))

An established ground for vacatur, both under the FAA[475] and TUAA,[476] is that the arbitrator "exceeded" his "powers." While courts commonly state that arbitrators "exceed their powers" in deciding issues when they go outside the scope of the arbitration agreement,[477] some extra-lenient doctrines apply in this area.

In one common statement, "As long as the arbitrator is, arguably, construing or applying the contract and acting within the scope of his authority, the fact that a court is convinced he committed serious error does not suffice to overturn his decision."[478] In-

---

473. Sargent v. Paine Webber, Jackson & Curtis, Inc., 882 F.2d 529, 532 (D.C. Cir. 1989).

474. M & C Corp. v. Erwin Behr GmbH & Co., 326 F.3d 772, 782 (6th Cir. 2003) (quoting Green v. Ameritech Corp., 200 F.3d 967, 977 (6th Cir. 2000)).

475. 9 U.S.C. § 10(a)(4) (2012).

476. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-313(a)(1)(C) (2014).

477. E.g., Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 450 (Tenn. 1996) (citing Int'l Talent Grp., Inc. v. Copyright Mgmt., Inc., 769 S.W.2d 217, 218 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1988)).

478. Id. at 449; Millsaps v. Robertson-Vaughn Constr. Co., 970 S.W.2d 477, 480 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1997) (quoting Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 480).

deed, "improvident, even silly" interpretations usually pass judicial muster,[479] and some courts profess that the reasoning of the arbitrator is legally irrelevant because the only point at issue is "the result reached."[480] This dilution—and misreading—of the statutory standard that the arbitrator may not "exceed" his powers cannot withstand logical scrutiny.

In the words of Judge Richard Posner of the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit, the question of whether the arbitrator exceeded his powers is not if he "erred" in the interpretation of the contract, "clearly erred" in the interpretation, or "grossly erred" in the interpretation.[481] The standard for the proper exercise of arbitral powers is whether the arbitrator interpreted the contract as opposed to ignoring it and substituted his own notion of what is reasonable or fair.[482] Judge Posner's observation should not be over-construed, however, because "the grosser the apparent misinterpretation, the likelier it is that the arbitrators weren't interpreting the contract at all."[483] Perhaps in recognition of this questionable classification of reasonable and unreasonable readings of 479. See United Paperworkers Int'l Union v. Misco, 484 U.S. 29, 39 (1987); see also Bull HN Info. Sys., Inc. v. Hutson, 229 F.3d 321, 330 (1st Cir. 2000) ("[E]ven where such error is painfully clear, courts are not authorized to reconsider the merits of arbitration awards." (quoting Advest, Inc. v. McCarthy, 914 F.2d 6, 8 (1st Cir. 1990)) (noting that arbitrator inconsistently ruled that the parties had no contract but also said the parties had an adhesion contract); Nat'l Wrecking Co. v. Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters, Local 731, 990 F.2d 957, 961 (7th Cir. 1993); Ethyl Corp. v. United Steelworkers, 768 F.2d 180, 183 (7th Cir. 1985) (stating that errors of fact or law do not supply valid grounds for vacating an arbitration award). For a discussion of arbitration and adhesion contracts, see 1 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION §§ 8:26 to 8:27 (3d ed. 2013).

---

480. Anderman/Smith Operating Co. v. Tenn. Gas Pipeline Co., 918 F.2d 1215, 1219 n.3 (5th Cir. 1990). Some courts do not review the arbitrator's interpretation of the contract but whether the arbitrator's conduct displayed "an infidelity" to his obligation as an arbitrator. Ancor Holdings, L.L.C. v. Peterson, Goldman & Villani, Inc., 294 S.W.3d 818, 831 (Tex. Ct. App. 2009) (citation omitted).

481. Hill v. Norfolk & W. Ry. Co., 814 F.2d 1192, 1195 (7th Cir. 1987).

482. Id.

483. Id.

the contract, some courts indicate that the arbitrator's interpretation of the contract to be upheld must be "plausible."[484]

Notwithstanding, if the standard per Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(C) that the court "shall vacate an award" when arbitrators "exceeded their powers"[485] is to have any meaning, it should be insufficient depending on the arbitration agreement that the arbitrator was "arguably" construing the contract but was still dead wrong. Where an arbitration agreement expressly, or even impliedly, requires the arbitrator to follow the law, but his contract interpretation is irrational or illogical, he cannot be said to have stayed within his powers as defined by the parties' underlying contract. Case law from other jurisdictions specifically relies on this last perspective.[486]

Using a penetrating analysis, the Michigan Supreme Court convincingly has rebutted the widespread doctrine that arbitration decisions based on an error of law do not exceed the powers of arbitrators. In Detroit Automobile Inter-Insurance Exchange v. Gavin,[487] the Michigan high court concluded that "just as a judge exceeds his power when he decides a case contrary to controlling principles of law, so does an arbitrator."[488] It bears noting that the

---

484. Emp'rs Ins. of Wausau v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. of Pittsburgh, 933 F.2d 1481, 1486 (9th Cir. 1991).

485. Note that vacatur is mandatory under TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-5-313(a)(1)(C) (2012) if the grounds exist, which differs from the Federal standard under 9 U.S.C. § 10(a)(4) (2012), which states that a court "may" vacate the award when the statutory circumstances are present, which further emphasizes the "deferential nature" of federal judicial review. Cat Charter, L.L.C. v. Schurtenberger, 646 F.3d 836, 843 n.11 (11th Cir. 2011).

486. See Prince George's Cty. Educators Ass'n v. Bd. of Educ. of Prince George's Cty., 486 A.2d 228, 232 (Md. App. 1995) ("If the language of the contract permits but one meaning, an arbitrator who does not follow such a clear contractual mandate exceeds his authority as surely as if had gone beyond the scope of his express arbitration authority."); Nat'l Ave. Bldg. Co. v. Stewart, 910 S.W.2d 334, 349 (Mo. Ct. App. 1995) (indicating that an arbitrator will exceed his authority when his erroneous decision is not "rationally grounded in the agreement"); Davis v. Chevy Chase Fin. Ltd., 667 F.2d 160, 165–67 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (stating that an arbitral award considering a matter outside the scope of the agreement is both one made in excess of the arbitrator's authority and the basis for a decision that the arbitrator had no jurisdiction to decide the matter).

487. 331 N.W.2d 418 (Mich. 1982).

488. Id. at 435.

Michigan court did not hold that an error of law is automatic grounds for vacatur. More precisely, the court said that to vacate an award there "must be error so material or so substantial as to have governed the award, and but for which the award would have been substantially otherwise."[489]

Thus, the Detroit Automobile court considered the parties' reasonable expectations of arbitrator conduct:

> If the sole or even primary goal of private arbitration were the expeditious, inexpensive, and unreviewable resolution of private disputes, we might be persuaded of the justice of the no-review rule . . . . But those are not the goals or purposes of statutory arbitration.
>
> . . . We are not ready to assume that the parties in these cases agreed to forego observance of a plainly applicable provision of their written contract, one which is dispositive of the only matter genuinely in dispute between them, in exchange for a speedy, thrifty, and final resolution of their differences in a way which disregards the law substantially determinative of their rights and duties. The process of dispute resolution and the procedural advantages of arbitration are the servants of the law governing the issues in dispute, not the reverse.[490]

Picking up on the majority opinion's approach in Detroit Automobile, I ask what is the difference to a party between an arbitrator making a gross interpretive error of law or fact and deciding a question that was not clearly submitted to him under the arbitration agreement? Why is the first scenario not grounds for error in Tennessee, but the second fact pattern is grounds for complaint? Both missteps fall squarely within the text of Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(C), but to the average claimant, such a distinction seems hyper-technical and unjust. In both instances, the arbitrator is substituting his own notion of what is fair and reasonable versus construing the law or the contract before him.[491] In both situations, the arbitrator is deciding questions not clearly submitted to him under the arbitration agreement and has exceeded the scope of his power in the submission.[492] By solid case law authority, a court (and by logical extension, an arbitrator) "'abuses its discretion' when it makes an error of law."[493]

489. Id. at 434.
490. Id. at 427.

Therefore, the Michigan Supreme Court correctly held that

> [W]here it clearly appears on the face of the award or the reasons for the decision as stated, being substantially a part of the award, that the arbitrators through an error in law have been led to a wrong conclusion, and that, but for such error, a substantially different award must have been made, the award and decision will be set aside.[494]

Nothing in TUAA (as opposed to current case law) would stand as an obstacle to our courts' adopting the Michigan approach.

E. Good Faith and Fair Dealing—A Little-Used Vacatur Theory

Another possible vacatur theory largely unmentioned in Tennessee is that the arbitrator will exceed his powers under the contract when he violates the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in conducting the proceedings or in rendering a decision. Only one unreported Tennessee decision was found mentioning this doctrine in an arbitration case, and that was in passing.[495] 491. See Shearson Lehman Bros. v. Hedrich, 639 N.E.2d 228, 232 (Ill. Ct. App. 1994) ("The ultimate award must be 'grounded on the parties' contract' and arbitrators do not have the authority to ignore plain language and alter the agreement." (quoting Inter-City Gas Corp. v. Boise Cascade Corp., 845 F.2d 184, 187–88 (8th Cir. 1988)).

---

492. See T & M Props. v. ZVFK Architects & Planners, 661 P.2d 1040, 1044 (Wyo. 1983); Himco Sys., Inc. v. Marquette Elecs., Inc., 407 N.E.2d 1013, 1016 (Ill. Ct. App. 1980) ("An arbitrator exceeds his powers when he decides matters which were not submitted to him." (citing cases)).

493. See Boyd v. Comdata Network Inc., 88 S.W.3d 203, 212 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2002) (quoting Koon v. United States, 518 U.S. 81, 100 (1996)).

494. Detroit Auto., 331 N.W.2d at 442–43.

495. See Hardaway v. Goodwill, No. 03-A-01-9403CV000113, 1994 WL 585767, at *4 (Tenn. Ct. App. Oct. 19, 1994).

A Minnesota case lends direct support to this notion that arbitrators are contractually bound to act in good faith and fair dealing. The court indicated that when arbitrators are "unfaithful to their obligations," a court reviewing the case can assume that the arbitrators did "exceed their authority."[496] Thus, claimants should have grounds for vacatur under Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(C) when the arbitrator exceeds his powers in this manner.

This theory of vacatur authority also finds substantial support from the common law of contracts. As stated in the Restatement (Second) of Contracts section 205, "[e]very contract imposes upon each party a duty of good faith and fair dealing in its performance and its enforcement." No party to a contract has unbridled discretion to perform as he pleases.[497] The arbitrator will act in "good faith" only when he demonstrates "faithfulness to an agreed common purpose and consistency with the justified expectations of the other party."[498] By agreeing to serve in the role of arbitrator, this individual impliedly (and often expressly) agrees to decide the dispute impartially, conscientiously, and competently. Furthermore, the better view is that parties do not submit a case to arbitration with the expectation that the arbitrator will flout applicable law and that they are to sit by with no ability to make a complaint.[499]

---

496. QBE Ins. v. Twin Homes of French Ridge Homeowners Ass'n, 778 N.W.2d 393, 398 (Minn. Ct. App. 2010); see also Hooters, Inc. v. Phillips, 173 F.3d 933, 938 (4th Cir. 1999) ("Hooters materially breached the arbitration agreement by promulgating rules so egregiously unfair as to constitute a complete default of its contractual obligation to draft arbitration rules and to do so in good faith.").

497. Va. Vermiculite, Ltd. v. W.R. Grace & Co., 156 F.3d 535, 542 (4th Cir. 1998) ("The courts could leave all discretion in performance unbridled. . . . No U.S. court now takes this approach." (quoting STEVEN J. BURTON & ERIC G. ANDERSON, CONTRACTUAL GOOD FAITH 46–47 (1995))).

498. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONTRACTS § 205 cmt. a (1981). See generally Hooters, 173 F.3d at 940 (summarizing implied duty of good faith and fair dealing). Tennessee courts are in accord on these principles of good faith and fair dealing. See 21 STEVEN W. FELDMAN, TENNESSEE PRACTICE SERIES: CONTRACT LAW AND PRACTICE §§ 8:32 to 8:34 (2006) (citing Tennessee decisions).

499. Stolt-Nielsen SA v. Animal Feeds Int'l Corp., 548 F.3d 85 (2d Cir. 2008), rev'd on other grounds, 559 U.S. 662 (2010). A qualifying word read Tennessee common law supports this statement; the Tennessee Supreme Court said in 1871 that "[t]he agreement to submit to an arbitration necessarily implies that the award made is to be legal, and if it is not, that either party shall have the right to show its illegality by regular judicial proceedings."[500] No reason supports holding arbitrators to a lower standard of conduct in 2015 as compared with the generally more primitive legal landscape of 1871.

In another sense, the arbitrator's serious error of fact or law is a breach of contract—and exceeds his powers under the arbitration contract—because it frustrates the disputing parties' reasonable expectation that the arbitrator will discharge his duties in a competent fashion. The Tennessee Court of Appeals has said about this ubiquitous implied covenant:

> Tennessee common law . . . imposes an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in the performance of contracts. This Court has stated that the purposes of this implied duty are two-fold: to honor the reasonable expectations of the contracting parties, and to protect the rights of the parties to receive the benefits of their agreement.[501]

Further, Tennessee courts agree that "a claim based on the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing is not a stand alone claim; rather, it is part of an overall breach of contract claim."[502]

Given these reasonable ground rules for arbitral service, arbitrators under a contract that reflects the implied covenant have no authority to ignore plain contract language in their pact with the into every contract is the word "reasonable" or its equivalent "reasonably;" thus, when a party undertakes a contractual duty, it promises a reasonable effort to achieve it through ordinary, recognized means. See 21 STEVEN W. FELDMAN, TENNESSEE PRACTICE SERIES: CONTRACT LAW AND PRACTICE § 8:20 (2006) (citations omitted) (emphasis added).

---

500. State v. Ward, 56 Tenn. (9 Heisk.) 100, 112 (1871).

501. SecurAmerica Bus. Credit v. Schledwitz, No. W2009-02571-COA-R3-CV2011, 2011 WL 3808232 (Tenn. Ct. App. Aug. 26, 2011) (citations omitted).

502. Jones v. LeMoyne–Owen Coll., 308 S.W.3d 894, 907 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2009) (citing Lyons v. Farmers Ins. Exch., 26 S.W.3d 888, 894 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2000)).

parties that expressly or impliedly requires the arbitrator to make supportable interpretations of clear contract language.[503] If the arbitrator fails to meet this standard, and falls short of meeting a party's "reasonable expectation," he has breached the arbitral contract and exceeded his authority contrary to Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(C). Accordingly, this contract deviation properly affords the counsel for the aggrieved party a valid strategy for vacatur under TUAA.

F. Judicial Interpretation of Arbitration Contracts: Question of Law or Fact?

No quarrel can exist with settled law that "[t]he standard for judicial review of arbitration procedures is merely whether a party to arbitration has been denied a fundamentally fair hearing."[504] Absent an express agreement to the contrary, the arbitrator's interpretation of his procedural powers are entitled to the same level of deference as with his merits determinations.[505] What is not so clear, however, in a judicial contest over vacatur based on the "exceeded his powers" strand of Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313 (a)(1)(C) is whether interpretation of the parties' submission or the arbitrator's contract is a matter of law or fact. The distinction is important because it will control on whether the trial and appellate courts will exercise de novo review over that interpretation.

Unfortunately, Tennessee decisions have abandoned "well-settled" principles of appellate review in matters of contract interpretation in arbitration cases. Tennessee courts repeatedly recognize these general rules, > [When] [t]he . . . issue on appeal involves contract interpretation, [this] is a matter of law that we review de novo on the record with no presumption of correctness for the determination of the trial court.

---

503. Shearson Lehman Bros. v. Hedrich, 639 N.E.2d 228, 232 (Ill. App. Ct. 1994).

504. Morgan Keegan & Co. v. Starnes, No. W2012-00687-COA-R3-CV, 2014 WL 2810209, at *3 (Tenn. Ct. App. June 20, 2014) (quoting Nationwide Mutual Ins. Co. v. Home Ins. Co., 278 F.3d 621, 625 (6th Cir. 2002)).

505. Lagstein v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's, London, 607 F.3d 634, 643-44 (9th Cir. 2010).

> The "cardinal rule" of contract construction is to ascertain the intent of the parties and to effectuate that intent consistent with applicable legal principles. When the language of the contract is plain and unambiguous, courts determine the intentions of the parties from the four corners of the contract, interpreting and enforcing it as written.[506]

As just stated, because contract interpretation involves issue of law, the reviewing courts—both the trial court and the appellate courts—should consider the arbitrator's contract interpretation issues de novo, with no presumption of correctness on appeal.[507] The reviewing court must analyze the arbitrator's award decision based on the contract document and other permissible evidence and make its own determination of the contract's meaning and legal effect.[508] Nothing in Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-319 (the TUAA statute on judicial appeal and review) exempts arbitration cases from these prevailing rules of appellate contract interpretation.

The U.S. Supreme Court in a major arbitration case said, "We believe . . . that the majority of the Circuits is right in saying that courts of appeals should apply ordinary, not special, standards when reviewing district court decisions upholding arbitration awards."[509] The Tennessee Supreme Court has specifically approved the U.S. Supreme Court's stance on this point,[510] but as will be seen below, the appellate courts in our state have yet to follow this established doctrine in reviewing arbitration cases.

---

506. Colonial Pipeline Co. v. Nashville & E. R.R., 253 S.W.3d 616, 621 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2007) (citations omitted).

507. O'Neil v. Clinically Home, L.L.C., No. M2013-01789-COA-R3-CV, 2014 WL 3540840, at *6 (Tenn. Ct. App. July 16, 2014).

508. See id. at *6–7 (citations omitted).

509. First Options of Chi., Inc. v. Kaplan, 514 U.S. 938, 948 (1995). The Arnold court similarly observed that in reviewing a trial court's decision in an arbitration case, that the court of appeals should apply "ordinary standards." Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 449 (Tenn. 1996). Unaccountably, the Arnold court did not cite the standard rule of appellate review of contract interpretation that these issues are questions of law and reviewed de novo. See id.

510. Pugh's Lawn Landscape Co. v. Jaycon Dev. Corp., 320 S.W.3d 257 (Tenn. 2010).

Until recently, Tennessee appellate courts confused a number of issues in explaining judicial review of arbitration awards. Up to 2010, the Tennessee Supreme Court and the Tennessee Court of Appeals followed the dubious view that absent legislative direction, courts should consider matters of law in arbitration cases "with the utmost caution."[511] In Pugh's Lawn Landscape Co., Inc. v. Jaycon Development Corp.,[512] the Tennessee Supreme Court disavowed this statement from earlier decisions. In restating (and clarifying) the standards for appellate review, the Pugh's case first noted that, based on a 2008 U.S. Supreme Court decision,[513] the Tennessee Court of Appeals should accept a trial court's findings of fact regarding agreements to submit the issue to arbitration if they were supported by "substantial evidence."[514] Also, the Pugh's court said that the Tennessee Court of Appeals should decide questions of law de novo.[515] Thus, the Pugh's decision commented that "'ordinary, not special, standards' of appellate review should apply in arbitration cases and that appellate courts need not 'give extra leeway to district courts that uphold arbitrators.'"[516]

While the Pugh's court did correct this error from earlier decisions, the Tennessee Supreme Court did not go far enough. The problem is that the Tennessee Supreme Court has yet to take the next step and rule explicitly that trial and appellate courts in TUAA cases should consider issues of contract interpretation as matters of law reviewed de novo. The prevailing view in American jurisdictions is that "[t]he existence and scope of an arbitration agreement are questions of law that the [appellate courts] review de novo, applying state law principles governing contract interpretation."[517]

---

511. See Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 450 (cited in Adams TV of Memphis, Inc. v. Int'l Bhd. of Elec. Workers, Local 274, 932 S.W.2d 932, 934–35 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1996)).

512. 320 S.W.3d at 252.

513. First Options of Chi., 514 U.S. at 947.

514. Pugh's Lawn, 320 S.W.3d at 258.

515. Id. at 257.

516. Id. at 258 n.4 (quoting First Options of Chi., 514 U.S. at 948).

517. Radil v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburg, 233 P.3d 688, 692 (Colo. 2010). Accord PaineWebber Inc. v. Elahi, 87 F.3d 589, 592 (1st Cir. 1996); Sidney v. Allstate Ins., 187 P.3d 443, 447–48 (Alaska 2008); J.M. Davidson, Inc. v. Webster, 128 S.W.3d 223, 227 (Tex. 2003).

Indeed, the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit in interpreting the closely-related FAA follows the general rule that it will review de novo a district court's holding that the arbitration agreement is invalid and unenforceable (or by necessary inference that the agreement is valid and enforceable).[518] To the same end, the Tennessee Court of Appeals in a FAA case has said that "[a] trial court's order on a motion to compel arbitration addresses itself primarily to the application of contract law. We review such an order with no presumption of correctness on appeal."[519] Indeed, the Tennessee Supreme Court has repeatedly stated that "the scope of review advanced by the United States Supreme Court has equal application in a case under the [TUAA] to the extent that such review furthers the common goal of [the] acts."[520] No Tennessee cases were found considering this TUAA/FAA discrepancy in reviewing contract interpretation questions.

G. Mutual, Final, and Definite Awards

The next issue pertains to the not-uncommon situation where the arbitration agreement bound the arbitrator to consider "all claims" that the parties presented at the hearing, but where the arbitrator failed to address all the claims. When a court adjudicates whether an arbitrator has accomplished this task, the court is not reviewing the decision on the merits. Instead, the court is merely validating whether the arbitrator has performed the duties under the agreement.[521]

Unlike TUAA, the FAA explicitly covers this point as a ground for vacatur in the most frequent ground for vacating an award: "where the arbitrators exceeded their powers, or so imperfectly executed them that a mutual, final, and definite award upon

---

518. Cooper v. MRM Inv. Co., 367 F.3d 493, 497 (6th Cir. 2004) (stating that the trial court's fact findings will be upheld except where "clearly erroneous"); see also Rosenberg v. BlueCross BlueShield of Tenn., Inc., 219 S.W.3d 892, 903 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2006) ("As a general rule, a court's enforcement of an arbitration provision is reviewed de novo.").

519. Rosenberg, 219 S.W.3d at 903.

520. Pugh's Lawn, 320 S.W.3d at 257–58 (quoting Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 448 n.2 (Tenn. 1996)) (emphasis added).

521. Simmons v. Lucas & Stubbs Assocs., 322 S.E.2d 467, 469 (S.C. Ct. App. 1984) (construing the FAA).

the subject matter submitted was not made."[522] The TUAA is missing the language about the arbitrator "imperfectly execut[ing]" his powers such that a "mutual, final, and definite award" decision has occurred.[523]

A commentator makes the following important points in this area,

> An award must, on its face, dispose of all issues raised by either party by demand or counterclaim. To avoid controversy as to whether all issues have been finally determined, arbitrators often say in the award that "the award is in full settlement of all claims submitted to arbitration by either party against the other." There is no requirement for a particular formula or wording, but this language has been accepted by courts as evidence that everything was considered by the arbitrator.[524]

While Tennessee does recognize that an incomplete arbitration award can be objectionable, the latest on point authority found was pre-TUAA cases.[525] When faced with this issue, counsel should argue that an incomplete or non-final award violates Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-313(a)(1)(C) on the basis that the arbitrator has exceeded his powers, but the counter argument would be what really has occurred is the arbitrator has not fully performed his duties, which is an entirely different theory.

Because the Tennessee Supreme Court has construed TUAA to mean the grounds for overturning an arbitral award are "limited" and "narrowly construed" to effectuate the legislative 522. 9 U.S.C. § 10(a)(4) (2012) (emphasis added).

---

523. Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 451 (noting this difference between state and federal arbitration law). But see Bell Aerospace Co. Div. of Textron v. Local 516, 500 F.2d 921, 923 (2d Cir. 1974) ("Courts will not enforce an [arbitration] award that is incomplete, ambiguous, or contradictory.").

524. 2 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 33:4 (3d ed. 2013) (citations omitted).

525. See generally Jackson v. Chambers, 510 S.W.2d 74, 76 (Tenn. 1974) (holding that common law arbitral award was not final where the arbitrators rendered two different decisions, i.e., the award was ambiguous); Powell v. Ford, 72 Tenn. 278, 286 (1880) (discussing that arbitrators disagreed on the decision).

intent,[526] a serious question exists in Tennessee on whether an incomplete or non-final award is subject to challenge under the statutory test for vacatur or if the pre-TUAA cases might suffice. It also appears that the alternative theory of modification or correction of awards under Tenn. Code Ann. section 39-5-314 cannot be stretched so far as to cover this substantive oversight.[527]

Perhaps Tennessee should follow the FAA rule that as a matter of common law, judicial review of non-final arbitration awards should occur, if at all, "only in the most extreme cases."[528] Another alternative is that "[i]f an arbitrator's decision is 'clear enough to indicate unequivocally what each party is required to do,' it will be considered a final award even if arithmetical or accounting calculations or similar technical acts remain to be completed."[529] In any event, it is apparent that a legislative fix would best address this issue.

H. Manifest Disregard of the Law—Is it a Viable Theory?

A number of jurisdictions, state and federal, recognize the arbitrator's manifest disregard of the law as a basis for vacatur[530] (analyzed above in Part VIII). The policy underlying the manifest disregard theory is that it encourages arbitrators to obey the law and assures that a claimant can vindicate its statutory rights in an effective way. "Thus, the manifest disregard standard seemingly balances the public's interest in having arbitrators stay within applicable law with the public policy favoring a speedy and economical arbitration process."[531]

Unfortunately, this theory of review has an uncertain judicial legitimacy. In Hall Street Associates, L.L.C. v. Mattel, Inc.,[532]

---

526. See Arnold, 914 S.W.2d at 449.

527. See supra Section IV.B.

528. Pac. Reinsurance Mgmt. Corp. v. Ohio Reinsurance Corp., 935 F.2d 1019, 1022–23 (9th Cir. 1991) (quoting Aerojet-Gen. Corp. v. Am. Arbitration Ass'n, 478 F.2d 248, 251 (9th Cir. 1973)).

529. 2 MARTIN DOMKE ET AL., DOMKE ON COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION § 33:6 (3d ed. 2013).

530. See supra notes 394–412 and accompanying text.

531. Marcus Mungioli, The Manifest Disregard of the Law Standard: A Vehicle for Modernization of the Federal Arbitration Act, 31 ST. MARY'S L.J. 1079, 1114 (2000).

532. 552 U.S. 576, 584 (2008).

the U.S. Supreme Court made some confusing comments about whether the arbitrator's manifest disregard of the law was still a viable basis for vacatur.[533] Accordingly, the federal appeals courts have divided on whether the arbitrator's manifest disregard of the law constitutes grounds for vacatur in arbitration cases.[534]

Some substantial arguments support the rejection of an arbitrator's "manifest disregard of the law" as a basis for vacatur. A number of states have concluded this theory lies outside the scope of the Uniform Arbitration Act.[535] These dissenting jurisdictions believe that the exception weakens the effectiveness and utility of arbitration because this expansion of judicial review increases costs, reduces efficiencies, and undermines the finality of arbitral awards.[536] This camp also maintains that the confusing variety of definitions of "manifest disregard" compounds the difficulties of applying vacatur theory in a consistent manner and also encourages the adoption of other non-statutory theories.[537]

The better resolution is that the manifest disregard of the law cause of action should be a proper statutory basis for vacatur in Tennessee. The theory would be proper when it follows the statutory grounds, i.e., where the arbitrator has exceeded his powers, and is a sufficiently comfortable fit on the facts. For instance, the Second and Ninth Circuits in the federal system accept the manifest disregard theory of vacatur on a statutory (not common

---

533. See id. at 585 ("Maybe the term 'manifest disregard' was meant to name a new ground for review, but maybe it merely referred to the § 10 grounds collectively, rather than adding to them.").

534. Compare Comedy Club, Inc. v. Improv W. Assocs., 553 F.3d 1277, 1290 (9th Cir. 2009) (holding that manifest disregard theory is still valid), with Citigroup Glob. Mkts., Inc. v. Bacon, 562 F.3d 349, 355 (5th Cir. 2009) (holding that the manifest disregard theory is no longer valid). The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has indicated that the manifest disregard standard remains viable. Coffee Beanery, Ltd. v. WW, L.L.C., 300 Fed. Appx. 415, 418–19 (6th Cir. 2008), cert. denied, 558 U.S. 819 (2009).

535. See Coors Brewing Co. v. Cabo, 114 P.3d 60, 62 (Colo. App. 2004) (discussing a number of judicial approaches). For a collection of state court cases approving or disapproving the manifest disregard doctrine, see Robinson v. Henne, 115 So. 3d 797, 800–03 (Miss. 2013); Sooner Builders & Invs., Inc. v. Nolan Hatcheries, 164 P.3d 1063, 1072 (Okla. 2007).

536. Coors Brewing, 114 P.3d at 65–66 (citing Arnold v. Morgan Keegan & Co., 914 S.W.2d 445, 452 (Tenn. 1996)).

537. Id. at 62.

law) basis.[538] In denying vacatur where the arbitrator plainly circumvents the law, those courts rejecting the manifest disregard doctrine can be properly criticized for assisting the arbitrator in poisoning the fount of justice. Thus, even though the arbitrator acts in his private capacity, courts rejecting the manifest disregard doctrine overlook that this official is an adjunct to the machinery of the state where the courts approve and enforce an otherwise legally insupportable arbitral outcome. Undoubtedly, the average claimant losing the case places little stock in the above legalisms justifying the result.

The manifest disregard doctrine, properly cabined, does not confer a roving commission upon courts to right perceived wrongs. Additionally, to say that courts should reject manifest disregard of the law because of the difficulty in drawing a line between serious and less serious statutory errors is no excuse for courts to throw up their hands and avoid line drawing altogether. As Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote almost a century ago in a different context: "Neither are we troubled by the question where to draw the line. That is the question in pretty much everything worth arguing in the law."[539]

I. The Status of the Public Policy Defense

As stated above, based on the discrepancy between Arnold and Lawrence, where both decisions remain good law,[540] Tennessee case law is conflicted on the availability of the public policy defense in arbitration cases.

The better view allows use of the public policy defense in limited instances. In effect, when courts in arbitration cases fail to disapprove a contract that transgresses deeply-held notions of public policy, the courts are lending their imprimatur to the enforcement of a void contract.[541] It is "well settled that [a court] will not enforce obligations arising out of a contract or a transaction that is 538. Visiting Nurse Ass'n of Fla., Inc. v. Jupiter Med. Ctr., Inc., No. SC11-2468, 2014 WL 6463506, at *14 (Fla. Nov. 6, 2014).

539. Irwin v. Gavit, 268 U.S. 161, 168 (1925) (citation omitted); see also Dominion Hotel v. Ariz., 249 U.S. 265, 269 (1919) (Holmes, J.) ("[T]he constant business of the law is to draw such lines.").

540. See supra notes 425–30 and accompanying text.

541. In re Standard Coffee Serv. Co., 499 So. 2d 1314, 1316 (La. Ct. App. 1986).

illegal."[542] When courts review arbitral decisions, there should be nothing controversial about accepting the proposition that "[t]he public policy exception is rooted in the common law doctrine of a court's power to refuse to enforce a contract that violates public policy or law."[543]

Putting these statements together, it is a natural step to conclude that Tennessee may, and indeed must, recognize the public policy restraints on arbitrators regarding impermissible awards. Practitioners, in devising their strategy, should consider that it is not controversial to conclude, "[A] claim forbidden by the law cannot be enforced through the process of arbitration."[544]

J. An Appeal Alternative

Given the strict and narrow grounds for judicial review of a statutory arbitration award, parties should consider the option of including in their arbitration agreement a procedure for a private contractual review panel of appellate arbitrators. The supporting theory would be that Tennessee courts allow parties wide discretion in devising their arbitral procedures.[545] As one commentator points out:

> Arbitral appellate review lacks many of the drawbacks of the appellate structure of the court system. Under such arbitral appellate review, the parties could contract to allow for another arbitration panel to review the first panel's findings, and the parties could tailor this review to their own particular values and resources. For example, parties could pro-

---

542. See Ledbetter v. Townsend, 15 S.W.3d 462, 464–65 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1999).

543. Buzas Baseball, Inc. v. Salt Lake Trappers, Inc., 925 P.2d 941, 951 (Utah 1996) (quoting Seymour v. Blue Cross/Blue Shield, 988 F.2d 1020, 1023 (10th Cir. 1993)).

544. 21 RICHARD A. LORD, WILLISTON ON CONTRACTS § 57:138 (4th ed. 2001).

545. Searcy v. Herold, No. M2003-02037-COA-R3-CV, 2005 WL 2387159, at *3 (Tenn. Ct. App. Sept. 28, 2005) (citing Team Design v. Gottlieb, 104 S.W.3d 512, 517–18 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2002)); see also Chi. Typographical Union v. Chi. Sun-Times, 935 F.2d 1501, 1505 (7th Cir. 1991) (Posner, J.) ("If the parties want, they can contract for an appellate arbitration panel to review the arbitrator's award.").

> vide that appellate arbitrators can review only the original arbitrators' application of substantive law, or potential conflicts of the award with existing public policy, or the award's substantive basis in the facts. Moreover, since parties need not wait for their appeal to be taken up in the court system, an appeal could be conducted quickly, thus allowing an aggrieved party the opportunity to challenge the award, but not through a long and costly delay. Of course, both the scope of the arbitral review and the timing of that procedure should be set out in the arbitration agreement before later disputes arise. If given a choice, the losing party to an arbitration proceeding may hope to expand the scope of arbitral review, or to simply prolong that review, in the hopes of securing a more favorable settlement.[546]

K. A Vacatur Alternative

One could easily get the impression from examining the Tennessee decisions that an aggrieved party could be left without a remedy if it fails to make a valid case for vacatur. Such an impression would be mistaken. A theory available for any action litigated in court derives from Rule 60.02 of the Tennessee Rules of Civil Procedure, which provides:

> On motion and upon such terms as are just, the court may relieve a party or the party's legal representative from a final judgment, order or proceeding for the following reasons: (1) mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect; (2) fraud (whether heretofore denominated as intrinsic or extrinsic), misrepresentation, or other misconduct of an adverse party; (3) the judgment is void; (4) the judgment has been satisfied, released or discharged, or a prior judgment upon which it is based has been reversed or otherwise vacated, or it is no longer equitable that a judgment should have prospective ap> plication; or (5) any other reason justifying relief from the operation of the judgment.[547]

546. Stephen Wills Murphy, Note, Judicial Review of Arbitration Awards Under State Law, 96 VA. L. REV. 887, 934 (2010).

Tennessee appellate courts have applied Rule 60.02 to controversies arising from an arbitration matter before a trial court,[548] and federal courts have done the same in construing the FAA under the parallel Fed. R. Civ. P. 60.[549] Therefore, practitioners are advised to investigate this avenue in addition to vacatur.

L. The Gap Between the Award and its Confirmation

Tenn. Code Ann. section 29-5-314(a), (c) provides that the court cannot confirm the award until the statutory period (ninety days) has expired for the losing party to seek vacatur or modification of the arbitrator's award. This time lag creates a danger for the prevailing party, because the losing party has three months to dispose of his assets during the interim that could otherwise be used to satisfy the award. Therefore, to prevent possible unfairness to the winning party, Tennessee should adopt the procedure in the Revised Uniform Arbitration Act, Section 22,[550] and the FAA[551] that the court's jurisdiction vests immediately after the award's entry, which helps ensure that the losing party is not tempted to circumvent the arbitral process.

VII. CONCLUSION

Arbitration as a technique for alternative dispute resolution can frequently be a desirable process for one or both parties. Counsel and their clients will decide this matter in light of the factual, legal, and strategic considerations favoring or disfavoring

---

547. TENN. R. CIV. P. 60.02; see also Harris v. Hall, No. M2000-00784-COA-R3-CV, 2001 WL 1504893, at *2–3 (Tenn. Ct. App. Nov. 28, 2001) (explaining Rule 60.02).

548. Vest v. Duncan-Williams, Inc., No. M2005-00466-COA-R3-CV, 2006 WL 2252750, at *4 (Tenn. Ct. App. Aug. 3, 2006).

549. Merit Ins. v. Leatherby Ins., 714 F.2d 673, 682 (7th Cir. 1983).

550. REVISED UNIF. ARBITRATION ACT § 22 ("After a party to an arbitration proceeding receives notice of an award, the party may make a [motion] to the court for an order confirming the award at which time the court shall issue a confirming order unless the award is modified or corrected pursuant to Section 20 or 24 or is vacated pursuant to Section 23.").

551. 9 U.S.C. § 9 (2012).

their position in the dispute. This article will have met its purpose where counsel for claimants and respondents, along with arbitrators, trial courts, and appellate courts, can use the information I have presented in such a way that it enhances the quality of civil justice in Tennessee.

Stand Your Ground Laws: Mischaracterized, Misconstrued, and Misunderstood

PAMELA COLE BELL*

I. INTRODUCTION 384
II. HISTORY OF THE LAW OF SELF-DEFENSE USING DEADLY FORCE 387
III. ANALYSIS OF THE LAW OF SELF-DEFENSE 391
A. An Overview of the Law of Self-Defense Using Deadly Force 391
B. Who Can and Who Cannot Defend Themselves Using Deadly Force 399
C. Florida Joins the Majority and Others Follow 400
D. Protections Afforded by "Stand Your Ground" Laws 403
1. Recognition of the Long-Standing Right to Use Deadly Force to Protect Oneself Without First Retreating 409
2. Presumptions under Florida's Home Protection Statute 410
3. Criminal and Civil Immunity for the Justified Use of Deadly Force 415
IV. CURRENT STATUS OF AND POLICY BEHIND THE LAW OF SELF-DEFENSE USING DEADLY FORCE 416
V. COMMON CRITICISMS AND MISCHARACTERIZATIONS 422
VI. CONCLUSION..432

* Pamela Cole Bell is an Associate Professor of Law and the Director of the Center for Trial Advocacy at Liberty University School of Law. Prior to joining the faculty, the author practiced in Florida in the areas of criminal defense and personal injury. A special note of thanks is given to Professor Bell's research assistants and Liberty University alumni Justin Goins and Michael Sharp, who provided extensive and valuable assistance in the researching and writing of this article.

I. INTRODUCTION

It is universally accepted that the first law of nature is self-preservation. Man, animals, and all organisms seek to survive. When confronted with danger, the fight or flight instinct compels man and animals to do what is necessary to preserve his or its life. It is why our adrenalin flows when we are confronted with danger; it is why we put out our hands to break our fall; and it is even why undomesticated animals run when we come upon them. This law of nature is so basic that every state recognizes the right to use force,[1] including deadly force[2] and self-defense. The scope of the right to use deadly force to defend oneself has come under particular scrutiny in the past decade due to highly publicized and debated cases, such as State of Florida v. Zimmerman,[3] combined with the fact that many states changed and expanded their self-defense laws to provide greater protections for law-abiding citizens unlawfully confronted with deadly force.

This Article addresses the parameters of the use of deadly force in self-defense. States establish these parameters by statute or in their common law and fall into one of two general categories:

---

1. JOSHUA DRESSLER, UNDERSTANDING CRIMINAL LAW 223 (5th ed. 2009).

2. "Deadly force" is commonly defined as force likely to cause death or great or serious bodily injury. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-20(2) (LexisNexis 2005 & Supp. 2012); ALASKA STAT. § 11.81.900(b)(16) (2012); ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-105(14) (2010 & Supp. 2012); ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-601(2) (2013); CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 53a-3(5) (West 2012); DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 11, § 471(a) (2007); FLA. STAT. ANN. § 776.012 (West Supp. 2015); HAW. REV. STAT. ANN. § 703-300 (LexisNexis 2007); KAN. STAT. ANN. § 21-5221(a)(2) (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 503.010(1) (LexisNexis 2008); MO. ANN. STAT. § 563.011(1) (West 2012); NEB. REV. STAT. § 28-109(6) (2008); N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 627:9(II) (LexisNexis 2007 & Supp. 2012); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2C:3-11(b) (West 2005 & Supp. 2013); N.Y. PENAL LAW § 10(11) (McKinney 2009); N.D. CENT. CODE § 12.1-05-12(1) (2012); 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 501 (West 1998 & Supp. 2013); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611(a)(4) (2014); TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 9.01(3) (West 2011).

3. 114 So. 3d 446, 447 (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 2013). In the Zimmerman case, the defendant was charged with the second-degree murder of Trayvon Martin. Zimmerman raised the defense of self-defense under Florida's statute and was acquitted. The case drew national attention and criticism, much of which was aimed at the Florida statute.

(1) retreat states and (2) no retreat states. In retreat states, if a person is confronted with what he reasonably believes is unlawful deadly force, he must first evaluate whether there is a place to which he can safely retreat and must do so if he can prior to using deadly force in self-defense. In no retreat states, a person may defend against the unlawful threat of deadly force without first retreating, as long as the defender has a reasonable belief that the use of deadly force is necessary to prevent the imminent use of deadly force against himself or another person.[4] The majority of states in the United States do not impose a duty to retreat before one can lawfully use deadly force to defend against deadly force, as long as the requirements of the state's self-defense or justifiable homicide laws are met.[5]

The public debate regarding self-defense ignited in 2005, when Florida joined the majority of states and abolished the duty

---

4. See infra Section III.A.

5. ALA. Code § 13A-3-23 (West, Westlaw through Act 2015-559 of the 2015 Reg., First Spec. and Second Spec. Sess..); ALASKA STAT. § 11.81.335 (2012); ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-405 (2010 & Supp. 2012); FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 776.012 to –.013 (West 2010 & Supp. 2015); GA. CODE ANN. § 16-3-23 (2011); IND. CODE § 35-41-3-2 (West, Westlaw through P.L. 1-2016 and P.L. 2-2016); KAN. STAT. ANN. § 21-5222 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 503.050 (LexisNexis 2008); LA. STAT. ANN. § 14:20 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 780.972 (West 2007); MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15 (2006); MONT. CODE ANN. § 45-3-110 (2011); NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 200.120 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & Spec. Sess.); N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 627:4 (LexisNexis 2007 & Supp. 2012); N.C. GEN. STAT. § 14-51.3 (2011); OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 21, § 1289.25 (West Supp. 2013); S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-11-440 (Supp. 2012); S.D. CODIFIED LAWS § 22-18-4 (2006); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611 (2014); TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 9.32 (West 2011); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-402 (LexisNexis 2012); Cassels v. People, 92 P.3d 951, 956 (Colo. 2004) (en banc); State v. McGreevey, 105 P. 1047, 1051 (Idaho 1909); People v. Manley, 584 N.E.2d 477, 491 (Ill. App. Ct. 1991); State v. Bartlett, 71 S.W. 148, 151 (Mo. 1902); Territory v. Gonzales, 68 P. 925, 932 (N.M. 1902); State v. Sandoval, 156 P.3d 60, 64 (Or. 2007); Foote v. Commonwealth, 396 S.E.2d 851, 855 (Va. Ct. App. 1990); State v. Cushing, 45 P. 145, 145–46 (Wash. 1896); State v. Dinger, 624 S.E.2d 572, 576–77 (W. Va. 2005); State v. Wenger, 593 N.W.2d 467, 471 (Wis. Ct. App. 1999); N.M. UNIF. JURY INSTRUCTIONS CRIMINAL § 14-5190 (2015); JUDICIAL COUNCIL OF CAL. CRIMINAL JURY INSTRUCTIONS § 505 (2012); IDAHO CRIMINAL JURY INSTRUCTIONS § 1519 (2010).

to retreat.[6] After Florida enacted the new law, critics and commentators were quick to christen the law a "stand your ground" law, even though the new statute was not named a "stand your ground" law. In fact, the law incorporated statutory provisions already recognized in other states for decades and required the same basic traditional components for the use of self-defense.[7] As other states joined Florida in updating and strengthening their self-defense laws to protect law-abiding citizens, the criticisms, mischaracterizations, and misunderstanding of no retreat self-defense laws grew.[8]

This Article seeks to clarify the purpose of and protections afforded by these and other self-defense laws and to dispel the doomsday predictions made by many commentators and critics after Florida joined the majority. Part II of this Article examines the history of the law of self-defense using deadly force. To understand why the laws called "stand your ground" laws created nothing new in the law of self-defense, Part III provides an overview of the law of self-defense, including a discussion of the traditional and still recognized basic components of self-defense, who can use deadly force in self-defense, and protections afforded by so-called "stand your ground" laws. Part IV discusses the current status of and policy behind the justifiable use of deadly force in the various states. In order to debunk the negative treatment of "stand your ground" laws, Part V addresses common criticisms, misrepresentations, and misconceptions of these state laws. Finally, Part VI provides a conclusion and urges no retreat states to maintain or strengthen their protections for law-abiding citizens; challenges retreat states to reconsider their self-defense laws; and rebukes the media, commentators, and politicians for misrepresenting the requirements, application, and effect of "stand your ground" laws.

6. FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 776.012 to –776.031 (West 2010 & Supp. 2015).

7. Id.; see infra Section III.A.

8. Ironically, the same criticisms and misrepresentations did not extend to the pre-2005 laws that provided the same protections and represented the majority view.

II. History of the Law of Self-Defense Using Deadly Force

The right to defend oneself by using deadly force is not unique to American jurisprudence. In biblical times, certain types of killings were not deemed murder in violation of the sixth commandment.[9] For instance, the killing of a thief who broke into another's house at night was not considered murder and was not punished.[10] The lawful use of deadly force in self-defense was also recognized in English common law.[11] English common law, however, required a person suddenly assaulted or attacked by another to retreat before using deadly force, even if confronted with deadly force.[12] As Sir William Blackstone put it, a person assaulted "must . . . flee as far as he conveniently can, either by reason of some wall, ditch or some other impediment."[13] In other words, "it must appear that the slayer had no other possible means of escaping from his assailant" before the "slayer" could use deadly force to defend himself against deadly force.[14] But even Blackstone recognized English law did not require a person to retreat if the "fierceness of the assault" was so fierce that retreating would increase a defender's danger of death or great bodily harm.[15] This meant a person attacked was only required to retreat "as far as he conveniently or safely" could "to avoid the violence of the assault."[16] Furthermore, Blackstone was aware that not all English philosophers and legal and political theorists agreed with him regarding a duty to retreat "to the wall" before using deadly force to defend oneself.[17]

John Locke, an influential 17th century political theorist, believed if a man used any amount of force on another without any

---

9. Exodus 20:13, 22:2.

10. Exodus 22:2; 4 William Blackstone, Commentaries, *182–88 (The Univ. of Chi. Press 1979) (1769).

11. See Blackstone, supra note 10, at *182.

12. Id. at *184–85.

13. Id. at *185.

14. Id. at *184.

15. Id. at *185.

16. Id.

17. Id. at *187–88.

right he became an aggressor and was thus in a "state of war" with the person upon whom he used force.[18] Locke said,

> This makes it lawful for a man to kill a thief, who has not in the least hurt him, nor declared any design upon his life, any farther than, by the use of force, so to get him in his power, as to take away his money, or what he pleases, from him . . . ."[19]

Locke justified using deadly force against even a thief by going on to say, "[B]ecause using force, where he has no right, to get me into his power, let his pretense be what it will, I have no reason to suppose, that he, who would take away my liberty, would not, when he had me in his power, take away everything else."[20] According to Locke, that put the would-be thief at war with his intended victim and exposed him to deadly force.[21] It is clear Locke did not agree with the English common law's requirement of retreating before using deadly force to defend against deadly force.

Just as the United States of America established a government different from that of England, the new country did not embrace the "retreat to the wall" mentality of England, as expounded by Blackstone.[22] Locke's political views and philosophies influenced the Declaration of Independence and many of our founders.[23] It is, therefore, not surprising that the majority of the new states did not adopt the English duty to retreat before using deadly force to defend against deadly force and instead allowed those confronted with deadly force to stand their ground and not retreat.[24] In 1921, Justice Holmes, writing for the Court in Brown v. United States, summed up the American attitude toward retreat when he said, "Detached reflection cannot be demanded in the presence of an uplifted knife."[25]

---

18. JOHN LOCKE, TWO TREATISES ON GOVERNMENT 107 (Ian Shapiro ed., Yale Univ. Press 2003) (1690).
19. Id. at 107–08.
20. Id. at 108.
21. Id.
22. Beard v. United States, 158 U.S. 550, 561–63 (1895).
23. See JOHN DUNN, THE POLITICAL THOUGHT OF JOHN LOCKE 6 (1969).
24. Beard, 158 U.S. at 561–63.
25. 256 U.S. 335, 343 (1921).

Some states, however, did follow the English tradition of imposing a duty to retreat before using deadly force in self-defense. But even those states recognized an exception, the castle doctrine, which abolished the duty to retreat in one's home or dwelling before using deadly force in self-defense and allowed a person to "stand his ground."[26] Justice Cardozo emphasized the historical recognition of the castle doctrine when he said, "It is not now, and never has been the law that a man assailed in his own dwelling, is bound to retreat. If assailed there, he may stand his ground, and resist the attack."[27]

As our country grew, the majority of states continued to recognize a person's right to use deadly force to defend against deadly force without retreating.[28] Prior to Florida amending its self-defense statute to abolish its common law duty to retreat, the majority of states recognized a person's right to use deadly force to defend against deadly force without first retreating.[29] Today, an

---

26. The castle doctrine is based on the concept that a man's home is his castle, and he should not be required to retreat in his own home. Additionally, a person's home is his sanctuary and should be his safe place. Weiand v. State, 732 So. 2d 1044, 1049–50 (Fla. 1999) (quoting People v. Tomlins, 107 N.E. 496, 497 (N.Y. 1914)).

27. Tomlins, 107 N.E. at 497.

28. Weiand, 732 So. 2d at 1051.

29. MO. ANN. STAT. § 563.031 (West 2012); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611(b)(1) (2014); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-402(3) (LexisNexis 2012); State v. Jackson, 382 P.2d 229, 232 (Ariz. 1963); People v. Hughes, 237 P.2d 64, 67–68 (Cal. Dist. Ct. App. 1951); Cassels v. People, 92 P.3d 951, 956 (Colo. 2004); Johnson v. State, 315 S.E.2d 871, 872 (Ga. 1984); State v. McGreevey, 105 P. 1047, 1051 (Idaho 1909); People v. Robinson, 302 N.E.2d 228, 231 (Ill. App. Ct. 1973); Runyan v. State, 57 Ind. 80, 82–83 (Ind. 1877); State v. Scobee, 748 P.2d 862, 867 (Kan. 1988); Oliver v. Commonwealth, 33 S.W.2d 684, 685 (Ky. Ct. App. 1930); People v. Riddle, 649 N.W.2d 30, 35 (Mich. 2002); Cook v. State, 467 So. 2d 203, 210 (Miss. 1985); State v. Bartlett, 71 S.W. 148, 151 (Mo. 1902); State v. Merk, 164 P. 655, 658 (Mont. 1917); Culverson v. State, 797 P.2d 238, 240–41 (Nev. 1990); State v. Horton, 258 P.2d 371, 373 (N.M. 1953); State v. Allen, 541 S.E.2d 490, 497 (N.C. Ct. App. 2000); Kirk v. Territory, 60 P. 797, 806 (Okla. 1900); State v. Rader, 186 P. 79, 85 (Or. 1919); State v. Burtzlaff, 493 N.W.2d 1, 7–8 (S.D. 1992); State v. Renner, 912 S.W.2d 701, 704 (Tenn. 1995); State v. Hatcher, 706 A.2d 429, 435 (Vt. 1997); Gilbert v. Commonwealth, 506 S.E.2d 543, 546 (Va. Ct. App. 1998); State v. Redmond, 78 P.3d 1001, 1003 (Wash. 2003); State v. Evans, 10 S.E. 792, 793 (W. Va. 1890); State v. Wenger, 593 N.W.2d 467, 471 (Wis. Ct. App. 1999).

even larger majority of states recognize a person's right to use deadly force in self-defense without first retreating.[30]

Because of the American tradition of not retreating before appropriately defending one's life from an attacker's use of deadly force, it is puzzling that so much attention was directed at Florida when the state legislature decided to finally join the majority and abolish the duty to retreat. While Florida did strengthen its protections for law-abiding citizens, residents, and visitors who find themselves defending their lives against deadly force, it did not drastically change the parameters, requirements, or components of deadly force as many try to argue. The next part of this Article discusses the generally accepted components of justifiable use of deadly force, Florida's and other state's reaffirmation of the traditional requirements for using deadly force, and the additional protections many states now recognize.

---

30. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23 (West, Westlaw through Act 2015-559 of the 2015 Reg., First Spec. and Second Spec. Sess.); ALASKA STAT. § 11.81.335 (2012); ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-405 (2010 & Supp. 2012); FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 776.012 to –776.013 (West 2010 & Supp. 2015); GA. CODE ANN. § 16-3-23.1 (2011); IND. CODE § 35-41-3-2 (West, Westlaw through P.L. 1-2016 and P.L. 2-2016); KAN. STAT. ANN. § 21-5222 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 503.050 (LexisNexis 2008); LA. STAT. ANN. § 14:20 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 780.972 (West 2007); MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15 (2006); MONT. CODE ANN. § 45-3-110 (2011); NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 200.120 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & Spec. Sess.); N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 627:4 (LexisNexis 2007 & Supp. 2012); N.C. GEN. STAT. § 14-51.3 (2011); OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 21, § 1289.25 (West Supp. 2013); S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-11-440 (Supp. 2012); S.D. CODIFIED LAWS § 22-18-4 (2006); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611 (2014); TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 9.32 (West 2011); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-402 (LexisNexis 2012); Cassels, 92 P.3d at 956; People v. Manley, 584 N.E.2d 477, 491 (Ill. App. Ct. 1991); Bartlett, 71 S.W. at 151; Territory v. Gonzales, 68 P. 925, 932 (N.M. 1902); State v. Sandoval, 156 P.3d 60, 64 (Or. 2007); Foote v. Commonwealth, 396 S.E.2d 851, 855 (Va. Ct. App. 1990); State v. Cushing, 45 P. 145, 145–46 (Wash. 1896); State v. Dinger, 624 S.E.2d 572, 576–77 (W. Va. 2005); Wenger, 539 N.W.2d at 471; N.M. UNIF. JURY INSTRUCTIONS CRIMINAL § 14-5190 (2015); JUDICIAL COUNCIL OF CAL. CRIMINAL JURY INSTRUCTIONS § 505 (2012); IDAHO CRIMINAL JURY INSTRUCTIONS § 1519 (2010).

III. ANALYSIS OF THE LAW OF SELF-DEFENSE

A. An Overview of the Law of Self-Defense Using Deadly Force

The legal justification for self-defense of any kind rests upon the premise that the defender has "no opportunity to resort to the law for his defense."[31] Blackstone and Locke espoused this same justification for use of deadly force in self-defense.[32] This premise could not be any truer than when one is confronted by an assailant about to use deadly force against a law-abiding person. Just as the basic justification for the use of force in self-defense is recognized in every state in the United States,[33] the basic components of the justified use of deadly force are found in all states with slight variations in wording or emphasis. Those components are proportionality, necessity, and reasonable belief.[34]

The most fundamental component required for using deadly force in self-defense is proportionality. A person must be confronted with deadly force before using deadly force.[35] All fifty states require proportionality before defending with deadly force.[36]

---

31. WAYNE R. LAFAVE, CRIMINAL LAW 539 (4th ed. 2003).

32. See BLACKSTONE, supra note 10, at *182; LOCKE, supra note 18, at 107.

33. See DRESSLER, supra note 1, at 223.

34. See id. at 224.

35. See sources cited supra note 2.

36. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23 (West, Westlaw through Act 2015-559 of the 2015 Reg., First Spec. and Second Spec. Sess.); ALASKA STAT. § 11.81.335; ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-405 (2010 & Supp. 2012); ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-607 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & 1st Ex. Sess.); CAL. PENAL CODE § 197 (West 2008); COLO. REV. STAT. § 18-1-704 (2012); CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 53a-19 (West 2012); DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 11, § 464 (2007); FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 776.012 to –776.013 (West 2010 & Supp. 2015); GA. CODE ANN. § 16-3-21 (2011); HAW. REV. STAT. ANN. § 703-304 (LexisNexis 2007); IDAHO CODE § 18-4009 (2004); 720 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/7-1 (West 2002 & Supp. 2013); IND. CODE 35-41-3-2 (West, Westlaw through P.L. 1-2016 and P.L. 2-2016); IOWA CODE ANN. § 704.1 (West 2003); KAN. STAT. ANN. § 21-5222 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 503.050 (LexisNexis 2008); LA. STAT. ANN. § 14:20 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); ME. REV. STAT. ANN. tit. 17A, § 108 (2006 & Supp. 2012); MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 780.972 (West 2007); MINN. STAT. ANN. § 609.065 (West 2009); MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15 (West, Westlaw through 2015 1st Reg. Sess.); MO. ANN. STAT. § 563.031 (West 2012); MONT. CODE ANN. § 45-3-102 (2011); NEB. REV.

This includes the states that do not require a person to retreat before resorting to deadly force—the so-called "stand-your-ground" states.[37] It is important to remember that deadly force does not only mean force involving a firearm, knife, or other traditional weapon. Depending on the size, age, sex, and health of the aggressor and the defender, the number of assailants, and the violent nature of an attack, deadly force, including use of a weapon, can be justified when confronting an unarmed assailant or attacker.[38]

STAT. § 28-1409 (2008); NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 200.160 (LexisNexis 2012); N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 627:4 (LexisNexis 2007 & Supp. 2012); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2C:3-4 (West 2005); N.M. STAT. ANN. § 30-2-7 (West, Westlaw through 2015 First Spec. Sess.); N.Y. PENAL LAW § 35.15 (McKinney 2009); N.C. GEN. STAT. § 14-51.3 (2011); N.D. CENT. CODE § 12.1-05-07 (2012); OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 21, § 733 (West, Westlaw through 2015 First Sess.); OR. REV. STAT. § 161.219 (2011); 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 505 (West 1998 & Supp. 2013); S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-11-440 (Supp. 2012); S.D. CODIFIED LAWS §§ 22-16-34, 22-16-35 (2006); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611 (2014); TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 9.32 (West 2011); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-402 (LexisNexis 2012); VT. STAT. ANN. tit. 13, § 2305 (2009); WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 9A.16.050 (West Supp. 2013); W. VA. CODE § 55-7-22 (LexisNexis 2008); WIS. STAT. ANN. § 939.48 (West Supp. 2012); Christian v. State, 951 A.2d 832 (Md. 2008); Commonwealth v. Haith, 894 N.E.2d 1122, 1128 (Mass. 2008); State v. Hanes, 783 A.2d 920, 925–26 (R.I. 2001); Gilbert v. Commonwealth, 506 S.E.2d 543, 547 (Va. Ct. App. 1998); VA. PRACTICE JURY INSTRUCTIONS §§ 63.1, 63.6 (2015); WYO. PATTERN JURY INSTRUCTION § 8.02 (2014); MD. STATE BAR ASS'N CRIMINAL PATTERN JURY INSTRUCTIONS § 5:07 (2013); 2 CR OHIO JURY INSTRUCTIONS § 417.27 (2008); VT. BAR ASS'N CRIMINAL JURY INSTRUCTION § 111 (2005).

37. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23; ALASKA STAT. § 11.81.335; ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-405; CAL. PENAL CODE § 197; COLO. REV. STAT. § 18-1-704; FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 776.012 to –776.013; GA. CODE ANN. § 16-3-21; IDAHO CODE § 18-4009; 720 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/7-1; IND. CODE 35-41-3-2; KAN. STAT. ANN. § 21-5222; KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 503.050; LA. REV. STAT. ANN. § 14:20; MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 780.972; MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15; MO. ANN. STAT. § 563.031; MONT. CODE ANN. § 45-3-102; NEB. REV. STAT. § 28-1409; NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 200.160; N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 627:4; N.M. STAT. ANN. § 30-2-7; N.C. GEN. STAT. § 14-51.3; OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 21, § 733; OR. REV. STAT. § 161.219; S.D. CODIFIED LAWS §§ 22-16-34, 22-16-35; TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611; TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 9.32; UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-402; VT. STAT. ANN. tit. 13, §2305; WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 16.050; W. VA. CODE § 55-7-22; WIS. STAT. § 939.48; Gilbert, 506 S.E.2d at 547; VA. PRACTICE JURY INSTRUCTIONS §§ 63.1, 63.6 (2015).

38. See LAFAVE, supra note 31, at 542 (citing cases).

Proportionality does not mean equal weapon or instrument of defense but instead refers to the amount of force and the likely effect it can have.[39] Thus, an armed person can be justified in killing an unarmed person who uses or attempts to use deadly force against the armed person.[40]

The next component of the justified use of deadly force in self-defense is necessity.[41] The requirement of necessity includes confronting deadly force that is imminent or immediate.[42] To use deadly force to defend against deadly force, the use of force must be necessary to prevent death or great bodily injury.[43] Such force is necessary if the danger of death or great bodily harm is imminent or immediate. All states require the necessity component either in their self-defense statutes or in their common law as expressed in the state jury instructions.[44] Some states specifically use

---

39. See People v. Tomlins, 107 N.E. 496, 497 (N.Y. 1914).

40. See Weiand v. State, 732 So. 2d 1044, 1049 (Fla. 1999); MISS. MODEL JURY INSTRUCTIONS: CRIMINAL § 2:14 (2011).

41. See DRESSLER, supra note 1, at 224.

42. Id.

43. Id.

44. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23(a) (West, Westlaw through Act 2015-559 of the 2015 Reg., First Spec. and Second Spec. Sess.); ALASKA STAT. § 11.81.335(a) (2012); ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-405(a)(2) (2010 & Supp. 2012); ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-607(b) (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & 1st Ex. Sess.); CAL. PENAL CODE § 197 (West 2008); COLO. REV. STAT. § 18-1-704(1) (2012); CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 53a-19(a) (West 2012); DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 11, § 464(a) (2007); FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 776.012 to –776.013(1) (West 2010 & Supp. 2015); GA. CODE ANN. § 16-3-21(a) (2011); HAW. REV. STAT. ANN. § 703-304(1) (LexisNexis 2007); IDAHO CODE § 18-4009 (2004); 720 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/7-1 (West 2002 & Supp. 2013); IND. CODE ANN. 35-41-3-2 (West, Westlaw through P.L. 1-2016 and P.L. 2-2016); IOWA CODE ANN. § 704.1 (West 2003); KAN. STAT. ANN. 21-5222(a) (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 503.050(1) (LexisNexis 2008); LA. STAT. ANN. § 14:20 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); ME. REV. STAT. ANN. tit. 17A, § 108 (2006 & Supp. 2012); MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 780.972(1)(a) (West 2007); MINN. STAT. ANN. § 609.065 (West 2009); MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15 (2006); MO. ANN. STAT. § 563.031(1) (West 2012); MONT. CODE ANN. § 45-3-102 (2011); NEB. REV. STAT. § 28-1409(1) (2008); NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 200.160 (LexisNexis 2012); N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 627:4(I) (LexisNexis 2007 & Supp. 2012); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2C:3-4(a) (West 2005); N.M. STAT. ANN. § 30-2-7(a) (West, Westlaw through 2015 First Spec. Sess.); N.Y. PENAL LAW § 35.15(1) (McKinney 2009); N.C. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 14-51.3(a) the word "necessity" or "necessary," while others use "imminent" or "immediate."[45] Several states, some of which impose a duty to retreat and some which do not, include both "necessary/necessity" and "imminent/immediate" to emphasize this basic and historic requirement for self-defense.[46] In jurisdictions that require retreat before defending against deadly force with deadly force, necessity is required even if not specifically legislated because if there is a place to which a person can safely retreat to escape from the threat of deadly force, using deadly force is not necessary.

The final component of justified use of deadly force is reasonable belief. The defender must reasonably believe deadly force is necessary to prevent the use of deadly force on the defender. This component includes both a subjective and objective requirement: the defender must have a reasonable belief that the force is necessary to defend against deadly force (subjective), and a reasonable person in the defender's circumstances would also believe (2011); N.D. CENT. CODE § 12.1-05-07(1) (2012); OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 21, § 733(A)(2) (West, Westlaw through 2015 First Sess.); OR. REV. STAT. § 161.219 (2011); 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 505(a) (West 1998 & Supp. 2013); S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-11-440(C) (Supp. 2012); S.D. CODIFIED LAWS §§ 22-16-34, 22-16-35 (2006); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611(b)(1) (2014); TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 9.32 (West 2011); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-402(1)(a), (b) (LexisNexis 2012); VT. STAT. ANN. tit. 13, § 2305(1) (2009); WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 9A.16.050 (West Supp. 2013); W. VA. CODE § 55-7-22(a) (LexisNexis 2008); WIS. STAT. ANN. § 939.48 (West Supp. 2012); Christian v. State, 951 A.2d 832 (Md. 2008); Commonwealth v. Haith, 894 N.E.2d 1122, 1128 (Mass. 2008); State v. Hanes, 783 A.2d 920, 925–26 (R.I. 2001); Gilbert v. Commonwealth, 506 S.E.2d 543, 547 (Va. Ct. App. 1998); VA. PRACTICE JURY INSTRUCTIONS §§ 63.1, 63.6 (2015); WYO. PATTERN JURY INSTRUCTION § 8.02 (2014); MD. STATE BAR ASS'N CRIMINAL PATTERN JURY INSTRUCTIONS § 5:07 (2013); 2 CR OHIO JURY INSTRUCTIONS § 417.27 (2008); VT. BAR ASS'N CRIMINAL JURY INSTRUCTION § 111 (2005).

---

45. See sources cited supra note 44 (citing law in Alabama, Alaska, Arizona, California, Colorado, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Missouri, Mississippi, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, and Wisconsin).

46. See sources cited supra note 44 (citing law in Alabama, Arizona, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Michigan, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, and Wisconsin).

such force is necessary (objective).[47] For example, the Florida statute provides: "A person is justified in using or threatening to use deadly force if he or she reasonably believes that . . . such harm is necessary to prevent imminent death or great bodily harm."[48] By using the term "reasonably believes," the Florida statute requires the person actually believe the force is necessary, the subjective component, and the belief must be reasonable for a person in the defender's situation, the objective component. The Florida standard criminal jury instructions clearly set out these two requirements:

> In deciding whether defendant was justified in the use of deadly force, you must judge [him] [her] by the circumstances by which [he] [she] was surrounded at the time the force was used. The danger facing the defendant need not have been actual; however, to justify the use of deadly force, the appearance of danger must have been so real that a reasonably cautious and prudent person under the same circumstances would have believed that the danger could be avoided only through the use of that force. Based upon appearances, the defendant must have actually believed that the danger was real.[49]

The majority of states uses the same "reasonably believes" statutory language, thus requiring both a subjective and objective mental element for the justified use of deadly force.[50] Maryland and Wy-

---

47. See DRESSLER, supra note 1, at 225.

48. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 776.012(2) (West 2010 & Supp. 2015);

49. FLA. STANDARD JURY INSTRUCTIONS IN CRIMINAL CASES (2010).

50. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23(a) (West, Westlaw through Act 2015-559 of the 2015 Reg., First Spec. and Second Spec. Sess.); ALASKA STAT. § 11.81.335(a) (2012); ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-607(b) (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & 1st Ex. Sess.); COLO. REV. STAT. § 18-1-704(1) (2012); CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 53a-19(a) (West 2012); FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 776.012 to – 776.013(1) (West 2010 & Supp. 2015); GA. CODE ANN. § 16-3-21(a) (2011); 720 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/7-1 (West 2002 & Supp. 2013); IND. CODE 35-41-3-2 (West, Westlaw through P.L. 1-2016 and P.L. 2-2016); IOWA CODE ANN. § 704.1 (West 2003); KAN. STAT. ANN. 21-5222(a) (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); LA. STAT. ANN. § 14:20 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.);

oming do not include the "reasonably believes" language in their statutes, but the state jury instructions provide that the defendant must have the reasonable belief required by the majority.[51] Massachusetts statutes do not impose the reasonable belief requirement, but the state common law does require a defendant reasonably believe deadly force is necessary before using such force.[52]

A small minority of states seems to reject the subjective element of the reasonable belief component of self-defense and instead has adopted a strictly reasonable person objective standard.[53] The North Dakota and Vermont statutes do not include language indicating an objective or subjective standard requirement for the justified use of deadly force.[54] The North Dakota statute provides, "Deadly force is justified . . . [w]hen used in lawful self-defense if such force is necessary to protect the actor . . . against death, serious bodily injury, or the commission of a felony involving violence."[55] Similarly, the Vermont statute provides, "If a person kills or wounds another . . . he or she shall be guiltless: (1) In the just and necessary defense of his or her own life."[56] However, the jury

---

ME. REV. STAT. ANN. tit. 17A, § 108 (2006 & Supp. 2012); MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 780.972(1)(a) (West 2007); MINN. STAT. ANN. § 609.065 (West 2009); MO. ANN. STAT. § 563.031(1) (West 2012); MONT. CODE ANN. § 45-3-102 (2011); N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 627:4(I) (LexisNexis 2007 & Supp. 2012); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2C:3-4(a) (West 2005); N.Y. PENAL LAW § 35.15(1) (McKinney 2009); N.C. GEN. STAT. § 14-51.3(a) (2011); OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 21, § 733(A)(2) (West, Westlaw through 2015 First Sess.); OR. REV. STAT. § 161.219 (2011); S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-11-440(C) (Supp. 2012); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611(b)(1) (2014); TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 9.32 (West 2011); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-402(1)(a), (b) (LexisNexis 2012); W. VA. CODE § 55-7-22(a) (LexisNexis 2008); WIS. STAT. ANN. § 939.48 (West Supp. 2012).

51. MD. STATE BAR ASS'N CRIMINAL PATTERN JURY INSTRUCTIONS § 5:07 (2013); WYO. PATTERN JURY INSTRUCTION § 8.08 (2004).

52. Commonwealth v. Haith, 894 N.E.2d 1122, 1128 (Mass. 2008).

53. ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-405(A)(2) (2010 & Supp. 2012); CAL. PENAL CODE § 198 (West 2008); I.C. § 18-4009(3) (2013); MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15(1)(f) (2006); N.M. STAT. ANN. § 30-2-7(B) (West, Westlaw through 2015 First Spec. Sess.); S.D. CODIFIED LAWS § 22-16-35 (2006); WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 9A.16.050(1) (West Supp. 2013).

54. N.D. CENT. CODE § 12.1-05-07 (2012); VT. STAT. ANN. tit. 13, § 2305 (2009).

55. N.D. CENT. CODE § 12.1-05-07(2)(b) (emphasis added).

56. VT. STAT ANN. tit. 13, § 2305 (emphasis added).

instructions of both states make it clear that the basic component of a reasonable belief is required.[57]

In addition to justifying the use of deadly force when confronted with deadly force, the majority of state statutes provide deadly force may be used when the person against whom force is being used is committing a felony,[58] a felony involving force or violence,[59] a forcible felony as defined by statute,[60] or certain enumerated felonies.[61] These statutes recognize the mere commission of certain felonies creates a risk of death or great bodily injury to victims, witnesses, or bystanders of such crimes. The purpose of all self-defense statutes is to protect law-abiding citizens from

---

57. VT. BAR ASS'N CRIMINAL JURY INSTRUCTION § 111 (2005); see also State v. Gagnon, 567 N.W.2d 807, 810 (N.D. 1997).

58. See, e.g., MINN. STAT. ANN. § 609.065 (West 2009); MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15 (2006); NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 200.120 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & Spec. Sess.); N.M. STAT. ANN. § 30-2-7 (West, Westlaw through 2015 First Spec. Sess.); S.D. CODIFIED LAWS §§ 22-16-34 to -35 (2006).

59. ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-607(a) (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & 1st Ex. Sess.); CAL. PENAL CODE § 197 (West 2008); IDAHO CODE § 18-4009 (2004); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 503.055(3) (LexisNexis 2008); LA. STAT. ANN. § 14:20 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); N.D. CENT. CODE § 12.1-05-07; OR. REV. STAT. § 161.219(1) (2011); S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-11-420 (Supp. 2012); WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 9A.16.050 (West Supp. 2013); see also JUDICIAL COUNCIL OF CAL. CRIMINAL JURY INSTRUCTIONS § 506 (2006) (interpreting CAL. PENAL CODE § 197 to mean a "forcible and atrocious" felony).

60. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 776.031 (West 2010 & Supp. 2015); GA. CODE ANN. § 16-3-21(a) (2011); 720 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/7-1 (West 2002 & Supp. 2013); IND. CODE § 35-41-3-2 (West, Westlaw through P.L. 1-2016 and P.L. 2-2016); MO. ANN. STAT. § 563.031 (West 2012); MONT. CODE ANN. § 45-3-102 (2011); OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 21, § 733 (West, Westlaw through 2015 First Sess.); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-402 (LexisNexis 2012).

61. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23 (West, Westlaw through Act 2015-559 of the 2015 Reg., First Spec. and Second Spec. Sess.); ALASKA STAT. § 11.81.335 (2012); ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-411 (2010 & Supp. 2012); COLO. REV. STAT. § 18-1-704 (2012); CONN. GEN. STAT. § 53a-20 to -21 (West 2012); DEL. CODE ANN. title 11, § 464 (2007); HAW. REV. STAT. ANN. § 703-3-4 (LexisNexis 2007); ME. REV. STAT. ANN. tit. 17A, § 108 (2006 & Supp. 2012); NEB. REV. STAT. § 28-1409 (2008); N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 627:4 (LexisNexis 2007 & Supp. 2012); N.Y. PENAL LAW § 35.15 (McKinney 2009); 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 505 (West 1998 & Supp. 2013); 3 R.I. GEN. LAWS § 11-8-8 (2002); TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 9.32 (2011); VT. STAT. ANN. tit. 13, § 2305 (2009).

falling prey to the unlawful acts of assailants, attackers, or other criminals, and the additional justification for using deadly force when serious crimes are being committed is a necessary component of that protection.

The three basic components discussed above, along with the protections afforded those who are victims, witnesses, or bystanders of crime, serve as the foundational requirements for the justified use of deadly force. Unless the requirements are met, the use of deadly force in self-defense is not justified but is, instead, likely to be criminal. The law of all fifty states makes it clear that one cannot use deadly force against non-deadly force, a threat, or a verbal confrontation.[62] A would-be assailant must be using or attempting to use deadly force, and deadly force must be necessary to prevent or repel that deadly force. Finally, the necessity to use deadly force must be based on the defender's reasonable belief, which will be determined by the circumstances in which the defender finds himself knowing what he knows. Whether in a retreat state or a non-retreat state, a killing in self-defense will be justified and, therefore, not criminal only when all the requirements of the law are met. Thus, if an unprovoked man yells to a potential victim standing by his car 100 feet away, "Your money or your life," the potential victim cannot pull a gun, shoot the would-be robber, and successfully claim self-defense in any state. In these limited facts, the force used is not necessary or proportional, and there are no facts to support a reasonable belief that the thief was about to use deadly force.

---

62. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23(a); ALASKA STAT. § 11.81.335(a); ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-405(a)(2) (2010 & Supp. 2012); ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-607(b); CAL. PENAL CODE § 197; COLO. REV. STAT. § 18-1-704(1); CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 53a-19(a) (West 2012); DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 11, § 464(a); FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 776.012 to –776.013(1) (West 2010 & Supp. 2015); GA. CODE ANN. § 16-3-21(a); HAW. REV. STAT. ANN. § 703-304(1); IDAHO CODE § 18-4009; 720 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/7-1; IND. CODE 35-41-3-2; IOWA CODE ANN. § 704.1 (West 2003); KAN. STAT. ANN. § 21-5222(a) (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 503.050(1) (LexisNexis 2008); LA. STAT. ANN. § 14:20 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); ME. REV. STAT. ANN. tit. 17, § 108; MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 780.972(1)(a) (West 2007); MINN. STAT. ANN. § 609.065; MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15 (2006); MO. REV. STAT. § 563.031(1); MONT. CODE ANN. § 45-3-102; NEB. REV. STAT. § 28-1409(1); NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 200.160 (LexisNexis 2012); N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 627:4(I); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2C:3-4(a) (West 2005); N.M. STAT. ANN. § 30-2-7(a); N.Y. PENAL LAW § 35.15(1); N.C. GEN. STAT. § 14-51.3(a) (2011); N.D. CENT. CODE § 12.1-05-07(1); OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 21, § 733(A)(2) (West, Westlaw through 2015 First Sess.); OR. REV. STAT. § 161.219 (2011); 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 505(a) (West 1998 & Supp. 2013); S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-11-440(C) (Supp. 2012); S.D. CODIFIED LAWS §§ 22-16-34, 22-16-35 (2006); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611(b)(1) (2014); TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 9.32 (West 2011); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-402(1)(a), (b); VT. STAT. ANN. tit. 13, § 2305(1); WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 16.050; W. VA. CODE § 55-7-22(a) (LexisNexis 2008); WIS. STAT. ANN. § 939.48 (West Supp. 2012); Christian v. State, 951 A.2d 832 (Md. 2008); Commonwealth v. Haith, 894 N.E.2d 1122, 1128 (Mass. 2008); State v. Hanes, 783 A.2d 920, 925–26 (R.I. 2001); Gilbert v. Commonwealth, 506 S.E.2d 543, 547 (Va. Ct. App. 1998); VA. PRACTICE JURY INSTRUCTIONS §§ 63.1, 63.6 (2015); WYO. PATTERN JURY INSTRUCTION § 8.02 (2014); MD. STATE BAR ASS'N CRIMINAL PATTERN JURY INSTRUCTIONS § 5:07 (2013); 2 CR OHIO JURY INSTRUCTIONS § 417.27 (2008); VT. BAR ASS'N CRIMINAL JURY INSTRUCTION § 111 (2005).

B. Who Can and Who Cannot Defend Themselves Using Deadly Force

Every state, whether by statute or by common law, limits when an individual will be justified in using deadly force in a self-defense situation. Some statutory restrictions are based on the defender's actions or activities at the time he uses deadly force. All fifty states, including "stand your ground" states, prohibit aggressors and/or provokers from benefiting from self-defense laws, except in vary narrow circumstances that indicate the person claiming justification has clearly ceased being the aggressor.[63] Several states further restrict the justifiable use of deadly force to those who do not consent to force or violence and those who are not involved in combat by agreement or mutual combat.[64] Finally, many state statutes specifically deny the justification for use of deadly force if the user of such force is involved in criminal activity.[65] Thus, the use of deadly force is only justified if a person is not engaging in provocative, violent, or criminal behavior that created the necessity to use such force in self-defense.

---

63. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23; ALASKA STAT. § 11.81.335; ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-405 (2010 & Supp. 2012); ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-606 (2013); CAL. PENAL CODE § 197; COLO. REV. STAT. § 18-1-704; CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 53a-19; DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 11, § 464; FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 776.013 to –776.041 (West 2010 & Supp. 2015); GA. CODE ANN. § 16-3-21; HAW. REV. STAT. ANN. § 703-304; IDAHO CODE ANN. § 18-4009; 720 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/7-4 (West 2002); IND. CODE 35-41-3-2; IOWA CODE ANN. § 704.6 (West 2003); KAN. STAT. ANN. § 21-5226 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 502.055, 502.060 (LexisNexis 2008); LA. STAT. ANN. §§ 14:19, 14.21 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); ME. REV. STAT. ANN. tit. 17A, § 108; MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 780.972; MINN. STAT. ANN. § 609.065; MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15 (2006); MO. ANN. STAT. § 563.031; MONT. CODE ANN. § 45-3-105 (2011); NEB. REV. STAT. § 28-1409; NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 200.120 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & Spec. Sess.); N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 627:4; N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2C:3-4; N.Y. PENAL LAW § 35.15; N.C. GEN. STAT. § 14-51.4; N.D. CENT. CODE § 12.1-05-03 (2012); OKLA.

C. Florida Joins the Majority and Others Follow

In 2005, Florida joined the majority of states by amending its self-defense laws to abolish its common law duty to retreat before using deadly force in self-defense. When it did, it became the first state whose no retreat law became characterized as a "stand

---

STAT. ANN. tit. 21, § 1289.25 (West Supp. 2013); OR. REV. STAT. § 161.215 (2011); 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 505 (West 1998 & Supp. 2013); S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-11-420 (Supp. 2012); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611 (2014); TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. §§ 9.31, 9.32 (West 2011); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-402; WIS. STAT. ANN. § 939.48; State v. Turner, 886 N.E.2d 280, 284–85 (Ohio Ct. App. 2008); State v. Woods, 374 N.W.2d 92, 97 (S.D. 1985); State v. McGee, 655 A.2d 729, 733 (Vt. 1995); Foster v. Commonwealth, 412 S.E.2d 198, 201–02 (Va. Ct. App. 1991); State v. Riley, 976 P.2d 624, 627–28 (Wash. 1999); N.M. UNIF. JURY INSTRUCTIONS CRIMINAL § 14-5190 (2015).

64. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23; ALASKA STAT. § 11.81.335; ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-405; CAL. PENAL CODE § 197; COLO. REV. STAT. § 18-1-704; CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 53a-19; GA. CODE ANN. § 16-3-21; IDAHO CODE ANN. § 18-4009; IND. CODE 35-41-3-2; NMRA, Crim. UJI 14-5191; N.Y. PENAL LAW § 35.15; N.D. CENT. CODE § 12.1-05-03; OR. REV. STAT. § 161.215; TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611; UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-402.

65. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23; ALASKA STAT. §§ 11.81.330, 11.81.335 (2012); ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-405; FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 776.012, 77.031, 776.041 (West 2010 & Supp. 2015); GA. CODE ANN. § 16-3-21; 720 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/7-4 (West 2002); IND. CODE § 35-41-3-2; IOWA CODE ANN. § 704.6; KAN. STAT. ANN. §§ 21-5226, 21-5230 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 502.055; LA. STAT. ANN. §§ 14:19, 14:20 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 780.961 (West 2007); MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15 (2006); MO. ANN. STAT. § 563.031; MONT. CODE ANN. § 45-3-105; NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 200.120; N.C. GEN. STAT. § 14-51.4; OKLA STAT. ANN. title 21, § 1289.25; 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 505; TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611; TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. §§ 9.31, 9.32; UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-402; W. VA. CODE ANN. § 55-7-22 (LexisNexis 2008); WIS. STAT. ANN. § 939.48.

your ground" statute.[66] Many commentators were quick to criticize the new law; however, other states soon followed Florida by adopting stronger self-defense laws.[67] Over the next few years, additional states joined Florida and passed similar statutes or milder versions.[68] States continue to review their laws regarding a person's right to use deadly force in self-defense, and as recently as February 2015, the Iowa legislature proposed an amendment to its self-defense statute to eliminate a person's duty to retreat; the amendment has been referred to the Judiciary Subcommittee.[69] Even states that impose a duty to retreat on a person defending himself began re-evaluating their self-defense laws. Ohio, a retreat state, expanded its castle doctrine in 2008 to include a person's residence and vehicle.[70] Wyoming, another retreat state, revisited its self-defense laws that same year and created legal presumptions to protect those confronted with an intruder in their home or habitation.[71]

Prior to amending its statute in 2011, Wisconsin did not impose a statutory or common law duty to retreat; however, judges in effect created such a duty when they would instruct the jury as follows:

---

66. Elizabeth Chuck, Florida Had First Stand Your Ground Law, Other States Followed in 'Rapid Succession,' NBC NEWS (July 18, 2013, 10:03 AM), http://www.nbcnews.com/news/other/florida-had-first-stand-your-ground-law-other-states-followed-f6C10672364.

67. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23 (effective June 1, 2006); GA. CODE ANN. § 16-3-23.1 (2011) (effective July 1, 2006); IND. CODE § 35-41-3-2 (effective July 1, 2006); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 505.050, 503-055 (effective July 12, 2006); LA. STAT. ANN. §§ 14:19 to –14:20 (effective Aug. 15, 2006); MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. §§ 768.21c, 780.951, 780.961, 780.972 (West 2007) (effective Oct. 1, 2006); MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15 (effective July 1, 2006); S.C. CODE ANN. §§ 16-11-420 and 16-11-440 (Supp. 2012) (effective June 9, 2006).

68. TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611 (effective May 22, 2007); TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. §§ 9.31, 9.32 (effective Sept. 1, 2007); W. VA. CODE ANN. § 55-7-22; NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 200.120 (effective Oct. 1, 2011; amended June 2, 2015); N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 627.4 (effective Nov. 13, 2011); N.C. GEN. STAT. §§ 14-51.2 to -51.4 (2011) (effective Dec. 1, 2011); WIS. STAT. ANN. § 939.48 (effective Dec. 21, 2011).

69. S.B. 137, 86th Gen. Assemb., Reg. Sess. (Iowa 2015).

70. OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2901.09 (LexisNexis 2010) (effective Sept. 9, 2008).

71. WYO. STAT. ANN. § 6-2-602 (2013) (effective July 1, 2008).

> There is no duty to retreat. However, in determining whether the defendant reasonably believed the amount of force used was necessary to prevent or terminate the interference, you may consider whether the defendant had the opportunity to retreat with safety, whether such retreat was feasible, and whether the defendant knew of the opportunity to retreat.[72]

As a result, in 2011, the Wisconsin legislature amended its self-defense statute to make it clear that a person does not have any duty to retreat and, therefore, the possibility of retreat is irrelevant by adding the following language: "the court may not consider whether the actor had an opportunity to flee or retreat before he or she used force."[73] Additionally, the legislature created a conclusive presumption of reasonableness for those in their dwelling, motor vehicle, or place of business when an intruder unlawfully and forcibly enters.[74]

In 2011, the Pennsylvania legislature also revisited its self-defense laws and, like Florida and states both before and after Florida, created legal presumptions that benefit those confronted with intruders unlawfully and forcibly entering their dwelling, residence, or occupied vehicle.[75] Pennsylvania stopped short of totally abolishing the duty to retreat but enacted what could be called a partial "stand your ground" statute by abolishing the duty to retreat and granting a law-abiding resident "the right to stand his ground and use force, including deadly force" if he has the right to be where he is, otherwise meets the requirements for use of deadly force, and the other person displays or uses a "firearm or replica of a firearm" or "any other weapon readily or apparently capable of lethal use."[76]

Florida's statute has drawn particular attention and criticism perhaps because it was the first state to incorporate more of 72. State v. Wenger, 593 N.W.2d 467, 471 (Wis. Ct. App. 1999).

---

73. WIS. STAT. ANN. § 939.48 (West Supp. 2012) (effective Dec. 21, 2011).

74. Id.

75. 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 505(b)(2.3) (West 1998 & Supp. 2013) (effective August 29, 2011).

76. Id.

the protections already enacted in other states or because of media coverage of high-profile cases, such as State of Florida v. George Zimmerman.[77] As a result, critics have repeatedly mischaracterized such statutes, calling them "shoot first" or "shoot first, ask questions later" laws.[78] Some have even said the statutes allow for retaliation.[79] Such characterizations are patently false and indicate a lack of understanding of the purpose of these statutes. As stated earlier, prior to Florida passing its new self-defense statute, the majority of states did not require a person to retreat before using deadly force to defend against deadly force.[80] Florida did not create or introduce a new concept into the long-established legal doctrine of self-defense.

D. Protections Afforded by "Stand Your Ground" Laws

In order to analyze so called "stand your ground" laws, it is necessary to identify which state statutes qualify as "stand your ground" statutes and which states would be considered "stand your ground" states because of the state's common law regarding justified use of deadly force. It is difficult to categorize which statutes constitute "stand your ground" statutes because those so categorized by the media, critics, and commentators are not identical in their provisions or language. Critics of the 2005 Florida statutes,

---

77. See Brandon T. Wrobleski, Note, Calling the Court of Public Opinion to Order: A Critical Analysis of State of Florida v. George Zimmerman, 27 REGENT U. L. REV. 103 (2015). In the Zimmerman case, the defendant was charged with the first-degree murder of Trayvon Martin. Id. at 111. Zimmerman raised the defense of self-defense under Florida's statute and was acquitted. Id. at 106. The case drew national attention and criticism, much of which was aimed at the Florida statute. See, e.g., Pete Williams & Tracy Connor, Holder Speaks Out Against 'Stand Your Ground' Laws After Zimmerman Verdict, NBSNEWS.COM (July 17, 2013, 11:13 AM), http://www.nbcnews.com/news/other/holder-speaks-out-against-stand-your-ground-laws-after-zimmerman-f6C10654061.

78. Christine Catalfamo, Stand Your Ground: Florida's Castle Doctrine for the Twenty-First Century, 4 RUTGERS J.L. & PUB. POL'Y 504 (2007); Kavan Peterson, More States Sanction Deadly Force, STATELINE: THE PEW CENTER ON THE STATES (April 26, 2006), http://web.archive.org/web/20110101085316/http:/www.stateline.org/live/ViewPage.action?siteNodeId=136&languageID=1&contentId=107276.

79. Peterson, supra note 78.

80. See supra note 29.

and others like them, began referring to such statutes as "stand your ground" laws in an attempt to cast such laws in a negative light;[81] however, the Florida legislature did not enact any of the new statutes as a "stand your ground" law and did not include the words "stand your ground" in the titles of any of the new statutes enacted in 2005.[82] The title of the statute that includes the "stand your ground" language is "Home protection; use of deadly force; presumption of fear of death or great bodily harm."[83] At the time the statute was passed, the legislative history likewise does not refer to the statute as a "stand your ground" statute.[84] The Florida legislature did use the language "stand his or her ground" in the part of the statute that abolished the state common law duty to retreat.[85]

Long before the Florida statute was enacted, various courts recognized and emphasized the long-standing majority view of no duty to retreat by using the term "stand your ground."[86] In 1895, in United States v. Beard, the United States Supreme Court held the trial court committed reversible error when it instructed the jury that the defendant had a duty to retreat and posed the question, "Does the law hold a man who is violently and feloniously assaulted responsible for having brought such necessity upon himself on the sole ground that he failed to fly from his assailant when he might safely have done so?"[87] The Court answered the question in the negative and held:

> [I]f the accused did not provoke the assault, and had at the time reasonable grounds to believe, and in good faith believed, that the deceased intended to take his life, or do him great bodily harm, he was not obliged to retreat, nor to consider whether he could safely retreat, but was entitled to stand his ground, and meet any attack . . . with such force as .

81. Catalfamo, supra note 78, at 523–24.
82. FLA. STAT. §§ 776.012, 776.013, 776.031 (2005) (amended 2014).
83. Id. § 776.013.
84. Id. §§ 776.012, 776.013, 776.031.
85. Id. § 776.013(3).
86. See, e.g., Beard v. United States, 158 U.S. 550 (1895).
87. Id. at 561.

> . . were necessary to save his own life, or to protect him from great bodily injury.[88]

Additionally, as reflected in its jury instructions regarding self-defense, New Mexico common law recognized a person's right to stand his ground and use deadly force in self-defense at least as early as 1902, long before Florida incorporated the language in its justified use of deadly force statute.[89] Likewise, California Jury Instruction 505 Justifiable Homicide: Self-Defense or Defense of Another uses the same language when emphasizing no duty to retreat and provides:

> A defendant is not required to retreat. He or she is entitled to stand his or her ground and defend himself or herself and, if reasonably necessary, to pursue an assailant until the danger of (death/great bodily injury/_______<insert forcible and atrocious crime>) has passed. This is so even if safety could have been achieved by retreating.[90]

Similarly, Virginia common law has long recognized that a person who is without fault in bringing on the necessity for self-defense "need not retreat, but is permitted to stand his ground (emphasis added) and repel the attack by force, including deadly force, if it is necessary."[91] The courts used the language "stand his ground" to emphasize that the law did not require a person who was not at fault to retreat before using deadly force in self-defense. Even Florida courts before 2005 used the "stand his ground" language

---

88. Id. at 564 (emphasis added).

89. See N.M. Unif. Jury Instructions Criminal § 14-5190 (2015). "A person who is threatened with an attack need not retreat. In the exercise of his right of self defense, he may stand his ground and defend himself." Id.; see also State v. Horton, 258 P.2d 371, 372–73 (N.M. 1953); Territory v. Gonzales, 68 P. 925, 932 (N.M. 1902).

90. Judicial Council of Cal. Criminal Jury Instructions § 505 (2012) (emphasis added).

91. Foote v. Commonwealth, 396 S.E.2d 851, 855 (Va. Ct. App. 1990) (emphasis added) (citing McCoy v. Commonwealth, 99 S.E. 644 (Va. 1919)); see also Gilbert v. Commonwealth, 506 S.E.2d 543, 547 (Va. Ct. App. 1998).

when applying the castle doctrine exception to the duty to retreat.[92] By using the language "stand his or her ground,"[93] the Florida legislature similarly highlighted its intent to join the majority and to abolish the state common law duty to retreat.

Even though the term "stand his or her ground" was used years before the Florida legislature passed the 2005 statute, commentators and critics seized upon the language in the Florida statute and began using the phrase "stand your ground" in a way that mischaracterized such statutes. At the same time, they seemed to ignore the history of the phrase and other states' use of the phrase to emphasize no duty to retreat in their castle doctrines.

Fortunately for the citizens and residents of several states, the mischaracterizations and criticisms had no effect on their state legislatures. After Florida passed its justifiable use of deadly force statute in 2005, other state legislatures reviewed and revised their laws regarding justifiable use of deadly force.[94] Some states followed Florida and abolished the duty to retreat, while others modified their retreat provisions to expand their version of the castle doctrine or to provide protections for those justifiably using deadly force.[95] Some of the states that followed Florida's lead and enact-

92. Hedges v. State, 172 So. 2d 824, 827 (Fla. 1965); Pell v. State, 122 So. 110, 116 (Fla. 1929).

93. FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 776.012, 776.013, 776.031 (2010 & Supp. 2015).

94. MO. ANN. STAT. § 563.031 (West 2012); NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 200.120 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & Spec. Sess.); N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 627.4 (LexisNexis 2007 & Supp. 2012); N.C. GEN. STAT. §§ 14-51.2 to -51.4 (2011); N.D. CENT. CODE §§ 12.1-05-07, 12.1-05-07.1 (2012); OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2901.09 (LexisNexis 2010); 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 505 (West 1998 & Supp. 2013); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611 (2014); TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. §§ 9.31, 9.32 (West 2011); WA. REV. CODE § 9A.16.050 (2009); W. VA. CODE ANN. § 55-7-22 (LexisNexis 2008); WIS. STAT. ANN. § 939.48 (West Supp. 2012); WYO. STAT. ANN. § 6-2-602 (2013); S.B. 137, 86th Gen. Assemb., Reg. Sess. (Iowa 2015).

95. MO. ANN. STAT. S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-11-440 (Supp. 2012) § 563.031; NEV. REV. STAT. § 200.120; N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 627.4; N.C. GEN. STAT. §§ 14-51.2 to -51.4; N.D. CENT. CODE §§ 12.1-05-07, 12.1-05-07.1; OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2901.09; 18 PA. STAT. AND CONST. STAT. § 505; TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611; TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. §§ 9.31, 9.32; WA. REV. CODE § 9A.16.050; W. VA. CODE ANN. § 55-7-22; WIS. STAT. § 939.48; WYO. STAT. ANN. § 6-2-602; S.B. 137, 86th Gen. Assemb., Reg. Sess. (Iowa 2015).

ed what some call "stand your ground" statutes[96] did not even include the language "stand your ground."[97]

If "stand your ground" laws do not necessarily contain those words, are all states that do not impose a duty to retreat considered "stand your ground" states? As has already been discussed, the United States Supreme Court and other no-retreat states used the phrase "stand your ground" long before Florida passed its statute in 2005.[98] If all no-duty-to-retreat states are considered "stand your ground" states, there are thirty-three states that are "stand your ground" states.[99] Prior to 2007, one of those states,

---

96. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23 (West, Westlaw through Act 2015-559 of the 2015 Reg., First Spec. and Second Spec. Sess.) (effective June 1, 2006); GA. CODE ANN. § 16-3-23.1 (effective July 1, 2006); IND. CODE § 35-41-3-2 (West, Westlaw through P.L. 1-2016 and P.L. 2-2016) (effective July 1, 2006); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. §§ 505.050, 503-055 (LexisNexis 2008) (effective July 12, 2006); LA. STAT. ANN. §§ 14:19–14:20 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.) (effective Aug. 15, 2006); MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. §§ 768.21c, 780.951, 780.961, 780.972 (West 2007) (effective Oct. 1, 2006); MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15 (2006) (effective July 1, 2006); NEV. REV. STAT. § 200.120 (effective Oct. 1, 2011; amended June 2, 2015); N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 627.4 (effective Nov. 13, 2011); N.C. GEN. STAT. §§ 14-51.2 to –14-51.4 (effective Dec. 1, 2011); S.C. CODE ANN. §§ 16-11-420 and 16-11-440 (effective June 9, 2006); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611 (effective May 22, 2007); TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. §§ 9.31, 9.32 (effective Sept. 1, 2007); W. VA. CODE ANN. § 55-7-22 (effective Feb. 28, 2008); WIS. STAT. § 939.48 (effective Dec. 21, 2011).

97. ALASKA STAT. § 11.81.335 (2012); ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-405 (2010 & Supp. 2012); IND. CODE § 35-41-3-2; MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15; S.D. CODIFIED LAWS § 22-18-4 (2006); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611; TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 9.32; W. VA. CODE ANN. § 55-7-22.

98. TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611; UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-402 (LexisNexis 2012); Gilbert v. Commonwealth, 506 S.E.2d 543 (Va. Ct. App. 1998); Beard v. United States, 158 U.S. 550, 561–63 (1895); State v. Jackson, 382 P.2d 229, 232 (Ariz. 1963); People v. Hughes, 237 P.2d 64, 66 (Cal. Ct. App. 1951); State v. McGreevey, 105 P. 1047, 1051 (Idaho 1909); State v. Scobee, 748 P.2d 862, 867 (Kan. 1988); People v. Riddle, 649 N.W.2d 30, 35 (Mich. 2002); State v. Sunday, 609 P.2d 1188, 1195 (Mont. 1980); Culverson v. State, 797 P.2d 238, 240 (Nev. 1990); State v. Horton, 258 P.2d 371, 373 (N.M. 1953); Kirk v. Territory, 60 P. 797, 804 (Okla. 1900); Bechtel v. State, 840 P.2d 1, 12–13 (Okla. Crim. App. 1992); State v. Rader, 186 P. 79, 88 (Or. 1919); State v. Burtzlaff, 493 N.W.2d 1, 7 (S.D. 1992).

99. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23; ALASKA STAT. § 11.81.335; ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-405; FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 776.012, 776.013 (2010 & Supp. 2015); GA. CODE ANN. § 16-3-23.1 (2011); IND. CODE § 35-41-3-2; KAN. STAT.

Missouri, did not specifically state in its statute whether or not a person had a duty to retreat before using deadly force;[100] however, the common law of the state clearly recognized the state imposed no duty to retreat.[101] Additionally, the Comment to the 1973 Proposed Code says, "Missouri . . . imposes no duty to retreat on the actor before he can resort to deadly force in self-defense."[102] In 2007, the Missouri legislature amended its self-defense statute to include an expanded castle doctrine and to specifically provide a person does not have a duty to retreat "from a dwelling, residence, or vehicle" or "from private property that is owned or leased" by the person.[103] While the statute again is silent as to whether there is a duty to retreat in other places, such as anywhere a person has a right to be, there is no reason to believe the Missouri common law rule of no duty to retreat has changed.[104]

As stated earlier, in addition to the thirty-three no retreat states, the Pennsylvania legislature amended its self-defense statute in 2011 to provide a person is not required to retreat and recogniz-

---

ANN. § 21-5222 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 503.050 (LexisNexis 2008); LA. STAT. ANN. § 14:20 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 780.972 (West 2007); MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15; MONT. CODE ANN. § 45-3-110 (2011); NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 200.120 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & Spec. Sess.); N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 627:4; N.C. GEN. STAT. § 14-51.3 (2011); OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 21, § 1289.25 (West Supp. 2013); S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-11-440 (Supp. 2012); S.D. CODIFIED LAWS § 22-18-4 (2006); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611; TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 9.32 (West 2011); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-402 (LexisNexis 2012); Cassels v. People, 92 P.3d 951, 956 (Colo. 2004); McGreevey, 105 P. at 1051 (Idaho 1909); People v. Manley, 584 N.E.2d 477, 491 (Ill. App. Ct. 1991); State v. Bartlett, 71 S.W. 148, 151 (Mo. 1902); Territory v. Gonzales, 68 P. 925, 932 (N.M. 1902); State v. Sandoval, 156 P.3d 60, 64 (Or. 2007); Foote v. Commonwealth, 396 S.E.2d 851, 855 (Va. Ct. App. 1990); State v. Cushing, 45 P. 145, 145–46 (Wa. 1896); State v. Dinger, 624 S.E.2d 572, 576–77 (W. Va. 2005); State v. Wenger, 539 N.W.2d 467, 471 (Wis. Ct. App. 1999); N.M. UNIF. JURY INSTRUCTIONS CRIMINAL § 14-5190 (2015); JUDICIAL COUNCIL OF CAL. CRIMINAL JURY INSTRUCTIONS § 505 (2012); IDAHO CRIMINAL JURY INSTRUCTIONS § 1519 (2010).

100. MO. ANN. STAT. § 563.031 (West 2012).

101. Bartlett, 71 S.W. at 151.

102. MO. ANN. STAT. § 563.031.

103. Id.

104. See Bartlett, 71 S.W. at 148; In re J.M., 812 S.W.2d 925, 932 (Mo. 1991).

es his right to "stand his ground" when defending against deadly force if the other person displays or uses a firearm, replica of a firearm, or "any other weapon readily or apparently capable of lethal use."[105] The defender's right to stand his ground exists wherever he "has a right to be."[106] Clearly, even with its partial "stand your ground" statute, Pennsylvania does not adopt the view of the shrinking minority that law-abiding citizens should always retreat outside their home before defending themselves against deadly force.

Since it is difficult to tell which state self-defense laws commentators and critics consider "stand your ground" laws, and since commentators and critics have focused on the 2005 Florida statutory amendments when discussing "stand your ground" laws, the next section of this Article analyzes the Florida statute to discuss the protections afforded by Florida and other states that provide similar protections.

1. Recognition of the Long-Standing Right to Use Deadly Force to Protect Oneself Without First Retreating

Prior to 2005, the Florida statute regarding the use of deadly force in self-defense contained no language as to whether or not a person had a duty to retreat before using such force.[107] The Florida common law, however, did require a person to retreat before using deadly force in defense against deadly force.[108] Thus, when Florida enacted new statutes that abolished the common law duty to retreat, the new legislation represented a major change to the Florida self-defense laws. When the Florida legislature amended the state statutes regarding the justified use of deadly force in self-defense, Florida joined the majority of states that do not require law-abiding citizens, residents, and visitors to retreat before defending themselves against deadly force. This Article emphasizes this basic fact because eliminating the duty to retreat is the statutory change that drew the most criticism, mischaracterizations, and media attention when the new statute was proposed, being dis-

---

105. See 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 505(b)(2.3) (West 1998 & Supp. 2013).

106. Id.

107. FLA. STAT. § 776.012 (2003) (amended 2005).

108. Weiand v. State, 732 So. 2d 1044, 1051 (Fla. 1999).

cussed, and finally enacted. Those criticisms and mischaracterizations are discussed below in Part V.

2. Presumptions under Florida's Home Protection Statute

In addition to abolishing the duty to retreat, the Florida legislature created protections for law-abiding citizens who find it necessary to use deadly force in self-defense.[109] The legislature created certain legal presumptions to protect people in their homes and vehicles when a would-be invader, burglar, robber, or assailant is entering or has entered "unlawfully and forcefully."[110] Additionally, the legislature created two presumptions and granted immunity to those who meet the requirements of the statutes and justifiable use deadly force.[111] These provisions provide important protections to the citizens and residents of and visitors to Florida.

With regard to the legislated presumptions, Florida Statute section 776.013(1) addresses two of the basic components of self-defense using deadly force discussed earlier: proportionality and reasonable belief. That section provides a person's "reasonable fear of imminent peril of death or great bodily harm" is presumed under certain circumstances.[112] Specifically, the presumption arises if an intruder unlawfully and forcefully entered or is in the process of entering the defender's "dwelling, residence, or occupied vehicle."[113] The presumption also arises if the person against whom deadly force is used "had removed or is attempting to remove another against that person's will from the dwelling, residence, or occupied vehicle."[114] The statute sets out a second requirement before the presumption is recognized. The person who uses deadly force in the above circumstances must know or have "reason to believe that an unlawful and forcible entry or unlawful and forcible act was occurring or had occurred."[115] If both of those

109. FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 776.012, 776.013, 776.031 (West 2010 & Supp. 2015).

110. Id. § 776.013(1)(b).

111. Id. § 776.013; see also id. § 776.032 (providing immunity from criminal prosecution and civil action for justifiable use of force).

112. Id. § 776.013(1).

113. Id. § 776.013(1)(a).

114. Id.

115. Id. § 776.013(1)(b).

requirements are met, the person who used the deadly force is presumed to have a reasonable fear of imminent deadly force and justifiably defends himself. The statute clearly recognizes the sanctity of one's home and the vulnerability faced when in one's vehicle. It also protects people who find themselves victims in their homes and vehicles without having others who were not present to face the danger, i.e. police, prosecutors, judges, or jurors, later judge and determine the reasonableness of their fear.

It is important to note the presumption only arises if used in a "dwelling, residence, or occupied vehicle."[116] These are the same places now often covered by the castle doctrine exception in retreat states.[117] Additionally, the presumptions protect temporary residents and guests,[118] an important protection in light of Florida's tourism industry. When considered in light of the circumstances under which the presumption arises, it provides important protections to people who could be victims of violent crimes committed by others unlawfully entering their home or vehicle. A person should not have to make a legal analysis regarding an intruder's intent when that intruder has or is attempting to unlawfully and forcibly enter his home. Even a brief delay to try to determine if the intruder is about to use deadly force could result in the death or unnecessary injury of the home's occupants. Without the presumption, as required by the proportionality component discussed earlier in Section III.A, a person could only use deadly force when

---

116. Id. § 776.013(1)(a).

117. ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-607(b) (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & 1st Ex. Sess.) (dwelling or curtilage surrounding); CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 53a-19(b) (West 2012) (dwelling or place of work); DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 11, § 464(e)(2) (2007) (dwelling or place of work); HAW. REV. STAT. ANN. § 703-304(5)(b) (LexisNexis 2007) (dwelling or work place); IOWA CODE ANN. § 704.1 (West 2003) (dwelling or place of business or employment); ME. REV. STAT. ANN. tit. 17A, § 108(2)(C)(3) (2006 & Supp. 2012) (dwelling); MASS. GEN. LAWS ANN. ch. 278, § 8A (West 2014) (dwelling); NEB. REV. STAT. § 28-1409(4)(b) (2008) (dwelling or place of work); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2C:3-4 b(2)(b)(i) (West 2005) (dwelling); N.Y. PENAL LAW § 35-15 (McKinney 2009) (dwelling); N.D. CENT. CODE § 12.1-05-07 (2012) (dwelling, place of work, or occupied motor home or travel trailer); OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2901.09 (LexisNexis 2010) (residence or vehicle); 3 R.I. GEN. LAWS § 11-8-8 (2002); State v. Carothers, 594 N.W.2d 897 (Minn. 1999) (dwelling); Miller v. State, 67 P.3d 1191 (Wyo. 2003) (residence).

118. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 776.013(5)(a), (b) (West 2010 & Supp. 2015).

confronted with a deadly threat.[119] This requirement is separate from the duty to retreat; therefore, even in states that recognize the castle doctrine exception to the retreat rule, the defending homeowner can only use deadly force when he is sure he is facing deadly force, even in his dwelling, residence, or occupied vehicle. Consequently, in castle doctrine states with no presumption as to a person's reasonable fear of imminent death or great bodily injury, a law-abiding person faced with an intruder in his home must determine whether or not the use of deadly force is necessary to prevent imminent death or great bodily harm before he can use deadly force in defense of himself and his family.[120] The castle doctrine, therefore, does not provide sufficient protections for people faced with a violent home invasion or any other criminal intrusion into their homes or "castles."

As discussed earlier, some states also allow a person to use deadly force if he reasonably believes the person is committing a felony, felony involving force or violence, forcible felony, or certain enumerated felonies.[121] In the situation of a home intruder, the resident of the home still must analyze the situation to determine the intruder's purpose in invading his home. Most jurisdictions will more than likely not require a detailed analysis, but even a split second delay to assess the situation can result in disaster for a person confronted with an unknown intruder in his home. To protect potential victims in such situations, the Florida statute creates a second presumption which complements the first and deals with the intent of an intruder: "A person who unlawfully and by force enters or attempts to enter a person's dwelling, residence, or occupied vehicle is presumed to be doing so with the intent to commit an unlawful act involving force or violence."[122] With the intent of a forceful intruder established by the presumption, a person suddenly confronted by such an intruder may use deadly force to defend himself and those with him. Again, this presumption benefits a law-abiding person confronted with an unlawful intruder. A potential victim does not have to try to determine the intruder's inten-

---

119. See supra note 108 and accompanying text.
120. Id.
121. See supra Part III.A.
122. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 776.013(4) (West 2010 & Supp. 2015).

tions before acting to protect himself and others in the home or vehicle.

Residents of states without presumptions like these in the Florida statute must choose between assessing the intruder's intent and purpose before defending himself and his family or risk possible prosecution if there are insufficient facts to determine if the requirements for the use of deadly force in self-defense are met. A judge or jury looking back at the circumstances with detached reflection will likely be unable to see the situation in the same way the potential victim would see it. Such Monday morning quarterbacking can lead to criminal prosecution, prison, and disaster for a person trying to protect himself or his family. The presumptions granted by the Florida statute, therefore, serve as valuable protections for Florida citizens, residents, and visitors when in their homes and vehicles.

To provide real protections for the law-abiding citizens, residents, and visitors in Florida, the legislature clearly intended for the presumptions in Florida Statute section 776.013 (2005) to be conclusive. The first rule of determining legislative intent is to look at the plain language of the statute itself.[123] Section 1 of the statute provides: "A person is presumed to have held a reasonable fear of imminent peril of death or great bodily harm."[124] The legislature did not say may be presumed, can be presumed, or if not rebutted, is presumed. Additionally, the staff analysis in the legislative history of the senate bill precursor to the enacted statute states: "Legal presumptions are typically rebuttable. The presumptions created by the committee substitute, however, appear to be conclusive."[125] There is no doubt the Florida legislature intended to create conclusive presumptions regarding a defender's reasonable belief and an intruder's intent under the circumstances required by the statute. In creating these conclusive presumptions, it is equally clear that the legislature intended to provide substantive protections for those within their homes and vehicles from would be assailants and criminals. If a person's home is truly his castle, 123. See Bautista v. State, 863 So. 2d 1180, 1185 (Fla. 2003).

124. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 776.013(1) (West 2010 & Supp. 2015) (emphasis added).

125. FLA. JUD. COMM., STAFF ANALYSIS, S. 2005-CS/CS/SB 436, 107th Sess., at 4 (Fla. 2005).

the protections afforded by the Florida statute more definitively establish a person's right to the uninterrupted peaceful enjoyment and sanctuary of that castle.

In addition to Florida, twenty-two states have created presumptions regarding a person's right to use deadly force in self-defense.[126] Six of those states require a person to retreat before using deadly force.[127] The majority of these states' presumptions are rebuttable.[128] However, like Florida, the Tennessee statute provides for a conclusive presumption: "Any person using force intended or likely to cause death or serious bodily injury within a residence, business, dwelling or vehicle is presumed to have held a reasonable belief of imminent death or serious bodily injury."[129] Wisconsin's statute also creates a conclusive presumption by providing "[T]he court . . . shall presume that the actor reasonably 126. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23 (West, Westlaw through Act 2015-559 of the 2015 Reg., First Spec. and Second Spec. Sess.); ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-411 (Westlaw through 2015 1st Reg. Sess.); ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-620 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & 1st Ex. Sess.); CAL. PENAL CODE § 198.5 (West 2008); KAN. STAT. ANN. § 21-5224 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 503.055 (LexisNexis 2008); LA. STAT. ANN. § 14:20 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 780.951 (West 2007); MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15 (2006); NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 41.095 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & Spec. Sess.); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2C:3-4 (West 2005); N.C. GEN. STAT. § 14-51.2 (2011); OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2901.05 (LexisNexis 2010); OKLA. STAT ANN. tit. 21, § 1289.25 (West Supp. 2013); 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 505 (West 1998 & Supp. 2013); R.I. GEN. LAWS § 11-8-8 (2002); S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-11-440 (Supp. 2012); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611 (2014); TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 9.32 (West 2011); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-405 (LexisNexis 2012); WIS. STAT. ANN. § 939.48 (West Supp. 2012); WYO. STAT. ANN. § 6-2-602 (2013).

127. ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-620 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & 1st Ex. Sess.); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2C:3-4; OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2901.05; 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 505; R.I. GEN. LAWS § 11-8-8; WYO. STAT. ANN. § 6-2-602.

128. ARIZ, REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-411 (Westlaw through 2015 1st Reg. Sess.); ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-620; CAL. PENAL CODE § 198.5; KAN. STAT. ANN. § 21-5224; MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 780.951 (West 2007); NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 41.095; N.C. GEN. STAT. § 14-51.2; OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2901.05; R.I. GEN. LAWS § 11-8-8; TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 9.32; UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-405 (LexisNexis 2012).

129. TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611(c) (2014) (emphasis added).

believed that the force was necessary to prevent imminent death or great bodily harm . . ." if the statutory conditions are met.[130]

As seen above, the protective presumptions' application to the justified use of deadly force in self-defense appear in retreat and non-retreat states. Seven states created such protective presumptions long before Florida became a no retreat state in 2005 and included its presumptions in its justified use of deadly force statute.[131] So why did the Florida statute draw so much attention and criticism? Florida joined the majority when it became a no-retreat state, and the presumptions in its justified use of deadly force statute did nothing that other states had not done before. As with the other states noted above, the presumptions provided by the Florida statute provide important protections for law-abiding residents of and visitors to the state and are not worthy of criticism.

3. Criminal and Civil Immunity for the Justified Use of Deadly Force

In addition to the legal presumptions designed to protect those justifiably using deadly force in self-defense, Florida, and other states, provide criminal and/or civil immunity for those justified in using deadly force. Before immunity is granted in these jurisdictions, the statutory requirements for justification must be met. Florida's statute provides for immunity from both criminal prosecution and civil liability.[132] Thirteen other states also grant criminal and/or civil immunity,[133] two of which are retreat states—

---

130. WIS. STAT. § 939.48 (emphasis added).

131. ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-411 (Westlaw through 2015 1st Reg. Sess.); ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-620; CAL. PENAL CODE § 198.5; NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 41.095; R.I. GEN. LAWS § 11-8-8 (2002); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611 (2014); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-405 (LexisNexis 2012).

132. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 776.032 (Westlaw through Ch. 232 1st Reg. Sess.).

133. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23(d) (West, Westlaw through Act 2015-559 of the 2015 Reg., First Spec. and Second Spec. Sess.); ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-621 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & 1st Ex. Sess.); DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 11, § 466(d) (2007); IDAHO CODE § 19-202A (2004); 720 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/7-1(b) (West 2002 & Supp. 2013); IND. CODE § 35-41-3-2(c) (West, Westlaw through P.L. 1-2016 and P.L. 2-2016); MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15(5)(b) (2006); N.C. GEN. STAT. § 14-51.2(e) (2011); OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 21, § 1289.25(F) (West Supp. 2013); S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-11-450 (Supp. 2012);

Arkansas and Delaware.[134] The statutes in Idaho, Indiana, and Washington provide that a person justified in using deadly force will not face "legal jeopardy of any kind" and have provided this broad immunity before Florida granted immunity in its statute in 2005.[135] Other states granting statutory immunity prior to Florida include Arkansas, Delaware, and Illinois.[136]

Since Florida is not the first state to grant immunity to those justified in using deadly force, the motivation for criticism and mischaracterization cannot logically arise from these protections. Likewise, such protections do not render the Florida statute a "stand your ground" statute. As with the presumptions legislated in many states, the immunity granted by Florida and other states provide important protections for law-abiding citizens and residents.

IV. CURRENT STATUS OF AND POLICY BEHIND THE LAW OF SELF-DEFENSE USING DEADLY FORCE

Since its founding, this country has recognized a person's fundamental right to life and liberty.[137] This right includes the right to personal autonomy, security, and safety and is recognized in numerous ways in the laws of all fifty states. Criminal and civil laws prohibiting battery recognize the sanctity of a person's body and the right to be free from unwanted and illegal interference. Laws regarding the use of self-defense also recognize these same rights and the value of human life. As stated earlier, all fifty states recognize a person's right to defend himself by using force, including deadly force, under certain circumstances and to be secure in his own home. To emphasize the importance of these rights, some

---

TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-622 (2014); TEX. CIVIL PRACTICE AND REMEDIES CODE ANN. § 83.001 (Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 9A.16.110 (West 2009).

134. ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-621; DEL. CODE ANN. Title 11, § 466(d).

135. IDAHO CODE § 19-202A; IND. CODE § 35-41-3-2; WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 9A.16.110.

136. ARK CODE ANN.§ 5-2-621 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess. & 2015 1st Ex. Sess.); DEL. CODE ANN. title 11, § 464 (2007); 720 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/7-1 (West 2002 & Supp. 2013).

137. THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE para. 2 (U.S. 1776).

state legislatures have reiterated the state's commitment to protecting its citizens' right to self-defense and the sanctity of their home.

In 1981, the Arkansas legislature recognized the fundamental nature of a person's right to defend himself, especially in his own home, when it included the following language as part of one of its self-defense statutes:

> The right of an individual to defend himself or herself and the life of a person or property in the individual's home against harm, injury, or loss by a person unlawfully entering or attempting to enter or intrude into the home is reaffirmed as a fundamental right to be preserved and promoted as a public policy in this state.[138]

The legislature also created a presumption that any force used to accomplish the purpose in the section quoted above would be lawful and necessary force.[139] To further make sure the policy stated would be followed, the legislature mandated that the "section shall be strictly complied with by the court and an appropriate instruction of this public policy shall be given to a jury sitting in trial of criminal charges brought in connection with this public policy."[140]

In 1985, the Colorado legislature similarly recognized a person's right to safety in his own home: "The general assembly hereby recognizes that the citizens of Colorado have a right to expect absolute safety within their own homes."[141] In the same statute, the legislature created criminal and civil immunity for those justifiably using deadly force in their home.[142]

In 2012, the Indiana legislature emphasized the right of its citizens to feel secure in their homes but went further and recognized the importance of its citizens' right to defend themselves anywhere:

---

138. ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-620(a) (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & 1st Ex. Sess.).

139. Id. at (b).

140. Id. at (c).

141. COLO. REV. STAT. § 18-1-704.5(1) (2012).

142. Id. at §§ (3), (4).

> In enacting this section, the general assembly finds and declares that it is the policy of this state to recognize the unique character of a citizen's home and to ensure that a citizen feels secure in his or her own home against unlawful intrusion by another individual or a public servant. By reaffirming the long standing right of a citizen to protect his or her home against unlawful intrusion, however, the general assembly does not intend to diminish in any way the other robust self-defense rights that citizens of this state have always enjoyed. Accordingly, the general assembly also finds and declares that it is the policy of this state that people have a right to defend themselves and third parties from physical harm and crime. The purpose of this section is to provide the citizens of this state with a lawful means of carrying out this policy.[143]

This declaration came after the legislature enacted its no duty to retreat or "stand your ground" law in 2006 and after critics and commentators had excoriated Florida for strengthening its citizens' right to defend themselves from physical harm and crime. As if to answer critics of the Florida statute, Indiana chose to declare its public policy ensuring their citizens the right to self-defense in the statute itself, not just in its legislative history.

Oklahoma passed its version of a "stand your ground" statute in 2006, which included the creation of Florida-type legal presumptions to provide additional protections in one's home.[144] The legislature expanded those protections in 2011, when it granted the same presumptions in one's "place of business."[145] Additionally, the legislature included the following in the first section of the statute: "The Legislature hereby recognizes that the citizens of the State of Oklahoma have a right to expect absolute safety within their own homes or places of business."[146]

---

143. IND. CODE § 35-41-3-2(a) (West, Westlaw through P.L. 1-2016 and P.L. 2-2016).

144. OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 21, § 1289.25 (West 2002) (amended 2011).

145. OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 21, § 1289.25 (West Supp. 2013).

146. Id.

In 2006, the South Carolina General Assembly amended the state's self-defense statute and devoted a full section of the new law to reiterate its intent and findings behind what some may call a "stand your ground" statute.[147] In section A, the legislature indicated its intent to "codify the common law Castle Doctrine,"[148] but in fact went much further in recognizing the rights of law-abiding citizens. The remainder of the statute provides:

> (B) The General Assembly finds that it is proper for law-abiding citizens to protect themselves, their families, and others from intruders and attackers without fear of prosecution or civil action for acting in defense of themselves and others.
>
> (C) The General Assembly finds that Section 20, Article I of the South Carolina Constitution guarantees the right of the people to bear arms, and this right shall not be infringed.
>
> (D) The General Assembly finds that persons residing in or visiting this State have a right to expect to remain unmolested and safe within their homes, businesses, and vehicles.
>
> (E) The General Assembly finds that no person or victim of crime should be required to surrender his personal safety to a criminal, nor should a person or victim be required to needlessly retreat in the face of intrusion or attack.[149]

In conjunction with the above statute, the General Assembly created protective presumptions similar to those adopted by Florida and other states[150] and granted both criminal and civil immunity to those who justifiably use deadly force in self-defense.[151]

---

147. S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-11-420 (Supp. 2012).
148. Id.
149. Id.
150. Id. § 16-11-440 (Supp. 2012).
151. Id. § 16-11-450 (Supp. 2012).

These specific legislative pronouncements clearly reflect the recognition of the rights of law-abiding citizens, residents, and visitors to be secure in their persons, homes, businesses, and vehicles. They recognize this country's long-standing commitment to the rights of the people to be free from interference by criminals and others seeking to do them or their property harm. While other states have not spelled out this policy in their self-defense statutes, the same policy is reflected in the majority of states that have adopted a no-duty-to-retreat, or "stand your ground," justifiable use of deadly force statutory scheme.

If "stand your ground" states do not require a person to retreat before using deadly force to defend against deadly force, a large majority of states are "stand your ground" states. As stated earlier, thirty-three states do not impose a duty to retreat before defending against deadly force.[152] Of the seventeen retreat states, over half limit the places or circumstances under which a person still has a duty to retreat before using deadly force.[153] Additionally, none of the retreat states requires a person to retreat if he cannot do so with complete safety or if retreating risks death or serious bodily injury.[154] While the requirement that one retreat only if he

---

152. See supra note 99.

153. ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-607(b) (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & 1st Ex. Sess.) (dwelling and surrounding curtilage); CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 53a-19(b) (West 2012) (dwelling or place of work); DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 11, § 464(e)(2) (2007) (dwelling or place of work); HAW. REV. STAT. ANN. § 703-304(5)(b) (LexisNexis 2007) (dwelling or work place); IOWA CODE ANN. § 704.1 (West 2003) (dwelling or place of business or employment); NEB. REV. STAT. § 28-1409(4)(b) (2008) (dwelling or place of work); OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2901.09 (LexisNexis 2010) (residence or vehicle); 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 505 (West 1998 & Supp. 2013) (no duty to retreat in dwelling, place of work, or if other person uses a firearm or replica of a firearm or any other weapon readily or capable of lethal use).

154. ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-607; CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 53a-19 (2015); DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 11, § 464; HAW. REV. STAT. ANN. § 703-304 (LexisNexis 2007); IOWA CODE ANN. § 704.1; ME. REV. STAT. ANN. tit. 17A, § 108 (2006 & Supp. 2012); NEB. REV. STAT. § 28-1409 (2008); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2C:3-4 (West 2005); N.Y. PENAL LAW § 35.15 (McKinney 2009); N.D. CENT. CODE § 12.1-05-07 (2012); 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 505 (West 1998 & Supp. 2013); Burch v. State, 696 A.2d 443, 458 (Md. 1997); Commonwealth v. Pike, 701 N.E.2d 951, 957 (Mass. 1998); State v. Johnson, 152 N.W.2d 529, 532 (Minn. 1967); State v. Quarles, 504 A.2d 473, 475 (R.I. 1986); Garcia v. State, 667 P.2d 1148, 1153 (Wyo. 1983).

can do so safely sounds reasonable, how does a person confronted, attacked, or assailed make such a determination in the few, at most, seconds he may have to protect his life? John Locke was correct when he said a person using force on another for any reason becomes an aggressor capable of injuring or even killing his victim.[155] To require such a victim to determine if he can safely retreat would be astonishingly difficult in the most dangerous situations and clearly ignores the victim's fundamental right to be personally secure and safe as expressed in the above-stated policies.

One of the most strict retreat states is Rhode Island. Although it is a retreat state that recognizes the castle doctrine, it only eliminates the duty to retreat pursuant to the doctrine if the person against whom deadly force is used is committing certain enumerated breaking and/or entering crimes.[156] Again, placing law-abiding citizens and residents in the position of determining if the proper felony is being committed before they defend themselves with deadly force in their own home creates an even more dangerous situation.

Currently, the vast majority of states recognizes a person's right to defend himself or herself appropriately against deadly force. The trend since Florida passed its comprehensive statutes in 2005 has been for state legislatures to re-examine their self-defense laws and to even the playing field for innocent law-abiding citizens, residents, and visitors in their states. While critics and commentators use the term "stand your ground" to disparage laws protecting innocent people confronted with criminals, the term has been used in this country long before 2005 to acknowledge a person's right to personal autonomy and safety and to be and remain where they have a right to be. Retreating very often increases the danger to a person attacked. Of course, retreating or trying to retreat may be all a person can do, especially in those states that limit a person's right to carry a firearm or other weapon.

Since the overwhelming majority of states and citizens of the United States believe a person has a right to fully defend himself without retreating and since that right is embedded in this country's founding and history, why has this right come under such an onslaught of attacks since Florida joined the majority?

155. See supra note 18.
156. R.I. GEN. LAWS § 11-8-8 (2002).

Why do critics, commentators, and others continue to misrepresent what self-defense laws provide? Why does the minority seek to have their will overcome the long-standing rights of the majority? The next part will address and discuss some of the criticisms and commentaries regarding our right to self-defense.

V. COMMON CRITICISMS AND MISCHARACTERIZATIONS

Those who purposely misrepresent and mischaracterize what they call "stand your ground" laws attempt to cast these laws in a negative light in an attempt to discredit them and eventually abolish them. The motive behind the attack is a mystery. The majority of citizens, as reflected by the laws enacted by their chosen representatives, believes law-abiding citizens should be able to effectively and lawfully defend themselves, including against the use of deadly force. Citizens believe that, when faced with the immediate fear of death, they should not have to try to evaluate and discover a place where they can safely run and hide to avoid defending themselves. A criminal assailant will not wait idly by while a victim tries to evaluate his chances of finding and retreating to a hiding place.

Critics and commentators wasted no time in declaring the Florida statute and other similar statutes "Shoot First Laws"[157] and predicted that the Florida law would result in a "'Wild West' atmosphere in Florida."[158] Six months before the Florida legislature passed the new law in October 2005, a media critic and opponent of the proposed new law also said the law brought the "Wild West to Florida" and declared it "encourages vigilante 'justice' and em-

157. Chuck, supra note 66. The author also says, "Stand Your Ground laws . . . change the legal definition of self-defense." Id. As discussed in this Article, that is not true.

158. See Florida Legislation—The Controversy Over Florida's New "Stand Your Ground" Law, 33 FLA. ST. U. L. REV. 351, 351–56 (2005). The author cites a St. Petersburg Times article entitled Legislature Says Let the Force Be with You and quotes Florida State Senator Steven Geller as saying the law "will encourage a 'Wild West' atmosphere in Florida, where people are emboldened to use deadly force without fear of prosecution." Id. (quoting Steve Bosquet, Legislature Says Let the Force be With You, ST. PETERSBURG TIMES (April 6, 2005) http://www.sptimes.com/2005/04/06/State/Legislature_says_let_.shtml).

powers street gangs."[159] It is difficult to understand how such an unequivocal prediction about the effect of the new law could be made by anyone who actually read the statute. Street gangs were not and still are not empowered by the law, and vigilante justice did not emerge. Criminals did not seem to take note of the new law, and life continued as before passage of the statute. The only change was law-abiding citizens felt safer. Florida did not become the "Wild West," and vigilantism did not rule the day, nor does it today, ten years after the passage of the statute.

As discussed earlier, once Florida amended its statute, other states reviewed their self-defense laws and amended their statutes to provide their citizens with similar protections. Some states merely codified their common law recognition of no duty to retreat.[160] Others joined the majority and abolished a duty to retreat as Florida did.[161] But in spite of the declared and obvious purpose of these legislative changes, commentators immediately began to misrepresent the changes, their effect, and the legitimate reason for the amendments. One commentator declared in the title to an article published anonymously that these statutes were "sanction[ing]

159. Martin Dyckman, Bringing the Wild West to Florida, TAMPA BAY TIMES, (Mar. 27, 2005) http://www.sptimes.com/2005/03/27/Columns/Bringing_the_Wild_Wes.shtml.

160. ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-405 (2010 & Supp. 2012), GA. CODE ANN. §16-3-23.1 (2011); IND. CODE § 35-41-3-2 (West, Westlaw through P.L. 1-2016 and P.L. 2-2016); MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15 (2006); MONT. CODE ANN. 45-3-110 (2011); NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 200.120 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & Spec. Sess.); N.C. GEN. STAT. § 14-51.3 (2011); OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 21, § 1289.25 (West Supp. 2013); S.D. CODIFIED LAWS § 22-18-4 (2006); State v. Jackson, 382 P.2d 229, 232 (Ariz. 1963); Johnson v. State, 315 S.E.2d 871, 872 (Ga. 1984); Runyan v. State, 57 Ind. 80, 82–83 (Ind. 1877); Cook v. State, 467 So.2d 203, 210 (Miss. 1985); State v. Sunday, 609 P.2d 1188, 1195 (Mont. 1980); Culverson v. State, 797 P.2d 238, 240–41 (Nev. 1990); State v. Allen, 541 S.E.2d 490, 497 (N.C. Ct. App. 2000); Bechtel v. State, 840 P.2d 1, 12–13 (Okla. Crim. App. 1992); State v. Burtzlaff, 493 N.W.2d 1, 7 (S.D. 1992).

161. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23 (West, Westlaw through Act 2015-559 of the 2015 Reg., First Spec. and Second Spec. Sess.); ALASKA STAT. § 11.81.335 (2012); LA. STAT. ANN. § 14:19 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 627:4 (LexisNexis 2007 & Supp. 2012); S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-11-440 (Supp. 2012); TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. §§ 9.31, 9.32 (West 2011).

deadly force."[162] Contrary to such an irresponsible, baseless characterization, the states, through these statutes, sanction self-defense and a person's right to life.[163] The author went on to say, "[w]hile it already is legal in most cases to use deadly force against an attacker in your home, the new self-defense laws allow victims to retaliate against an attacker in public."[164] The reason many states have amended their self-defense laws and expanded the protections afforded to law-abiding citizens in their home is because, as the author says, deadly force can be used only "in most cases" when a person is attacked in his home.[165] "In most cases" is not good enough, as the majority of states recognize. Law abiding citizens should be able to protect themselves always, not just in their home "in most cases."

The same author cited above and others also allege the self-defense laws allow victims to retaliate.[166] The Merriam-Webster online dictionary defines retaliate as follows: "to do something bad to someone who has hurt you or treated you badly: to get revenge against someone; to repay (as in an injury) in kind."[167] This definition, along with the ordinary understanding of what retaliate means, connotes an act that comes sometime after a prior bad act for the purpose of revenge. There is nothing in the Florida statute or any other so-called "stand your ground" statute that allows a person to retaliate after being attacked, assaulted, or "treated . . . badly"[168] by someone else.[169] No self-defense statute allows retaliation.[170] Additionally, if a potential victim is confronted with deadly force and does not defend himself, he would likely be phys-

162. Kavan Peterson, More States Sanction Deadly Force, THE PEW CENTER ON THE STATES (April 26, 2006) https://web.archive.org/web/20110101085316/http:/www.stateline.org/live/ViewPage.action?siteNodeId=136&languageId=1&contentId=107276.

163. THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE para. 2 (U.S. 1776).

164. See Peterson supra note 162.

165. Id.

166. Id.; see also Wyatt Holiday, "The Answer to Criminal Aggression is Retaliation": Stand-Your-Ground Laws and the Liberalization of Self-Defense, 43 U. TOL. L. REV. 407 (2012).

167. Definition of "Retaliate," Merriam-Webster Online Dictionary, http://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/retaliate (last visited Feb. 15, 2016).

168. Id.

169. See supra Section III.A.

170. See supra Section III.A.

ically unable or have no opportunity to retaliate at some later time. As discussed earlier, all states restrict the use of deadly force in self-defense to situations where the danger of deadly force is imminent or immediate and/or the use of defensive force is necessary.[171] Clearly, retaliation does not meet these requirements.

In the same article, the author quotes a state senator commenting after the Kentucky legislature amended its self-defense law, "It's perfectly clear in Kentucky that you have a right to self-defense. The purpose of this bill was to sanction the use of firearms in all kinds of disputes, and that does not further public safety."[172] Of course, neither the author nor the senator cite any legislative history or other source that indicates in any way the purpose of the bill "was to sanction the use of firearms in all kinds of disputes."[173] Even a cursory reading of the Kentucky statute makes it clear the purpose of the statute is to allow the law-abiding people of Kentucky to protect themselves against violent attacks, including those involving guns, and from violent felons.[174] To equate the justification of the use of force to protect oneself against a deadly attack with a mere "dispute" creates a false narrative regarding the purpose and effect of all self-defense laws. Furthermore, the statute does not just apply to defensive force involving guns. It applies to any deadly force, which can include the use of a knife, a baseball bat, or any other object or force, including bare hands, capable of inflicting great bodily harm or death. But for some reason, the senator and others who oppose the protections afforded by these statutes tend to always try to connect them to guns and unlawful violence.

The same author also states that "[c]ritics, such as the Brady Campaign to Prevent Gun Violence, have dubbed the new measures 'shoot-first' laws and argue the statutes would make it

---

171. See supra Section III.A.

172. See Peterson supra note 162, at 2.

173. Id.

174. KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 503.055(3) (LexisNexis 2008) ("A person who is not engaged in an unlawful activity and who is attacked in any other place where he or she has a right to be has no duty to retreat and has the right to stand his or her ground and meet force with force, including deadly force, if he or she reasonably believes it is necessary to do so to prevent death or great bodily harm to himself or herself or another or to prevent the commission of a felony involving the use of force." (emphasis added)).

more likely that confrontations turn deadly and will make it harder to prosecute people who commit acts of violence."[175] No basis is given for such a prediction, and no facts or statistics support it. The defense afforded by these statutes does not make it easier for those who commit unjustified/unlawful acts of violence to avoid prosecution. The author goes on to quote a spokesperson of the Brady Campaign as saying, "Unfortunately, the law has had precisely the effect we thought it would. A handful of overly aggressive individuals are using it as a defense for actions that appear to go beyond the pale of self-defense."[176] No facts or verifiable statistics are offered to substantiate that claim. As discussed earlier, no self-defense statute allows an aggressor to claim self-defense.[177] The article indicates the same spokesperson said the Florida statute adopted in 2005 "ha[d] been cited as a defense in at least three cases" by the date of the article, which is April 26, 2006.[178] Only a brief statement of the facts in these three cases is mentioned, and the specific statute is not identified. No citations are given to location, court, or any other information, and no information is given regarding the outcome of these cases. Furthermore, even if we assume the three defendants were engaged in the unlawful use of force, three cases in one year does not justify taking away law-abiding citizens' rights to defend themselves. People try to manipulate a variety of laws for their own benefit and purposes. That doesn't mean there is anything wrong with the laws. Just because a few individuals may attempt to use self-defense to avoid answer-

175. Peterson, supra note 162; see ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-405 (2010 & Supp. 2012), GA. CODE ANN. §16-3-23.1 (2011); IND. CODE § 35-41-3-2 (West, Westlaw through P.L. 1-2016 and P.L. 2-2016); MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15 (2006); MONT. CODE ANN. § 45-3-110 (2011); NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 200.120 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & Spec. Sess.); N.C. GEN. STAT. § 14-51.3 (2011); OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 21, § 1289.25 (West Supp. 2013); S.D. CODIFIED LAWS § 22-18-4 (2006); State v. Jackson, 382 P.2d 229, 232 (Ariz. 1963); Johnson v. State, 315 S.E.2d 871, 872 (Ga. 1984); Runyan v. State, 57 Ind. 80, 82–83 (Ind. 1877); Cook v. State, 467 So.2d 203, 210 (Miss. 1985); State v. Sunday, 609 P.2d 1188, 1195 (Mont. 1980); Culverson v. State, 797 P.2d 238, 240–41 (Nev. 1990); State v. Allen, 541 S.E.2d 490, 497 (N.C. Ct. App. 2000); Bechtel v. State, 840 P.2d 1, 12–13 (Okla. Crim. App. 1992); State v. Burtzlaff, 493 N.W.2d 1, 7 (S.D. 1992).

176. Peterson, supra note 162.

177. See supra Section III.B.

178. Peterson, supra note 162.

ing for their violent crimes that does not justify taking away everyone's right to defend themselves. If states refused to enact laws that someone may try to use in an inappropriate or unintended manner, there would be very few statutes on the books. Based on this false logic, defenses such as insanity and entrapment should also be repealed.

The Brady Campaign to Prevent Gun Violence has opposed these stronger self-defense laws since before Florida passed its revised statute in 2005.[179] One commentator says, "[t]he Brady Campaign believes that the new laws effectually grant people a 'license to kill.'"[180] No reasonable interpretation of any self-defense statute, including Florida's, would even suggest they grant people a license to kill. The spokesperson of the Brady Campaign has also been quoted as saying, "you don't just broadly paint a new statewide law saying, if you're in doubt, go ahead and shoot and kill the other person."[181] Again, this critic misquotes the statute, the legislative intent, and the standard imposed by the statute.[182] No self-defense statute or law, stand your ground or otherwise, comes anywhere near saying, suggesting, or hinting that doubt alone justifies killing an attacker.[183] As discussed above, a basic component of self-defense is a reasonable belief that deadly force is necessary to defend against deadly force.[184] Critics who continue to make these deliberate misrepresentations run the risk of creating the very effect they decry. The doomsday scenario painted by these critics did not materialize when the majority of states

---

179. The Brady Campaign went so far as to attack the Florida tourism industry by "passing out leaflets in Florida airports, issuing press releases, and posting ads warning that tourists now 'face a greater risk of bodily harm in Florida' because of the 'Shoot First Law.'" Renee L. Lerner, The Worldwide Popular Revolt Against Proportionality in Self-Defense Law, 2 J.L. ECON. & POL'Y 331, 343 (2006).

180. Jason W. Bobo, Following the Trend: Alabama Abandons the Duty to Retreat and Encourages Citizens to Stand Their Ground, 38 CUMB. L. REV. 339, 363 (2008).

181. Id. at 363–64 (citation omitted).

182. See supra note 84.

183. See supra pp. 12-14 (noting the requirement of reasonable belief).

184. Id.

passed no retreat statutes years before Florida or when Florida and other states joined that majority.[185]

Critics and commentators also allege these self-defense laws eliminate proportionality, a basic component of self-defense discussed earlier.[186] Every state, whether by statute or common law, requires that a person be confronted with force likely to cause death or serious/great bodily injury before using deadly force in self-defense.[187] There is, therefore, no question that these laws

185. See Angie D. Holan, Crime Rates in Florida Have Dropped Since 'Stand Your Ground,' Says Dennis Baxley, POLITIFACT (Mar. 23, 2012, 5:58 PM), http://www.politifact.com/florida/statements/2012/mar/23/dennis-baxley/crime-rates-florida-have-dropped-stand-your-ground/.

186. See, e.g., Catalfamo, supra note 78, at 504.

187. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23 (West, Westlaw through Act 2015-559 of the 2015 Reg., First Spec. and Second Spec. Sess.); ALASKA STAT. § 11.81.335 (2012); ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-405 (2010 & Supp. 2012); ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-607 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & 1st Ex. Sess.); CAL. PENAL CODE § 197 (West 2008); COLO. REV. STAT. § 18-1-704 (2012); CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 53a-19 (West 2012); DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 11, § 464 (2007); FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 776.012, 776.013 (West 2011); GA. CODE ANN. § 16-3-21 (2011); HAW. REV. STAT. § 703-304 (LexisNexis 2007); IDAHO CODE ANN. § 18-4009 (2004); 720 ILL. COMP. STAT. ANN. 5/7-1 (West 2002 & Supp. 2013); IND. CODE 35-41-3-2 (West, Westlaw through P.L. 1-2016 and P.L. 2-2016); IOWA CODE ANN. § 704.1 (West 2003); KAN. STAT. ANN. § 21-5222 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 503.050 (LexisNexis 2008); LA. STAT. ANN. § 14:20 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); ME. REV. STAT. ANN. tit. 17A, § 108 (2006 & Supp. 2012); MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. 780.972 (West 2007); MINN. STAT. ANN. § 609.065 (West 2009); MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15 (2006); MO. ANN. STAT. § 563.031 (West 2012); MONT. CODE ANN. § 45-3-102 (2011); NEB. REV. STAT. § 28-1409 (2008); NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 200.160 (LexisNexis 2012); N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 627:4 (LexisNexis 2007 & Supp. 2012); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2C:3-4 (West 2005); N.M. STAT. ANN. § 30-2-7 (West, Westlaw through 2015 First Spec. Sess.); N.Y. PENAL LAW § 35.15 (McKinney 2009); N.C. GEN. STAT. § 14-51.3 (2011); N.D. CENT. CODE § 12.1-05-07 (2012); OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 21, § 733 (West, Westlaw through 2015 First Sess.); OR. REV. STAT. § 161.219 (2011); 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 505 (West 1998 & Supp. 2013); S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-11-440 (Supp. 2012); S.D. CODIFIED LAWS §§ 22-16-34, 22-16-35 (2006); TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611 (2014); TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. § 9.32 (West 2011); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-402 (LexisNexis 2012); VT. STAT. ANN. tit. 13, § 2305 (2009); WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 16.050 (West Supp. 2013); W. VA. CODE § 55-7-22 (LexisNexis 2008); WIS. STAT. ANN. § 939.48 (West Supp. 2012); Christian v. State, 951 A.2d 832 (Md. 2008); Commonwealth v. Haith, retain the traditional requirement of proportionality: deadly force can only be used against deadly force. So why do some commentators say the Florida statute and other similar statutes eliminate the proportionality requirement?

The 2005 Florida statute made two major changes to the state's self-defense law. First, it eliminated a duty to retreat before defending against deadly force.[188] As seen in the statute and discussed above, the statute did not change the proportionality requirement at all.[189] The second major change in the statute involved the creation of certain presumptions connected to the state's home protection statute.[190] The presumptions apply if an intruder "was in the process of unlawfully and forcefully entering, or had unlawfully and forcibly entered, a dwelling, residence, or occupied vehicle."[191] Twenty-three other states have created similar presumptions, some before Florida and others after.[192] Some of these states did not impose a duty to retreat before 2005, but critics did 894 N.E.2d 1122, 1128 (Mass. 2008); State v. Hanes, 783 A.2d 920, 925–26 (R.I. 2001); Gilbert v. Commonwealth, 506 S.E.2d 543, 547 (Va. Ct. App. 1998); VA. PRACTICE JURY INSTRUCTIONS §§ 63.1, 63.6 (2015); WYO. PATTERN JURY INSTRUCTION § 8.02 (2014); MD. STATE BAR ASS'N CRIMINAL PATTERN JURY INSTRUCTIONS § 5:07 (2013); 2 CR OHIO JURY INSTRUCTIONS § 417.27 (2008); VT. BAR ASS'N CRIMINAL JURY INSTRUCTION § 111 (2005).

---

188. FLA. STAT. ANN. §§ 776.012, 776.031 (West 2010).

189. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 776.012 (Supp. 2015).

190. FLA. STAT. ANN. § 776.013 (Supp. 2015).

191. Id. (emphasis added).

192. ALA. CODE § 13A-3-23; ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-411 (2010 & Supp. 2012); ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-620 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & 1st Ex. Sess.); CAL. PENAL CODE § 198.5 (West 2008); KAN. STAT. ANN. § 21-5224 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 503.055 (LexisNexis 2008); LA. STAT. ANN. § 14:19 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. Sess.); MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 780.951 (West 2007); MISS. CODE ANN. § 97-3-15 (2006); NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 41.095 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & Spec. Sess.); N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2C:3-4; N.C. GEN. STAT. § 14-51.2; N.D. CENT. CODE § 12.1-05-07.1; OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2901.05 (LexisNexis 2010); OKLA. STAT. ANN. tit. 21, § 1289.25 (West Supp. 2013); 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 505; R.I. GEN. LAWS § 11-8-8 (2002); S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-11-440; TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-11-611; TEX. PENAL CODE ANN. §§ 9.31, 9.32 (West 2011); UTAH CODE ANN. § 76-2-405 (LexisNexis 2012); WIS. STAT. ANN. § 939.48 (West Supp. 2012); WYO. STAT. ANN. § 6-2-602 (2013).

not categorize them as "stand your ground" states.[193] On the other hand, some state legislatures that created these same presumptions require retreat before using deadly force in self-defense.[194] These retreat states with presumptions certainly were never characterized as "stand your ground" states.

Detractors from and critics of stronger self-defense laws, even in one's own home, vehicle, or place of business, see these presumptions as a "revolt against proportionality" in self-defense.[195] The plain language of the statutes and the clear legislative intent debunk that characterization. Proportionality is clearly required in all the statutes. Additionally, the plain language and the legislative intent reveal the states seek another purpose: they attempt to level the playing field for law-abiding residents and visitors. If someone has "unlawfully and forcibly" entered another's home, dwelling, occupied vehicle, or even business, that criminal has exhibited force in a way that shows a willingness to use violence against anyone he encounters. Why should a homeowner in the middle of the night awakened by someone unlawfully and for-

---

193. It is hard to determine which states would be considered "stand your ground" states because that designation seems to apply only to Florida and other states that joined the majority of no-retreat states beginning in 2005. The pre-2005 no-retreat states that created the presumptions are: Arizona, California, Kansas, Kentucky, Michigan, Mississippi, Nevada, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Utah, and Wisconsin. See ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-607(b) (West, Westlaw through 2015 Reg. & 1st Ex. Sess.) (dwelling and surrounding curtilage); CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN. § 53a-19(b) (dwelling or place of work); DEL. CODE ANN. tit. 11, § 464(e)(2) (dwelling or place of work); HAW. REV. STAT. ANN. § 703-304(5)(b) (LexisNexis 2007) (dwelling or work place); IOWA CODE ANN. § 704.1 (West 2003) (dwelling or place of business or employment); NEB. REV. STAT. § 28-1409(4)(b) (2008) (dwelling or place of work); OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2901.09 (LexisNexis 2010) (residence or vehicle); 18 PA. STAT AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 505 (no duty to retreat in dwelling, place of work, or if other person uses a firearm or replica of a firearm or any other weapon readily or capable of lethal use).

194. The retreat states with statutory presumptions that benefit citizens through the castle doctrine are: Arkansas, New Jersey, North Dakota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Wyoming. ARK. CODE ANN. § 5-2-620; N.J. STAT. ANN. § 2C:3-4; N.D. CENT. CODE § 12.1-05-07.1; OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 2901.05; 18 PA. STAT. AND CONS. STAT. ANN. § 505; R.I. GEN. LAWS § 11-8-8; WYO. STAT. ANN. § 6-2-602.

195. See Renee L. Lerner, The Worldwide Popular Revolt Against Proportionality in Self-Defense Law, 2 J. L. ECON. & POL'Y 331, 334 (2006).

cibly entering his house be required to determine if the intent of the felon is to use deadly or non-deadly force against him? The intruder himself may not even know until he decides to use it.

If anything, the presumptions created in statutes like Florida's return some proportionality to a dangerous and intolerable situation. Without the presumptions, the homeowner faces the possibility that a prosecutor, judge, or jury in the cool calm of the aftermath of such a horrible incident will decide that the intruder did not intend to use deadly force because he was not armed or for any other reason. First, one does not have to be armed to have the ability to use deadly force. Critics seem to believe only guns constitute deadly force. Second, someone not faced with the frightening reality of a criminal in his or her home intending to do who knows what cannot understand the danger and stress such a scenario creates. The police, prosecutor, judge, or jury will be able to review all facts, most of which would have been unknown to the person confronted with the criminal, feeling no fear, urgency, or stress. That is why states are evening the odds for the law-abiding citizen by creating these presumptions of reasonable fear. They add proportionality to a disproportionate situation while maintaining the traditional proportionality component required for all self-defense.

Some critics are willing to say anything to try to discredit self-defense laws. In discussing Florida's new law, one commentator began by saying that Florida was "a notorious violent state" with no statistics or support for such a bold statement.[196] Even if it were true, such a characterization would support the added protections the Florida legislature enacted in 2005. States with higher crime rates and more violence have a duty to allow their law-abiding residents and visitors to protect themselves without increasing the danger to themselves by imposing a duty to retreat or second guessing them when they are accosted in their residences, business, or vehicles.

Other critics try to connect self-defense laws with concealed carry gun laws in an attempt to discredit both. Concealed carry laws have their genesis in a citizen's Second Amendment right to bear arms.[197] Self-defense laws, on the other hand, deal with a person's fundamental right to life as enumerated and recognized in the Declaration of Independence.[198] But because there are those segments in our society who are opposed to law-abiding citizens exercising their Second Amendment right to "bear arms," they seem to be attempting to cast both laws in a particularly bad light by trying to connect them in some nefarious plot to do something horrible to and in America. In a report on gun violence in America, a member of the U.S. Congress indicates the top priority in dealing with gun violence is to get the states to "impose a duty to retreat on individuals before they are deemed justified in using deadly force."[199] If gun violence in America is as she reports, law-abiding citizens need strong self-defense laws to defend themselves against the violence.

196. Catalfamo*, supra* note 78, at 504.

Laws that impose impossible choices in life-and-death situations require citizens to hesitate before defending themselves and their family. Hesitation puts innocent victims at the mercy of criminals, who do not hesitate to use whatever force is necessary to bring about their criminal intentions. The majority of states refuse to create an even more dangerous situation by requiring a person to retreat before defending himself or another from deadly force. The people of each state have spoken through their elected state representatives, and federal legislators should not interfere in any way. Federal politicians are not paid by taxpayers to attempt to subvert state laws.

VI. CONCLUSION

In order to deal with the criminal use of deadly force, each state recognizes a person's right to use deadly force in self-defense. Most states recognize the long-standing tradition in this country to allow the justifiable use of deadly force in self-defense without first retreating. A minority of states follows the English

---

197. U.S. CONST. amend. II; see also D.C. v. Heller, 554 U.S. 570, 595 (2008) (holding that the Second Amendment confers an individual right to bear arms).

198. THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE para. 2 (U.S. 1776).

199. U. S. CONGRESSWOMAN ROBIN L. KELLY, 2014 KELLY REPORT: GUN VIOLENCE IN AMERICA 63 (2014), https://robinkelly.house.gov/sites/robinkelly.house.gov/files/wysiwyg_uploaded/KellyReport_1.pdf.

tradition and requires a law-abiding citizen, resident, or visitor to retreat—to turn from and leave the place where a criminal is threatening the use of deadly force—if he can do so safely. All states retain the three traditional components required for self-defense, including for the use of deadly force. Those components are proportionality, necessity, and reasonable belief. All "stand your ground" statutes specifically include all of these components.

As discussed throughout this article, in 2005, the parameters for the justifiable use of deadly force adopted by the majority came under attack when Florida decided to join that majority and follow the American tradition of recognizing a person's right to protect himself from deadly force without first retreating. The attacks used to discredit these parameters resorted, and still resort, to mischaracterizations that lead to misunderstanding. Critics and opponents ignore the plain language of what they call "stand your ground" statutes, resulting in the statutes being misconstrued and misunderstood. Commentators make wild accusations regarding the intent of the statutes and baseless doomsday predictions. None of the predictions have materialized.

When the statutes characterized as "stand your ground" statutes are actually read, the purpose of these statutes, like all self-defense statutes, becomes clear. It is to protect law-abiding citizens from the unlawful use of deadly force by allowing them to protect themselves. Police cannot protect every single person every day. Absent their presence or some special undertaking, police do not have a duty to protect individuals who are threatened with harm.[200] Criminals do not usually attack or assail people in front of the police, so even if police had such a duty, nothing would change. As a result, states seek to protect people from criminals by allowing them to protect themselves when it becomes necessary. States that do not impose the impossible task of determining a place of safety to which to retreat do not require law-abiding citizens to make impossible decisions when endangered by deadly force. These states have been accused of sanctioning violence and retaliation, allowing people to shoot without reason, and creating a dangerous wild-west scenario. No logical justification for these unsubstantiated claims exists, and no reasonable explanation can be found for making them, nor has any been given.

200. See Riss v. City of New York, 240 N.E.2d 860, 861 (N.Y. 1968).

In addition to protecting people by allowing them to defend themselves without retreating, Florida and other no retreat states and some retreat states provide greater protections for those in their home, dwelling, vehicle, or place of business. These additional protections are founded on the long-accepted castle doctrine and include conclusive or rebuttable presumptions and criminal and/or civil immunity. The presumptions created require or allow a person's reasonable fear of imminent danger of death or great/serious bodily injury to be presumed when someone unlawfully and forcefully is entering or has entered any of the places designated by the statute. The statutes also create a presumption that the person who unlawfully and forcefully enters or has entered has the intent to commit an unlawful act involving force or violence. Criminal and/or civil immunity is also granted in some statutes if the person defending himself or another is justified in using deadly force in the places so designated.

Critics and commentators attempt to discredit self-defense laws that do not impose a duty to retreat and cite increasing violence, crime, and illegal use of guns as reasons for imposing a duty to retreat. These reasons actually support strong self-defense laws that allow law-abiding citizens to defend themselves without first making an impossible analysis of their surroundings, a potential place of safety, and a criminal's intent. The more crime, violence, and illegal guns there are the more law-abiding people need to defend themselves. To advocate the repeal of strong self-defense laws because of an increase in crime and gun violence is a non sequitur. Reason and logic dictate that if crime and violence increase the law-abiding potential victims should be afforded greater protections through strong self-defense laws.

The Declaration of Independence acknowledges our fundamental right to life and liberty. The United States Constitution guarantees our right to defend ourselves and to bear arms. This country is founded upon a rich history of individualism and independence. That is why the majority has never embraced the English duty to retreat before defending against deadly force. The majority has allowed and still allows a person to stand his ground to defend against deadly force by using deadly force without first being backed into a corner by retreating "to the wall." In addition to crime and violence, this country faces an unprecedented threat of terrorism. Strong self-defense laws protect law-abiding citizens by allowing them to protect themselves when necessary and preserve individual freedom by ensuring the fundamental right to life and liberty. The so-called "stand your ground" laws provide this protection and preserve freedom.

The thirty-three no retreat states should ignore the unfounded, unsubstantiated, and untrue criticisms of their statutes and common law and continue to refuse to impose a duty to retreat upon their citizens, residents, and visitors. The so-called "stand your ground" states provide vital protections for potential victims of crime and violence. Retreat states should set aside all politicizing of their citizens' safety and right to defend themselves and take action to strengthen that right. Retreat states should become no retreat states and provide as many common sense protections for the law-abiding citizens, residents, and visitors in their state as required for their safety and security. All state legislators should consider facts regarding crime, victims, and self-defense. States that still impose a duty to retreat should actually read "stand your ground" statutes and not rely on others' interpretations. Critics, commentators, and politicians who predicted doom and destruction when Florida passed its 2005 self-defense statutes were wrong. Strong self-defense laws provide exactly the opposite—safety and security for law-abiding citizens, which should be the top priority for all lawmakers. All states should resist the influence and unfair characterizations of others, especially those with political agendas that include bullying states into retreating from legitimate and much needed self-defense protections. The actual language of stand your ground laws already protect against the evils decried by critics and politicians and prescribe the conditions for true self-defense by victims and potential victims of violent crime. Stand your ground laws focus on innocent victims instead of the criminals, which should be the focus of all self-defense laws.

No Looking Back: The Effect of Transfer on the Choice of Law Rules Applicable to Directly Filed Multidistrict Litigation Cases

ELISABETH COURSON*

I. INTRODUCTION 438
II. CHOICE OF LAW DEVELOPMENT 441
  A. Development of Choice of Law Theories 442
    1. First Restatement 443
    2. Governmental Interest Analysis 446
    3. Second Restatement 448
  B. Federal Courts and Choice of Law 450
    1. Erie and Klaxon 450
    2. Post-Transfer Choice of Law 453
III. MULTIDISTRICT LITIGATION 455
  A. History 456
  B. Direct Filing 458
IV. FORUM-SHOPPING LOOPHOLE 458
V. CLOSING THE LOOPHOLE 460
  A. Necessity for Loophole Closure 462
    1. Forum-Shopping 462
    2. Intent of Van Dusen and Ferens 463
    3. Effect of Atlantic Marine 463
    4. Choice of Law Theories 464
    5. Due Process and Full Faith and Credit Clauses 465
  B. Method of Closure 466
    1. Required Case Management Order Provision 467
    2. Amendment to 28 U.S.C. § 1407 468
VI. CONCLUSION 469

I. INTRODUCTION

Marye Wahl, a Tennessee resident, suffers from a rare, but potentially serious, disease known as nephrogenic systemic fibrosis ("NSF") for which there is no cure.[1] The only known cause of NSF is the use of gadolinium-based contrast agents ("GBCAs") during MRI procedures.[2] General Electric, a company with its principal place of business in New Jersey, sells and markets a GBCA called Omniscan.[3] In May and November 2006, Wahl's physicians administered MRIs on Wahl in Tennessee using Omniscan as a contrast agent.[4] In May 2007, Wahl began experiencing symptoms associated with NSF, and doctors diagnosed her with the disease in October 2010.[5]

Many individuals, like Wahl, developed NSF after treatment with GBCAs.[6] As a result, related lawsuits were consolidated for pre-trial proceedings in a Multidistrict Litigation court ("MDL court") in the Northern District of Ohio.[7] The MDL court issued a Case Management Order permitting direct filing into the court, regardless of whether jurisdiction and venue were otherwise proper.[8] In May 2011, Wahl filed her suit directly into the MDL court.[9] Although most of the suits in the MDL court settle, Wahl's case was not settled.[10]

---

* J.D., Magna Cum Laude, The University of Memphis, Cecil C. Humphreys School of Law, May 2015; B.A., Louisiana State University, 2011. I would like to thank Professor John Newman and Lauren Winchell for their countless and invaluable edits of this Note.

1. Wahl v. Gen. Elec. Co., 786 F.3d 491, 493–94 (6th Cir. 2015); Brief of Plaintiff-Appellant Marye Wahl at 6, Wahl v. Gen. Elec. Co., 786 F.3d 491 (6th Cir. 2015) (No. 13-6622), 2014 WL 897565.
2. Wahl, 786 F.3d at 492–93.
3. Id. at 492, 500.
4. Id. at 493.
5. Brief of Plaintiff-Appellant, supra note 1, at 6–7.
6. See Wahl, 786 F.3d at 493.
7. Id.
8. Id.
9. Id.
10. Id.

The parties, pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a), agreed to transfer the case to the Middle District of Tennessee.[11] Following the transfer, General Electric moved for summary judgment, arguing that the Tennessee products liability statute of repose barred Wahl's suit.[12] Wahl responded, arguing that application of Ohio's choice-of-law rules was appropriate and would require application of New Jersey's statute of limitations, which would not bar her suit.[13] Although Wahl lives in Tennessee and the injury giving rise to the cause of action occurred in Tennessee, she argued that, as the transferor court, the choice-of-law rules of Ohio, not Tennessee, should apply.[14]

MDL courts and the ability to file directly into them provide a great deal of judicial efficiency to a flooded federal court system, but they also create a loophole for forum-shopping plaintiffs. The federal Multidistrict Litigation statute allows for the consolidation of tort cases for pretrial proceedings in a single district court chosen by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation.[15] Most of the cases are settled or are disposed of during pretrial proceedings, and any cases that survive are usually remanded back to the district courts from which they were transferred.[16] To promote judicial efficiency, however, plaintiffs may file their case directly into the MDL court, even if it does not have personal jurisdiction over the parties.[17] If one of these directly filed cases

11. Id.; see 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a) (2013) ("For the convenience of parties and witnesses, in the interest of justice, a district court may transfer any civil action to any other district or division where it might have been brought or to any district or division to which all parties have consented.").

12. Wahl, 786 F.3d at 493.

13. Id. at 494.

14. Id.

15. 28 U.S.C. § 1407 (2013).

16. See U.S. PANEL ON MULTIDISTRICT LITIGATION, STATISTICAL ANALYSIS OF MULTIDISTRICT LITIGATION FISCAL YEAR 2014 (2014), http://www.jpml.uscourts.gov/sites/jpml/files/JPML_Statistical%20Analysis%20of%20Multidistrict%20Litigation_2014.pdf (indicating that over seventy percent of Multidistrict Litigation actions were terminated by the MDL courts between 1968 and 2014).

17. Direct filing is permissible when the judge presiding over the MDL court issues a Case Management Order allowing cases to be directly filed into the MDL court rather than filed in another district and transferred to the MDL court. See, e.g., Case Management Order No. 2, In re DePuy Orthopaedics, Inc.

survives the MDL court, it is transferred to a district court with proper jurisdiction. Plaintiffs may argue that the more preferable choice-of-law rules of the state in which the MDL court sits apply, citing a line of cases that, if followed, would support the notion that the choice-of-law rules of the transferor court always apply.[18] However, there is no choice of law theory that supports the conclusion that the transferee district court should apply the choice-of-law rules from the state in which the transferor district court sits if that state does not have a significant contact or a significant aggregation of contacts.[19] Furthermore, mechanical application of the analysis presented in Van Dusen and Ferens would generate inconsistent results. Namely, federal courts would apply different choice-of-law rules for plaintiffs who directly file into an MDL court and plaintiffs who initially file in one venue and their case is transferred to the MDL court, even though those actions would actually be litigated in the same state. This inconsistency of result is also at odds with the Erie doctrine.[20] Finally, the Supreme Court's recent decision in Atlantic Marine[21] would reject such a mechanical application in so far as it departs from Van Dusen and Ferens.[22]

ASR Hip Implant Products, No. 1:10-md-2197 (N.D. Ohio Jan. 7, 2011) ("In order to eliminate delays associated with transfer of cases in or removed to other federal district courts to this Court, and to promote judicial efficiency, any plaintiff whose case would be subject to transfer to [this Court] may file his or her case directly . . . .").

18. See Ferens v. John Deere Co., 494 U.S. 516, 520 (1990); Van Dusen v. Barrack, 376 U.S. 612, 646 (1964).

19. See RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS § 145 (AM. LAW INST. 1971) (requiring the law of the state with the "most significant relationship" to be applied); RESTATEMENT OF CONFLICT OF LAWS § 377 (AM. LAW INST. 1934) (requiring the law of the place of the harm to be applied); BRAINERD CURRIE, SELECTED ESSAYS ON THE CONFLICT OF LAWS 69 (1963) (requiring forum law to be applied as long as the forum has a legitimate interest in its law being applied).

20. See Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 78 (1938) ("Except in matters governed by the Federal Constitution or by acts of Congress, the law to be applied in any case is the law of the state.").

21. Atlantic Marine Constr. Co. v. U.S. Dist. Court for W. Dist. of Tex., 134 S. Ct. 568 (2013).

22. See Ferens, 494 U.S. at 531; Van Dusen, 376 U.S. at 616.

Closure of the forum-shopping loophole created by direct filing requires a two-step response. First, every Case Management Order issued by an MDL court that allows direct filing should contain a mandatory provision requiring the plaintiff to declare a "home forum" upon filing.[23] Second, Congress should amend 28 U.S.C. § 1407 to add a provision requiring that if a directly filed case is transferred following pretrial proceedings, the choice-of-law rules of the state in which the transferee court sits are applicable, unless the plaintiff declared the MDL court as the home forum and the case could have originally been filed in the MDL court absent the Multidistrict Litigation.

Part II of the Note examines the development of choice of law theories in the United States and the application of these theories in federal courts. Part III focuses on the history of Multidistrict Litigation and the newly adopted direct filing process. Part IV seeks to prove that the direct filing process leaves open a loophole for plaintiffs to challenge the choice-of-law rules of a transferee court. Part V analyzes and comments upon the need for a provision in Multidistrict Litigation Case Management Orders requiring that direct filing plaintiffs declare a home forum as well as a Congressional amendment to 28 U.S.C. § 1407. Part VI, the Conclusion, offers brief closing remarks.

II. CHOICE OF LAW DEVELOPMENT

A choice of law analysis is employed by courts when it is unclear which jurisdiction's law should be applied to a case because the law of more than one jurisdiction could potentially be applied.[24] Although the analysis of which laws should be applied in a case seems like a simple procedural system that would be uni-

---

23. See Andrew D. Bradt, The Shortest Distance: Direct Filing and Choice of Law in Multidistrict Litigation, 88 NOTRE DAME L. REV. 759, 759–60 (2012) (suggesting that the solution to which choice-of-law rules for pretrial proceedings of directly filed cases in the MDL court are applicable is resolved by "requiring plaintiffs to declare a proper home district whose choice-of-law rules would apply to their claims" in the MDL court).

24. See KERMIT ROOSEVELT, III, CONFLICT OF LAWS 1–2 (2010) (describing a two-step process through which courts first analyze whether the case is within the scope of each jurisdiction's law and then which jurisdiction has priority in the claims asserted).

form throughout U.S. jurisdictions to ensure predictable results, the methods of analysis vary from state to state.[25] The application of one state's laws over another can be the difference between a victory for the plaintiff and their case being dismissed.[26] The substantial impact on a case that can result from the implementation of one choice of law analysis over another has incited some plaintiffs to forum-shop.[27] To discourage such practices and provide a greater uniformity of results, the Supreme Court has rendered decisions that assist in closing forum-shopping loopholes.[28]

A. Development of Choice of Law Theories

The Full Faith and Credit Clause of the Constitution requires that each state give full faith and credit to the "public [a]cts" of its sister states.[29] Additionally, the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment guarantees due process of law.[30] The Supreme Court thus ruled that a forum's application of its own law is unconstitutional if the forum's connection to the case is insignifi-

---

25. See Symeon C. Symeonides, Choice of Law in the American Courts in 2010: Twenty-Fourth Annual Survey, 59 AM. J. COMP. L. 303, 331 (2011) (providing a table evidencing the various methods of choice of law analysis used by each state).

26. This problem often arises when the competing jurisdictions have different length statute of limitations and the case is brought after one has expired. See Wahl v. Gen. Elec. Co., 983 F. Supp. 2d 937, 952 (M.D. Tenn. 2013) (dismissing the case after applying Tennessee's statute of repose). Choice of law can also affect damages awarded to the plaintiff if one jurisdiction has statutory limitation on damages or does not allow insurance policies to be stacked. See Allstate Ins. v. Hague, 449 U.S. 302, 306 (1981) (holding that insurance policies issued in Wisconsin could be stacked following an accident in Minnesota).

27. See Black & White Taxicab & Transfer Co. v. Brown & Yellow Taxicab & Transfer Co., 276 U.S. 518, 530–31 (1928) (evidencing plaintiffs who filed in federal court rather than state court to exploit the federal court's advantageous choice of law analysis).

28. See Klaxon Co. v. Stentor Elec. Mfg., 313 U.S. 487, 496 (1941) (holding that a federal court sitting in diversity must apply the choice-of-law rules of the state in which it sits).

29. U.S. CONST. art. IV, § 1 ("Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State.").

30. U.S. CONST. amend. XIV § 1 ("No State shall . . . deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law . . . .").

cant.[31] Accordingly, a choice of law analysis is necessary whenever more than one state's laws could be applied. A forum may apply its own law, however, when it has a "legitimate" interest in its law being applied.[32] Therefore, if the choice of law analysis leads to the forum law being applied, the court may implement any choice of law analysis it wishes as long as the court can show that the forum had a legitimate interest in its law being applied.[33] The choice of law theory utilized by a court may change depending upon the type of claim being asserted.[34] This Note focuses on the choice of law theories utilized in tort claims.

1. First Restatement

The (First) Restatement of Conflict of Laws ("First Restatement") implemented the vested rights theory,[35] which relies upon territoriality.[36] According to this theory, the law of the forum

---

31. Allstate, 449 U.S. at 310–11 ("[I]f a State has only an insignificant contact with the parties and the occurrence or transaction, application of its law is unconstitutional.").

32. Id. at 323 (Stevens, J., concurring) ("[T]he [Full Faith and Credit] Clause should not invalidate a state court's choice of forum law unless that choice threatens the federal interest in national unity by unjustifiably infringing upon the legitimate interests of another State.").

33. Id. at 336 (Powell, J., dissenting) ("A contact, or a pattern of contacts, satisfies the Constitution when it protects the litigants from being unfairly surprised if the forum State applies its own law, and when the application of the forum's law reasonably can be understood to further a legitimate public policy of the forum State.").

34. For example, Tennessee courts employ the Second Restatement in the choice of law analysis for tort claims but rely upon the First Restatement for contract claims. See Symeonides, supra note 25, at 331.

35. RESTATEMENT OF CONFLICT OF LAWS (AM. LAW INST. 1934).

36. See Kermit Roosevelt, III, Brainerd Currie's Contribution to Choice of Law: Looking Back, Looking Forward, 65 MERCER L. REV. 501, 503 (2014); Harold L. Korn, The Choice-of-Law Revolution: A Critique, 83 COLUM. L. REV. 772, 778 (1983) ("Most of these rules are, in the language of the new learning, 'jurisdiction selecting.' They identify the state whose law governs solely on the basis of these couplings of substantive category and determinative contact, looking to the substantive tenor and policies of the conflicting local laws only insofar as is necessary to determine in which substantive category the rules belong."); James Y. Stern, Note, Choice of Law, the Constitution, and Lochner, 94 VA. L.

in which a wrong occurred is the applicable law in deciding any claim that arose from such wrong.[37] The moment a wrong occurs, it creates a right in the injured individual. This right then vests, and once vested, is enforceable in all states.[38] The Supreme Court utilized this theory in numerous cases during the first quarter of the Twentieth Century.[39] Courts cited the Full Faith and Credit Clause and the Due Process Clause as reasons to force a forum to apply the law of a foreign jurisdiction.[40]

Although this approach simplifies the choice of law process, it can provide unfair results.[41] For example, in the case of Alabama Great Southern Railroad Co. v. Carroll, an Alabama employee was injured in Mississippi by the negligence of his Alabama employer and, through the use of the First Restatement, the

---

REV. 1509, 1521 (2008); see also RESTATEMENT OF CONFLICT OF LAWS § 379 (AM. LAW INST. 1934).

37. See William M. Richman & David Riley, The First Restatement of Conflict of Laws on the Twenty-Fifth Anniversary of Its Successor: Contemporary Practice in Traditional Courts, 56 MD. L. REV. 1196, 1197 (1997) ("When an event (a tort, for example) occurred in the foreign territory, a right was created; the content of that right, of course, could be determined only by reference to the foreign law. The role of the forum court in the choice-of-law process was merely to enforce the right that had vested in the foreign territory according to the foreign law."); Korn, supra note 36, at 803 ("Since under the vested rights theory the exclusive power of such a state embraced the creation and definition of the entire right of action, that state's law was held to govern all substantive issues in tort actions and, in contract actions, at least all those going to the 'validity and effect' of the agreement.").

38. See ROBERT L. FELIX & RALPH U. WHITTEN, AMERICAN CONFLICTS LAW: CASES AND MATERIALS 18 (5th ed. 2010).

39. See W. Union Tel. Co. v. Brown, 234 U.S. 542, 547 (1914) (holding that the law of the place where a tort is committed follows the defendant); Old Dominion S.S. Co. v. Gilmore, 207 U.S. 398, 406 (1907) (holding that the law of the place of the wrong vests with the right to sue); see also Lea Brilmayer & Charles Norchi, Federal Extraterritoriality and Fifth Amendment Due Process, 105 HARV. L. REV. 1217, 1225–26 (1992).

40. See Brilmayer & Norchi, supra note 39, at 1227; Stern, supra note 36, at 1526.

41. See Korn, supra note 36, at 806 ("[A] forum asked to enforce a right 'vested' elsewhere was stripped of any discretion with respect to the legal rules governing its response—it had an obligation to apply the law of the one state having territorially-based 'legislative jurisdiction' from which the only escapes were through manipulatory techniques or an ill-defined 'public policy' exception.").

law of Mississippi was held to be applicable.[42] The Alabama employer and Alabama employee made their contract in Alabama and the injury arose from a negligent act that occurred in Alabama.[43] The only relationship the state of Mississippi had to the lawsuit was that the injury happened to occur within the state's borders.[44] The plaintiff was able to recover under Mississippi law but was unable to do so under Alabama law.[45] The Alabama Supreme Court created a bright line rule, stating "there can be no recovery in one state for injuries to the person sustained in another, unless the infliction of the injuries is actionable under the law of the state in which they were received."[46] Although such a rule allows for a greater predictability of results, it also allows the law of a state with no interest in the case to be applied.

Many legal theorists criticized the First Restatement. Walter Wheeler Cook, for one, did not believe that a state's sovereignty stopped immediately at its borders.[47] David Cavers criticized the First Restatement for being an instrument for jurisdiction selection, not choice of law selection.[48] Rejecting the per se rule espoused by the First Restatement, legal theorists sought a system rooted less in territoriality.[49] In the 1950s and early 1960s, Brainerd Currie developed the Governmental Interest Analysis approach to choice of law issues.[50]

---

42. 11 So. 803, 803–09 (Ala. 1892).

43. Id. at 803–04.

44. Id. at 804.

45. Id. at 805.

46. Id.

47. WALTER WHEELER COOK, THE LOGICAL AND LEGAL BASES OF THE CONFLICT OF LAWS 41 (1942) ("'[L]aw' is not a material phenomenon which spreads out like a light wave until it reaches the territorial boundary and then stops.").

48. David F. Cavers, A Critique of the Choice-of-Law Problem, 47 HARV. L. REV. 173, 178 (1933) ("Both the territorial and the 'vested rights' theories sanctioned its disregard. So long as deduction from territorial postulates could indicate only one jurisdiction as a source of law in a given case, the content of that law would be logically irrelevant.").

49. See Korn, supra note 36, at 807–09 (describing attempts by legal scholars to move away from the use of territoriality in choice of law analysis).

50. See generally CURRIE, supra note 19, at 188–89.

2. Governmental Interest Analysis

Through Currie's governmental interest analysis, the forum applies its own law whenever it has a legitimate interest in doing so.[51] Currie's theory rejects the First Restatement's choice of law analysis that favors the law of the state where the harm occurred above all else.[52] Courts welcomed interest analysis insofar as it gave credence to the application of the law of the jurisdiction with the strongest interest in the claim.[53] Despite its improvements over the approach of the First Restatement, this analysis has been criticized for favoring forum law and being easily manipulated.[54] Notwithstanding any criticism it may receive, this analysis raises the important distinction between a true conflict and a false conflict, while shedding light on the "unprovided-for" cases.[55]

First, a court must determine whether the case presents a true conflict.[56] If application of another state's choice-of-law rules would create the same result as the application of the forum's own choice-of-law rules, there is a false conflict and the court applies forum law.[57] Courts have also held that a false conflict exists if the 51. See id. at 152–57; Alfred Hill, The Judicial Function in Choice of Law, 85 COLUM. L. REV. 1585, 1590 (1985) ("The laws of a state should be deemed to regulate only the affairs of residents of the state, absent reason for concluding otherwise.").

---

52. See Maurice Rosenberg, The Comeback of Choice-of-Law Rules, 81 COLUM. L. REV. 946, 951 (1981).

53. Babcock v. Jackson, 191 N.E.2d 279, 285 (N.Y. 1963) ("Where the issue involves standards of conduct, it is more than likely that it is the law of the place of the tort which will be controlling but the disposition of other issues must turn, as does the issue of the standard of conduct itself, on the law of the jurisdiction which has the strongest interest in the resolution of the particular issue presented.").

54. See Gregory E. Smith, Choice of Law in the United States, 38 HASTINGS L.J. 1041, 1048 (1987); Korn, supra note 36, at 815–16.

55. A true conflict arises when application of the forum's law would have a different result from the application of an eligible foreign jurisdiction's law. See Smith, supra note 54, at 1047–48.

56. See Larry Kramer, Rethinking Choice of Law, 90 COLUM. L. REV. 277, 311 (1990) ("A multistate conflict of laws exists only when contacts are distributed such that more than one state wants to regulate the case.").

57. See CURRIE, supra note 19, at 107 (explaining that a false conflict arises when only one forum has a legitimate interest in its law being applied).

foreign jurisdiction has no interest in its law being applied.[58] In O'Connor v. O'Connor, both plaintiff and defendant were domiciled in Connecticut, but the injury that gave rise to the suit occurred in Quebec.[59] Although Quebec would not have allowed recovery and Connecticut would have, creating different results, the Connecticut court deemed this case to be a false conflict because Quebec had no interest in applying its law; therefore, the court applied Connecticut law.[60]

A true conflict arises when the application of forum law would cause a different result than application of the law of another interested jurisdiction. Interest analysis requires that when a true conflict arises, the law of the forum will be applied.[61] For example, in Lilienthal v. Kaufman, the parties, one domiciled in Oregon, the other in California, made, entered into, and performed a contract in California.[62] Despite the deep-rooted connection of the claim to California, the court applied the law of Oregon, reasoning that in a case where "[t]he interests of neither jurisdiction are clearly more important than those of the other[,]" the law of the forum must be applied.[63]

In addition to false conflicts and true conflicts, there is a third category into which cases may fall—"unprovided-for" cases.[64] This occurs when no state, including the forum, has an interest in its law being advanced.[65] Accordingly, the court must next

---

58. See, e.g., O'Connor v. O'Connor, 519 A.2d 13, 25 (Conn. 1986).

59. Id. at 14.

60. Id. at 24–25.

61. See Damon C. Andrews & John M. Newman, Personal Jurisdiction and Choice of Law in the Cloud, 73 MD. L. REV. 313, 345 (2013) (explaining that in the event of a true conflict, interest analysis required the forum to apply its own law); see also Gene R. Shreve, Currie's Governmental Interest Analysis—Has It Become A Paper Tiger?, 46 OHIO ST. L.J. 541, 542 (1985).

62. Lilienthal v. Kaufman, 395 P.2d 543, 544 (Or. 1964) (en banc).

63. Id. at 549.

64. See Jeffrey M. Shaman, The Vicissitudes of Choice of Law: The Restatement (First, Second) and Interest Analysis, 45 BUFF. L. REV. 329, 347 (1997); see also John Hart Ely, Choice of Law and the State's Interest in Protecting Its Own, 23 WM. & MARY L. REV. 173, 200–01 (1981) (describing "unprovided-for cases" as a "criss-cross" configuration where the law of the state in which each party is domiciled is in opposition to that party's interests).

65. Larry Kramer, The Myth of the "Unprovided-for" Case, 75 VA. L. REV. 1045, 1045–46 (1989) ("[S]uppose that a plaintiff from state A has an determine whether the forum has a legitimate interest in its law being applied.[66] In the event that an "unprovided-for" case arises, under interest analysis, the forum would apply the forum's law.[67]

Currie's governmental interest analysis has been praised for incorporating the purpose of the law of competing states in determining the proper choice of law.[68] However, the approach has also been criticized for forum favoritism and being easily manipulated by courts.[69] Accordingly, Currie's approach has been widely abandoned in favor of choice of law approaches that consider the totality of circumstances.[70]

3. Second Restatement

In 1971, the American Law Institute published the Restatement (Second) of Conflicts ("Second Restatement"), an attempt to reach a middle ground between conflicting choice of law approaches.[71] The Second Restatement provides the "most significant relationship" test to determine which jurisdiction's law should be applied when a conflict arises in torts claims.[72] Section 6 of the Second Restatement enumerates the factors the court should consider in determining which jurisdiction has the most significant accident with a defendant from state B. If the policy underlying state A's law protects defendants and the policy underlying state B's law protects plaintiffs, neither state would have an interest in applying its law.").

---

66. See Kramer, supra note 56, at 326–27 (explaining scholarly preference for a forum's law to be applied if there is a legitimate interest).

67. See CURRIE, supra note 19, at 152–56.

68. See Shreve, supra note 61, at 542 ("By whatever name, all modern choice of law approaches include in their design some mechanism for probing the interests of the forum and other jurisdictions by investigating the extent to which policies accounting for substantive rules will be advanced through their application in the particular case.").

69. See Symeonides, supra note 25, at 328; see also Shreve, supra note 61, at 542.

70. See Shaman, supra note 64, at 354 (explaining that only four states still use interest analysis and some scholars dispute that there are even four).

71. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS (AM. LAW INST. 1971); see Shaman, supra note 64, at 330 (citing Herma H. Kay, Theory into Practice: Choice of Law in the Courts, 34 MERCER L. REV. 521, 552–53 (1983)).

72. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS § 145 (AM. LAW INST. 1971).

relationship with the parties and the issues before the court.[73] To determine which state has the most significant relationship, courts consider the following contacts: (1) the place of the injury; (2) the place where the conduct causing the injury occurred; (3) the domicile and place of business of the parties; and (4) the place where the parties' relationship was centered, if any.[74]

In Townsend v. Sears, Roebuck and Co., a Michigan boy was injured at his home when he was run over by a lawn mower purchased from the defendant, a New York corporation with its principal place of business in Illinois.[75] Plaintiffs, mother and son, filed suit against the defendant in Illinois and requested that forum law apply.[76] The Supreme Court of Illinois denied this request, explaining that the application of the Second Restatement requires that the law of the state where the injury occurred must be applied, unless there is a state with a more significant relationship.[77] In Townsend, Michigan was the state in which the injury occurred, the home of the plaintiffs, and, therefore, the state with the most significant relationship to the cause of action.[78]

The Second Restatement is the most widely used choice of law approach, primarily due to its flexibility.[79] This approach is

---

73. RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS § 6 (AM. LAW INST. 1971) ("(1) A court, subject to constitutional restrictions, will follow a statutory directive of its own state on choice of law. (2) When there is no such directive, the factors relevant to the choice of the applicable rule of law include (a) the needs of the interstate and international systems, (b) the relevant policies of the forum, (c) the relevant policies of other interested states and the relative interests of those states in the determination of the particular issue, (d) the protection of justified expectations, (e) the basic policies underlying the particular field of law, (f) certainty, predictability and uniformity of result, and (g) ease in the determination and application of the law to be applied.").

74. Montgomery v. Wyeth, 580 F.3d 455, 459–60 (6th Cir. 2009) (citing Hataway v. McKinley, 830 S.W.2d 53, 59 (Tenn. 1992) (quoting RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS § 145(2) (AM. LAW INST. 1971))).

75. 879 N.E.2d 893, 896 (Ill. 2007).

76. Id.

77. Id. at 902–05.

78. Id. at 905–06.

79. See Phillips v. Gen. Motors Corp., 995 P.2d 1002, 1007 (Mont. 2000) (citing In re Air Crash Disaster at Boston, Mass. on July 31, 1973, 399 F. Supp. 1106, 1110 (D. Mass. 1975)) (explaining the advantages of adopting the Second Restatement approach to choice of law analysis); Smith, supra note 54, at 1046 criticized, however, for its lack of predictability due to the significant amount of judicial discretion allowed under the approach.[80] Scholars have complained that by not defining "significant" and giving discretion to judges to assign weight to the various factors employed in determining the significant relationship, the Second Restatement almost encourages dissimilarity in results across courts.[81]

B. Federal Courts and Choice of Law

The ability of courts to choose their own choice of law analysis creates a disparity in results from jurisdiction to jurisdiction.[82] This lack of uniformity was further frustrated when a case's result turned not only on within which state a plaintiff brought their claims, but whether they brought their claims to state or federal court.[83] Following the Supreme Court's decision in Swift v. Tyson, confusion reigned supreme.[84]

1. Erie and Klaxon

The Supreme Court, through its decisions in Erie and Klaxon, narrowed the ability of federal courts to create law. The Supreme Court held in Swift v. Tyson that a federal court sitting in (describing the Second Restatement as a flexible mixture of choice of law theories); see also Symeonides, supra note 25, at 331.

80. See Korn, supra note 36, at 818; Patrick J. Borchers, Courts and the Second Conflicts Restatement: Some Observations and an Empirical Note, 56 MD. L. REV. 1232, 1246 (1997) ("The eclectic mix of territorial and personal connecting factors allows a court to claim that almost any result is consistent with the Second Restatement."); s*ee also* Hill, supra note 51, at 1636 (explaining that although the Second Restatement provides guidance, a judge still has a substantial amount of judicial discretion).

81. See Korn, supra note 36, at 818–19 (listing numerous defects of the Second Restatement).

82. See Stewart E. Sterk, The Marginal Relevance of Choice of Law Theory, 142 U. PA. L. REV. 949, 962 (1994) (noting that scholars track closely jurisdictions' adoptions of different choice of law approaches).

83. See, e.g., Black & White Taxicab & Transfer Co. v. Brown & Yellow Taxicab & Transfer Co., 276 U.S. 518, 529–31 (1928).

84. See Adam N. Steinman, What Is the Erie Doctrine? (and What Does It Mean for the Contemporary Politics of Judicial Federalism?), 84 NOTRE DAME L. REV. 245, 256–57 (2008) (citing Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 75 (1938)).

diversity must only apply the statutory law of the state in which it sits and may disregard the common law of such state.[85] The Swift decision created an inconsistency in the courts that enabled plaintiffs to forum-shop between state and federal courts.[86] Accordingly, an individual's substantive rights varied depending on whether their case was heard in federal or state court.[87] A notable example of the inconsistency created by Swift v. Tyson is of the taxicab company that reincorporated in a different state to create diversity jurisdiction so their case could be heard in federal court, avoiding the common law of Kentucky.[88]

Swift v. Tyson stood untouched for almost a century until the Supreme Court held in Erie that a federal court sitting in diversity must apply the law of the state in which it sits.[89] The cause of action in Erie arose from a train accident, when a train in Pennsylvania hit a Pennsylvania resident and the Pennsylvania resident filed suit in New York.[90] The plaintiff argued that federal common law should determine the applicable standard of care, while the defendant railroad argued that Pennsylvania law should be applied.[91] The Supreme Court held that a federal court sitting in diversity must apply the substantive law of the state in which it sits.[92] Erie firmly established that "[t]here is no federal general common law."[93] The goal of this opinion was to create a greater uniformity amongst courts that had become disconnected following Swift.[94]

---

85. 41 U.S. 1, 19 (1842).

86. See Donald Earl Childress, III, When Erie Goes International, 105 NW. U. L. REV. 1531, 1540 (2011).

87. Erie, 304 U.S. at 74–75.

88. Black & White Taxicab & Transfer Co., 276 U.S. at 522–23.

89. Erie, 304 U.S. at 78.

90. Id. at 69.

91. Id. at 70–71.

92. Id. at 79–80.

93. Id. at 78.

94. See id. at 74 ("Persistence of state courts in their own opinions on questions of common law prevented uniformity; and the impossibility of discovering a satisfactory line of demarcation between the province of general law and that of local law developed a new well of uncertainties."); see also Allan Ides, The Supreme Court and the Law to Be Applied in Diversity Cases: A Critical Guide to the Development and Application of the Erie Doctrine and Related Problems, 163 FED. RULES DECISIONS 19, 20 (1995) (providing a detailed analysis of Erie and how it will impact decisions in the future).

Following Erie, the Supreme Court held in Klaxon that a federal court sitting in diversity must apply the choice-of-law rules of the state in which it sits.[95] The cause of action that gave rise to Klaxon was the breach of a contract.[96] The defendant, a Delaware corporation, and the plaintiff, a New York corporation, executed the contract in New York.[97] Although the plaintiff filed suit in Delaware, the federal district court applied New York law.[98] The Court held that a federal court sitting in diversity may not fashion its own choice of law methodology, effectively making a state's choice-of-law rules substantive law.[99] Combined, Erie and Klaxon require that the choice-of-law rules governing a case filed in federal court must be the same as though the case were filed in a state court.[100]

When Klaxon was decided, courts routinely followed the First Restatement of Conflicts of Laws.[101] As noted above, the First Restatement simply requires the law of the place of the harm or contract formation be applied.[102] Accordingly, no matter within which state the federal court was seated, the applicable law would be the place of the harm or contract formation.[103] Such predictable and uniform outcomes are not possible, however, when each state has its own choice-of-law rules.[104] Today, the choice-of-law rules

---

95. Klaxon Co. v. Stentor Elec. Mfg., 313 U.S. 487, 496 (1941).
96. Id. at 494.
97. Id.
98. Id. at 495.
99. See id. at 498.
100. See Ides, supra note 94, at 34 ("In a diversity case, a federal district court sitting in New York will not necessarily apply New York substantive law to the controversy; rather, the court will apply the substantive law a New York state court would apply.").
101. See Earl M. Maltz, Choice of Forum and Choice of Law in the Federal Courts: A Reconsideration of Erie Principles, 79 KY. L.J. 231, 253 (1991) ("At the time the Klaxon rule was established, it fit both the limited impact theory and the principle of equality well. American courts uniformly followed the approach of the Restatement (First) of Conflict of Laws in deciding choice of law questions.").
102. See supra Part II.A.1.
103. See W. Union Tel. Co. v. Brown, 234 U.S. 542, 547 (1914).
104. See Symeonides, supra note 25, at 331 (providing a survey of the theories employed by each state in torts and contracts cases).

implemented by states give courts great discretion to apply forum law.[105]

2. Post-Transfer Choice of Law

In 1948, Congress passed the federal transfer statute.[106] The statute, while providing convenience to parties, left open the question of which state's laws applied after a case was transferred. The Supreme Court held in Van Dusen and Ferens that the policies underlying the holdings of Erie and Klaxon mandated that the law, including the choice-of-law rules, of the transferor court, rather than those of the transferee court, must be applied to a case that has been transferred pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a).[107]

The claims asserted in Van Dusen arose from a plane crash when a plane traveling from Boston to Philadelphia crashed into the Boston Harbor.[108] Plaintiffs filed personal injury and wrongful death suits in Pennsylvania, but the district court then granted the request of the defendants to transfer the case to Massachusetts.[109] The request was granted because the case could have been brought in the District of Massachusetts at the onset.[110] However, the Court held that the law of Pennsylvania, not Massachusetts applied.[111] The Court explained that 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a) is available to prevent a waste of time and money, not to change the applicable law in the case.[112]

The Supreme Court strengthened the precedent set by Van Dusen in Ferens. In Ferens, a John Deere combine injured a Pennsylvania farmer in Pennsylvania.[113] The farmer filed suit against John Deere in a Mississippi state court, then requested the case be transferred to a Mississippi federal court.[114] Finally, after 105. See Childress, III, supra note 86, at 1544 (citing PETER HAY ET AL., CONFLICT OF LAWS § 1.10 tbl. 3 (5th ed. 2010)).

106. 28 U.S.C. § 1404 (2012).

107. Ferens v. John Deere Co., 494 U.S. 516, 532 (1990); Van Dusen v. Barrack, 376 U.S. 612, 639 (1964).

108. Van Dusen, 376 U.S. at 613.

109. Id. at 613–14.

110. Id. at 614.

111. Id. at 639.

112. Id. at 616.

113. Ferens v. John Deere Co., 494 U.S. 516, 519 (1990).

114. Id. at 520.

realizing that the statute of limitations in Pennsylvania was more advantageous, the farmer sought for his case to be transferred to the Western District of Pennsylvania.[115] The Supreme Court held that the transferee court must apply the law of the transferor court, regardless of which party initiated the transfer.[116] When read with Klaxon, these cases require that courts employ the choice-of-law rules of the transferor court.[117]

In Atlantic Marine, the Supreme Court departed from this general rule in deciding that the laws of the state in which the transferee court sits should apply when the transfer is based on the parties' valid, contractual choice of law provision.[118] The cause of action arose from an alleged breach of contract.[119] The contract included a forum selection clause, which required that any action arising from the contract must be filed in the Eastern District of Virginia.[120] However, when the plaintiff believed the defendant had breached the contract, the plaintiff brought suit in the Western District of Texas.[121] The defendant filed a mandamus action to force the district court to transfer the case to the Eastern District of Virginia.[122] The Supreme Court held that not only should the case be transferred to the Eastern District of Virginia, but the law of the transferee court should also apply.[123] In departing from the bright line rule created by Van Dusen and Ferens, the Supreme Court

---

115. Id.

116. Id. at 531.

117. See Klaxon Co. v. Stentor Elec. Mfg., 313 U.S. 487, 497–98 (1941); see also Bradt, supra note 23, at 780 ("[T]he invocation of a state's choice-of-law rules is linked to a plaintiffs' selection of a proper venue. Transfer within the federal system—even in the case of a mass tort, where transfer would create increased efficiency—does not deprive a plaintiff of the benefits of that choice.").

118. Atl. Marine Constr. Co. v. U.S. Dist. Court for W. Dist. of Texas, 134 S. Ct. 568, 582–83 (2013).

119. Id. at 575.

120. Id.

121. Id. at 576.

122. Id.

123. Id. at 582 ("[W]hen a party bound by a forum-selection clause flouts its contractual obligation and files suit in a different forum, a § 1404(a) transfer of venue will not carry with it the original venue's choice-of-law rules—a factor that in some circumstances may affect public-interest considerations.").

relied upon the policy behind the holdings of these cases.[124] Justice Alito reasoned, "[b]ecause '§ 1404(a) should not create or multiply opportunities for forum shopping,' . . . we will not apply the Van Dusen rule when a transfer stems from enforcement of a forum-selection clause. . . ."[125] It should be inferred then that the choice-of-law rules of the transferor court should not be applied if doing so would encourage the "gamesmanship" described by Justice Alito.[126]

Over the past century, the loopholes that allow forum-shopping have narrowed significantly.[127] Rather than focusing on an isolated incident, courts have begun to look at the totality of the circumstances in determining which jurisdiction's laws apply to any given case.[128] Rather than awarding a better outcome to a plaintiff who brings his case in federal court, federal courts apply the same choice of law rules to federal diversity cases as though the case were brought in state court.[129] Rather than allowing parties to transfer their case for a different result, the Supreme Court has required that the original forum's law apply post-transfer.[130] Taken as a whole, courts and scholars have made it clear that forum-shopping should be stopped.[131]

III. MULTIDISTRICT LITIGATION

Multidistrict Litigation is a statutory tool used to promote efficiency and judicial economy.[132] It allows for cases with similar causes of action to be consolidated into one district court for pretrial proceedings.[133] In 2008, one-third of all federal civil litigation

---

124. Id. at 583 (citing Ferens v. John Deere Co., 494 U.S. 516, 523 (1990)).
125. Id.
126. Id. at 583.
127. See supra Part II.
128. See Smith, supra note 54, at 1046–47; Symeonides, supra note 25, at 331.
129. See Ides, supra note 94, at 34.
130. See Ferens v. John Deere Co., 494 U.S. 516, 531 (1990).
131. See infra Section V.A.1.
132. 28 U.S.C. § 1407 (2012).
133. Id.

cases are Multidistrict Litigation cases.[134] An added efficiency of Multidistrict Litigation that is not statutorily defined is direct filing, which allows plaintiffs to file their claims directly into the district court where similar cases have been consolidated.[135]

A. History

The prologue to Multidistrict Litigation formed out of necessity in the early 1960s when, following a batch of highly publicized antitrust litigation, hundreds of cases were filed alleging conspiracies among electrical equipment managers.[136] Chief Justice Warren established the Coordinating Committee for Multiple Litigation of the United States District Courts and charged the Committee with consolidating the pretrial proceedings of the conspiracy cases.[137] Following the success of the Committee and upon the Committee's recommendation, in 1968, Congress enacted 28 U.S.C. § 1407, creating Multidistrict Litigation, in an effort to consolidate the pretrial proceedings of cases with similar claims and defendants, which would otherwise span courts across the country and waste valuable time and resources.[138]

The purpose of enacting the statute was to promote efficiency and encourage uniformity by avoiding inconsistent pretrial proceedings in different district courts.[139] The Multidistrict Litigation statute contemplates that cases with similar claims and defendants are transferred to a designated district court for pretrial proceedings.[140] Then, following the pretrial proceedings, the cases

---

134. See Bradt, supra note 23, at 784 (citing Andrew S. Pollis, The Need for Non-Discretionary Interlocutory Appellate Review in Multidistrict Litigation, 79 FORDHAM L. REV. 1643, 1667 (2011)).

135. Although direct filing is not contained within § 1407, it has been widely used by MDL courts over the past decade to promote judicial economy. See Bradt, supra note 23, at 764–65.

136. See Yvette Ostolaza & Michelle Hartmann, Overview of Multidistrict Litigation Rules at the State and Federal Level, 26 REV. LITIG. 47, 48–49 (2007).

137. See Mark A. Hill, Opening the Door for Bias: The Problem of Applying Transferee Forum Law in Multidistrict Litigation, 85 NOTRE DAME L. REV. 341, 342–43 (2009).

138. 28 U.S.C. § 1407 (2012); see Hill, supra note 137, at 343.

139. See Hill, supra note 137, at 343.

140. 28 U.S.C. § 1407; see Hill, supra note 137, at 346–47.

that have not been disposed of are remanded to their originating court.[141]

The Multidistrict Litigation statute also created the Judiciary Panel on Multidistrict Litigation ("JPML"). The JPML consists of seven circuit and district court judges who are appointed, without oversight, by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court.[142] The JPML identifies causes of action to be consolidated by Multidistrict Litigation and selects a singular district court to conduct the pretrial proceedings.[143] The JPML may initiate proceedings for the consolidation of pretrial proceedings or may act upon a motion filed by a party involved in an action.[144] The only three requirements necessary for pretrial proceeding consolidation to occur are: (1) the cases for consolidation involve "one or more common questions of fact"; (2) the consolidation must be for the "convenience of parties and witnesses"; and (3) the consolidation of the pretrial proceedings must promote justice and efficiency.[145]

Once the JPML has decided to consolidate pretrial proceedings for a particular cause of action, the JPML, again without oversight, will designate a district court wherein the Multidistrict Litigation pretrial proceedings for the particular cause of action will be heard.[146] Following notice from the JPML, filed cases arising from the particular cause of action are then transferred to the designated district court.[147] Once the cases have been transferred, the Multidistrict Litigation judge treats the cases as though they originated in the MDL court, but only for pretrial proceedings.[148] The cases are then settled, dismissed, or transferred back to the court of origin for trial.[149]

---

141. See Robert A. Ragazzo, Transfer and Choice of Federal Law: The Appellate Model, 93 MICH. L. REV. 703, 705 (1995).

142. 28 U.S.C. § 1407(d).

143. Id. § 1407(a); see Daniel A. Richards, Note, An Analysis of the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation's Selection of Transferee District and Judge, 78 FORDHAM L. REV. 311, 312 (2009).

144. 28 U.S.C. § 1407(c).

145. Id. § 1407(a); Ostolaza & Hartmann, supra note 136, at 62.

146. 28 U.S.C. § 1407(b).

147. Id. § 1407(c).

148. See Bradt, supra note 23, at 788.

149. UNITED STATES JUDICIAL PANEL ON MULTIDISTRICT LITIGATION, STATISTICAL ANALYSIS OF MULTIDISTRICT LITIGATION FISCAL YEAR 2014, su-

B. Direct Filing

Within the past decade, the JPML has created a device to further increase the efficiency of Multidistrict Litigation—direct filing.[150] Between October 1, 2013 and September 30, 2014, more than eighty five percent of cases presided over by the MDL courts were filed directly into the MDL court.[151] Following the JPML's designation of an MDL court and transfer of already filed cases to that court, the MDL court will issue a Case Management Order, permitting plaintiffs whose cases share the same cause of action as the already transferred cases to file directly into the MDL court,[152] regardless of whether the MDL court has personal jurisdiction over the case.[153] Direct filing effectively allows plaintiffs to circumvent filing into a district court only to have their case transferred to the MDL court. If the case is not settled or dismissed, the case is then transferred to a court with proper jurisdiction.[154]

IV. FORUM-SHOPPING LOOPHOLE

Although the efficiency of Multidistrict Litigation and direct filing seems without fault, a closer look reveals a much larger problem—forum-shopping.[155] Plaintiffs can potentially engage in pra note 16 (indicating that over seventy percent of Multidistrict Litigation actions were terminated by the MDL court between 1968 and 2014).

---

150. See Bradt, supra note 23, at 794.

151. UNITED STATES JUDICIAL PANEL ON MULTIDISTRICT LITIGATION, STATISTICAL ANALYSIS OF MULTIDISTRICT LITIGATION FISCAL YEAR 2014, supra note 16 (revealing that in the one year period 46,983 cases were directly filed into the MDL courts and 6,120 were transferred to the MDL courts).

152. See supra note 17 and accompanying text.

153. See Bradt, supra note 23, at 795–96 ("[P]laintiffs in tag-along cases filed after the establishment of the MDL can bypass transfer and file their cases directly into the MDL court, regardless of whether personal jurisdiction and venue would be appropriate in the MDL district.").

154. 28 U.S.C. § 1407(a) (2012).

155. See Korn, supra note 36, at 782–83 ("The problem of forum-shopping arises when four conditions exist. First, the combination of federal and state law governing judicial jurisdiction allows the courts of more than one state to act in a single case. Second, the federal law governing legislative jurisdiction allows application of the law of any of two or more states having conflicting local rules to a potentially determinative issue in that case. Third, under the choice-of-law doctrine of the states having judicial jurisdiction, the courts of two forum-shopping by choosing to directly file into MDL courts instead of first filing in a more natural jurisdiction. If the state in which the MDL court sits has laws more favorable to a party than any jurisdiction with actual jurisdiction over the case, that party could argue that the laws of the state in which the MDL court sits should be applied to their case.[156] The reasoning to support such an argument is that the per se rule espoused in Van Dusen and Ferens requires that the law of the transferor court prevail over the law of the transferee court.[157]

For example, the court in In re Express Scripts mechanically applied Van Dusen and held that the law of the state in which the MDL court sits should be applied to directly filed cases during pretrial proceedings.[158] Similarly, the court in In re Welding Fume followed a related analysis and arrived at the same result.[159] Both courts relied upon the same district court opinion, which, in dicta, acknowledged that it might be permissible to apply the law of the MDL court but declined to do so.[160] In neither case was there any evidence that, but for the Multidistrict Litigation, the plaintiff would have filed their case in that particular district court. Accordingly, where there is no evidence that, but for the Multidistrict Lit-or more of them could reach different conclusions as to which of the conflicting local rules should be applied. Fourth, the probable conclusion of one or more of the permissible forums regarding the law to be applied is predictable at the time that the plaintiff commences suit.").

---

156. See Brief of Plaintiff-Appellant at 8, Wahl v. Gen. Elec. Co., 786 F.3d 491 (6th Cir. 2015) (No. 13-6622) (citing Ferens v. John Deere Co., 494 U.S. 516, 530 (1990)) (arguing that there is a per se rule that requires that the choice-of-law rules of the state in which the transferor court sits must be applied by the transferee court).

157. Id.

158. In re Express Scripts, Inc., PBM Litig., No. 4:05-CV-00862 SNL, 2007 WL 4333380, at *2 (E.D. Mo. Dec. 7, 2007).

159. In re Welding Fume Prods. Liab. Litig., 245 F.R.D. 279, 295 (N.D. Ohio 2007) ("To make this determination, the Court would have to apply the choice-of-law rules of California, because that is where the Steele complaint was originally filed.").

160. In re Vioxx Prods. Liab. Litig., 239 F.R.D. 450, 454 (E.D. La. 2006) ("In the present case, the proposed class representatives originally filed their class action complaint in the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey; however, the PSC also subsequently filed a Master Complaint in this Court. Therefore, the Court could conceivably apply the choice-of-law rules of either New Jersey or Louisiana.").

igation, the plaintiff would have filed in the district in which the MDL court sits, application of the choice-of-law rules of the MDL court after a directly filed case has been transferred frustrates the intent of Ferens.[161]

V. CLOSING THE LOOPHOLE

It is imperative that the potential loophole, created by direct filing that allows plaintiffs to claim that the choice-of-law rules of the state in which the MDL court sits should apply when that state has no significant contact or significant aggregation of contacts after their case has been transferred, be closed. Allowing the loophole to remain open encourages gamesmanship and could lead to constitutionally impermissible results.[162]

Courts that apply the choice-of-law rules of the state in which the transferee court sits rely upon the argument that direct filing is not meant to change the applicable choice-of-law rules in a case, but a procedural device to save time and money.[163] In Wahl v. G.E., the Sixth Circuit held that when a directly filed Multidistrict Litigation case is transferred to a court of proper jurisdiction, the law of the transferee court should apply.[164] Many courts have followed this line of analysis, reasoning that but for the MDL court permitting direct filing, the case would have originally been filed with the now transferee court.[165] Utilization of the most significant 161. Ferens, 494 U.S. at 527 ("The Van Dusen policy against forum shopping simply requires us to interpret § 1404(a) in a way that does not create an opportunity for obtaining a more favorable law by selecting a forum through a transfer of venue.") (citing Van Dusen v. Barrack, 376 U.S. 612, 636 (1964)).

---

162. See supra Part IV.

163. Wahl v. Gen. Elec. Co., 786 F.3d 491, 498 (6th Cir. 2015) (holding that the transferee court's choice-of-law rules are applicable).

164. Id.

165. Wahl v. Gen. Elec. Co., 983 F. Supp. 2d 937, 943 n.11 (M.D. Tenn. 2013).

> [T]he better approach is to treat foreign direct filed cases as if they were transferred from a judicial district sitting in the state where the case originated," which is "the state where the plaintiff purchased and was prescribed the subject drug. Thus, for a foreign direct filed member action involving a plaintiff that purchases and was prescribed the subject drug in Tennessee, the Court will treat that plaintiff's claims as if they were relationship test of the Second Restatement results in the application of the transferee court's law over the law of the MDL court. The Second Restatement directs courts to apply the place of the injury, unless another state has a more significant relationship.[166] The court considers the following contacts: (1) the place of the injury, (2) the place where the conduct causing the injury occurred, > transferred to this Multidistrict Litigation from a district court in Tennessee.

---

Id. (quoting In re Yasmin & Yaz (Drospirenone) Mktg., Sales Practices & Prods. Liab. Litig., No. 3:09–md–2100–DRH–PMF, 2011 WL 1375011 (S.D. Ill. Apr. 12, 2011)).

> The Court has concluded, as have other MDL courts, that such cases should be governed by the law of the states where Plaintiffs received treatment and prescriptions for Avandia. This ruling will promote uniform treatment between those Plaintiffs whose cases were transferred into the Multidistrict Litigation from their home states and those Plaintiffs who filed directly in the Multidistrict Litigation.

Id. (quoting In re Avandia Mktg, Sales Practices & Prods. Liab. Litig., No. 07–MD–01871, 2012 WL 3205620, at *2 (E.D. Pa. Aug. 7, 2010)).

> [U]nlike the usual case filed in this district, the present case has no connection with Illinois other than the fortuity that the JPML authorized an Multidistrict Litigation proceeding to take place here, supervised by the undersigned judge. Illinois is essentially an artificial forum created for purposes of convenience and efficiency. That is doubly true for the present case, which was filed here only by virtue of a court-approved direct-filing procedure whose sole purpose was to maximize convenience and save the parties' and judicial resources. Given the circumstances, it would not make a great deal of a sense to apply Illinois law in this case, or even Illinois' choice-of-law rules. Indeed, the prevailing rule in this situation is that in a case that was directly filed in the Multidistrict Litigation transferee court but that originated elsewhere, the law (including the choice-of-law rules) that applies is the law of the state where the case originated.

Id. (quoting In re Watson Fentanyl Patch Prods. Liab. Litig, 977 F.Supp.2d 885, 888, 2013 WL 4564927, at *2 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 27, 2013)). "[I]t would be an odd result to subject plaintiffs to [the law of the Multidistrict Litigation forum] simply because they took advantage of the direct filing procedure-a procedure that provides benefits to all parties and preserves judicial resources." Id. (quoting In re Bausch & Lomb Inc. Contacts Lens Solution Prods. Liab. Litig., Multidistrict Litigation No. 1785, 2007 WL 3046682, at *3 (D.S.C. Oct. 11, 2007)).

166. Montgomery v. Wyeth, 580 F.3d 455, 459 (6th Cir. 2009) (quoting Hataway v. McKinley, 830 S.W.3d 53, 59 (Tenn. 1992)).

(3) the domicile and place of business of the parties, and (4) the place where the parties' relationship was centered if any.[167] This is a default rule "whereby trial courts can apply the law of the place where the injury occurred when each state has an almost equal relationship to the litigation."[168] Accordingly, unless these contacts occurred in the state in which the MDL court sits, it is unlikely that the law of the state in which the MDL court sits will be applied.

A. Necessity for Loophole Closure

1. Forum-Shopping

Forum-shopping is "[t]he practice of choosing the most favorable jurisdiction or court in which a claim might be heard."[169] Although forum-shopping operates on a continuum ranging from a plaintiff simply choosing whether to file in state or federal court to "manufactured diversity" to gain the ability to file in federal court,[170] the practice holds a negative connotation due to its association with gamesmanship.[171] Furthermore, the Supreme Court declared the discouragement of forum-shopping to be one of the twin aims of the Erie doctrine.[172] There are numerous reasons that forum-shopping should be discouraged,[173] but the most notable ar-

---

167. Id. at 459–60.

168. Id. at 459.

169. Forum-shopping, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (10th ed. 2014).

170. See Note, Forum Shopping Reconsidered, 103 HARV. L. REV. 1677, 1679–80 (1990) ("'[M]anufactured diversity' [is] the improper or collusive creation of diversity of citizenship for the sole purpose of obtaining federal court jurisdiction.").

171. See Patrick J. Borchers, The Real Risk of Forum Shopping: A Dissent from Shady Grove, 44 CREIGHTON L. REV. 29, 30 (2010) ("Gamesmanship, not justice, is the prevalent consideration if litigants can control the results of cases by choosing between courthouses as little as a block apart.").

172. See Hanna v. Plumer, 380 U.S. 460, 468 (1965).

173. See Forum Shopping Reconsidered, supra note 170, at 1684 ("Three reasons are generally given for policies against forum shopping: first, that forum shopping undermines the authority of substantive state law; second, that forum shopping overburdens certain courts and creates unnecessary expenses as litigants pursue the most favorable, rather than the simplest or closest, forum; and, third, that forum shopping may create a negative popular perception about the equity of the legal system.").

gument against forum-shopping is the inconsistent and unpredictable results that stem from attempts at gamesmanship.[174]

2. Intent of Van Dusen and Ferens

The Supreme Court, in Van Dusen, held that the law of the transferor court was applicable in a case where venue and jurisdiction was proper in both the transferor court and the transferee court.[175] Direct filing, on the other hand, at its core is an artifice. But for the Multidistrict Litigation proceedings, the MDL court would not have jurisdiction over the directly filed cases. In Ferens, the Supreme Court made clear that policy required 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a) to be interpreted in a way that would not give parties an advantage from transferring a case, standing staunchly against forum-shopping.[176] Therefore, Van Dusen and Ferens are inapplicable in cases when a directly filed case has been transferred to a court of proper jurisdiction where the transferor court, the MDL court, is not a court with proper venue and jurisdiction.[177] Accordingly, it would go against the policy rationale of Van Dusen and Ferens to apply the cases in a way that would promote forum-shopping.

3. Effect of Atlantic Marine

The Supreme Court's decision in Atlantic Marine substantially undermines the attempt by courts to mechanically apply Van Dusen and Ferens. Mechanical application of these cases would cause the law of the state of the transferor court to apply in every transferred case. However, Atlantic Marine asserts that there is no

---

174. Erie R.R. Co. v. Tompkins, 304 U.S. 64, 74–75 (1938) (explaining that forum-shopping may make equal protection of the law impossible).

175. Van Dusen v. Barrack, 376 U.S. 612, 621 (1964) ("It must be noted that the instant case . . . involves a motion to transfer to a district in which both venue and jurisdiction are proper.").

176. See supra text accompanying note 161.

177. See Brief of Appellees at 13, Wahl v. Gen. Elec. Co., 786 F.3d 491 (6th Cir. 2015) (No. 13-6622) (citing Ferens v. John Deere Co,, 494 U.S. 516, 530 (1990)) (arguing that application of the choice-of-law rules of the state in which the MDL court sits would defeat the policy of Ferens).

such steadfast requirement.[178] The Supreme Court reiterates in Atlantic Marine that a § 1404(a) transfer may not be used for forum-shopping or to create inequities.[179] Furthermore, directly filed cases resemble the special circumstances at play in Atlantic Marine because the Multidistrict Litigation direct filing case management order is essentially the inverse of a contractual choice of law provision.[180]

4. Choice of Law Theories

There is no choice of law theory that would support the conclusion that the law of a state with no interest in the case and where no events that gave rise to the cause of action occurred should be applied simply because the case was originally filed in that state. The First Restatement maintains that the law of the forum in which a wrong occurred is the applicable law in a case that arises from the harm.[181] Unless the cause of action of the Multidistrict Litigation occurred in the same state as the MDL court, a transferee court employing the First Restatement to determine the applicable choice of law would not apply the law of the MDL court. Currie's Governmental Interest Analysis requires that a forum apply its own choice-of-law rules as long as it has a legitimate interest in doing so.[182] Even if the state in which the MDL court sits has a legitimate interest in its laws being applied to the case,

---

178. Atlantic Marine Constr. Co. v. U.S. Dist. Court for W. Dist. of Tex., 134 S. Ct. 568, 582 (2013) (holding that 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a) does not carry with it the choice-of-law rules of the transferor court when the parties are contractually obligated to a forum-selection clause).

179. 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a) (2012); see Atlantic Marine, 134 S. Ct. at 583 ("Not only would it be inequitable to allow the plaintiff to fasten its choice of substantive law to the venue transfer, but it would also encourage gamesmanship. Because '§ 1404(a) should not create or multiply opportunities for forum shopping.'") (quoting Ferens, 494 U.S. at 523).

180. A plaintiff should not enjoy the "privilege" of preserving the MDL court's choice-of-law rules because, but for direct filing, filing into the MDL court would be improper. See Atlantic Marine, 134 S. Ct. at 582–83 (citing Van Dusen, 376 U.S. at 635) (explaining that the "privilege" of preserving the transferor court's choice-of-law rules should not be enjoyed by a plaintiff who filed their case in the transferor court in violation of a forum-selection clause).

181. See RESTATEMENT OF CONFLICT OF LAWS (AM. LAW INST. 1934).

182. See CURRIE, supra note 19, at 152–57.

the law of the transferee court would prevail.[183] Application of the Second Restatement's choice of law approach also would not result in application of the law of the state in which the MDL court sits. The Second Restatement requires several factors to be weighed to determine which state has the most significant relationship to parties and issues before the court.[184] Again, because the MDL court's relationship to the case is a mere legal fiction, unless the cause of action or the parties were substantially linked to the state in which the MDL court sits, it is unlikely that state would have the most significant relationship to the case. If there is no choice of law theory that supports the application of the law in which the MDL court sits, it is clear that the only purpose in applying that law would be forum-shopping. Accordingly, courts should reject such application.

5. Due Process and Full Faith and Credit Clauses

A mechanical application of the choice-of-law rules of the state in which the MDL court sits after a directly filed case has been transferred to a court with proper venue and personal jurisdiction would violate both the Due Process and the Full Faith and Credit clauses if the state in which the MDL court sits does not have a "significant contact or aggregation of contacts" to the claim.[185] In cases where more than one jurisdiction may have an interest in a claim, the Due Process clause and Full Faith and Credit clause balance one another. The Due Process clause ensures that one jurisdiction's laws are not applied arbitrarily while the Full Faith and Credit clause allows a forum to apply its own law as long as it has a legitimate interest in doing so.[186]

---

183. See Shreve, supra note 61, at 542.

184. See RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS § 6 (AM. LAW INST. 1971).

185. Allstate Ins. v. Hague, 449 U.S. 302, 312–13 (1981) ("[F]or a State's substantive law to be selected in a constitutionally permissible manner, that State must have a significant contact or significant aggregation of contacts, creating state interests, such that choice of its law is neither arbitrary nor fundamentally unfair."); see U.S. CONST. art. IV, § 1 ("Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State."); U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 1 ("No State shall . . . deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law . . . .").

186. Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Shutts, 472 U.S. 797, 819 (1985).

The exception to this rule appears in Sun Oil v. Wortman.[187] The Supreme Court held that application of the forum's procedural rules does not violate the Full Faith and Credit clause even if the forum does not have a significant contact to the claim.[188] Therefore, a forum with no connection to the case other than the case being filed within its jurisdiction could apply its own statute of limitations.[189] However, this does not extend to the issue before us now. Choice-of-law rules are substantive law.[190] Accordingly, it is necessary that a jurisdiction must have a significant contact or aggregation of contacts for the choice-of-law rules of that jurisdiction to be applied.

Multidistrict litigation is a statutory device that allows a court that would not normally have jurisdiction over a case to oversee the case for the sake of judicial efficiency.[191] If the state in which the MDL court sits does not have significant contacts or an aggregation of significant contacts to the claim, then, when pretrial proceedings cease and the case is transferred to a court with proper forum and jurisdiction, application of the choice-of-law rules of the state in which the MDL court sits would violate both the Due Process clause and the Full Faith and Credit Clause.

B. Method of Closure

Closure of the forum-shopping loophole created by direct filing requires a two-step response. First, every Case Management Order issued by an MDL court that allows direct filing would contain a mandatory provision requiring the plaintiff to declare a "home forum" upon filing. Second, Congress must amend 28 U.S.C. § 1407, adding a provision that, if a directly filed case is transferred following pretrial proceedings, the choice-of-law rules of the state in which the transferee court sits are applicable, unless the plaintiff declared the MDL court as the home forum and the case could have originally been filed in the MDL court absent the Multidistrict Litigation.

---

187. See Sun Oil Co. v. Wortman, 486 U.S. 717, 730–34 (1988).

188. Id. at 722–23.

189. Id.

190. Kermit Roosevelt, III, Choice of Law in Federal Courts: From Erie and Klaxon to Cafa and Shady Grove, 106 NW. U. L. REV. 1, 17 (2012) (citing Klaxon Co. v. Stentor Elec. Mfg., 313 U.S. 487, 496 (1941)).

191. See supra Part III.

1. Required Case Management Order Provision

Direct filing into an MDL court is a legal fiction created to promote judicial efficiency. Such a fiction does not give the state in which the MDL court sits a governmental interest in the directly filed case.[192] Thus, when the case is thereafter transferred to a court with proper jurisdiction, any argument that the law of the state in which the MDL court sits should apply is a false conflict. As evidenced above, some courts are willing to mechanically apply Van Dusen and Ferens, creating an anomalous result.[193] It is therefore necessary to close the loophole created by Multidistrict Litigation direct filing to prevent forum-shopping abuse. All Case Management Orders filed by a designated MDL court that allow cases to be directly filed into the MDL court should include: (1) a requirement that plaintiffs who file directly into the MDL court must declare a "home forum," a district court with personal jurisdiction over the parties, where the case would be transferred should it not be disposed of in the MDL court; and (2) a provision explaining the fact that the case was directly filed in the MDL court will have no impact on the choice of law to be applied should the case be transferred to the "home forum."

It is possible that the choice-of-law rules of the state in which the MDL court sits would apply when a directly filed case has been transferred following pretrial proceedings.[194] However, for these choice-of-law rules to apply, it would be necessary that: (1) filing the case in that district would be otherwise proper, notwithstanding the Multidistrict Litigation and (2) upon directly filing, the plaintiff declared the district in which the MDL court sits to be the home forum.[195] The home forum is, according to the plaintiff's complaint, where the plaintiff would have filed the case but for the Multidistrict Litigation. These two requirements deter gamesmanship after a case has been directly filed. The first requirement follows the Supreme Court's requirement in Van Dusen

192. See supra Section V.A.4.

193. See supra Part IV.

194. See In re Fresenius Granuflo/NaturaLyte Dialysate Prods. Liab. Litig., 76 F. Supp. 3d 294, 303 (D. Mass. 2015).

195. See id. at 304 ("The home forum designation of the direct filing plaintiffs is the best evidence I have of what these plaintiffs would have done absent direct filing.").

that, for law of the transferor court to be applied, jurisdiction and forum must be proper in both the transferor and transferee courts.[196] The second requirement follows the Supreme Court's decision in Ferens, holding that the purpose of transfer should not be to confer an advantage upon the transferring party.[197]

For example, in the Multidistrict Litigation case of In re Fresenius Granuflo, the Case Management Order permitting direct filing required that all plaintiffs filing directly into the MDL court submit a short complaint in which they were to indicate their home forum for purposes of pretrial proceedings.[198] The court conceded that the applicable choice of law analysis to be applied to a case in the MDL court is not necessarily the choice-of-law rules of the state in which the MDL court sits.[199] The court held that the choice-of-law rules of the home forum stipulated on the short complaint of the plaintiff were applicable to each case for purposes of pretrial litigation.[200] Accordingly, if the case were thereafter transferred to a different district court following pretrial proceedings, the application of choice-of-law rules applied by the MDL court would be consistent with Van Dusen and Ferens.[201]

2. Amendment to 28 U.S.C. § 1407

The most obvious solution would be to amend the MDL statute to close the forum-shopping loophole at its source. Congress should amend 28 U.S.C. § 1407 to include a clause requiring that, if a case is directly filed into a Multidistrict Litigation court and the case is thereafter transferred to a district court with subject matter jurisdiction, the "transferee" court will apply the choice-of-law rules of the state in which it sits.[202] Such an amendment would 196. See Van Dusen v. Barrack, 376 U.S. 612, 621 (1964).

---

197. See Ferens v. John Deere Co., 494 U.S. 516, 527 (1990).

198. In re Fresenius Granuflo/NaturaLyte Dialysate Prods. Liab. Litig., 76 F. Supp. 3d at 298–99.

199. Id. at 300; see Bradt, supra note 23, at 800–01 (describing the inconsistency that arises when courts mechanically apply the choice-of-law rules of the state in which the MDL court sits).

200. In re Fresenius Granuflo/NaturaLyte Dialysate Prods. Liab. Litig., 76 F. Supp. 3d at 302.

201. Ferens, 494 U.S. at 527; Van Dusen, 376 U.S. at 621.

202. 28 U.S.C. § 1407 (2012).

prevent the application of the laws of a state with no relationship to the cause of action and close the loophole for forum-shopping.

VI. CONCLUSION

Forum-shopping allows plaintiffs to choose a forum that will render a favorable decision to the plaintiffs. Although the practice of forum-shopping should be discouraged, direct filing allows plaintiffs to choose not only between forums of proper jurisdiction in which to file, but to also consider the law of the MDL court, the transferor court, as well.[203] The Supreme Court held in Van Dusen and Ferens that the policies underlying the Erie doctrine mandate applying the transferor court's choice-of-law rules, rather than those of the transferee court, after a transfer of venue pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a).[204] However, as illustrated in Atlantic Marine, this general rule is not without exceptions.[205] The ability to consolidate pretrial proceedings into one MDL court was created to promote federal court efficiency, and the direct filing process was added to increase such efficiency. Direct filing should not be so unrestrained that it is easy for plaintiffs to gain a more favorable judgment.

It was not the intention of Congress to allow the laws of a forum with no relationship to the cause of action to be the deciding factor in a case.[206] Furthermore, no choice of law theory would support such an outcome.[207] Therefore, attempts by plaintiffs who directly file Multidistrict Litigation cases and later transfer those cases to forums with proper jurisdiction to use the law of the forum

---

203. Wahl v. Gen. Elec. Co., 786 F.3d 491, 498 (6th Cir. 2015).

204. Ferens, 494 U.S. at 821; Van Dusen, 376 U.S. 612.

205. Atlantic Marine Const. Co. v. U.S. Dist. Court for W. Dist. of Tex., 134 S. Ct. 568, 577 (2013).

206. 114 CONG. REC. 4, 4925 (1968) (explaining that the purpose of the Multidistrict Litigation legislation was to ensure "just and efficient conduct" of consolidated actions).

207. See generally RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS § 145 (AM. LAW INST. 1971) (requiring the law of the state with the most significant relationship to be applied); RESTATEMENT OF CONFLICT OF LAWS § 377 (AM. LAW INST. 1934) (requiring the law of the place of the harm to be applied); CURRIE, supra note 19, at 69 (requiring forum law to be applied as long as the forum has a legitimate interest in its law being applied).

of the MDL court to gain a more favorable outcome should be thwarted.

Private Payer Parity in Telemedicine Reimbursement: How State-Mandated Coverage Can Be the Catalyst for Telemedicine Expansion

CARL BENJAMIN LEWIS*

I. INTRODUCTION 471
II. BACKGROUND, HISTORY, & BENEFITS OF TELEMEDICINE 474
A. What is Telemedicine/Telehealth? 474
B. A Brief History of Telemedicine 477
C. Benefits of Telemedicine 479
III. LEGAL BARRIERS TO TELEMEDICINE EXPANSION 481
A. Private Reimbursement 481
B. Problems in Private Payer Parity Statutes 483
1. Full Parity & Non-Medical Restrictions 484
3. Lack of Clarity or Intent 488
3. Lack of Definitions 491
4. General Lack of Uniformity 493
IV. MODEL LEGISLATION & SOLUTIONS 494
A. Model Legislation 495
B. Solutions for Private Reimbursement Statutes 498
V. CONCLUSION 501

I. INTRODUCTION

Telemedicine, or the use of telecommunications for the delivery of health care services when the health care practitioner and patient are not in the same physical location, is growing in popularity across the nation and around the world. It is safe to say that telemedicine is the future of health care in a culture consumed with technological advancement and interconnectivity. Telemedicine has numerous benefits, but barriers exist that stymie its proliferation. Foremost among these barriers is reimbursement and, more specifically, private insurance reimbursement.

Some states have been proactive in their approach by enacting laws that mandate private insurance coverage of telemedicine. These laws are often referred to as "private payer parity" statutes.[1] Private payer parity is classified as "comparable coverage and reimbursement [by private insurers] for telemedicine-provided services to that of in-person services."[2] Twenty-nine states and the District of Columbia have enacted some form of private payer parity laws.[3] While most of these states have full private payer parity laws, two states have partial parity laws, which seriously limit payment for telemedicine services.[4]

Telemedicine is a fully realized mechanism for providing effective and efficient care, yet advocates for telemedicine have been unable to facilitate its spread throughout the United States. Reimbursement is one of the most often—if not the most often—

---

* J.D. Candidate, The University of Memphis Cecil C. Humphreys School of Law, May 2016; The University of Memphis Law Review, Senior Articles Editor, Vol. 46; B.A., Political Science, Samford University, 2013. I would like to thank Professor David Romantz, Professor Amy Campbell, Lacy Ward, and Matthew Schwimmer for their invaluable insight throughout the writing of this Note. The reader should note that the information contained in this Note is current as of August 2015. Telemedicine is a rapidly changing field and it is quite possible that there have been changes to the law since this time.

1. See LATOYA THOMAS & GARY CAPISTRANT, AM. TELEMED. ASS'N, STATE TELEMEDICINE GAPS ANALYSIS: COVERAGE & REIMBURSEMENT 6–7 (2015), http://www.americantelemed.org/docs/default-source/policy/50-state-telemedicine-gaps-analysis---coverage-and-reimbursement.pdf.

2. Id. at 6.

3. ATA STATE TELEMEDICINE TOOLKIT: IMPROVING ACCESS TO COVERED SERVICES FOR TELEMEDICINE, AM. TELEMED. ASS'N 3 (2015), http://www.americantelemed.org/docs/default-source/policy/ata-state-telemedicine-toolkit---coverage-and-reimbursement.pdf?sfvrsn=4 [hereinafter STATE POLICY TOOLKIT]. Arizona, Arkansas (effective January 1, 2016), California, Colorado, Connecticut (effective January 1, 2016), Delaware (effective January 1, 2016), Georgia, Hawaii, Indiana (effective July 1, 2015), Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota (effective January 1, 2017), Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nevada (effective July 1, 2015), New Hampshire, New Mexico, New York, Oklahoma, Oregon, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, Washington (effective January 1, 2017), and the District of Columbia have enacted laws mandating the coverage of telemedicine services under private health insurance plans. Id.

4. See id.; ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 20-841.09 (LexisNexis 2013); COLO. REV. STAT. § 10-16-123(1)–(3) (West 2015).

cited barrier to effective proliferation of telemedicine services.[5] For this reason, private insurance parity legislation is more important than ever if telemedicine is going to enjoy an expansive adoption.

Most importantly, telemedicine is a highly effective means of health care delivery and it should be an integral part of the future of America's health care system. Empirical data shows that mandating private insurance coverage for telemedicine services is the most effective way to facilitate widespread adoption.[6] The current state of telemedicine legislation does not achieve this goal.

There should be nationwide enactment of private payer parity legislation in order to facilitate telemedicine expansion because telemedicine can help to remedy our costly, private-insurance centered healthcare system. Not only should every state enact a private payer parity law, but also the laws should be enacted uniformly to avoid a statutory maze for practitioners in order to overcome the current issues confronting telemedicine statutes. Private payer parity laws will not serve their purpose without a nationwide, standardized adoption. For this reason, this Note proposes model legislation to serve as a guide for states to either revise their private payer parity laws or enact one if they have not already. Part II of this Note provides a history and background on telemedicine, clarifies the difference between telemedicine and telehealth, and explains the benefits of telemedicine use. Part III discusses the current state of private payer parity legislation and highlights why these laws are currently ineffective. Part IV proposes model legislation for states to use when creating their statutes and explains

5. See Julia Adler-Milstein et al., Telehealth Among US Hospitals: Several Factors, Including State Reimbursement and Licensure Policies, Influence Adoption, 33 HEALTH AFF. 207, 210 (2014) (examining factors associated with telehealth adoption among U.S. hospitals using data from the American Hospital Association's 2012 annual survey of acute care hospitals); Stacey Butterfield, Telemedicine Connects Remote Areas with Care, ACP INTERNIST (Apr. 2008), http://www.acpinternist.org/archives/2008/04/one.htm ("All of the interviewed experts listed reimbursement as the biggest hurdle to [telemedicine] implementation.").

6. Adler-Milstein et al., supra note 5, at 213 ("[P]olicies—in particular, those that require private payers to reimburse telehealth services to the same extent as face-to-face services—may give hospitals more latitude to choose the type of telehealth to pursue and make it more likely that any type of investment in telehealth will pay off for them.").

how the model law solves the issues in current legislation. Finally, Part V provides concluding remarks on private payer parity legislation as a whole.

II. BACKGROUND, HISTORY, & BENEFITS OF TELEMEDICINE

Telemedicine is a recent and technologically advanced area of health care. Unfortunately, many people, health care providers included, do not understand telemedicine or its benefits.[7] This section explains what telemedicine is and clarifies the difference between telemedicine and telehealth. A brief history of telemedicine is provided to show that the concept is not necessarily a new one. Lastly, this section highlights a few of the innumerable benefits that telemedicine can provide to our health care system.

A. What is Telemedicine/Telehealth?

Most simply put, telemedicine is "the use of technology [or] telecommunications for the delivery of health care services when the health care practitioner and the patient are not in the same physical location."[8] There is little consensus on the definition of telemedicine in the academic and medical community, and the term is often used interchangeably with telehealth.[9] The World Health Organization, which provides a commonly cited definition, defines telemedicine as:

---

7. AM. TELEMED. ASS'N, ATA STATE TELEMEDICINE TOOLKIT: WORKING WITH MEDICAL BOARDS: ENSURING COMPARABLE STANDARDS FOR THE PRACTICE OF MEDICINE VIA TELEMEDICINE, 3−5 (2015), http://www.americantelemed.org/docs/default-source/policy/ata-state-telemedicine-toolkit-medical-boards.pdf.

8. Vanessa Reynolds, Opportunities and Challenges of Telemedicine, LAW360 (Oct. 30, 2012, 1:00 PM), http://www.law360.com/articles/390083/opportunities-and-challenges-of-telemedicine.

9. See, e.g., Bradley J. Kaspar, Note, Legislating for a New Age in Medicine: Defining the Telemedicine Standard of Care to Improve Healthcare in Iowa, 99 IOWA L. REV. 839, 844 (2014) (noting that telemedicine is often referred to as either telehealth or e-health); Telemedicine Frequently Asked Questions (FAQs), AM. TELEMED. ASS'N, http://www.americantelemed.org/about-telemedicine/faqs#.VGKMrpV0xMs (last visited Dec. 14, 2015) (stating that the American Telehealth Association treats "telemedicine" and "telehealth" as synonyms and uses them interchangeably).

> The delivery of health care services, where distance is a critical factor, by all health care professionals using information and communication technologies for the exchange of valid information for diagnosis, treatment and prevention of disease and injuries, [and] research and evaluation, . . . all in the interests of advancing the health of individuals and their communities.[10]

The broader term "telehealth" normally encompasses telemedicine, but also includes a variety of other services, such as community and professional health-related education, public health, and health administration.[11]

Telemedicine is not a new form of health care, but simply a more modern mode of delivering the same services.[12] The technological aspect of telemedicine consultation is the only variant from

---

10. WORLD HEALTH ORG., TELEMEDICINE: OPPORTUNITIES AND DEVELOPMENTS IN MEMBER STATES 9 (2010), http://www.who.int/goe/publications/goe_telemedicine_2010.pdf (quoting WORLD HEALTH ORG., A HEALTH TELEMATICS POLICY IN SUPPORT OF WHO'S HEALTH-FOR-ALL STRATEGY FOR GLOBAL HEALTH DEVELOPMENT: REPORT OF THE WHO GROUP CONSULTATION ON HEALTH TELEMATICS 10 (1998), http://apps.who.int/iris/bitstream/10665/63857/1/WHO_DGO_98.1.pdf). For other definitions of telemedicine, see Amy E. Zillis, Note, The Doctor Will Skype You Now: How Changing Physician Licensure Requirements Would Clear the Way for Telemedicine to Achieve the Goals of the Affordable Care Act, 2012 U. ILL. J.L. TECH & POL'Y 193, 196 (2012) (stating that telemedicine is "the use of electronic communication and information technologies to provide or support clinical care at a distance," and can be "divided into three subsets: interactive, store-and-forward, and remote monitoring"); For The Media, AM. TELEMED. ASS'N, http://www.americantelemed.org/about-ata/for-the-media (last visited Dec. 14, 2015) (defining telemedicine as "the delivery of any healthcare service or transmission of wellness information using telecommunications technology.").

11. U.S. DEP'T OF HEALTH & HUMAN SERVS. & DEP'T OF COMMERCE, TELEMEDICINE REPORT TO CONGRESS (Jan. 31, 1997), http://www.ntia.doc.gov/legacy/reports/telemed/execsum.htm [hereinafter 1997 REPORT TO CONGRESS]; see also U.S. DEP'T OF HEALTH & HUMAN SERVS., THE ROLE OF TELEHEALTH IN AN EVOLVING HEALTH CARE ENVIRONMENT: INSTITUTE OF MEDICINE REPORT (Nov. 20, 2012), http://www.nap.edu/read/13466/chapter/1.

12. See Kristen R. Jakobsen, Note, Space-Age Medicine, Stone-Age Government: How Medicare Reimbursement of Telemedicine Services is Depriving the Elderly of Quality Medical Treatment, 8 ELDER L.J. 151, 156 (2000).

traditional health care.[13] State statutes concerning telemedicine most often use the term telemedicine interchangeably with telehealth.[14] Therefore, this Note will refer to telemedicine, but the term is also interchangeable with telehealth.

Telemedicine is generally divided into three subsets: interactive, store-and-forward, and remote monitoring.[15] Interactive telemedicine allows for real-time interaction through office visits, home visits, consultations, and various examinations and procedures when a health care provider and patient are separated geographically and want to communicate in real-time.[16] Interactive telemedicine, while not the most common form, is the most similar to an in-person visit with a health care provider. Another technology, store-and-forward, is one of the most widespread uses of telemedicine.[17] It allows a health care provider at one location to capture, store, and send images, information, and video of the patient; which is then forwarded to another health care provider for them to evaluate at their convenience.[18] Remote patient monitoring is another popular use of telemedicine. It allows health care professionals to regularly monitor patient health while the patient remains at home, leading to fewer office visits for those with chronic or acute illnesses.[19]

---

13. Id.

14. Compare TENN. CODE ANN. § 56-7-1002 (2014) (referring to coverage for "Telehealth" services, but using the definition of Telemedicine), with GA. CODE ANN. § 33-24-56.4 (2014) (referring to payment for Telemedicine services, but defining it similarly to the Tennessee statute).

15. Zillis, supra note 10, at 196.

16. See AGENCY FOR HEALTHCARE RESEARCH & QUALITY, U.S. DEP'T HEALTH & HUMAN SERVS., TELEMEDICINE FOR THE MEDICARE POPULATION: UPDATE 1 (Feb. 2006), http://archive.ahrq.gov/downloads/pub/evidence/pdf/telemedup/telemedup.pdf [hereinafter MEDICARE UPDATE].

17. See Symposium, Roundtable on Legal Impediments to Telemedicine: Legal Impediments to the Diffusion of Telemedicine, 14 J. HEALTH CARE L. & POL'Y 1, 2–3 (2011) (discussing store-and-forward technology and its numerous uses); see also Paul Spradley, Comment, Telemedicine: The Law is the Limit, 14 TUL. J. TECH. & INTELL. PROP. 307, 314 (2011) ("Store-and-forward . . . . [has] been exhaustively tested, and successfully implemented.").

18. See MEDICARE UPDATE, supra note 16, at 1.

19. See Home Telehealth & Remote Monitoring SIG, AM. TELEMED. ASS'N, http://www.americantelemed.org/members/ata-members/ata-member-gro

B. A Brief History of Telemedicine

The first recorded use of telemedicine coincided with the invention of the telephone by Alexander Graham Bell.[20] In 1897, a physician diagnosed a child with croup during a telephone conversation.[21] The case was reported in the medical journal, Lancet, and marked the arrival of telemedicine as it is now conceived.[22] Despite some hesitancy about using the telephone for such personal matters, patients swiftly accepted the new technology in order to receive better medical care.[23] Almost a century later, the interest in further developing telemedicine was so great that a national conference was held in Ann Arbor, Michigan, during which attendees discussed the technical specifications of telemedicine, the economic and psychological effects of telemedicine, and the scientific evaluation of telemedicine programs.[24] Unfortunately, the attendees found that the high costs and poor quality of the technology at the time outweighed the benefits of health care efficiency, resulting in many organizations withdrawing their support for telemedicine development.[25] Although the conference was unsuccessful, telemedicine continued to be utilized in various forms and by various entities. The National Aeronautics and Space Agency ("NASA"), remote survey stations, offshore oil rigs, and the United States military all continued to develop technology for their employees who, because of location and conditions, had limited access to quality health care.[26] Since the turn of the millennium, interest in telemedicine reignited in the United States due to the rapidly increasing costs of health care and massive strides in technology that significantly reduced the costs of healthcare delivery.[27] ups/special-interest-groups/home-telehealth-remote-monitoring#.VNvUBJV0z4g (last visited Dec. 14, 2015) [hereinafter Remote Monitoring SIG].

---

20. ADAM WILLIAM DARKINS & MARGARET ANN CARY, TELEMEDICINE AND TELEHEALTH: PRINCIPLES, POLICIES, PERFORMANCE, AND PITFALLS 6 (2000).

21. Id.

22. Id.

23. Id. at 7.

24. Id. at 6–7.

25. Id. at 7.

26. Id. at 8−9.

27. Id. at 11–12.

So why are we only now beginning to push for the expansion of telemedicine? Rapid technological advancements and decreases in the cost of telemedicine technology have led to calls for telemedicine expansion. At its inception, telemedicine was facilitated through multi-million-dollar NASA equipment, which literally required a rocket scientist to operate.[28] Today, due mostly to extraordinary technological leaps, the population demands its information be delivered immediately. Whether it be social media or the twenty-four hour news cycle, today's culture is obsessed with rapid delivery of information. Coincidentally, the same technology that provides us with instantaneous updates on social networks can also improve our health care system.[29]

Numerous industries utilize telemedicine to provide medical care for hard-to-reach and traditionally underserved populations. The United States Department of Justice has used telemedicine as a means of reducing health care costs for inmates.[30] Deepwater drilling platforms use telemedicine applications to treat employees located hundreds of miles offshore.[31] Rural communities in the United States have begun to use telemedicine to reduce expenses and travel, provide care in remote regions, and provide access to otherwise inaccessible or unavailable specialists.[32] These are only a few examples of the growing role that telemedicine plays in our health care system.

---

28. See Spradley, supra note 17, at 314−15.

29. See Sam Servello, Is Telemedicine the Next Big Thing . . . Again?, 10 ABA SCITECH LAW 4, 5–6 (2014) ("[B]oth patients and physicians are becoming more adept and familiar with technologies such as smart phones, iPads, and various forms of video chat . . . . For the younger population, there is every possibility that they will grow to expect telemedicine services from their physicians . . . ."); Spradley, supra note 17, at 315.

30. U.S. DEP'T OF JUSTICE, TELEMEDICINE CAN REDUCE CORRECTIONAL HEALTH CARE COSTS: AN EVALUATION OF A PRISON TELEMEDICINE NETWORK 2 (1999), https://www.ncjrs.gov/pdffiles1/175040.pdf.

31. See, e.g., Oscar W. Boultinghouse, Telemedicine Technologies Enhance Offshore Healthcare, Reduce Illness-Related Drilling Contractor, DRILLINGCONTRACTOR.ORG (Nov. 2, 2009), http://www.drillingcontractor.org/telemedicine-technologies-enhance-offshore-healthcare-reduce-illness-related-departures-1853. This article is based upon a presentation given by the author at the 2009 IADC Drilling HSE Europe Conference & Exhibition, September 23−24, 2009, in Amsterdam. Id.

32. Spradley, supra note 17, at 308.

C. Benefits of Telemedicine

Telemedicine has the unique capability of increasing the quality of care and improving patient access while also reducing costs.[33] Certain medical issues and emergencies are most effectively handled through face-to-face consultation; however, the availability of telemedicine will make healthcare professionals more accessible for patients who do not require in-person medical attention.[34] For example, rural areas have long suffered as an underserved medical population.[35] In situations when the nearest health care provider may be hundreds of miles away, a remote interactive consultation can provide access to distant specialists and is the alternative to receiving subpar care or no care at all.[36]

Telemedicine also increases the quality of care by providing continuous monitoring for chronic illnesses or following hospital discharge. Nearly one in every two adults has at least one chronic illness, which equates to more than seventy-five percent of all healthcare costs and eighty-one percent of all hospital visits.[37] Home monitoring of chronically ill patients allows physicians to rapidly receive information, detect problems earlier, and employ preventative medicine.[38] Medical staff is able to contact the patient if an abnormality is discovered and subsequently provide instruction on how to improve the condition.[39] The patient is able to

---

33. See id.

34. Gabrielle Lee, Note, A Telehealth Technicality: Pennsylvania's Outdated Insurance Reimbursement Policies Deter Investment in Modern Telehealth Technology, 15 PITT. J. TECH. L. & POL'Y 115, 119 (2014).

35. See Lindsey T. Goehring, H.R. 2068: Expansion of Quality or Quantity in Telemedicine in the Rural Trenches of America?, 11 N.C. J.L. & TECH. ON. 99, 103 (2009); Daniel McCarthy, The Virtual Health Economy: Telemedicine and the Supply of Primary Care Physicians in Rural America, 21 AM. J.L. & MED. 111, 116 (1995).

36. See Kaspar, supra note 9, at 844.

37. P'SHIP TO FIGHT CHRONIC DISEASE, THE GROWING CRISIS OF CHRONIC DISEASE IN THE UNITED STATES 1, http://www.fightchronicdisease.org/sites/fightchronicdisease.org/files/docs/GrowingCrisisofChronicDiseaseintheUSfactsheet_81009.pdf (last visited Feb. 18, 2016).

38. Kim A. Schwartz & Bonnie Britton, Use of Telehealth to Improve Chronic Disease Management, 72 N.C. MED. J. 216, 216–18 (2011), http://www.researchgate.net/publication/51627770_Use_of_telehealth_to_improve_chronic_disease_management.

39. Lee, supra note 34, at 121.

stay home where she is more comfortable, while her quality of care is similar to that of an inpatient stay and she avoids the higher cost of a hospital setting.[40] Likewise, patients are able to avoid physical trips to the doctor, which often result in the spread of viruses and infections, as many patients become sick through exposure to illness within the hospital or clinic.[41]

In addition to improved access and quality of care, telemedicine is a cost-effective mode of healthcare delivery. Providers and patients will be interested in utilization of telemedicine where the services can help a patient avoid more expensive hospitalization, emergency room care, or lengthy hospital stays.[42] Empirical studies show that "costs frequently are reduced in avoiding unnecessary services . . . . [T]he costly complications of chronic illnesses may be reduced, yielding improved health outcomes among more informed patients . . . ."[43] Data also shows that telemedicine can decrease treatment costs below traditional methods of health care delivery.[44] When using telemedicine technology, the average savings per consultation range from $62 for a primary care physician consultation to $712 for an emergency room visit.[45] While some commentators suggest a potential misuse or overbilling from telemedicine, many state statutes have addressed this by mandating reimbursement only for services that are deemed medically necessary.[46]

40. Id.; see also Zillis, supra note 10, at 197 ("Remote monitoring reduces the use of hospital and emergency services, enabling patients to continue to live in their homes instead of in higher cost hospital settings.").

41. Kaspar, supra note 9, at 857–58.

42. See Servello, supra note 29, at 8.

43. Rashid Bashshur et al., Telemedicine for Chronic Disease Management, 20 TELEMED. & E-HEALTH 769, 793 (2014).

44. Kirsten R. Smolensky, Telemedicine Reimbursement: Raising the Iron Triangle to a New Plateau, 13 HEALTH MATRIX 371, 385 (2003).

45. TELADOC, HEALTH CARE AND BUSINESS: USING NEW TECHNOLOGIES TO REDUCE COSTS, IMPROVE ACCESS, AND INCREASE EMPLOYEE SATISFACTION, 7 (2010), http://communications.teladoc.com/www/Telehealth-Special-Report.pdf.

46. See Lee, supra note 34, at 123.

III. LEGAL BARRIERS TO TELEMEDICINE EXPANSION

Traditionally, private insurers have not reimbursed providers for telemedicine services. Recently, states enacted laws that mandate coverage of telemedicine services by private insurers. This section discusses why private reimbursement is a barrier to telemedicine proliferation and highlights the major problems in current private payer parity statutes.

A. Private Reimbursement

"The successful development and expansion of telemedicine depends on the extent to which [health care providers] are reimbursed by payors."[47] A seventy-two institution survey determined which obstacles hindered the success of their telemedicine programs.[48] The number one hindrance that healthcare providers cited was reimbursement.[49]

Private insurers have not traditionally reimbursed for telemedicine services, and when they have it has generally been limited reimbursement.[50] A mixture of "doubt regarding telemedicine's efficacy and concerns with costs of and compliance with states' regulatory insurance requirements are likely responsible for" the historical lack of coverage.[51] In recent years private insurers have begun to voluntarily reimburse for telemedicine services. Additionally, states have begun to pass legislation that requires private insurers in that state to provide reimbursement.

According to the United States Census Bureau's 2013 report on Health Insurance Coverage, sixty-four percent of the population was covered by private insurance, with fifty-four percent covered by employment-based health insurance policies.[52] Private 47. Servello, supra note 29, at 8.

---

48. DARKINS & CARY, supra note 20, at 14–15.

49. Id. This Note is concerned with private payer parity statutes among the states, and since Medicare and Medicaid are federal programs, they will not be the focus, although they will be touched upon for a few reasons.

50. 1997 Report to Congress, supra note 11.

51. Amar Gupta & Deth Sao, The Constitutionality of Current Legal Barriers to Telemedicine in the United States: Analysis and Future Directions of its Relationship to National and International Health Care Reform, 21 HEALTH MATRIX 385, 405 (2011).

52. JESSICA C. SMITH & CARLA MEDALIA, U.S. CENSUS BUREAU, HEALTH INSURANCE COVERAGE IN THE UNITED STATES: 2013, 2 (2014). The health insurance is generally made available to employees and their families through employers, COBRA,[53] or a commercially advertised plan, although it can also be purchased individually from a private company.[54] Since such a large majority of the United States population is covered by private insurance,[55] it is imperative that private insurance reimburse for telemedicine.

Federal programs have been unsuccessful in promoting telemedicine expansion,[56] but if private insurers are required to reimburse for telemedicine services it will promote telemedicine as an efficient means of health care delivery.[57] In states where private insurance providers are forced to recognize that telemedicine practices constitute legitimate medical procedures, patients are "encouraged to explore and utilize these services without the concern that their health-care provider will deny reimbursement."[58]

States have the ability, under the Tenth Amendment of the United States Constitution,[59] to force private insurers within that

---

64.2 percent covered by private insurance is a vast majority compared with Medicare and Medicaid, which cover 15.6 and 17.3 percent respectively. Id. The remaining percentage is uninsured at 13.4 percent of the population and military health insurance at 4.5 percent. Id. at 3.

53. COBRA stands for the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985. COBRA is a federal law requiring all employer-sponsored health plans to allow certain employees and their families the opportunity to continue health insurance at their own expense under the group plan after their insurance coverage would normally have ceased due to the death of the qualifying employee, divorce, or another qualifying event. Smolensky, supra note 44, at 380 n.40. See generally Mary Ross & Carol Hayes, Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985, 49 Soc. Sec. Bulletin 8 (1986).

54. See SMITH & MEDALIA, supra note 52 at 1.

55. See id. at 2.

56. See Smolensky, supra note 44, at 378–80 (discussing Medicare and Medicaid reimbursement schemes and why they are barriers to telemedicine expansion and adoption).

57. See Servello, supra note 29, at 8.

58. Spradley, supra note 17, at 315–16.

59. U.S. CONST. amend. X. Under the United States Constitution, the states have the unenumerated power to regulate activities that affect the health of its citizens; the history of legal challenges to health care regulation has resulted in overwhelming support for state authority. Gupta & Sao, supra note 51, at 413*; see also* Smolensky, supra note 44, at 383 ("[S]tates have the ability to force private insurers to cover telemedicine services within their states.").

state to reimburse for telemedicine services.[60] Many statutes, however, have exceptions that render them ineffective, and the differences between each state law make it difficult to provide effective guidance to multi-state providers.[61] Often, doctors are unaware of telemedicine reimbursement statutes or unable to confidently comprehend the legal jargon.[62] Currently twenty-three states and the District of Columbia have enacted telemedicine private insurance parity statutes, but they are rife with issues and limitations.[63]

B. Problems in Private Payer Parity Statutes

Private payer parity statutes have many problems that render them ineffective and difficult to implement. While all of the statutes mandate coverage by private insurers for telemedicine services in some way, not all of them do so fully or clearly. The most serious limitations on private payer parity statutes include non-medical restrictions on reimbursement, lack of clarity in what services are covered, absence of definitions, and a general lack of uniformity among the states. This Section will parse through the laws, highlighting four major limitations in state statutes, and then explain how these limitations keep the statutes from being effective.

---

60. See Gupta & Sao, supra note 51, at 405 ("One of the main reasons for this change in [reimbursement] policy is because some states have begun to require private insurers to provide reimbursement.").

61. See, e.g., ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 20-841.09 (LexisNexis 2013); COLO. REV. STAT. § 10-16-123(1)–(3) (West 2015). Both Arizona and Colorado have enacted partial parity laws that require coverage and reimbursement but limit coverage to a certain geographic area or a predefined list of health care services. See THOMAS & CAPISTRANT, supra note 1, at 6.

62. Jennifer Bresnick, State Laws Vary Widely on Telehealth Insurance Coverage, EHR INTELLIGENCE (June 4, 2013), https://ehrintelligence.com/2013/06/04/state-laws-vary-widely-on-telehealth-insurance-coverage/ ("[P]hysicians who wish to offer telehealth consults will need to pay close attention to their state's current guidelines as they navigate an ever-changing maze of legislation.").

63. THOMAS & CAPISTRANT, supra note 1, at 6–7.

1. Full Parity & Non-Medical Restrictions

Full parity is classified as comparable to in-person services with regards to coverage and reimbursement for telemedicine services.[64] States, like most payors, often impose a variety of restrictions on telemedicine that prevent full parity.[65] "These restrictions are often arbitrary and provide no consideration for professional medical discretion, provider shortages or patient limitations."[66] In state private payer parity statutes, the most common restrictions are geographical limitations, limits on applicable technology, requirements for an established patient-provider relationship, and provider-type constraints.[67]

Two states have serious geographical limitations on telemedicine reimbursement. Arizona mandates that telemedicine services be "provided to a subscriber receiving the service in a rural region of this state."[68] Similarly, Colorado's statute provides that the intent is "to recognize the practice of telemedicine as a legitimate means by which an individual in a rural area may receive medical services from a provider without person-to-person contact with the provider."[69] Colorado's statute goes on to state that "no health benefit plan . . . for a person residing in a county with one hundred fifty thousand or fewer residents may require face-to-face contact between a provider and a covered person for services appropriately provided through telemedicine."[70] The geographical limitations in private payer parity statutes mean that a person in a non-rural area cannot be reimbursed for telemedicine services even though the need and efficacy of those services match that of a patient within the geographically covered area; this is not full parity.[71]

---

64. Id. at 6.
65. STATE POLICY TOOLKIT, supra note 3, at 1.
66. Id.
67. Id.
68. ARIZ. REV. STAT. § 20-841.09(A) (LexisNexis 2013) (emphasis added).
69. COLO. REV. STAT. § 10-16-123(1) (West 2015). Colorado enacted a new telemedicine statute in 2015 to improve the existing parity law and remove the rural restrictions, but it will not go into effect until January 1, 2017. Id.
70. Id. at § 10-16-123(2).
71. See Smolensky, supra note 44, at 378.

These geographical limitations mirror the limitations present in the telemedicine policy of Medicare. State laws regarding medical subjects often follow the federal government's lead in requiring telemedicine reimbursement.[72] Coverage under Medicare is limited to originating sites located within either a Rural Professional Shortage Area, non-Metropolitan Statistical Area, or a site that is a part of a federal telemedicine demonstration project.[73] The geographical limitations of state private payer parity have limited expansion of telemedicine's use similarly to how Medicare's limit on telemedicine has failed to expand telemedicine's use.[74]

Another common restriction present in private payer parity statutes is a limit on the applicable technology. Michigan,[75] Oregon,[76] and Vermont[77] all have restrictions on the types of technology that qualify for reimbursement. The Michigan statute requires that "[t]o be considered telemedicine under this [statute], the health care professional must be able to examine the patient via a real-time, interactive audio or video, or both, telecommunications system."[78] Likewise, the other two states provide that covered services are only considered telemedicine if delivered through real-time or live interactive audio and video.[79]

The only way private insurers are required to reimburse telemedicine services in these states is if the patient and provider are

---

72. Eleanor D. Kinney, Symposium, Behind the Veil Where the Action Is: Private Policy Making and American Health Care, 51 ADMIN. L. REV. 145, 176 (1999) (opining that private insurers often follow the lead of Medicare in making reimbursement decisions, possibly due to the massive amount of federal funding allocated to health services research); Smolensky, supra note 44, at 383; see also George Lauer, Medicare Telemedicine Bill Could Change Landscape, iHEALTHBEAT (May 8, 2009), http://www.ihealthbeat.org/features/2009/medicare-telemedicine-bill-could-change-landscape.aspx ("A generally accepted maxim in health care: Where Medicare goes, the rest of the country follows.").

73. 42 C.F.R. § 410.78(b)(4) (2014).

74. See Smolensky, supra note 44, at 383.

75. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 500.3476(2) (2014).

76. OR. REV. STAT. § 743A.058(2) (2013).

77. VT. STAT. ANN. tit. 8, § 4100k(g)(4) (2012).

78. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 500.3476(2).

79. See VT. STAT. ANN. tit. 8, § 4100k(g)(4) ("'Telemedicine' means the delivery of health care services such as diagnosis, consultation, or treatment through the use of live interactive audio and video . . . ."); OR. REV. STAT. § 743A.058(2).

able to interact in real-time.[80] The decision to restrict coverage to interactive audio-video telemedicine is another that mirrors the choices of Medicare.[81] One commentator, Kirsten Rabe Smolensky, a former professor of law and healthcare attorney,[82] opines that Medicare does not reimburse for store-and-forward technology because the government either feared overuse or possibly had difficulty establishing appropriate procedures, but she also notes that Medicare has the power to reimburse for technology other than interactive audio-visual telemedicine.[83]

The restrictions on applicable technology eliminate the common forms of telemedicine delivery, store-and-forward and remote monitoring, and limit coverage to the least common method.[84] Interactive audio-visual telemedicine is the most similar to an in-person visit, but it is not as popular among providers as the other two forms because it requires expensive technology that the health care provider may not already possess.[85] The "cost/benefit ratio is likely to be far higher for store-and-forward services than for two-way video telemedicine, and the quality of care in certain areas of medicine would be just as high without interactive consultations."[86] By limiting reimbursement to the least common and least popular form of telemedicine delivery, this restriction practically defeats the goal of private payer parity statutes.

Along with geographical and technological restrictions, some states have other limitations on private insurance reimbursement. For example, Hawaii requires that "a health care provider-

80. See, e.g., MICH. COMP. LAWS § 500.3476(2).

81. See 42 C.F.R. § 410.78(a)(3) (2014); see also Smolensky, supra note 44, at 378 (noting that Medicare does not generally reimburse for store and forward technology, which has been shown to be cost effective, and questions why Medicare would favor complex interactive video-consults).

82. Kirsten Rabe Smolensky is a graduate of the University Of Chicago School Of Law and a former healthcare attorney, Bigelow Fellow at the University of Chicago School of Law, and Associate Professor at the University Of Arizona James E. Rogers College Of Law. She is currently a generalist appraiser in Antiques & Residential Contents, Fine Art and instructor for the International Society of Appraisers in the Nashville, Tennessee area.

83. Smolensky, supra note 44, at 412–13.

84. See supra Section II.A.

85. See, e.g., MEDICARE UPDATE, supra note 16, at 1; Remote Monitoring SIG, supra note 19.

86. Jakobsen, supra note 12, at 175.

patient relationship exists between the patient and one of the health care providers" before reimbursement for a telemedicine consultation.[87] Similarly, Louisiana requires that a licensed physician be present at one end of the telemedicine consultation for there to be any reimbursement at all.[88] Kentucky only requires private insurance coverage if "the consultation is provided through the [telemedicine] network established under [Kentucky law]."[89] Private payer parity statutes are meant to mandate comparable coverage for telemedicine services as for in-person services, but the above restrictions "seem to make the rule requiring telemedicine reimbursement by private insurers a fallacy."[90]

In 2015, Arkansas enacted its first telemedicine reimbursement statute,[91] and it is a prime example of a restriction-riddled private payer parity statute. Arkansas's statute includes telemedicine reimbursement under private insurance for physician-provided services only, and it also includes technology restrictions and requires an in-person visit before a telemedicine encounter.[92] The statute provides that "[a] health benefit plan shall cover the services of a physician who is licensed by the Arkansas State Medical Board for healthcare services through telemedicine on the same basis as the health benefit plan provides coverage . . . by the physician in person."[93] This is almost identical to the restriction in Louisiana's statute which means that telemedicine services are not covered when provided by a registered nurse, physician's assistant, etc.[94] Further, the Arkansas definition of telemedicine limits coverage to services delivered through "real-time two-way electronic audio-visual communications . . . to provide or support healthcare

---

87. HAW. REV. STAT. § 431:10A-116.3(c) (LexisNexis 2014).

88. LA. STAT. ANN. § 22:1821(F)(1) (2013) ("[For] health care service . . . performed via . . . telemedicine, such a payment, benefit, or reimbursement under such policy or contract shall not be denied to a licensed physician conducting or participating in the transmission . . . ." (emphasis added)).

89. KY. REV. STAT. ANN. § 304.17A-138(1)(a) (2011).

90. Smolensky, supra note 44, at 382.

91. ARK. CODE. ANN. § 23-79-1602 (West 2015). The Arkansas telemedicine statute applies to all health benefit plans delivered, issued, reissued, or extended in Arkansas on or after January 1, 2016. Id.

92. Id.; see THOMAS & CAPISTRANT, supra note 1, at 28.

93. ARK. CODE. ANN. § 23-79-1602(c)(1).

94. Compare id., with LA. REV. STAT. ANN. § 22:1821(F)(1) (2013).

delivery that facilitates the assessment, diagnosis, consultation, or treatment of a patient's health care . . . ."[95] This provision provides a technology limitation on the use of telemedicine services and only allows for telemedicine services that are provided using real-time audio-visual communications, which eliminates the use of two very popular methods of delivery: store-and-forward technology and in-home monitoring.[96]

Lastly, the Arkansas private payer parity statute requires an in-person visit before a telemedicine encounter.[97] The statute states that telemedicine services will be covered when the patient is at an originating site and the healthcare professional is at a distant site, but the originating site is defined as "[t]he offices of a healthcare professional or a licensed healthcare entity where the patient is located at the time services are provided by a healthcare professional through telemedicine."[98] There is a limited exception for patients with end-stage renal disease, much like the exception to Medicare coverage, but this is a serious limitation because it requires a patient to be present at the office of a qualified healthcare professional to receive covered telemedicine services and effectively requires an in-patient visit.[99] It is evident from the Arkansas statute that newer private payer parity laws are not necessarily better. Arkansas's telemedicine statute is filled with limitations on reimbursable telemedicine services which practically defeat its purpose. Overall, Arkansas's private payer parity statute for telemedicine is a prime example of all the limitations and restrictions that states should seek to avoid when drafting their own telemedicine laws.

3. Lack of Clarity or Intent

An important aspect of any law is that it be clear enough for a layperson to understand the scope and intent. Opacity and lack of clear intent are limitations on current private payer parity statutes that render many ineffective. Professors Victoria Nourse and Jane Schacter, Professors of Law at Georgetown and Stanford

---

95. ARK. CODE ANN. § 23-79-1601(5).
96. Id.
97. Id. § 23-79-1602.
98. Id. § 23-79-1601(4)(A).
99. Id. § 23-79-1601(4)(B).

respectively, argue that clarity is the "single most significant judicial drafting virtue."[100] Legislative language should be written to be as unambiguous as possible so that reader knows what telemedicine is, which services are covered or excluded, how much providers are reimbursed for, etc., but many state statutes fail this mark.

Lack of clarity does not mean that a private payer parity statute does not accomplish the goal of parity in telemedicine. Texas[101] and Oklahoma[102] were among the first states to enact private payer parity statutes, both in 1997.[103] Due to the passage of time, now the statutes are minimal and state only that telemedicine services cannot be excluded from coverage simply because there is not person-to-person contact.[104] Compare these statutes with the Washington, D.C. statute, which states that "[a] health insurer . . . may not deny coverage for a healthcare service on the basis that the service is provided through [telemedicine] if the same service would be covered when delivered in person."[105] Neither Texas, Oklahoma, nor Washington, D.C. explicitly state that telemedicine services should be reimbursed the same as in-person services; however, they all do require full parity, and Washington, D.C. at least insinuates that telemedicine and in-person services are comparable.[106]

Many other statutes fail to explicitly state that there should be full parity in coverage of telemedicine services.[107] For example, the Virginia statute states that "a health care plan . . . shall provide

---

100. Victoria F. Nourse & Jane S. Schacter, The Politics of Legislative Drafting: A Congressional Case Study, 77 N.Y.U. L. REV. 575, 594 (2002).

101. TEX. INS. CODE ANN. § 1455.004 (2009).

102. OKLA. STAT. tit. 36, § 6803 (2009).

103. THOMAS & CAPISTRANT, supra note 1, at 61, 68.

104. See OKLA. STAT. tit. 36, § 6803(A) ("For services that a health care practitioner determines to be appropriately provided by means of telemedicine, health care service plans . . . shall not require person-to-person contact between a health care practitioner and a patient."); TEX. INS. CODE ANN. § 1455.004(a) ("A health benefit plan may not exclude a telemedicine medical service or a telehealth service from coverage under the plan solely because the service is not provided through a face-to-face consultation.").

105. D.C. CODE § 31-3862(a) (West 2013).

106. See id.; OKLA. STAT. tit. 36, § 6803; TEX. INS. CODE ANN. § 1455.004.

107. See, e.g., CAL. INS. CODE § 10123.85(c) (2013); VA. CODE ANN. § 38.2-3418.16(C) (West 2014).

coverage for the cost of such health care services provided through telemedicine services, as provided in this section" and "[a]n insurer . . . shall not exclude a service for coverage solely because the service is provided through telemedicine services and is not provided through face-to-face consultation."[108] The Virginia statute makes clear that the provider cannot exclude a service from coverage solely because it was provided through telemedicine, but it does not explicitly state that coverage must be comparable to that of a face-to-face consultation. Compare the language with the New Mexico statute that reads: "[c]overage for health care services provided through telemedicine shall be determined in a manner consistent with coverage for health care services provided through in-person consultation."[109] This statute clearly mandates that private insurers reimburse for telemedicine services in a comparable manner to reimbursement for face-to-face services.

Many state private payer parity laws lack clarity due to the lack of or confusing nature of the statutory intent. The intent or purpose of the statute guides anyone reading it to what the legislature intended when it drafted the law.[110] An issue arises when there is no enacted intent, or the enacted intent is at odds with the remainder of the statute. Consider the stated intent of three state private parity laws. A California statute reads: "[i]t is the intent of the Legislature to recognize the practice of [telemedicine] as a legitimate means by which an individual may receive health care services . . . ."[111] A Georgia statute reads: "[i]t is the intent of the General Assembly to mitigate geographic discrimination in the delivery of health care by recognizing the application of and payment for covered medical care provided by means of telemedicine."[112] Lastly, consider that Maine's statute contains no statement of intent within its scant two paragraphs of text.[113]

---

108. VA. CODE ANN. § 38.2-3418.16(A), (C).

109. N.M. STAT. ANN. § 59A-22-49.3(A) (West 2013).

110. See Carlos E. Gonzalez, Reinterpreting Statutory Interpretation, 74 N.C.L. Rev. 585, 604 (1996) ("[S]tatutory text is the surest device for correctly estimating the whole legislature's intent.").

111. CAL. INS. CODE § 10123.85(b).

112. GA. CODE ANN. § 33-24-56.4(c) (2013) (emphasis added).

113. See ME. REV. STAT. tit. 24-A, § 4316 (2012).

114. See Gonzalez, supra note 110, at 598 ("While individuals can have intents . . . collectives such as legislatures cannot. Thus, Judge Easterbrook

These two different statements of intent, and the lack thereof in Maine's statute, exemplify the vast differences among state statutes mandating private insurance coverage for telemedicine. It seems as though Georgia mandates full private payer parity, but the enacted intent appears to suggest that an argument can be made limiting reimbursement to only rural or geographically discriminated against areas. What is a provider in Georgia to do when the statute contends to offer full parity, but the stated intent of the statute might restrict coverage? Some argue that legislatures cannot have intents, but instead only outcomes in the form of enacted law.[114] If one resigns to this theory, then the intent should not control the true purpose of the statute; but then why have stated intent? As one can see, the statutory intent of a statute is difficult to grasp or use, and it adds to the opacity of private payer parity statutes.

3. Lack of Definitions

Hand in hand with lack of clarity are the varying definitions, or the lack thereof, in private payer parity statutes. Professor Jeanne Price,[115] in a lengthy article on statutory definitions, opines that "[statutory definitions] are important thresholds to our understanding of and the success of legislation . . . . [T]hey confer the authority and establish a structure that allows the statute's normative provisions to have effect . . . ."[116] She goes on to write that "[i]f definitions control future interpretations of the statute, they may also clarify current application of the statute and promote predictability."[117] Predictability and clarity are lacking in most state private payer parity statutes, and this is where definition sections writes, '[b]ecause legislatures compromise many members, they do not have "intents" or "designs," hidden yet discoverable. Each member may or may not have a design. The body as a whole, however, has only outcomes. . . .'" (quoting Frank H. Easterbrook, Statutes' Domains, 50 U. CHI. L. REV. 533, 547–48 (1983)).

---

115. Professor Price is the Director of the Wiener-Rogers Law Library at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas William S. Boyd School of Law.

116. Jeanne F. Price, Wagging, Not Barking: Statutory Definitions, 60 CLEV. ST. L. REV. 999, 1002–03 (2013).

117. Id. at 1022.

become vital, especially in an area as complex as insurance reimbursement for telemedicine.

State private payer parity statutes vary wildly on the presence of definitions. For example, New Hampshire's law does not contain a definition for telemedicine, health care provider, or anything else.[118] In contrast, Tennessee's statute contains definitions for "health insurance entity," "healthcare services," "healthcare services provider," "qualified site," "store-and-forward telemedicine," "telehealth," and "telehealth provider."[119] Georgia's statute exemplifies the middle ground by including definitions for "health benefit policy," "insurer," and "telemedicine."[120] Yet, in other states, such as Vermont, the statute simply refers the reader to another statutory section to find the definitions.[121] One of the basic rules of legislative drafting is to place a definition where it is most easily found by the reader.[122] Therefore, in an area of the law as complex as telemedicine, it benefits the reader most to have the definitions in the statute, not referenced to another statute or area of the code.

In those statutes that have definitions sections, the definitions often vary from statute to statute. In Mississippi's statute, telemedicine is defined as: "[T]he delivery of health care services such as diagnosis, consultation, or treatment through the use of interactive audio, video, or other electronic media. Telemedicine must be 'real-time' consultation, and it does not include the use of audio-only telephone, e-mail, or facsimile."[123] Compare that definition to Tennessee's definition of telemedicine:

> [T]he use of real-time, interactive audio, video telecommunications or electronic technology, or store-and-forward telemedicine services by a healthcare

118. N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 415-J:3 (2014).

119. TENN. CODE ANN. § 56-7-1002(a)(1)–(7) (2014).

120. GA. CODE ANN. § 33-24-56.4(b)(1)–(3) (2014).

121. See, e.g., VT. STAT. ANN. tit. 8, § 4100k(g)(1)–(2) (2014) ("'Health insurance plan' means any health insurance policy or health benefit plan offered by a health insurer, as defined in 18 V.S.A. § 9402 . . . .").

122. NAT'L ARCHIVES FED. REGISTER, Drafting Legal Documents, http://www.archives.gov/federal-register/write/legal-docs/definitions.html (last visited Dec. 30, 2015).

123. MISS. CODE ANN. § 83-9-351(1)(d) (2014).

> services provider to deliver healthcare services to a patient within the scope of practice of the healthcare services provider when: (i) such provider is at a qualified site other than the site where the patient is located; and (ii) the patient is at a qualified site or a school clinic staffed by a healthcare services provider and equipped to engage in the telecommunications described in this section . . . .[124]

Tennessee and Mississippi, two adjacent states, should not have such varied statutory language and definitions for telemedicine. The definition in Mississippi's statute appears to limit telemedicine to "real-time consultation," which means that store-and-forward technology is not covered.[125] Conversely, Tennessee's statute explicitly includes store-and-forward technology along with all other forms of telemedicine services.[126] Doctors who hold licenses in both states would likely find it very difficult to know what they would be reimbursed for when practicing across multiple jurisdictions.

4. General Lack of Uniformity

The existing state-by-state regulatory framework of telemedicine reimbursement is ill equipped to resolve the challenges of the health care industry on a national scale.[127] Patients and providers normally encounter a patchwork of arbitrary insurance requirements that do not allow them to take advantage of telemedicine.[128] As evidenced by the discussion above of other problems within private payer parity statutes, it is evident that these statutes lack broad uniformity.[129]

Some state statutes offer coverage for interactive audio-visual, store-and-forward, and remote monitoring, while others merely cover real-time, interactive audio-visual telemedicine tech-

---

124. TENN. CODE ANN. § 56-7-1002(a)(6) (2014).
125. MISS. CODE ANN. § 83-9-351(1)(d).
126. TENN. CODE ANN. § 56-7-1002(a)(6).
127. Gupta & Sao, supra note 51, at 405.
128. THOMAS & CAPISTRANT, supra note 1, at 1.
129. See discussion supra Sections III.A.–C.

nology.[130] One state may intend to reimburse private insurers for telemedicine services throughout the state, while another may only cover patients living in rural areas.[131] Likewise, one state statute consists of two paragraphs, and another statute is nearly two pages long.[132]

A study conducted by Michigan State University's Department of Telecommunications found that "the lack of a uniform telemedicine reimbursement system may cause society, and those in the health care industry, to view traditional delivery methods as superior to telemedicine."[133] States do not have to enact precisely the same law, but a more uniform approach to private insurance reimbursement is necessary if telemedicine is to achieve its goals of improving access and quality of care. Ultimately, provider participation suffers because non-uniformity of telemedicine reimbursement leads to lack of enforcement and general awareness.[134]

IV. MODEL LEGISLATION & SOLUTIONS

Only twenty-nine United States jurisdictions currently have private payer parity statutes in some form.[135] It is much more difficult for telemedicine to gain nationwide expansion if insurers are not required to reimburse providers for services offered through telemedicine. While it is certainly possible for the insurance industry to expand telemedicine on its own, it is unlikely without a catalyst such as legislative intervention. Even if every state adopts a private payer parity statute, considering the current state of these

---

130. Compare TENN. CODE ANN. § 56-7-1002, with OR. REV. STAT. § 743A.058 (2013).

131. Compare MISS. CODE ANN. § 83-9-351 (2014), with ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 20-841.09 (LexisNexis 2014).

132. Compare TEX. INS. CODE ANN. § 1455.004 (West 2013), with MD. CODE ANN., Ins. § 15-139 (West 2014).

133. Jaime Bennett, Improving Quality of Care Through Telemedicine: The Need to Remove Reimbursement and Licensure Barriers, 19 ANNALS HEALTH L. ADVANCE DIRECTIVE 203, 210 (2010) (citing Pamela Whitten & Laurie Buis, Private Payer Reimbursement for Telemedicine Services in the United States, 13 TELEMEDICINE AND E-HEALTH 1, 22 (2007), http://www.researchgate.net/publication/6496994_Private_Payer_Reimbursement_for_Telemedicine_Services_in_The_United_States).

134. See THOMAS & CAPISTRANT, supra note 1, at 4.

135. STATE POLICY TOOLKIT, supra note 3, at 3.

laws, they will remain as ineffective as if they were never enacted.[136] Model legislation can solve many of the problems inherent in current private payer parity laws because the model serves to identify and solves the issues.

The following proposed model legislation was created using language from and portions of the most effective private payer parity statutes currently enacted.[137] The statutes used were all enacted within the past three years and have all been shown, through empirical analysis, to be among the strongest private payer parity laws.[138] The model legislation is valuable because it is created using successful telemedicine statutes, meaning that it will be an effective guide for states attempting to create the best, most operative law.

This part presents proposed model legislation for uniform national adoption of telemedicine laws mandating private insurance coverage comparable to that of in-person services. States that have ineffective or limited private payer parity statutes can use this model to revise their laws. States that have yet to enact laws mandating private insurance coverage of telemedicine services may use this model in drafting one. Following the proposed model legislation, the next section will explain how this model can solve the problems facing private payer parity statutes.

A. Model Legislation

Title: Private Insurance Reimbursement Parity in Telemedicine Services

---

136. See Smolensky, supra note 44, at 383 ("[E]vidence [shows] that the statutes' exceptions make them ineffective tools for increasing telemedicine reimbursements . . . . If more states enact mandatory telemedicine reimbursement statutes, then any company wishing to be in the medical insurance business in that state will be required to reimburse for telemedicine . . . .").

137. See Thomas & Capistrant, supra note 1, at 50–51, 56, 67 (2014). This study, conducted by the American Telemedicine Association, provides an analysis of telemedicine policy in all fifty states. Id. at 1. Of the states used to create the model legislation, the major states enacted their laws from 2012–14 and each state has an "A" rating for private insurance parity. Id. at 45, 50–51, 56, 67. The analysis by the American Telemedicine Association identified Maryland, Mississippi, Missouri, New Mexico, and Tennessee as the strongest in terms of their private payer parity laws. Id. at 49–50, 56, 67.

138. See id.

Declaration of Intent: It is the intent of the legislature to recognize the practice of telemedicine as a legitimate means by which individuals may receive medical services from a provider without in-person contact;[139] and to recognize the application of telemedicine as a reimbursable service by which an individual shall receive quality medical services.[140]

Definitions:

a. "Telemedicine": as it relates to the delivery of health care services, telemedicine means the use of real-time, interactive audio, video telecommunications or electronic technology, or store-and-forward telemedicine services by a health care provider to deliver health care services to a patient within the scope of practice of the healthcare services provider at a site other than the site at which the patient is located.[141] Telemedicine does not include audio-only conversations, electronic mail messaging, or facsimile transmissions.[142]
b. "Store-and-forward telemedicine services": the use of asynchronous computer-based communications between a patient and a health care provider at a distant site for the purpose of diagnostic assistance in the care of a patient;[143] or electronic information, imaging and communication, that is transferred or recorded or otherwise stored for asynchronous use.[144]
c. "Health care provider": a duly licensed hospital or other licensed facility, physician, or other health care professional authorized to furnish health care services in the State within the scope of the professional's license.[145]

Applicability: This statute applies to insurers and nonprofit health service plans that provide hospital, medical, or surgical benefits to individuals or groups on an expense-incurred basis under health

139. See, e.g., CAL. INS. CODE § 10123.85(b) (West 2014).

140. See HAW. REV. STAT. § 431:10A-116.3(a) (2014).

141. See TENN. CODE ANN. § 56-7-1002(6) (2014).

142. See id.

143. See, e.g., MONT. CODE ANN. § 33-22-138(6)(c) (2014); TENN. CODE ANN. § 56-7-1002(5) (2014).

144. See N.M. STAT. ANN. § 59A-22-49.3(H)(5) (2014).

145. See id.

insurance policies or contracts that are issued or delivered in the State, including HMOs.[146]

Reimbursement & Deductible: Any entity subject to this statute:

a. Is required to not exclude from coverage a health care service solely because it was provided through telemedicine and is not provided through an in-person consultation between a healthcare provider and an insured patient.[147]

b. Is required to reimburse a health care provider—to the same extent that it reimburses the same service if provided through in-person consultation—for the diagnosis, consultation, and treatment of an insured patient for a health care service covered under a health insurance policy or contract that can be appropriately, effectively, and safely provided through telemedicine.[148]

c. May impose a deductible, copayment, or coinsurance amount on benefits for health care services provided through telemedicine so long as it does not exceed the deductible, copayment, or coinsurance applicable to an in-person consultation.[149]

d. Is required to reimburse providers who are out-of-network for telemedicine services under the same reimbursement policies applicable to other out-of-network health care services providers.[150]

e. May limit reimbursement to only those services that are medically necessary, subject to the terms and conditions of the covered person's policy.[151]

f. May not require a health care provider be physically present with a patient where the patient is located unless the health care provider who is providing health care services by means of telemedicine determines that the presence of a health care provider is necessary.[152]

---

146. See MD. CODE ANN., INS. § 15-139(b) (LexisNexis 2014).

147. See id. at (c)(2); MO. REV. STAT. § 376.1900(4) (2014); TENN. CODE ANN. § 56-7-1002(d)(3).

148. See MD. CODE ANN., INS. § 15-139(d) (LexisNexis 2014).

149. See MISS. CODE ANN. § 83-9-351(3) (2014).

150. See TENN. CODE ANN. § 56-7-1002(d)(4) (2014).

151. See MISS. CODE ANN. § 83-9-351(5) (2014).

152. See MO. REV. STAT. § 376.1900(9) (2014).

Utilization Review: Any entity subject to this statute may undertake utilization review to determine the appropriateness of any health care service whether the service is provided through an in-person consultation or through telemedicine if the appropriateness of the health care service is determined the same.[153]
Geographic Discrimination Prohibition: A health insurance policy or contract may not distinguish between patients in rural and urban locations in providing coverage under the policy or contract for health services delivered through telemedicine.[154]
Provisions Not Stipulated: Any provisions not stipulated by this statute is required to be governed by the terms and conditions of the health insurance policy and contract.[155]

B. Solutions for Private Reimbursement Statutes

It is important that states enact statutes that mandate private insurance parity in telemedicine reimbursement because it has been proven to be very effective in promoting the adoption of telemedicine.[156] A 2014 study using the Information Technology Supplement to the American Hospital Association's 2012 annual survey of acute hospitals supports the enactment of private payer parity laws.[157] Those conducting the study found that "state policies that required private payers to reimburse for [telemedicine] services to the same extent as face-to-face services made hospitals more likely to adopt [telemedicine]."[158] The researchers suggest that "states may want to consider implementing policies to promote private payer reimbursement of [telemedicine]."[159] The study concluded that state policies mandating private payer reimbursement are the most effective manner in which to promote telemedicine expansion.[160] The proposed model legislation serves at a starting point for states to begin drafting a private payer parity statute, and it can solve many of the problems inherent in current laws.

---

153. See MD. CODE ANN., INS. §15-139(e) (LexisNexis 2014); MO. REV. STAT. § 376.1900(7) (2014); N.M. STAT. ANN. § 59A-22-49.3(C) (2014).
154. See MD. CODE ANN., INS. § 15-139(f).
155. See TENN. CODE ANN. § 56-7-1002(g) (2014).
156. See Adler-Milstein, supra note 5, at 207.
157. See id.
158. Id. at 211.
159. Id. at 214.
160. Id. at 213.

Current laws mandating private insurance reimbursement for telemedicine suffer from artificial restrictions, lack of clarity, and non-uniformity.[161] This Note highlighted the major barriers to utilization of these statutes and the model legislation strives to fix these problems. For example, the model removes all restrictions for geographic area, providers, technology, or relationships, all of which are present in some state statutes.[162] The model legislation prevents clarity issues by stating a strong intent and providing clear definitions. Likewise, if widely adopted, the model will solve the issue of uniformity.

Uniformity is likely the biggest issue in the area of telemedicine.[163] Each state maintains the power to regulate activities affecting health under the Tenth Amendment to the United States Constitution.[164] Since each state has its own laws relating to health care, it is very difficult for doctors to practice in multiple jurisdictions, absent obtaining multiple licenses.[165] Consequently, uniformity in licensure is an important topic in the area of telemedicine because it is a barrier to expansion, much like reimbursement policies.[166] Current licensing practices force health care providers to fulfill requirements and protocols that differ for each state

---

161. See discussion supra Sections III.B.i.–iv.

162. See, e.g., COLO. REV. STAT. § 10-16-123(1) (2014) (rural area restriction); LA. REV. STAT. ANN. § 22:1821(F)(1) (2013) (provider restriction); OR. REV. STAT. § 743A.058(1)(c) (2013) (technology restriction).

163. See Symposium, supra note 17, at 17.

164. See U.S. CONST. amend. X; see also Goldfarb v. Virginia State Bar, 421 U.S. 773, 792 (1975) (opining that states have a compelling interest in regulating the practice of medicine and other activities related to health, safety, and welfare of its citizens); Fish, Shiri A. Hickman & Humayun J. Chaudry, State Licensure Regulations Evolve to Meet the Demands of Modern Medical Practice, 10 ABA SCITECH LAW 18 (2014) (noting that the U.S. Supreme Court recognizes the states have a right to regulate health care); Zillis, supra note 10, at 201 (citing to the Tenth Amendment in support or state regulation of health care). But see Gupta & Sao, supra note 51, at 413–14 (arguing that states do not have a constitutional right to exclusive domain over health care regulation and that current state regulation is likely unconstitutional per the Dormant Commerce Clause).

165. See CNTR. FOR TELEMEDICINE LAW, OFFICE FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF TELEHEALTH: TELEMEDICINE LICENSURE REPORT 1 (2003).

166. See id. at 2 ("[L]icensure is a major barrier to the development of telemedicine."); Fish, Hickman, & Chaudry, supra note 164, 18–19; Spradley, supra note 17, at 317.

board, and there are sixty-nine licensing jurisdictions in the United States.[167] There are myriad proposals to remedy the current state of medical licensure, but the consensus is that there must be a uniform approach among the states without relinquishing state control to the federal government.[168]

What does licensure have to do with the adoption of the proposed model legislation? Telemedicine, by nature, is a cross-jurisdictional practice; several scholars and medical professionals conclude that the establishment of a uniform set of standards and regulations is necessary to realize telemedicine's potential.[169] The ability to deliver health care across distances using telemedicine achieves the goals of greater quality and access to health care.[170] As medical licensure enjoys a movement towards uniformity, so should reimbursement policy, and the model legislation can help accomplish this goal.

States have the opportunity to blaze the path toward widespread telemedicine adoption through the implementation of private payer parity statutes. As mentioned previously, mandating private insurance coverage for telemedicine has proven to be the most effective means of expansion.[171] If laws differ greatly from state-to-state, however, physicians will be discouraged from fully effectuating their potential. Telemedicine can extend health care to traditionally underserved populations, provide access to specialists, allow for fewer site visits for chronic patients, decrease health care expenditures, and much more.[172]

With uniform state reimbursement laws, health care providers and insurers are able to know which telemedicine services

---

167. See Spradley, supra note 17, at 317.

168. See id. at 317–20 (providing examples of solutions to medical licensure as a telemedicine barrier); LICENSURE PORTABILITY, AM. TELEMED. ASS'N (Mar. 2007), https://web.archive.org/web/20100616143720/http:/www.americantelemed.org/files/public/policy/Licensure_Portability.pdf (providing position statement and recommendations proposed by the American Telemedicine Association).

169. See Gupta & Sao, supra note 51, at 387; see also Susan E. Volkert, Telemedicine: Rx for the Future of Health Care, 6 MICH. TELECOMM. & TECH. L. REV. 147, 158–59 (2000).

170. Gupta & Sao, supra note 51, at 442.

171. See Adler-Milstein, supra note 5, at 214.

172. Gupta & Sao, supra note 51, at 389–91.

they are able to provide and still receive reimbursement. For example, under the current state statutes, a patient in Tennessee wishing to consult via telemedicine with an orthopedist in Alabama would run the serious risk of not receiving coverage. Alabama lacks any kind of law that mandates coverage for telemedicine.[173] Financially the patient is better off driving to Alabama than consulting with a specialist through telemedicine if he is unlikely to receive reimbursement. Therein lies the problem with lack of uniformity and lack of widespread private payer parity statutes. While telemedicine may be the more efficient and cost-effective means of health care delivery, doubt about reimbursement will likely cause providers and patients to stick to traditional health care delivery.[174] Nationwide adoption of this model private payer parity legislation can spur telemedicine to the forefront of the health care scene, and ultimately, telemedicine will prove to be the savior for a failing health care system faced with constantly rising costs.[175]

V. CONCLUSION

Telemedicine has evolved from a futuristic fantasy into a promising, rapidly growing industry. The technological and monetary obstacles that once prevented the industry from expanding are no longer impediments. With access to modernized networks, providers have the ability to administer specialized and high-quality treatment to those who would not otherwise have access. Additionally, telemedicine falls clearly in line with today's culture of interconnectivity and autonomy. Before we can realize the full potential of telemedicine, several changes must take place within our legal system.

For telemedicine to flourish, a reimbursement solution must be established whereby providers and insurers know what services are covered. State legislatures and private insurers can lead the 173. THOMAS & CAPISTRANT, supra note 1, at 26 ("AL is bordered by LA, MS, and TN which enacted private insurance parity laws.").

---

174. See Bennett, supra note 133, at 210 ("Ultimately, the lack of a uniform telemedicine reimbursement system may cause society, and those in the healthcare industry, to view traditional delivery methods as superior to telemedicine as a delivery method.").

175. See Gupta & Sao, supra note 51, at 389.

way towards nationwide telemedicine adoption through state enactment of private payer parity statutes. Standardized adoption of mandated private insurance laws will eliminate artificial barriers between jurisdictions by providing knowledge and security in telemedicine reimbursement.

There are serious restrictions on the few enacted state private payer parity statutes for telemedicine. Only twenty-nine of fifty-one jurisdictions have adopted these laws, and many of those that have would benefit from thorough revision. The proposed model legislation seeks to remedy these limitations and provides a statute that can be uniformly and nationally adopted so as to facilitate the expansion of telemedicine. Until the state legislatures of our nation move to enact and revise statutes mandating private coverage for telemedicine services, it is unlikely that the federal government, or any other entity, will take the lead. There is ample data proving that telemedicine and private payer parity statutes are effective at lowering costs, expanding access, and promoting efficacy. Nationwide utilization of telemedicine is a reality and it may be the answer to our country's health care problem. Widespread state mandated private reimbursement can be the catalyst toward a more efficient and cost-effective system of telemedicine utilization.

Enough with the White Lie-ability: Decreasing Frivolous Health Care Liability Actions in Tennessee with Time and Transparency

MARY KATHERINE SMITH*

I. INTRODUCTION 503
II. WHY MEDICAL MALPRACTICE LITIGATION IS THE TREND 509
A. Justifications for Following Medical Malpractice Trend 512
B. Why Medical Malpractice is Not the Answer 514
C. Why Patients Continue to Turn to Medical Malpractice Litigation 516
III. HOW DISCLOSURE PROGRAMS AID IN REDUCING FRIVOLOUS MEDICAL MALPRACTICE LITIGATION 518
IV. SUCCESSFUL DISCLOSURE PROGRAMS IMPLEMENTED IN OTHER STATES 522
A. Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Lexington, Kentucky..522
B. University of Michigan Health System Approach 525
V. PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO TENNESSEE'S SYMPATHY LAW TO PROTECT APOLOGETIC EXPRESSIONS AND FAULT ADMITTING STATEMENTS MADE BY HEALTH CARE PROVIDERS..527
VI. PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO EXPAND TENNESSEE'S PRE-SUIT NOTICE PERIOD FOR A HEALTH CARE LIABILITY ACTION 538
VII. CONCLUSION 542

I. INTRODUCTION

John Smith, a sixty-year-old male, was admitted to a local hospital in Memphis, Tennessee, for treatment of a recurring bacterial infection, which if not managed, would have ultimately resulted in pneumonia. Smith's daughter, Nancy, accompanied him to the hospital where they provided the treating nurse with all of Smith's past and present medical conditions, medical allergies, and insurance information. Smith disclosed that he was highly allergic to all types of sulfonamide ("sulfa") drugs. The nurse gave Smith a red band to wear around his wrist to put other treating physicians and nurses on notice that he had a well-documented, life-threatening sulfa drug allergy. Despite the prevalent warning, the treating physician mistakenly ordered that Smith be administered a sulfa drug for his symptoms. The medical staff did not tell Smith which drug they were ordering him, so he persistently questioned the physician about this particular drug's risks and side effects. Still, the physician failed to disclose this information.

Later that evening, Smith's daughter learned that the treating physician ordered the nurse to monitor Smith for an anaphylactic drug reaction following his first dose of the sulfa drug. Neither Smith nor Nancy was informed of this monitoring plan. Smith did not exhibit any symptoms of an allergic reaction after the first several doses of the drug. However, several hours following his fourth dose, a drug reaction began to cause Smith to experience hypotension, which eventually led to several complications. When Smith and Nancy asked about these complications, the treating physician avoided the questions and denied the possibility that Smith's experiences were a result of the medication the physician administered to him. While still in the hospital, the complications worsened, and Smith soon passed away.

Following her father's passing, Nancy discovered that despite the disclosure of Smith's specific drug allergy, he had been administered a sulfa drug during his stay at the hospital. After this realization, and because Nancy was not provided with any true explanation of her father's death, she confronted the treating physician and asked if her father had been administered a sulfa drug, and if so, was a drug reaction the definitive cause of her father's death. The only responses she received from the physician and hospital representatives were evasive explanations and a denial of any wrongdoing. The treating physician told Nancy that her father's underlying medical condition was the reason for his passing. Further, the physician downplayed the risks of the drug that he administered to Smith. He also refused to admit any fault throughout the entire process. Nancy was unsatisfied with how the physician and hospital representatives handled the medical error that ultimately caused her father's passing. Frustrated and angry about the dishonesty and lack of accountability she witnessed, Nancy filed a health care liability action against both the individual physician and the hospital for their error in administering Smith a drug in which the doctor knew or had reason to know would cause a devastating allergic reaction.[1]

Medical errors are prevalent, and situations such as John Smith's arise in hospital settings daily. Such medical errors cause patients not only to suffer "unnecessary physical and mental pain" for prolonged periods of time, but sometimes cost patients their lives.[2] Many of these unnecessary outcomes mentioned above are preventable.[3] But, the medical and legal communities together must take action to reform their approaches to combat these medical errors and frivolous malpractice actions. First, it is important to determine what constitutes a medical error within the context of a health care setting. The Institute of Medicine ("IOM") defines a medical error generally as "the failure of a planned action to be completed as intended or the use of a wrong plan to achieve an aim."[4] Although the IOM definition provides a broad framework

---

* J.D. Candidate, The University of Memphis Cecil C. Humphreys School of Law, May 2016; The University of Memphis Law Review, Senior Notes Editor, Vol. 46; B.S., Psychology, Mississippi State University, 2013. I am grateful to Lauren Winchell, Professor Amy Campbell, Patrick Quinn, Greg Wagner, and Sarah Smith for their time, guidance, and invaluable insight in assisting me in the drafting and completion of this Note.

1. Although the location, names, and ages of the individuals involved in this fact pattern have been altered for purposes of this Note, this hypothetical is inspired by the facts of an actual event. Stories About Medical Errors: Father Given Wrong Dosage of Life Threatening Medication, SAFE PATIENT PROJECT, http://safepatientproject.org/sys-medical_errors.html (last visited Jan. 26, 2016).

2. Rebecca Rubel-Seider, Full Disclosure: An Alternative to Litigation, 48 SANTA CLARA L. REV. 473, 473 (2008); see Evelyn M. Tenenbaum, Using Informed Consent to Reduce Preventable Medical Errors, 21 ANNALS HEALTH L. 11, 11 (2012), http://lawecommons.luc.edu/cgi/viewcontent.cgi?article=1012 &context=annals (acknowledging the long-standing effects of preventable medical errors).

3. See Randall R. Bovbjerg, Paths to Reducing Medical Injury: Professional Liability and Discipline vs. Patient Safety—and the Need for a Third Way, 29 J.L. MED. & ETHICS 369, 369 (2001) ("Many, perhaps even most, injuries are preventable, probably numbering in the hundreds of thousands a year forhospital care alone."); see also Rubel-Seider, supra note 2.

4. INSTITUTE OF MEDICINE, TO ERR IS HUMAN: BUILDING A SAFER HEALTH SYSTEM 1, (Linda T. Kohn et al. eds., 1999) [hereinafter TO ERR IS HUMAN].

for the description of a medical error, each state differs as to how it statutorily defines medical errors.

Because medical errors have the potential to result in life-threatening outcomes, they also have the effect of fueling costly and time-consuming medical malpractice litigation. In the state of Tennessee, litigation that stems from medical negligence was previously referred to as a medical-malpractice claim, but is more recently recognized as a health care liability action.[5] A health care liability action is defined as > any civil action, including claims against the state or a political subdivision thereof, alleging that a health care provider or providers have caused an injury related to the provision of, or failure to provide, health care services to a person, regardless of the theory of liability on which the action is based.[6]

Preventable medical errors play a large role in frivolous medical malpractice litigation. This litigation may be avoided by encouraging transparency and communication within the health care setting via hospital-implemented disclosure policies and programs. However, encouraging the co-existence of transparent disclosure programs with the threat of potential medical malpractice litigation looming in the background is no easy task. Both medical malpractice litigation and patient safety disclosure programs aim to reduce medical errors in the health care arena.[7] Although the end goals are corresponding, the policies behind these two movements

---

5. In 2011, the Tennessee General Assembly passed the Tennessee Civil Justice Act, which replaced the term "medical malpractice action" throughout the Tennessee Code with the term "health care liability action." See 2011 Tenn. Pub. Acts 510, § 9. For purposes of consistency throughout this Note, I will refer to Tennessee's "health care liability action" as a "medical malpractice action."

6. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-26-101(a)(1) (2012 & Supp. 2015).

7. See Stanton N. Smullens et al., Regulating for Patient Safety: The Law's Response to Medical Errors: Article: Pennsylvania's Approach to Reducing Medical Error: The Story of the Patient Safety Authority, 12 WIDENER L. REV. 39, 40 (2005); see also Bovbjerg, supra note 3 (discussing the two competing views that society uses to both define and respond to medical errors).

are in conflict.[8] Unlike patient safety disclosure programs, the medical malpractice approach is considered reactive and punitive in nature, blaming the individual physician for his or her lapse in professional judgment and care.[9] This approach is justified on the grounds that if a physician is penalized for his or her mistakes, the incurred punishment will prevent similar mistakes from happening again in the future.[10]

On the other hand, patient safety disclosure programs are part of a relatively new movement.[11] Disclosure programs use a proactive approach in attempting to reduce both medical errors and litigation by focusing on the individual patient, identifying any potential medical errors, and "fostering an atmosphere that is open to discussing [those] errors."[12] Physicians and medical providers are encouraged to communicate transparently and honestly with their patients and patient's families, especially following a medical error.[13] In effect, this approach seems to alleviate the "name and blame" policy driving medical malpractice, and supports the idea that medical errors are a result of a possible system failure rather than the result of incompetent physicians.[14]

When handling medical errors, the conflict between these two approaches makes it difficult to not only achieve quality

---

8. See generally Smullens et al., supra note 7 (explaining the divergent interests between medical malpractice litigation and the patient safety movement).

9. See id.; see also David M. Studdert et al., Medical Malpractice, 350 NEW ENG. J. MED. 283, 287 (2004) (stating that medical malpractice litigation seeks to single out individual physicians in order to allocate fault and compensation based on evidence of negligence).

10. See Smullens et al., supra note 7; see also Studdert, supra note 9, at 283 ("Theoretically, lawsuits deter physicians by reminding those who wish to avoid the emotional and financial costs of ligation that they must take care.").

11. See Smullens et al., supra note 7.

12. Id.

13. For a general discussion regarding the role of transparent communications within the health care setting following a medical error, see generally Joanna C. Schwartz, A Dose of Reality for Medical Malpractice Reform, 88 N.Y.U. L. REV. 1224 (2013).

14. Id. The patient safety movement recognizes that physicians and other health care providers make mistakes because it is inherent in human nature and not because they lack adequate training or competency. See also Bovbjerg, supra note 3, at 370.

care,[15] but also inhibits the possibility of reducing frivolous malpractice claims. As part of the patient safety movement, physicians and health care providers are urged to be open and transparent about their medical errors, reporting them to patients, fellow practitioners, and regulators, to openly address future methods of prevention.[16] In order to foster openness and honesty from medical providers, experts emphasize that most medical errors are a result of system failures and not unskilled or incompetent physicians.[17] Conversely, the medical malpractice approach is strikingly contrary because it targets individual physicians by assigning blame and encouraging providers to keep hidden information surrounding a medical error.[18] The fear of being exposed to litigation may override physicians' interests in patient safety disclosure methods. Further, reluctant physicians feel that there is little to no legal protection when they are transparent about medical errors, which could ultimately lead to litigation or difficulty in obtaining medical malpractice insurance.[19] Due to the conflict between these two approaches, not only are physicians less willing to disclose medical errors to their patients, but they are also deterred from communicating openly with their patients about potential mistakes.[20]

In support of the goal of reducing frivolous health care liability actions in Tennessee, this Note proposes that the Tennessee

---

15. See Smullens et al., supra note 7, at 40.

16. Id. at 40–41. Initiated in response to a report issued by the IOM in 1999, which disclosed the severity of recurring medical errors, the patient safety movement focuses on identifying errors pro-actively by encouraging an open discussion of those errors. Id. at 40.

17. See Studdert, supra note 9, at 287.

18. Id.

19. Id.

20. See Lisa I. Iezzoni et al., Survey Shows That at Least Some Physicians Are Not Always Open or Honest with Patients, 31 HEALTH AFF. 383, 388 exhibit 2 (2012), http://content.healthaffairs.org/content/31/2/383.full.pdf. In a 2009 research survey that addressed physicians' attitudes and behavior regarding the disclosure of medical errors to patients, researchers found that a significant number of physicians deviated from a policy of complete honesty. Id. Nearly 65.9 percent of survey respondents agreed that physicians should "disclose all significant medical errors to affected patients." Id. However, 19.9 percent of survey respondents failed to fully disclose actual errors to their patients due to the fear of a potential malpractice suit. Id.

legislature amend two current statutes that would, in effect, provide greater protection for physicians' apologies following a medical error, and expand the pre-suit notice period before filing a health care liability action. These proposed amendments will encourage health care providers and hospital systems within the state to adopt patient-centered disclosure programs that mandate transparency and communication when handling medical errors.

Part II of this Note discusses why medical malpractice litigation remains the default response to medical errors, and how this response inhibits the implementation of full disclosure programs throughout Tennessee. Part III recognizes the benefits of full disclosure programs and how they aid in reducing frivolous medical malpractice litigation. Part IV then offers an overview of successful disclosure programs that have been implemented in other states, and analyzes the benefits of these programs. Part V suggests amending Tennessee Rules Evidence section 409.1(a) by adding a provision that protects apologetic expressions, including fault-admitting statements, made specifically by heath care providers following a medical error. Part VI proposes to amend Tennessee Code Annotated section 29-26-121(a)(1) by expanding the pre-suit notice period prior to filing a health care liability action. Part VII concludes the analysis and offers brief closing remarks.

II. WHY MEDICAL MALPRACTICE LITIGATION IS THE TREND

Traditionally, endeavors to reduce medical errors have been addressed predominantly through medical malpractice litigation.[21] A period of an abundant increase in medical errors within the health care arena revealed, however, that persistent medical malpractice actions are not the end-all, be-all solution. In November 1999, the IOM released an alarming report that ignited controversy within the medical community.[22] The IOM's report, To Err is Human, announced that preventable medical errors had become a leading cause of mortality in the United States, estimating these

---

21. See Smullens et al., supra note 7, at 39; see also Alan G. Williams, The Cure for What Ails: A Realistic Remedy for the Medical Malpractice "Crisis," 23 STAN. L. & POL'Y REV. 477, 481–83 (2012). Between the 1950s and 1980s, America considered itself to be facing a medical malpractice crisis. Id. at 480.

22. See TO ERR IS HUMAN, supra note 4.

errors were responsible for as many as 98,000 deaths per year.[23] Another study found that a projected three to five percent of hospital patients have suffered an injury as a result of their health care.[24] Comparing the past medical error crises to an epidemic, the IOM further estimated that preventable medical errors potentially cost between $17 billion and $29 billion per year.[25] The report also acknowledged that the prevalence of medical errors not only results in the unnecessary loss of human life and costly expenses, but also depletes patients' trust in the healthcare system, resulting in dissatisfaction for both patients and medical professionals alike.[26] The IOM concluded that a majority of the medical errors that occur in hospital settings are largely due to system failures and faulty conditions rather than individual negligence or incompetence.[27] After addressing the serious consequences of medical errors, the report then offered solutions to aid in the prevention of future medical errors in order to increase patient safety, acutely focusing on transparent disclosure.[28]

---

23. Id. at 1; Charles M. Key, Toward a Safer Health System: Medical Injury Compensation and Medical Quality, 37 U. MEM. L. REV. 459, 461 (2007); Rubel-Seider, supra note 2, at 473.

24. See Bovbjerg, supra note 3, at 369 (discussing the role of negligent medical care in causing patient injuries).

25. TO ERR IS HUMAN, supra note 4, at 1–2*; see also* Lee Taft, Apology and Medical Mistake: Opportunity or Foil?, 14 ANNALS HEALTH L. 55, 56 (2005) http://lawecommons.luc.edu/cgi/viewcontent.cgi?article=1203&context=annals (attributing these preventable costs to a variety of factors).

26. See TO ERR IS HUMAN, supra note 4, at 2.

27. See id. at 49. The majority of medical errors do not result from individual recklessness or the actions of a particular group—this is not a "bad apple" problem. Medical errors are more commonly, the result of systems, processes, and conditions that lead physicians or nurses to make mistakes. Id. But see Bovbjerg, supra note 3, at 369 (stating that nearly one-third to one-half of patient injuries that transpire during hospital visits are due to negligence or an otherwise preventable error).

28. See TO ERR IS HUMAN, supra note 4, at 23. But see H. T. Stelfox et al., *The "To Err Is Human" Report and the Patient Safety Literature*, 15 QUALITY SAFETY HEALTH CARE 174, 174 (2006), http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC2464859/pdf/174.pdf/. Although the IOM gained mostly positive attention from both the public and health care providers, critics of the IOM report suggested that the release of the report did more harm than good. Id. For example, critics argue that, "by focusing undue attention on accidental deaths

In order to combat the pervasiveness of medical errors, the IOM recommended a framework of specific approaches to help reduce the occurrence of these avertable mistakes.[29] In 2001, the IOM report quickly proved to be a facilitator of change in the health care industry when the Joint Commission for the Accreditation of Hospitals ("JCAHO") published new patient safety standards, which included regulations requiring the disclosure of unanticipated outcomes following medical care.[30] However, concerns with medical errors and malpractice litigation were well known even before the publication of the IOM report.

Studies conducted in the early 1990s confirmed that the recent concerns about preventable medical errors were material and in desperate need of a solution.[31] A 1991 study indicated that 3.7 percent of hospitalizations in New York resulted in adverse events, and 13.6 percent of those adverse events resulted in death.[32] Further, a 1992 study conducted in Utah and Colorado concluded that 2.9 percent of the states' hospitalizations resulted in adverse events, while 6.6 percent of those instances led to mortality.[33] These two late studies collectively provided the foundation and ultimate motivation for the IOM's 1999 report's push for change.[34] which are difficult to study and prevent, limited resources are being drawn away from other important quality improvement initiatives." Id.

---

29. See TO ERR IS HUMAN, supra note 4, at 6. This framework included methods such as, establishing a national focus to create leadership and enhancing knowledge on patient safety; developing a nationwide public mandatory reporting system while also encouraging the implementation of separate voluntary reporting systems; creating and raising performance standards and expectations; and implementing safety systems to ensure safe practices. Id.

30. See Taft, supra note 25, at 56.

31. See Smullens et al., supra note 7, at 41.

32. Id.; see also Troyen A. Brennan et al., Incidence of Adverse Events and Negligence in Hospitalized Patients: Results of the Harvard Medical Practice Study I, 324 NEW. ENG. J. MED. 370, 370 (1991) (defining an adverse event as an injury that is caused by the medical management rather than the underlying disease and results in either a prolonged hospital stay or a disability).

33. Smullens et al., supra note 7, at 41; see Eric J. Thomas et al., Incidence and Types of Adverse Events and Negligent Care in Utah and Colorado, 38 MED. CARE 261, 261 (2000).

34. Smullens et al., supra note 7, at 41.

A. Justifications for Following Medical Malpractice Trend

Although the early IOM report encouraged change in several facets of the health care industry, including how to efficiently deal with medical errors, deference to malpractice litigation continued to be the norm. This is because the "'deny and defend' culture of malpractice litigation is fundamentally opposed to the culture of openness and transparency advocated by the [IOM]."[35] Over the last several decades, efforts toward transparency, disclosure, and improving patient safety have successfully made a debut into the health care arena. However, the "deny and defend" approach continues to be the prevailing response of many health care providers when faced with a medical error and patient injury.[36] There are numerous fears plaguing both physicians and hospital representatives that dissuade these individuals from speaking openly and honestly with their patients about medical mistakes or sometimes even non-negligent complications.[37] Some of these fears include "a natural aversion to confronting angry" patients or families, "concerns that disclosure might invite a [malpractice] claim that otherwise would not be asserted," "anxiety that the discussion will compromise [] defenses" that may be viable in the future, and "fear[s] that the conversation may lead to loss of malpractice insurance or higher premiums."[38]

Generally, medical professionals assert that their fear of being transparent with patients derives from the adversarial nature of the legal profession.[39] A study conducted in 2008 surveyed physi-

---

35. Schwartz, supra note 13, at 1227.

36. Richard C. Boothman et al., A Better Approach to Medical Malpractice Claims? The University of Michigan Experience, 2 J. HEALTH & LIFE SCI. L. 125, 127, 131 (2009), http://www.med.umich.edu/news/newsroom/Boothman%20et%20al.pdf ("Transparency seems to be gaining currency as a concept, but individual physicians, hospitals, insurers, and defense lawyers still cling to 'deny and defend' as a comfortable, safe response to claims, despite its drawbacks.").

37. Id. at 128.

38. Id.

39. William M. Sage, Medical Malpractice Insurance and the Emperor's Clothes, 54 DEPAUL L. REV. 463, 464 (2005) ("For over a century, American physicians have regarded malpractice suits as unjustified affronts to medical professionalism, and have directed their ire at plaintiffs' lawyers—whose wealth cians about their attitudes regarding methods of communication that take place following a medical error and found that "[p]hysicians were 'concerned about the confidentiality and legal discoverability of the error information they report.'"[40] Hospitals and healthcare providers seem to tailor their programs and policies in response to a perceived exposure to legal liability, regardless of whether that perception actually materializes.[41] This perception serves as a barrier that tends to discourage physicians from disclosing medical errors to their patients since disclosure would seem contrary to implemented policies.[42] Additionally, apologies made by physicians to injured patients also play an important role in the disclosure process. However, a significant reason why physicians abstain from making such apologies, or even initiating the disclosure process in the first place, is due to the realistic fear of impending lawsuits and their potentially devastating consequences.[43] When physicians realize that apologies or expressions of sympathy may be used against them to prove liability, or that such actions may jeopardize their ability to obtain insurance coverage in the and reputation seem inversely proportional to their own—and the legal system in which they operate.").

---

40. See Boothman et al., supra note 36, at 129; see also Jane Garbutt et al*., Lost Opportunities: How Physicians Communicate About Medical Errors*, 27 HEALTH AFF. 246 (2008), http://content.healthaffairs.org/content/27/1/246.full.pdf. Physicians' concerns regarding disclosure are understandable due to the malpractice system's tendency to focus only on provider fault and the limited obtainability of malpractice insurance. Id.

41. See Carol Brass, A Proposed Evidentiary Privilege For Medical Checklists, 2010 COLUM. BUS. L. REV. 835, 842–43 (2010).

42. See id. at 846; see also Emily R. Carrier et al., Physicians' Fears of Malpractice Lawsuits Are Not Assuaged by Tort Reforms, 29 HEALTH AFF. 1585, 1591 (2010), http://content.healthaffairs.org/content/29/9/1585.full.pdf ("It is likely that physicians' assessment[s] of their risk is driven less by the true risk of malpractice claims or the cost of malpractice insurance, and more by the perceived arbitrary, unfair, and adversarial aspects of the malpractice tort process . . . .").

43. Robin E. Ebert, Attorneys, Tell Your Clients to Say They're Sorry: Apologies in the Health Care Industry, 5 IND. HEALTH L. REV. 337, 342 (2008). However, it is suggested that that many physicians may not have access to correct information regarding "their absolute risk of being sued." Carrier et al., supra note 42, at 1591.

future, they are less likely to be forthcoming and apologetic with their patients.[44]

The constant anticipation of a lawsuit following some type of medical error generates an atmosphere of secrecy and mistrust among health care providers.[45] As a result, a physician or hospital representative's failure to disclose mistakes causes unsatisfied and fearful patients to sense that their only option is to file suit.[46] These reasonable concerns of litigation instill fear in the minds of medical providers about the no-defect medical culture, which is impossible to obtain and ultimately results in the practice of defensive medicine and increased health care costs for the remainder of society.[47]

B. Why Medical Malpractice is Not the Answer

The "deny and defend" method is an ineffective and costly way to respond to a patient who has been affected by a medical error.[48] When physicians and hospitals resort to this method, patients are left with unanswered questions and plausibly feel that their only way to hold the providers accountable is to seek recourse through the adversarial system. Although litigation has long been the answer for patients who suffer as a result of a medical error, physician liability alone has failed to solve these problems and prevent these mistakes from recurring.[49] When patients choose to resort to litigation following a medical error, the process often proves to be inefficient and time consuming, leaving the patient uncompensated and experiencing unwanted outcomes, such as un-

---

44. See Ebert, supra note 43, at 342.

45. Barbara Phillips-Bute, Transparency and Disclosure of Medical Errors: It's the Right Thing to Do, so Why the Reluctance?, 35 CAMPBELL L. REV. 333, 336 (2013).

46. Id.

47. Id. The idea of defensive medicine stems from physicians' looming fear of potential lawsuits, which leads them to "prescribe medicines and order tests" that they know are not reasonably necessary under the circumstances, but do so anyway for the sole purpose of shielding themselves from liability. Frederick H. Davis, Medical Liability and the Disclosure-Offer Approach: Transforming How Arkansans Should Think About Medical Malpractice Reform, 64 ARK. L. REV. 1057, 1069 (2011).

48. See Boothman et al., supra note 36, at 129. The "deny and defend" approach is financially and emotionally costly. Id.

49. See Bovbjerg, supra note 3, at 377.

foreseen injuries associated with the medical error.[50] Accordingly, in the rare case that a patient is granted compensation following a medical malpractice action, the patient typically does not receive a monetary award until a much later date.[51] It is estimated that patients do not receive payment until roughly five years following the relevant incident that caused the harm.[52] Further, if the patient actually receives compensation, it is generally only half of the patient's true award due to the reduction of attorney fees and litigation expenses.[53]

The costs incurred from malpractice litigation are tremendous.[54] According to one study, overhead costs stemming from malpractice litigation are "exorbitant," and "for every dollar spent on compensation, 54 cents went to administrative expenses," such as attorney fees, experts' compensation, and court costs.[55] Comparably to the lack of adequate compensation experienced by affected patients involved in malpractice suits, litigation also does not always allow patients' questions or injuries to be fully addressed because the physicians are focused on relieving themselves of potential liability.[56] Because physicians' malpractice suits remain defensive, they are less incentivized to openly explain the circum-

---

50. Id. at 335; see also David M. Studdert et al., Claims, Errors, and Compensation Payments in Medical Malpractice Litigation, 354 NEW ENG. J. MED. 2024, 2025 (2006) (asserting that costly, frivolous medical malpractice claims are a substantial waste of time and resources in both the legal and medical systems).

51. See Phillips-Bute, supra note 45, at 335.

52. See id.; Studdert et al., supra note 50, at 2031 (disclosing the findings of a study that indicated an average time of five years between when the injury stemming from a medical error occurred and when the resolution process was complete).

53. See Phillips-Bute, supra note 45, at 335.

54. See Charles Kolodikin & Paul Greve, Medical Malpractice: The High Cost of Meritless Claims, IRMI (Jan. 2007), http://www.irmi.com/expert/articles/2007/kolodkin01.aspx.

55. Studdert et al., supra note 50, at 2026. For a discussion of how the liability process is slow in resolution, disregards a majority of claimed injuries, and fails to pay out consistent amounts, even among similar cases, see Randall R. Bovbjerg, Beyond Tort Reform: Fixing Real Problems, 3 IND. HEALTH L. REV. 1, 13 (2006).

56. See Phillips-Bute, supra note 45, at 337.

stances surrounding a medical error.[57] Due to this defensive practice, physicians may make judgment calls or take action based on their perceived personal legal benefit as opposed to a patient's clinical benefit.[58] Additionally, although the effects of medical errors can be potentially detrimental to both patients and their families, the subsequent effects of litigation can take a devastating toll on the physician as well.[59] This leads many physicians to sometimes experience depression, alienation, and financial instability after being sued.[60] Even though these barriers are tremendous, many patients feel that litigation is their only means of recourse.

C. Why Patients Continue to Turn to Medical Malpractice Litigation

It is suggested that patients who resort to malpractice litigation following an injury caused by a medical error do so as a result of the physician's reluctance to disclose or explain to the patient what actually happened.[61] Accordingly, following a medical error,

---

57. See Richard C. Boothman et al., Nurturing a Culture of Patient Safety and Achieving Lower Malpractice Risk Through Disclosure: Lessons Learned and Future Directions, FRONTIERS HEALTH SERV. MGMT., Spring 2012, at 13, 15, http://www.med.umich.edu/news/newsroom/Boothman-ACHE-Frontiers.pdf ("The medical community more often views a complaint as a threat, not an opportunity to reach an understanding based on honesty and openness."). The defensive process of malpractice litigation persuades physicians to distance themselves from "acknowledg[ing] mistakes and to avoid talking to an injured patient at all." Phillips-Bute, supra note 45, at 336.

58. Bovbjerg, supra note 55, at 11. "Some of [these actions are] characterized as negative defensive medicine, that is, not doing ethically or clinically indicated things for legal reasons—like seeing charity patients or providing obstetrical care to high risk patients." Id. However, there are many more instances of positive defensive medicine in practice. Examples of positive defensive medicine include "ordering extra tests, doing unneeded procedures, or adding layers of documentation, because those things are perceived to lower risk of lawsuit or facilitate defense if claims are brought." Id. at 11–12.

59. Phillips-Bute, supra note 45, at 336–37 ("Symptomatic reactions are common among physicians who have been sued for malpractice . . . .").

60. See Alicia Gallegos, Life After Lawsuit: How Doctors Pick Up the Pieces, AMERICAN MEDICAL NEWS (May 16, 2011), http://www.amednews.com/article/20110516/profession/305169939/4/.

61. Boothman et al., supra note 36, at 133; e.g., Ebert, supra note 43, at 343 ("[A] patient who does not receive the response he or she was expecting may leave feeling resentful and more likely to desire taking legal action against patients are motivated to turn to the courts because they feel as if they have not been fully advised about their outcomes, the physician or hospital has failed to take responsibility for the accident, or the patient reasonably believes a same or similar mistake will occur in the future during another patient's care.[62] One study surveyed patients who had been affected by a medical error and found that 24 percent of those patients filed suit because "the physician had failed to be completely honest with them about what happened, allowed them to believe things that were not true, or intentionally misled them."[63]

Generally, patients have reasonable expectations of trust when visiting a hospital or health care provider. Patients expect that when they go in for treatment, surgery, or a simple diagnosis, the providing physician will possess the knowledge and ability to assist them. These same patients also expect that if something were to go wrong while they were under the physician's care, the physician would honestly and willingly explain the situation, regardless of the outcome. A considerable gap exists, however, between current disclosure practices and a patient's expectation that he or she will be notified of a medical error.[64] Therefore, if an in-the physician."); Rubel-Seider, supra note 2, at 476 ("Patients who experience medical errors seek litigation as a way to hold the hospital responsible for its mistake . . . .").

---

62. Boothman et al., supra note 36, at 133 (citing Charles Vincent et al., Why Do People Sue Doctors? A Study of Patients and Relatives Taking Legal Action, 343 LANCET 1609, 1609–13 (1994)).

63. Id. (citing Gerald B. Hickson et al., Factors that Prompted Families to File Medical Malpractice Claims Following Perinatal Injuries, 267 JAMA 1359, 1361 (1992)). Out of the 127 families who responded to the survey, another 24 percent filed suit because they needed compensation, 33 percent filed because they were advised by an individual outside of the patient's family to take action, another 23 percent of the families filed suit because they were informed by medical personnel that they suffered from poor medical care, 20 percent filed because they realized that as a result of the medical error their child had no future, and 19 percent filed suit out of revenge. FRANK A. SLOAN ET AL., SUING FOR MEDICAL MALPRACTICE 64–65 (1993).

64. See Anna C. Mastroianni et al., The Flaws in State "Apology" and "Disclosure" Laws Dilute Their Intended Impact on Malpractice Suits, 29 HEALTH AFF. 1611, 1616 (2010), http://content.healthaffairs.org/content/29/9/1611.full.pdf (noting that disclosure requirements are more commonly being codified into state laws). The circumstances surrounding a medical error may be vague, allowing physicians to be uncertain as to what information necessitates jured patient does not receive a reasonably anticipated forthcoming response from his or her treating physician, the patient is left feeling angry, resentful, and more likely to turn to the adversarial system to compensate for the harm he or she suffered.[65]

III. How Disclosure Programs Aid in Reducing Frivolous Medical Malpractice Litigation

Although historically many health care systems discouraged the disclosure of medical errors for fear of liability, there has recently been a continuous push by the health care industry toward the implementation of full disclosure programs that emphasize transparency.[66] Accordingly, there continue to be prevalent concerns that increased transparency, coupled with apologetic statements made by physicians following a medical error, will result in disclosure, essentially adding to the gap between patients' expectations and a provider's actual disclosure. See also Thomas H. Gallagher et al., Choosing Your Words Carefully: How Physicians Would Disclose Harmful Medical Errors to Patients, 166 ARCHIVES INTERNAL MED. 1585, 1585 (2006), http://archinte.jamanetwork.com/article.aspx?articleid=410785.

---

65. Ebert, supra note 43, at 343. Patients who have been affected or injured by a medical error desire a detailed explanation about what happened, an apology acknowledging that the medical error had an impact on the patient, and a compensation to cover expenses that would not have incurred but for the error. Virginia L. Morrison, Heyoka: The Shifting Shape of Dispute Resolution in Health Care, 21 GA. ST. U. L. REV. 931, 947 (2005). "Studies document that the failure to meet these expectations, or poor communications in meeting them, can be perceived as measures of disrespect and may inflict as much or more pain than the injury, serving as the catalyst for taking legal action." Id.

66. Phillips-Bute, supra note 45, at 337 ("While the health care system has traditionally discouraged disclosures, there is, nonetheless, a steady momentum toward programs that promote transparency and full disclosure of medical errors in the United States and in other western countries."); see generally Kelly Bogue, Note, Innovative Cost Control: An Analysis of Medical Malpractice Reform in Massachusetts, 9 J. HEALTH & BIOMEDICAL L. 87, 100–03 (2013) (discussing the successes of the disclosure programs that are in effect within New Hampshire and Michigan); Doug Wojcieszak et al., The Sorry Works! Coalition: Making the Case for Full Disclosure, 32 JOINT COMMISSION J.. ON QUALITY & PATIENT SAFETY 344 (2006), http://www.jointcommission.org/assets/1/18/Sorry_Works.pdf (promoting the implementation of full disclosure programs and physician apologies in the event of a medical error).

amplified litigation and greater malpractice premiums.[67] These concerns, however, have shown to be unfounded. Research suggests that a provider's reluctance to provide transparent disclosure to a patient injured by a medical error actually increases the frequency of litigation, especially if the patient believes his or her questions have not been answered or that the provider is avoiding accountability for his or her mistake.[68] One study indicated that 37 percent of the patients interviewed who resorted to legal action would have refrained from doing so if they had been provided with an explanation and apology from the physician following the medical error, while another 25 percent of injured patients would have refrained from pursuing a malpractice claim if the physician corrected his or her mistake.[69] Not only does transparent disclosure serve the goal of decreasing frivolous medical malpractice claims, but "[a] system that encourages medical disclosure and transparency through a safe, supportive, and highly effective process that addresses both the needs of the patients and the needs of the physician can also serve the broader goals of increased patient safety."[70]

---

67. See Troyen A. Brennan, The Institute of Medicine Report on Medical Errors—Could it do Harm?, 342 NEW ENG. J. MED. 1123, 1125 (2000); see also Phillips-Bute, supra note 45, at 338.

68. Phillips-Bute, supra note 45, at 337–38 (citing Vincent et al., supra note 62, at 1609); see Rubel-Seider, supra note 2, at 485 (highlighting that a patient is less likely to file a malpractice suit if the patient feels decreased anger towards a physician); see also Wojcieszak et al., supra note 66, at 344 (explaining that when patients' emotions and concerns are properly addressed, compensation becomes an ancillary issue). The Sorry Works! Coalition is "an organization of doctors, lawyers, insurers, and patient advocates that is dedicated to promoting full disclosure and apologies for medical errors as a 'middle-ground solution' to the medical malpractice crisis." Id.

69. Vincent, supra note 62, at 1612 tbl.5. The same study also indicated that 17 percent of the patients affected by medical errors would have refrained from resorting to litigation if physician or hospital would have paid the patient compensation for the inflicted injury. Id. A similar study found that 24 percent of patients who have encountered a medical error filed suit because the treating physician was dishonest about their mistake, or the patient felt that the physician had intentionally misled them about their injury. See Jennifer K. Robbennolt, Apologies and Medical Error, 467 CLINICAL ORTHOPAEDICS & RELATED RES. 376, 377 (2009), http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC2628492/pdf/11999_2008_Article_580.pdf (citing Hickson, supra note 63, at 1359–63).

70. Phillips-Bute, supra note 45, at 337.

Along with full disclosure, an apology can play an important role in fulfilling the patient's expectations and avoiding outrageous medical and insurance costs.[71] It is suggested that there are three essential responses that patients desire following a medical error: (1) information about what happened; (2) a sincere apology; and (3) the assurance that measures to prevent the error from happening to another patient have been taken.[72]

There are several benefits derived from implementing a full disclosure program within a health care system. For example, the medical community is likely to observe improved communications between health care providers and their patients, which aids in mending the physician-patient relationship after a medical error has occurred due to the reinstatement of trust between the parties.[73] Full disclosure programs also have the potential to provide patients with a remedy more quickly than if patients chose to participate in extensive litigation.[74] But, these programs also allow patients to retain the right to sue should negotiations not satisfy their de-

---

71. Rubel-Seider, supra note 2, at 480; see also Thomas H. Gallagher et al., Patients' and Physicians' Attitudes Regarding the Disclosure of Medical Errors, 289 [J]AMA 1001, 1003 (2003), http://www.mitsstools.org/uploads/3/7/7/6/3776466/gallagher_patientphysicianattitudestowardsdisclosureofmedicalerrors.pdf (discussing the conflicting views between patients and physicians regarding the necessity of an apology following a medical error). Apologies have also been used as an important and effective dispute resolution tool in other legal settings such as mediation. See Deborah L. Levi, The Role of Apology in Mediation, 72 N.Y.U. L. REV. 1165, 1208 (1997) (recognizing that a sincere, remorseful apology may aid in satisfying conflict, but cautioning against overestimating the power of a simple "I'm sorry").

72. Phillips-Bute, supra note 45, at 338; see also Taft, supra note 25, at 63–64. ("In the face of medical error, the physician must first take time to identify what went wrong and why, a process that must take place before communicating with the patient or the patient's family. This is a time not only for internal reflection but also a time for communications with the medical team, mentors, and colleagues."). These steps are imperative because not only do they "equip[] the physician to communicate with clarity," they also prepare the physician to communicate the information through an authentic apology. Id. at 64.

73. Rubel-Seider, supra note 2, at 486. Healing for the patient begins once the injury is disclosed and an apology is made by the physician, but the nondisclosure of an error "interrupts the essential ingredient of trust" in a doctor patient relationship. Taft, supra note 25, at 66.

74. Rubel-Seider, supra note 2, at 486.

mands.[75] By departing from the "deny and defend" approach and heeding the benefits of a full disclosure program, physicians and hospitals are able to focus on moving forward with their patients' anticipated care.[76]

Due to the importance of transparent disclosure and genuine apologies following a medical error, medical schools are beginning to "incorporate training about error disclosure and apologies into the curriculum."[77] Perhaps the most important reasons to encourage the teaching of patient safety and error disclosure policies to medical students are to prevent future error and improve a patient's quality of care.[78] However, despite the fact that some medical schools have implemented a curriculum that teaches students to both disclose medical errors and apologize to patients, medical students still find it difficult to disclose their mistakes because they are "less sure of their skills" and are especially concerned about tarnishing their reputations as physicians.[79] Because errors are an inevitable part of medicine, it is essential that medical professionals are trained and mentored early on in their medical career so that they will learn how to properly disclose errors to

---

75. Id. For example, New Hampshire recently implemented a statutory early offer and disclosure program in which, following an adverse event, allows patients to either pursue litigation or "enter into an early offer process," which entails the patient sending a "written notice of injury" to the provider, and requires the patient to waive certain legal rights, such as, the right to receive payment for non-economic damages. Bogue, supra note 66, at 103; see also N.H. REV. STAT. ANN. § 519-C:2 (Supp. 2012). The provider has ninety days to respond to the written notice with a financial offer, and the patient subsequently has sixty days to either accept the provider's offer by signing a waiver or request a hearing. Bogue, supra note 66, at 103.

76. Bogue, supra note 66, at 101. Physicians should be able to focus on providing the best care to their patients based on their past training and education rather than deciphering ways to avoid liability in the case of a medical error. Id. at 93.

77. Robbennolt, supra note 69, at 380.

78. Joseph L. Halbach & Laurie L. Sullivan, Teaching Medical Students About Medical Errors and Patient Safety: Evaluation of a Required Curriculum, 80 ACAD. MED. 600, 600 (2005).

79. Dhruv Khullar, When Medical Students Make Errors, N.Y. TIMES (May 15, 2014, 10:35 AM), http://well.blogs.nytimes.com/2014/05/15/when-medical-students-make-errors/?_r=0.

their patients.[80] This early training will prove beneficial because transparent disclosures and sincere apologies are characteristics embedded in current hospital disclosure programs today.[81]

IV. SUCCESSFUL DISCLOSURE PROGRAMS IMPLEMENTED IN OTHER STATES

A. Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Lexington, Kentucky

The Veterans Affairs Medical Center ("VA") in Lexington, Kentucky, has implemented a landmark disclosure program[82] that consists of high standards for transparency and disclosure—a different approach to medical errors than most hospitals have chosen to adopt.[83] Its program is inherently proactive as it emphasizes extreme honesty when handling medical errors.[84] The driving force behind the implementation of the VA's policy "was to maintain a care-giving relationship toward the patient following medical error rather than adopting an adversarial one."[85] The VA's disclosure program is comprised of several practical steps.

First, once a patient experiences a harmful medical error, the hospital encourages providers to report those errors to its risk management committee ("the Committee").[86] After the error is reported, the Committee immediately investigates the mistake and attempts to determine its root cause.[87] The Committee considers 80. See id.; see also Darrell G. Kirch & Philip G. Boysen, Changing the Culture in Medical Education to Teach Patient Safety, 29 HEALTH AFF. 1600, 1601 (2010), http://content.healthaffairs.org/content/29/9/1600.abstract ("To achieve the culture change necessary to improve patient safety, medical schools and clinical practices must work together more effectively.").

---

81. But see Kirch & Boysen, supra note 80, at 1600 ("Medical education alone cannot accomplish this shift [in advancing patient safety].").

82. In 1987, after losing two colossal malpractice claims costing upward of $1.5 million, the VA decided that it was time for a change in the way the institution dealt with medical errors, thus implementing a full disclosure program. See Phillips-Bute, supra note 45, at 339–40.

83. Rubel-Seider, supra note 2, at 487.

84. Id. The VA is so proactive in their disclosure that they are known to "call families after discharge to explain that an error occurred." Id.

85. Jonathan R. Cohen, Apology and Organizations: Exploring an Example From Medical Practice, 27 FORDHAM URB. L. J. 1447, 1451 (2000).

86. See id. at 1452.

87. Id.

the possibility of both a "systemic" error and individual negligence on behalf of the providing physician.[88] Once it is determined that the patient has suffered harm, the physician fully informs the patient of the medical error.[89] After the disclosure is made, the Committee discusses avenues available to the hospital that will assist the affected patient through further medical treatment, including necessary compensation.[90] Once a the Committee develops a plan of action, the providing clinicians and Committee members set up a face-to-face meeting with the patient, his or her family, and the patient's legal counsel.[91] If the Committee's investigation indicates that the hospital or its physicians are at fault, the patient is afforded an apology.[92] If the Committee finds that the hospital or its employees are to blame for the patient's injuries, the Committee offers the patient both a fair settlement offer and an apology.[93]

Because the approach taken by the VA implicates the necessary elements of a full disclosure program,[94] the hospital has had the ability to minimize its exposure to litigation because patients and their families are not as angry when learning of a medical error.[95] The VA experienced financial improvement after the new disclosure program took effect.[96] These improvements were con-

88. Id. If the hospital's risk management committee finds that a systemic error caused the harm, efforts to prevent similar, future systemic mistakes are taken. Id.

89. Id. The physician must disclose the error to patient regardless whether the patient has knowledge of the harm. Id.

90. See id. at 1453.

91. Id.

92. Id. During the meeting, the physicians alongside the committee members discuss with the patient different approaches that could be taken to further aid the patient medically, and also consider any benefits to which the patient may be entitled. Id.

93. Id.

94. Id.

95. See id. at 1449 ("By going out of its way to be open and honest with patients and their families, the [VA] hospital has found that it is minimizing its legal exposure because families are not as angry when they learn of a medical error.").

96. Id. at 1453 ("From 1990 through 1996, the hospital paid an average of only $190,113 per year in malpractice claims, with an average (mean) payment of $15,622 per claim.").

sidered substantial when compared to the previous $1.5 million malpractice verdicts rendered against the VA from 1985 through 1986.[97] The VA's financial improvements placed it in the lowest quartile of comparable VA hospitals for malpractice payments during a seven-year period.[98]

However, the VA system possesses a distinctive feature that has contributed to its success. Contrary to many private hospitals that carry third-party liability insurance, the VA is a self-insured organization that directly bears its liability costs.[99] When an employer hospital becomes self-insured, the hospital pays for "individual employee health claims out of cash flow rather than as a monthly fixed premium to a health insurance carrier."[100] Being self-insured potentially promotes the affording of apologies to patients while third-party insurers may possibly "give little weight to some . . . benefits of [an] apology that an organization may value."[101] Further, being self-insured allows the VA more control in how a hospital decides to handle medical errors.[102] This is because most third-party insurance contracts impose a duty on the insured hospital to comply with the third-party insurance policy once involved with the defense of a claim.[103]

---

97. Id.

98. Id. "The Lexington VA's average payout was $16,000 per settlement, versus the national VA average of $98,000 per settlement, and only two lawsuits went to trial during a 10-year period." Wojcieszak et al., supra note 66, at 346.

99. Wojcieszak, supra note 66, at 346; see also Greg Bordonaro, Hospitals Battle Medical Malpractice Costs, HARTFORDBUSINESSS.COM (Apr. 28, 2014), http://www.hartfordbusiness.com/article/20140428/PRINTEDITION/304249935/hospitals-battle-medical-malpractice-costs ("Being self-insured . . . also gives hospitals greater control over malpractice premiums, which could also impact total expenses.").

100. Joseph Berardo, Jr., Understanding Benefits of Self-Insurance and Role of Hospitals in Helping Employers Lower Claims Costs, BECKER'S HOSPITAL REVIEW (Dec. 31, 2013), http://www.beckershospitalreview.com/strategic-planning/understanding-benefits-of-self-insurance-and-role-of-hospitals-in-helping-employers-lower-claims-costs.html. Additionally, when a hospital becomes self-insured, it is afforded greater flexibility in setting strategic goals, increased financial control, maximized internal resources, and improved decision-making. Id.

101. Cohen, supra note 85, at 1471.

102. Id.

103. Id.

B. University of Michigan Health System Approach

The University of Michigan Health System ("UMHS") has implemented perhaps one of the most compelling disclosure program models in the country.[104] UMHS's disclosure policies, fashioned closely after those of the VA system, involve several stages. Following the occurrence of a medical error or near miss,[105] the physician communicates openly and directly with the patient or his or her medical representative.[106] The risk management team reviews the complaint made by the patient in order to determine what happened.[107] If the affected patient has retained legal counsel, the risk management team offers to meet with both parties to review the patient's care and to answer any questions.[108] If through an investigation the risk management team determines that the patient's care was unreasonable, the institution admits its mis-

---

104. When the program was implemented in 2001, three principal goals molded the institution's response to patient injuries following medical errors: (1) compensate quickly and fairly when unreasonable care causes injury; (2) defend medically reasonable care vigorously; and (3) reduce patient injures (and therefore claims) by learning form patients' experiences. Boothman et al., supra note 36, at 139; see also Richard Boothman & Margo M. Hoyler, The University of Michigan's Early Disclosure and Offer Program, BULL. AM. C. SURGEONS (Mar. 2, 2013), http://bulletin.facs.org/2013/03/michigans-early-disclosure/# ("The UMHS model has been generally well-received in Michigan and elsewhere. . . . Nationally, the model has been covered by major newspapers and newsmagazines.").

105. The term "near miss" is "used to describe any process variation that did not affect an outcome but for which a recurrence carries a significant change of a serious adverse outcome." COMPREHENSIVE ACCREDITATION MANUAL FOR LABORATORY AND POINT-OF-CARE TESTING, JOINT COMMISSION ON ACCREDITATION OF HEALTHCARE ORGANIZATIONS at SE-4 (2011), http://www.jointcommission.org/assets/1/6/2011_CAMLAB_SE.pdf.

106. The Michigan Model: Medical Malpractice and Patient Safety at UMHS, U. MICH., http://www.uofmhealth.org/michigan-model-medical-malpractice-and-patient-safety-umhs (last visited Feb. 5, 2016).

107. Id. This step includes a peer review process, which involves professionals in similar practices. Id. The risk management team also acknowledges any opportunities for improvement that would prevent a similar event in the future. Id.

108. Id. This step is taken regardless of whether the parties provided the institution with a notice of intent to file suit. Id.

take and apologizes to the patient.[109] If the team's investigation concludes that the patient's care was medically reasonable, the team still extends an offer to meet with the patient and his or her counsel to explain the situation.[110] If a patient responds by filing suit, the risk management team vigorously defends its position throughout the litigation process.[111]

Similar to the VA, UMHS has several advantages over other health care systems, which ultimately aid in its program's efficiency. UMHS is a self-insured health system, "which allow[s] for consistency and alignment of ethical and financial motivation between the hospitals, care providers, and insurer."[112] Further, Michigan law encourages hospitals and health care institutions to respond proactively to patient injuries by communicating with the affected patients and managing the consequences of a medical error as quickly and efficiently as possible.[113] Accordingly, UMHS benefits from Michigan's statutory six-month pre-suit notice period, which allows the facility time to investigate the alleged claims and engage the patient and the patient's family in possible settlement negotiations, if appropriate.[114] Despite speculation that transparency increases malpractice claims, UMHS data suggests

---

109. Id. If the patient was injured as a result of an error, the team works with the patient and his or her legal counsel to reach a mutual agreement about a resolution. Id. This does not imply a settlement is going to occur, but if it were to occur, the institution compensates quickly and fairly. Id. UMHS views care as reasonable when it meets professional and institutional expectations, and such a determination is fundamentally clinical rather than legal. Boothman et al, supra note 57, at 21.

110. See The Michigan Model, supra note 106. It is not required, but many times the providing physician will participate in the mutual discussion. Id. The physician can aid in explaining to the patient the care they received. Id.

111. See id. ("No matter what happens: We will seek to learn from the experience, educate our staff, and make changes to the systems and processes that were involved in the care that prompted the complaint.").

112. See Boothman et al., supra note 36, at 137 (highlighting the benefits of maintaining a self-insured facility).

113. See id. ("Michigan laws encourage proactive responses to patient injuries and claims.").

114. See id. Under Michigan law, before filing a medical malpractice suit, a plaintiff must serve the potential defendants with written specifics of the claim he or she intends to file at least 182 days before the action is commenced. MICH. COMP. LAWS § 600.2912b (2015).

that its disclosure policies have led to a substantial decrease in litigation.[115] After the implementation of the program, the number of new claims against the hospital system fell from 136 in 1999 to 61 in 2006.[116] Additionally, claims were resolved more quickly with processing times shifting from an average of 20.3 months to 8 months overall, while litigation expenses were also cut in half.[117] Patients' satisfaction with UHMS's policy of explanatory disclosure and an apology following a medical error is perhaps an explanation as to why the number of lawsuits against the health system continues to decrease.[118] These policies coupled with Michigan's favorable malpractice laws may be the key to fixing the broken medical malpractice system.

V. PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO TENNESSEE'S SYMPATHY LAW TO PROTECT APOLOGETIC EXPRESSIONS AND FAULT ADMITTING STATEMENTS MADE BY HEALTH CARE PROVIDERS

Designing and implementing an entirely new statutory scheme in order to mandate the implementation of full disclosure programs for hospitals and health care providers within Tennessee is a daunting task. Instead, Tennessee can aid in encouraging and incentivizing its health care providers and hospital systems to implement full disclosure programs by amending its existing law to create an environment that is conducive to the existence of such programs. The proposed amendment would give health care providers and hospital systems in Tennessee a greater incentive to engage in full disclosure programs by protecting apologetic expressions and statements of fault made specifically by health care

115. See Boothman et al., supra note 36, at 145 ("Although singular factors giving rise to decreased claims cannot be identified precisely, clearly, transparency at UMHS has not been the catastrophe predicted—and it has yielded unquestionable benefits that enable UMHS and its staff to deliver safer and better care.").

116. Id. at 143.

117. Phillips-Bute, supra note 45, at 341. But see Boothman et al., supra note 36, at 144 (discussing that transparency alone is not responsible for the downwards trend of medical malpractice claims).

118. Tina Reed, University of Michigan's Policy Admitting Medical Errors Reduced Costs, Study Finds, THE ANN ARBOR NEWS (Aug. 16, 2010, 6:22 PM), http://www.annarbor.com/news/university-of-michigans-medical-error-policy-effectively-cut-costs-study-finds/.

providers following a medical error. This statutory amendment would provide physicians and hospitals greater protections and work to decrease frivolous medical malpractice lawsuits.

In 2002, the Tennessee legislature originally enacted statutory disclosure requirements applicable to all physicians and medical facilities following the occurrence of an "unusual event," which was Tennessee's term for medical error.[119] The statute defined "unusual event" as "an unexpected occurrence or accident resulting in death or life-threatening or serious injury to a patient that is not related to a natural course of the patient's illness or underlying condition."[120] The statute required that "[t]he affected patient and the patient's family, as may be appropriate, shall also be notified of the [unusual] event or incident by the facility."[121] Thus, if during a

---

119. TENN. CODE ANN. § 68-11-211(d)(1) (2007) (amended 2009).

120. Id. § 68-11-211(c)(7). "An unusual event also includes an incident resulting in the abuse of a patient." Id.

121. Id. § 68-11-211(d)(1). In order to provide guidance to medical providers, the statute listed examples of situations that could result in unusual events:

> The following represent circumstances that could result in an unusual event that is an unexpected occurrence or accident resulting in death or life-threatening or serious injury to a patient, not related to a natural course of the patient's illness or underlying condition. The circumstances that could result in an unusual event include, but are not limited to:
>
> (A) Medication errors;
> (B) Aspiration in a non-intubated patient related to conscious or moderate sedation;
> (C) Intravascular catheter related events, including necrosis or infection requiring repair, or intravascular catheter related pneumothorax;
> (D) Volume overload leading to pulmonary edema;
> (E) Blood transfusion reactions, use of wrong type of blood or delivery of blood to the wrong patient;
> (F) Perioperative or periprocedural related complications that occur within forty-eight (48) hours of the operation or the procedure
> . . .
> (G) Burns of a second or third degree;
> (H) Falls resulting in radiologically proven fractures, subdural or epidural hematoma, cerebral contusion, traumatic subarachnoid hemorrhage, or internal trauma, but does not include fractures resulting from pathological conditions; and patient's treatment, the physician or member of the treating team made a mistake that ultimately resulted in a medical error, the patient was entitled to be informed of such event. In 2009, the Tennessee legislature amended the statute, and disclosures of "unusual events" are no longer mandatory.[122] Currently, the statute only requires a medical facility to notify a patient and a patient's family about incidents of "abuse, neglect, and misappropriation."[123]

Although the Tennessee legislature removed the statutory requirement that medical providers disclose medical errors to their patients, transparency will still be encouraged if the legislature amends Tennessee's apology law to include statements of fault made by health care providers following a medical error. This strategy would encourage disclosure of medical errors to affected patients and their families without having to recreate a coercive mandatory disclosure statute. Such amendment would also cultivate broader protection for health care providers and ultimately create an environment that incentivizes a more transparent and honest disclosure following a medical error.

A sincere apology offers several advantages in the health care arena.[124] An apology has positive emotional and psychological effects on both the wrongdoer and the victim.[125] Although an

---

> (I) Procedure related incidents, regardless of setting and within thirty (30) days of the procedure and includes readmissions

Id. § 68-11-211(d)(1)(2).

122. TENN. CODE ANN. § 68-11-211 (2012).

123. Id. § 68-11-211(c).

124. The value of an apology is not a recent revelation in the health care industry. Many medical organizations have emphasized the importance of honest communications and apologies between patients and physicians. See Nicole Saitta & Samuel D. Hodge, Jr., Efficacy of a Physician's Words of Empathy: An Overview of State Apology Laws, 112 J. AM. OSTEOPATH ASS'N 302, 302 (2012), http://jaoa.org/article.aspx?articleid=2094499. For example, section 2 of the American Osteopathic Association's Code of Ethics states, "The physician shall give a candid account of the patient's condition to the patient or to those responsible for the patient's care." AOA Code of Ethics, AM. OSTEOPATH ASS'N, http://www.osteopathic.org/inside-aoa/about/leadership/Pages/aoa-code-of-ethics.aspx (last visited Dec. 22, 2014).

125. See Nicole Marie Saitta & Samuel D. Hodge, Jr., Is it Unrealistic to Expect a Doctor to Apologize for an Unforeseen Medical Complication?—A Primer on Apologies Laws, 82 PA BAR. ASS'N. Q. 93, 94 (2011); see also Beverly Engel, The Power of Apology, PSYCHOL. TODAY, July 1, 2002, apology alone cannot undo the wrongful act itself, an apology has the effect of placating an individual's anger toward the wrongdoer by lessening the negative effects of that action.[126] Frequently, apologies work as efficient dispute resolution tools because forgiveness often depends on an apology.[127] If a physician or hospital representative offers a sincere apology to the patient for harm they caused, the patient has an opportunity to forgive. Additionally, ethical and professional duties urge physicians and hospital representatives to take responsibility for their actions, regardless of the impending consequences.[128] A physician's fault-admitting statement may help prevent future, similar medical mistakes.[129] In order to understand the root cause of a medical error and prevent a future occurrence, an open and honest discussion of the error must first take place.[130] Further, a fault admitting statement made by a physician to a patient aids in decreasing the patient's anger towards the physician for his or her mistake.[131]

It stands to reason that if a patient has the opportunity to forgive the physician for injuries they experienced, the likelihood of the patient filing a frivolous malpractice suit decreases.[132] http://www.psychologytoday.com/articles/200208/the-power-apology ("[An apology] is an important ritual, a way of showing respect and empathy for the wronged person.").

---

126. See Saitta & Hodge, Jr., supra note 125, at 94.

127. See Rubel-Seider, supra note 2, at 481.

128. See Aviva A. Orenstein, Apology Excepted: Incorporating a Feminist Analysis into Evidence Policy Where You Would Least Expect It, 28 SW. U. L. REV. 221, 264 http://www.repository.law.indiana.edu/cgi/viewcontent.cgi?article=1554&context=facpub ("By disclosing and apologizing, a doctor is able to fulfill the physician's ethical responsibility of being truthful and loyal.").

129. If an honest, fault-admitting statement is made to a patient, the hospital may use that information following a medical error to prevent it from occurring down the road, ultimately increasing patient safety. Ebert, supra note 43, at 358.

130. Lucinda E. Jesson & Peter B. Knapp, My Lawyer Told Me to Say I'm Sorry: Lawyers, Doctors, and Medical Apologies, 35 WM. MITCHELL L. REV. 1410, 1417 (2009).

131. See Ebert, supra note 43, at 358.

132. See Saitta & Hodge, Jr., supra note 124, at 303 ("Monetarily, an apology decreases the financial consequences that result from litigating a medical malpractice claim."); see also Jennifer K. Robbennolt, Apologies and Legal Settlement: An Empirical Examination, 102 MICH. L. REV. 460, 485–86 (2003). Following a survey study conducted in order to examine the effects of sincere

However, the manner and tone of a health care provider's apologetic statement to a patient is critical; an apology that truly accepts responsibility for past actions is considered more effective than a statement simply acknowledging empathy.[133] Generally, there are three essential elements to an effective apology: an expression of sympathy for the challenges or sufferings that the patient is experiencing, an admission of fault, and an expression of remorse or regret.[134]

Still, laws among the states vary widely regarding the evidentiary protections afforded to physicians and hospital representatives for apologetic statements made to patients following a medical error.[135] One of the primary variations among state laws is apologies on a patient's willingness to accept a settlement offer following a medical error, the results suggested that when provided a full apology, 73 percent of surveyed patients were inclined to accept the offer, while only 52 percent would accept in the absence of an apology. Id.

---

133. See Saitta & Hodge, Jr., supra note 125, at 94.

134. See Rubel-Seider, supra note 2, at 481; see also Robbennolt, supra note 132, at 486 (acknowledging that apologies can be defined in various ways and consist of various elements).

> In its fullest form, the apology has several elements: expression of embarrassment and chagrin; classification that one known what conduct had been expected and sympathizes with the application of negative sanction; verbal rejection, repudiation, and disavowal of the wrong way of behaving along with vilification of the self that so behaved; espousal of the right way and an avowal henceforth forth to pursue that course; performance of penance and the volunteering of restitution.

Id. However, other definitions of an effective apology require fewer, simpler elements. For instance, Nicholas Tavuchis proposes that an apology must at least consist of an "acknowledgement of the legitimacy of the violated rule, admission of fault and responsibility for its violation, and the expression of genuine regret and remorse for the harm done." NICHOLAS TAVUCHIS, MEA CULPA: A SOCIOLOGY OF APOLOGY AND RECONCILIATION 3 (Stanford Univ. Press ed., 1991). Despite its effectiveness, it is clear that not every definition of an effective apology requires an admission of fault on behalf of the wrongdoer.

135. Although many state apology laws are catalogued under a particular state's rules of evidence relating to medical errors, some states protect apologies irrespective of whether such statements pertain to a medical malpractice claim. Sattia, supra note 124, at 306. Tennessee's apology law applies broadly across all industries and is not just limited to statements made by medical providers. See TENN. R. EVID. 409.1(a). Along with Tennessee, ten other states have adopted an apology law with general applicability, including: California, Flori-whether a state's statutory protections for apologetic gestures also include safeguards for a physician's statements of fault.[136] A fault-admitting statement includes language such as, "I am sorry about what happened, this was my fault." A majority of states have enacted statutory protections for apologies made by physicians and hospital representatives, but most of these states do not protect a medical provider's admissions of fault.[137] This is the case even if an admission of fault is integrated into a physician's sincere expression of sympathy.[138] Thus, it is important that physicians know what types of empathetic statements are protected under the laws of their state so that they may avoid misspeaking and inadvertently increasing the likelihood of liability following a medical error. Currently, only a few states have enacted apology laws protecting medical providers' statements of fault from being used in malpractice actions. These states include: Arizona,[139] South Caro-da, Hawaii, Indiana, Iowa, Massachusetts, Missouri, Nebraska, Texas, and Washington. See Mastroianni, supra, note 64, at 1619 n.37.

---

136. See Jonathan R. Cohen, Legislating Apology: The Pros and Cons, 70 U. CIN. L. REV. 819, 820 (2002) (discussing the ability of fault admitting apologies to alter the outcome of malpractice litigation if not afforded protection); s*ee also* Saitta & Hodge, Jr., supra note 124, at 303 (explaining that patients have greater respect for physicians when their apologies contain admissions of fault, thereby increasing patients' willingness to settle).

137. See Davis v. Wooster Orthopedics & Sports Med., Inc., 952 N.E.2d 1216 (Ohio Ct. App. 2011) (holding that the term "apology" as used in the Ohio statute barring admissions of a health care provider's apologies for an unanticipated outcomes of medical care does not include admissions of fault); see also Lawrence v. MountainStar Healthcare, 320 P.3d 1037, 1051 (Utah Ct. App. 2014) (holding that Utah's apology law does not bar statements of fault made by a medical provider following an unanticipated outcome of medical care); see also Ebert, supra note 43, at 357.

138. See Ebert, supra note 43, at 357.

139. In full, Arizona's full apology law protects,

> [A]ny statement, affirmation, gesture or conduct expressing apology, responsibility, liability, sympathy, commiseration, condolence, compassion or a general sense of benevolence that was made by a health care provider or an employee of a health care provider to the patient, a relative of the patient, the patient's survivors or a health care decision maker for the patient and that relates to the discomfort, pain, suffering, injury or death of the patient as the result of the unanticipated outcome of medical care is inadmissible as evidence of an admission of liability or as evidence of an admission against interest.

lina,[140] Connecticut,[141] Georgia,[142] Washington,[143] and Colorado.[144] These particular states reward those medical professionals Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 12-2605 (West Supp. 2012) (emphasis added). Arizona's statute is one relating specifically to unanticipated outcomes of a patient's medical care. Id.

---

140. South Carolina's apology statute is construed as a full apology law, protecting,

> [A]ny and all statements, affirmations, gestures, activities, or conduct expressing benevolence, regret, apology, sympathy, commiseration, condolence, compassion, mistake, error, or a general sense of benevolence which are made by a health care provider, an employee or agent of a health care provider, or by a health care institution to the patient, a relative of the patient, or a representative of the patient and which are made during a designated meeting to discuss the unanticipated outcome shall be inadmissible as evidence and shall not constitute an admission of liability or an admission against interest.

S.C. CODE ANN. § 19-1-190(D) (West Supp. 2012). Thus, both apologies and statements of fault made my medical providers following unanticipated medical outcomes are not admissible to prove that the physician is liable.

141. Connecticut has adopted a full apology law, covering both apologies and statements of fault. The relevant statutes reads,

> [A]ny and all statements, affirmations, gestures or conduct expressing apology, fault, sympathy, commiseration, condolence, compassion or a general sense of benevolence that are made by a health care provider or an employee of a health care provider to the alleged victim, a relative of the alleged victim or a representative of the alleged victim and that relate to the discomfort, pain, suffering, injury or death of the alleged victim as a result of the unanticipated outcome of medical care shall be inadmissible as evidence of an admission of liability or as evidence of an admission against interest.

CONN. GEN. STAT ANN. § 52-184d(b) (West 2013) (emphasis added).

142. Georgia is also considered to have implemented a full apology law, protecting, who hold themselves accountable for their actions by shielding them from liability based solely on their fault admitting statements.[145] For example, according to the clear language found in Colorado's apology law, which strictly applies to expressions made by medical providers, statements of fault are inadmissible as later evidence of liability.[146] Colorado's statute reads:

> [A]ny and all statements, affirmations, gestures, activities, or conduct expressing benevolence, regret, apology, sympathy, commiseration, condolence, compassion, mistake, error, or a general sense of benevolence which are made by a health care provider or an employee or agent of a health care provider to the patient, a relative of the patient, or a representative of the patient and which relate to the unanticipated outcome shall be inadmissible as evidence and shall not constitute an admission of liability or an admission against interest.

> [A]ny and all statements, affirmations, gestures, or conduct expressing apology fault, sympathy, commiseration, condolences, compassion, or a general sense of benevolence which are made by a health care provider or an employee of a health care provider to the alleged victim, a relative of an alleged victim, or a representative of the alleged victim and

---

GA. CODE ANN. § 24-3-37.1(c) (2014). Although Georgia's statute does not explicitly address statements of fault, a Georgia state appeals court previously held that a physician's statement, "this was my fault," clearly fell within the language and scope of the statute's protections. See Airasian v. Shakk, 657 S.E.2d 600, 602 (Ga. Ct. App. 2008).

143. The state of Washington has also adopted a full apology law, protecting both apologetic expressions and statements of fault made by health care providers following a medical error. The statute protects, "(i) Any statement, affirmation, gesture, or conduct expressing apology, fault, sympathy, commiseration, condolence, compassion, or a general sense of benevolence." WASH. REV. CODE § 5.64.010(2)(b)(i) (2014).

144. COLO. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-25-135(1) (2014). See David Doyle, Apologizing for Medical Missteps: Whether it's a Mistake for Physicians, PHYSICIANS PRACTICE (Feb. 22, 2014), http://www.physicianspractice.com/blog/apologizing-for-medical-missteps-whether-its-a-mistake-for-physicians.
Many states have enacted partial apology laws, protecting only statements of "compassion, commiseration, condolence, or sympathy." Id. However, states that have implemented full apology laws protect against all types of statements, such as, "statements of fault, errors, liability, or mistake." Id.

145. There are four overlapping reasons supporting the contention that fault-admitting statements should be statutorily protected. First, it encourages parties to settle, avoiding the costly expenses of litigation. Second, apologies admitting fault promote open, honest, and direct communication with the patient after the injury. Third, fault-admitting statements allow the physician or hospital to express sympathy and acknowledge their willingness to admit that a mistake was made. Finally, protecting fault admitting encourages individuals to engage in morally correct behavior by apologizing after they have injured a patient. See Cohen, supra note 136, at 841.

146. COLO. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-25-135(1) (2014).

> which relate to the discomfort, pain, suffering, injury or death of the alleged victim as the result of the unanticipated outcome of a medical care shall be inadmissible as evidence of an admission of liability or as evidence of an admission against interest.[147]

Colorado's statutory language is precise, leaving physicians unable to speculate as to what types of apologetic statements and conduct are protected. This certainty of protection is likely to make physicians more willing to provide a patient affected by a medical error with a sincere apology, owning responsibility and mending the physician-patient relationship.

Statutory clarity in apology laws is important because if the language is ambiguous, the physician could, for example, mistakenly convey an admission of fault to the affected patient and that statement could potentially be used against them as evidence of liability if not protected by the state's applicable apology statute. Further, if physicians have to concern themselves with "the exact phrasing necessary to avoid a lawsuit," many physicians will decide to suspend or omit an apology completely.[148]

Tennessee adopted a partial apology law with general applicability, protecting only expressions of sympathy and benevolence in all civil settings and not specifically statements made by medical providers.[149] Tennessee's current statute has the potential

---

147. Id. (emphasis added). Connecticut has a similar full apology law that also expressly protects statements of fault, making it a clear and concise model that could be referenced by the Tennessee legislature when broadening Tennessee's apology law. See CONN. GEN. STAT. ANN §52-184(d) (2014).

148. See Maria Pearlmutter, Physician Apologies and General Admissions of Fault: Amending the Federal Rules of Evidence, 72 OHIO ST. L.J. 687, 702 (2011); see also William M. McDonnell & Elizabeth Guenther, Narrative Review: Do State Laws Make it Easier to Say "I'm Sorry?", 149 ANNALS INTERNAL MED. 811, 812 (2008) ("Unless the scope, availably, and potential benefits of existing apology laws are presented to physicians in a clear, succinct manner, such laws are unlikely to affect physicians disclosure an apology.").

149. TENN. R. EVID. 409.1(a) (2014); see Stephen E. Raper, No Role for Apology: Remedial Work and the Problem of Medical Injury, 11 YALE J. HEALTH POL'Y L. & ETHICS 269, 318 (2011). Contrary to a full apology, "[a] 'partial apology' is one in which the offending party expresses sympathy and hope for rapid recovery, but does not accept responsibility for the accident causing the injury." Michael B. Runnels, Apologies All Around: Advocating Federal to cause physicians and medical providers to be skeptical about delivering apologies to affected patients for fear of inadvertently saying something that may be used against them in a later lawsuit. Since the absence of an apology can lead to angered patients and the increased likelihood of frivolous malpractice actions being filed against the physician or hospital, the Tennessee legislature should amend Tennessee's existing partial apology law by adding a separate, full apology provision, similar to Colorado's apology law. This provision should specifically provide protections to health care providers' apologetic and fault-admitting statements. By broadening Tennessee's apology law, hospitals and medical providers within the state would likely be more willing to implement full disclosure programs within their facilities due to the enhanced protections of statements made during communication with affected patients. As written, the current Tennessee apology law reads as follows:

> That portion of statements, writings, or benevolent gestures expressing sympathy or a general sense of benevolence relating to the pain, suffering or death of a person involved in an accident and made to such person or to the family of such person shall be inadmissible as evidence of an admission of liability in a civil action. A statement of fault that is part of, or in addition to, any of the above shall not be inadmissible because of this Rule.[150]

Because Tennessee's current apology law is one of general applicability to all individuals in various types of civil actions, the Tennessee legislature should amend the statute by adding a separate provision specifically addressing statements made by medical providers. The language within this provision should protect not only benevolent gestures, but also apologetic expressions and statements of fault in order to eliminate the gray area and encourage a fuller, more honest disclosure process. Patients and physicians in Tennessee would gain significant benefits from the addition of a full apology provision as compared to the current partial apology law. In effect, this provision would help create an environment that encourages the implementation of disclosure programs within Tennessee's medical facilities.[151] The following section to the Tennessee apology statute should be added:

---

Protection for the Full Apology in Civil Cases, 46 SAN DIEGO L. REV. 137, 149 (2009).

150. TENN. R. EVID. 409.1(a) (2014) (emphasis added).

> (b) That portion of statements, writings, or benevolent gestures expressing apology, fault, sympathy, commiseration, condolences, or compassion, which are made by a health care provider or an employee of a health care provider to a patient or to a patient's family and which relate to the pain, suffering, injury, or death of that person shall be inadmissible as evidence of an admission of liability in a civil action.

Adding this additional, separate provision addressing only statements made by health care providers creates differentiation between protections afforded in the general civil setting and those made by a health care provider in a medical setting. With the additional amendment, the Tennessee statute still provides protection for sympathetic statements and benevolent gestures in general civil actions, but also provides greater protection for health care providers' statements following a medical error, allowing physicians more leeway when providing a genuine, full apology, thus decreasing the likelihood of litigation.[152] This broader apology law will support the initiative that hospitals and health care facilities within Tennessee adopt full disclosure programs.

---

151. See Pearlmutter, supra note 148, at 697 ("A full apology was seen as more moral and regretful, and the giver of such an apology was perceived to be less likely to offend in the future."); s*ee also* Jennifer K. Robbennolt*, Apologies and Legal Settlement: An Empirical Examination,* 102 MICH. L. REV. 460, 487 (2003) (explaining the findings of a study that showed full apologies were more sufficient than a partial apology which only expressed sympathy).

152. But see Mastroianni et al., supra note 64, at 1616 (explaining that even after a sincere apology, some patients will still choose to file suit, especially if the "injury entails large economic losses and there is no offer of compensation").

VI. PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO EXPAND TENNESSEE'S PRE-SUIT NOTICE PERIOD FOR A HEALTH CARE LIABILITY ACTION

In 2008, the Tennessee legislature amended the late Tennessee Medical Malpractice Act[153] by enacting a new pre-suit notice statute. This statute requires a plaintiff patient in a health care liability action to give the defendant health care provider pre-suit notice of his or her claim at least 60 days prior to filing the initial complaint with the court.[154] If a plaintiff complies with the requirements of this statute, the plaintiff's statute of limitations for his or her claim is extended by 120 days.[155] The pre-suit notice period is occasionally referred to as a "cooling off period" because it allows both the plaintiff and the defendant time to analyze and investigate the issue at hand while also encouraging a possible settlement.[156] During this "cooling off period" the plaintiff may become less angered and have the opportunity to process the situation rationally. A longer statutory pre-suit notice period before filing suit allows physicians and health care providers to more thoroughly review reported claims and hold disclosure meetings without the 153. During a tort reform in 2011, the Tennessee Medical Malpractice Act was replaced with the Tennessee Civil Justice Act of 2011. The Tennessee Civil Justice Act currently governs all health care liability actions within the state of Tennessee that accrued on or after June 16, 2011. The initial 60 day pre-suit notice requirement established in the Medical Malpractice Act is still currently in effect. See Myers v. AMISUB (SFH), Inc., 382 S.W.3d 300, 308–09 (Tenn. 2012).

---

154. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-26-121(a)(1) (2014). The statute further sets forth what information the pre-suit notice must include:

> (A) The full name and date of birth of the patient whose treatment is at issue; (B) The name and address of the claimant authorizing the notice and the relationship to the patient, if the notice is not sent by the patient; (C) The name and address of the attorney sending the notice, if applicable; (D) A list of the name and address of all providers being sent a notice; and (E) A HIPPA complaint medical authorization permitting the provider receiving the notice to obtain a complete medical records from each other provider being sent a notice.

Id. § 29-26-121(a)(2).

155. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-26-121(c) (2014). The statute also delineates how the notice may be delivered to the defendant via personal delivery or mail in order to qualify for the extended statute of limitations. Id. at § 29-26-121(3).

156. See Bogue, supra note 66, at 104.

pressure of a pending lawsuit and deadlines. Accordingly, an amendment to expand Tennessee's pre-suit notice period would decrease frivolous medical malpractice litigation because it would encourage hospitals and health care providers to implement full disclosure programs based on transparency and honest communication with their patients.

A majority of states have enacted legislation requiring plaintiffs to provide defendants with statutory pre-suit notice of their intent to file a medical malpractice claim.[157] The length of mandatory pre-suit notice periods among states varies largely, ranging from a short 30 days to lengthier 182 days.[158] Tennessee falls in the middle of the spectrum with a 60 day pre-suit notice period, meaning that a plaintiff must provide a defendant with his or her intent to file suit at least 60 days before actually filing a health care liability complaint with the court.[159] The Tennessee statute reads, in full:

> (a)(1) Any person, or that person's authorized agent, asserting a potential claim for medical malpractice shall give written notice of the potential claim to each health care provider that will be a named defendant at least sixty (60) days before the filing of a complaint based upon medical malpractice in any court of this state.[160]

Although Tennessee's pre-suit notice period is not considered short when compared to some other states' notice periods,[161] 60 days does not provide considerable time to investigate claims 157. See Haavi Morreim, Malpractice, Mediation, and Moral Hazard: The Virtues of Dodging the Data Bank, 27 OHIO ST. J. DISP. RESOL. 109, 142 (2012) (highlighting the length of various states' pre-suit notice periods).

158. Id.

159. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-26-121(a)(1) (2014). To receive an explanation regarding the purpose behind Tennessee's statutory 60 day notice period, see Myers v. AMISUB (SFH), Inc., 382 S.W.3d 300, 309 (2012) ("The essence of Tennessee Code Annotated section 29-26-121 is that a defendant be given notice of a medical malpractice claim before suit is filed.").

160. TENN. CODE ANN. § 29-26-121(a)(1) (2014).

161. In order to file a medical malpractice action in West Virginia, the Plaintiff must provide the medical provider with thirty-days notice. W. VA. CODE § 55-7B-6(b) (2014).

and communicate with patients as would a longer statutory period. As discussed above, in order for successful disclosure programs to run efficiently, hospitals and medical providers need more time to properly evaluate each step that leads to patient injuries.[162] For example, both Michigan's[163] and Massachusetts's[164] pre-suit notice

---

162. See supra Part IV.

163. MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 600.2912b(1) (West 2014). The legislative purpose behind the 182 day notice requirement "was to provide a mechanism for 'promoting settlement without the need for formal litigation, reducing the cost of medical malpractice litigation, and providing compensation for meritorious medical malpractice claims that would otherwise be precluded form recovery because of litigation costs. . . .'" Bush v. Shabahang, 772 N.W.2d 272, 283 (Mich. 2009) (quoting Senate Legislative Analysis, SB 270, August 11, 1993). Additionally, the Michigan statute allows the 182-day notice period to be lessened to 91 days if the following conditions are satisfied:

> (3) The 182-day notice period required in subsection (1) is shortened to 91 days if all of the following conditions exist:
>
> (a) The claimant has previously filed the 182-day notice required in subsection (1) against other health professionals or health facilities involved in the claim.
>
> (b) The 182-day notice period has expired as to the health professionals or health facilities described in subdivision (a).
>
> (c) The claimant has filed a complaint and commenced an action alleging medical malpractice against 1 or more of the health professionals or health facilities described in subdivision (a).
>
> (d) The claimant did not identify, and could not reasonably have identified a health professional or health facility to which notice must be sent under subsection (1) as a potential party to the action before filing the complaint.

MICH. COMP. LAWS ANN. § 600.2912b(3) (West 2010).

164. MASS. GEN. LAWS ANN. ch. 231, § 60L(a) (Westlaw through Ch. 95 of 2015 1st Ann. Session). Similar to Michigan, the Massachusetts statute also allows its 182-day notice period to shorten to 90 days if one of two requirements is met. The statute reads, in pertinent part:

> (c) The 182-day notice period in subsection (a) shall be shortened to 90 days if:
>
> (1) the claimant has previously filed the 182-day notice required against another health care provider involved in the claim; or
>
> (2) the claimant has filed a complaint and commenced an action alleging medical malpractice against any health care provider involved in the claim.

Id. ch. 231, § 60L(c) (Westlaw through Ch. 95 of 2015 1st Ann. Session).

statutes state that a plaintiff who intends to file suit against a defendant is required to provide a notice of intent not less than 6 months (182 days) before actually filing the malpractice complaint. Longer pre-suit notice periods allow plaintiff patients significant time to analyze the strength of their potential claims and decide whether they plan to continue to pursue litigation.[165] Further, an expansive pre-suit notice period allows defendant health care providers to investigate the alleged claims and offer the plaintiff alternative remedies or settlement figures.[166] With a longer notice period, the parties can take the time to review and exchange information pre-litigation, which saves time, money, and unnecessary expenses.[167] Disclosing important information up front that will eventually be revealed during discovery promotes efficiency and provides the opportunity to minimize or eliminate litigation.[168] An extended pre-suit notice period encourages increased transparency and communication between the parties without patients sacrificing their right to bring suit at a later date.[169]

Tennessee would benefit from an extended pre-suit notice period because it would create an environment that encourages the adoption of full disclosure programs by health care facilities across the state. Institutions within the state of Michigan have shown success in using its prolonged notice period to both analyze the potential claims and engage the patient or family during the process.[170] If Tennessee were to amend its current 60 day notice period to 182 days, it would encourage the implementation of full disclosure policies and programs within hospitals and other facilities throughout the state. In effect, this amendment would allow time

165. See Bogue, supra note 66, at 104.

166. See id.; Boothman et al., supra note 36, at 137–38.

167. See Bogue, supra note 66, at 104.

168. See id.; Dwight Golann, Dropped Medical Malpractice Claims: Their Surprising Frequency, Apparent Causes, and Potential Remedies, 30 HEALTH AFF. 1343, 1346 (2011), http://content.healthaffairs.org/content/30/7/1343.full.pdf (stating that the information gained while investigating claims in the course of litigation is a primary reason that plaintiff's decide to abandon their claims).

169. See Bogue, supra note 66, at 104.

170. See id. ("Because Michigan already requires a 182-day notice period, UMHS took advantage of this built-in six-month period to have their committee thoroughly review claims and hold the disclosure meetings, without the added pressure on both parties of an already-pending lawsuit.").

for health care providers to investigate alleged claims, allow greater opportunity for providers to communicate with the affected patients, and ultimately engage the parties to participate in settlement discussions, effectively decreasing frivolous health care liability actions. To extend the pre-suit notice period, the relevant Tennessee statute should read:

> (a)(1) Any person, or that person's authorized agent, asserting a potential claim for medical malpractice shall give written notice of the potential claim to each health care provider that will be a named defendant at least 182 days before the filing of a complaint based upon medical malpractice in any court of this state.

Ultimately, in conjunction with a broader apology law discussed in Part V, an amendment to expand Tennessee's pre-suit notice period would decrease frivolous litigation because hospitals and health care providers would have a greater incentive to implement full disclosure programs that emphasize honesty and communication within their facilities.[171]

VII. CONCLUSION

Preventable medical errors play a large role in frivolous medical malpractice litigation. These malpractice actions may be avoided by simply encouraging transparency and communication within the health care setting. If health care providers engaged in more transparent disclosure and provided affected patients with a sincere apology that acknowledged responsibility, patients would feel less of a need to turn to the courts for redress. Additionally, longer pre-suit notice periods allow both physicians and patients to participate in a more effective communication process due to the requirement that patients provide health care providers with their intent to file a potential malpractice claim during a certain extended time period before his or her claim is actually filed with the court. Many states have statutes that provide the necessary protections for physicians to have the opportunity to engage in these 171. See supra Part V.

types of discussions.[172] Many hospitals within these states that have implemented successful disclosure programs are self-insured institutions.[173] These self-insured hospitals retain many benefits that third-party insured hospitals do not enjoy, such as greater control over malpractice premiums and vast discretion in deciding how to handle medical errors.[174]

Furthermore, effective communication between physicians and patients allows for questions to be answered and anger to be diffused, potentially decreasing frivolous malpractice litigation and increasing patient safety. Several effective disclosure programs implemented in other states emphasize the idea of transparent communication, apologies, and cooling off periods.[175] Currently, Tennessee has a statute of general applicability that protects expressions of benevolence made in civil suits from being used to prove liability.[176] In order for health care providers to express a sincere apology and acknowledge responsibility for their mistake, a separate provision that specifically protects apologies and statement of fault made by health care providers must be added to Tennessee's statute. Additionally, Tennessee would benefit from a longer pre-suit notice period for the same reasons. Currently, Tennessee has a pre-suit notice period of 60 days. A longer notice period would allow for more effective communication and investigations in order for patients and health care providers to determine the strength of the potential claim. Thus, Tennessee's pre-suit notice statute should be amended to require patients to afford health care providers with their intent to file a claim at least 182 days before the actual complaint is filed with the court. The ultimate goal of amending these two Tennessee statutes is to increase patient safety and encourage health care providers and hospital systems in Tennessee to implement full disclosure programs so as to decrease the number of frivolous health care liability actions that arise from preventable medical errors.

---

172. See supra Parts V and VI.

173. See supra Part IV. Both UMHS and the VA are self-insured institutions that have implemented successful full disclosure programs.

174. See Bordonaro, supra note 99; Cohen, supra note 85, at 1471.

175. See supra Parts IV and VI.

176. TENN. R. EVID. 409.1(a) (2014).

THE UNIVERSITY OF MEMPHIS LAW REVIEW

VOLUME 46 | FALL 2015 | NUMBER 1

Copyright © 2015 The University of Memphis Law Review

CONTENTS

ARTICLES

THE NARROWING GOVERNMENT INTEREST IN CAMPAIGN FINANCE REGULATIONS: REPUBLIC LOST?
Deborah A. Roy 1

TREATING MEMBERS OF THE MILITARY AT LEAST AS WELL AS INMATES AND STUDENTS: DETERMINING WHEN MILITARY NECESSITY REQUIRES INFRINGING UPON CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS IN CASES BEFORE THE COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE ARMED FORCES
Rodrigo M. Caruço 61

THE BENEFITS OF ARBITRATION: ARBITRATION IN NCAA STUDENT-ATHLETE PARTICIPATION AND INFRACTIONS MATTERS PROVIDES FOR FUNDAMENTAL FAIRNESS
Christian Dennie 135

ESSAY

EQUAL JUSTICE FOR SAME-SEX MARRIED COUPLES: REFLECTIONS BY A TENNESSEE LAWYER WHO HELPED ACHIEVE NATIONAL MARRIAGE EQUALITY
Maureen Truax Holland 175

NOTES

NO SAFE HARBORS: EXAMINING THE SHIFT FROM VOLUNTARY TREATMENT OPTIONS TO CRIMINALIZATION OF MATERNAL DRUG USE IN TENNESSEE
Sarah E. Smith 203

WARHEADS ON FOREHEADS: THE APPLICABILITY OF THE 9/11 AUMF TO THE THREAT OF ISIL
Gregory A. Wagner 235

The Narrowing Government Interest in Campaign Finance Regulations: Republic Lost?

DEBORAH A. ROY*

I. INTRODUCTION 1
II. REPRESENTATIVE DEMOCRACY IS A COMPELLING INTEREST 5
A. The Framers Established a Representative Democracy 5
B. Buckley v. Valeo*: Representation is at the Base of Corruption*..10
C. The Supreme Court's Consideration of Representative Democracy 14
III. THE FIRST AMENDMENT SUPPORTS REPRESENTATIVE DEMOCRACY 22
A. A Right of Instruction 22
B. A Marginal Impact on Speech 26
IV. MCCUTCHEON V. FEC: REPRESENTATION LOST 34
A. McCutcheon v. FEC 34
B. Representatives Should Respond to Voters, not Donors 39
C. Diluting the Votes of Constituents..42
D. Enhancing the Power of the Donor Class..........................44
V. DEFERENCE TO THE LEGISLATURE..50
VI. CONCLUSION..58

I. INTRODUCTION

A government interest in preserving a representative democracy should be asserted when campaign finance regulations are challenged. In a representative democracy, the promise of democratic self-government is fulfilled when the views of the people are transferred into the policy choices of their representatives. Representation is at the core of the United States Constitution and elections are the means by which the people choose their representatives. Since its decision in Buckley v. Valeo,[1] the Supreme Court has held that any government interest in campaign finance regulation must be balanced against a donor's First Amendment right to engage in political speech by giving money to a candidate for public office. The First Amendment interest in political speech is one that the Roberts Court protects vigilantly by applying a heightened standard of review to any government regulation that burdens it.[2] The First Amendment, however, has never acted as an absolute prohibition on the regulation of speech.

In the Roberts Court's recent decisions holding campaign finance regulations unconstitutional, including Citizens United and McCutcheon v. FEC,[3] Justices in the majority have taken a nearly

---

* Trial Attorney, Antitrust Division, United States Department of Justice. The views expressed are not purported to reflect those of the United States Department of Justice.

1. 424 U.S. 1 (1976) (per curiam). In Buckley, the Court reviewed challenges to The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as amended in 1974, holding that the Act's: (1) contribution provisions were constitutional as appropriate legislative measures to deal with the reality and appearance of improper influence stemming from the dependence of candidates on large campaign contributions and that the contribution limits did not directly impinge upon the rights of individual citizens and candidates to engage in political debate and discussion; (2) expenditure provisions violated the First Amendment because they placed substantial and direct restrictions on the ability of candidates, citizens, and associations to engage in political expression protected by the First Amendment; (3) aggregate limits on contributions were upheld because they were a modest restraint that prevented evasion of the base contribution limits; (4) disclosure and recordkeeping provisions were a constitutional exercise of legislative power because it was reasonable for the legislature to conclude that the disclosure of contributions informs the public about the political process; and (5) provisions for the public financing of elections were constitutional. Id. at 1–5.

2. Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310, 340 (2010) ("Laws that burden political speech are 'subject to strict scrutiny,' which requires the Government to prove that the restriction 'furthers a compelling interest and is narrowly tailored to achieve that interest.'" (quoting FEC v. Wis. Right to Life, Inc., 551 U.S. 449, 464 (2007))). Earlier decisions applied a less rigorous standard of review to campaign contribution limits. McConnell v. FEC, 540 U.S. 93, 137 (2003), overruled in part by Citizens United, 558 U.S. 310.

3. Citizens United, 558 U.S. 310. Citizens United considered the constitutionality of a campaign finance law that limited a non-profit corporation's expenditures on political speech within thirty days of an election. Id. at 310. In a broad holding, the Court found that political speech could not be regulated absolutist view of the First Amendment protection of money as political speech. Moreover, they adopted an uncompromising position that preventing corruption or the appearance of corruption is the only compelling government interest that can support a campaign finance restriction. And they defined corruption narrowly. In McCutcheon, Chief Justice Roberts wrote that Congress can only target a specific type of corruption—"quid pro quo" corruption.[4] By quid pro quo corruption, Chief Justice Roberts means the direct exchange of an official act for money or dollars for political favors.[5]

The Roberts Court, however, fails to consider the fundamental, compelling government interest in preserving a representative democracy. In the summer of 1787, the delegates to the Philadelphia Constitutional Convention labored to establish the contours of a representative democracy embodied in the United States Constitution. Thereafter, the first United States Congress enacted the First Amendment to the Constitution, which included free speech clauses protecting the right of the people to express political views that would inform the policy choices of their representatives. A jurisprudence that uses the First Amendment to debase representative democracy turns the United States Constitution's first principles on their head. In balancing representative democracy against a First Amendment interest in the contribution of money to candidates for elected office, the Supreme Court should give a higher level of deference to the contemporary Congress's view regarding whether campaign finance regulations preserve representative democracy.

"When Benjamin Franklin walked out of Independence Hall, the work of the Constitutional Convention completed, he was based on the speaker's corporate identity and held that the federal statute at issue barring independent corporate expenditures violated the First Amendment. Id. at 315. Further, the Court found that no sufficiently important government interest was served by limiting corporate political advertising, recognizing solely a government interest in quid pro quo corruption. Id. at 315–16; see McCutcheon v. FEC, 134 S. Ct. 1434 (2014) (plurality opinion). McCutcheon held that federal statutory aggregate limits on how much money a donor may contribute in total to all political candidates or committees violated the First Amendment's protection of political speech. Id. at 1436.

---

4. McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1441.

5. Id.

stopped by a woman and asked, 'Mr. Franklin, what have you wrought?' 'A Republic, madam,' Franklin replied, 'if you can keep it.'"[6] The Court's recent decisions striking down campaign finance regulations illustrate the challenges that Franklin knew the Republic would face.

The Article proceeds as follows. Part II provides support for the recognition of a compelling government interest in preserving a representative democracy. Section IIA establishes that representative democracy is a core constitutional principle established by the Constitution's Framers. Section IIB shows that the only compelling interest accepted by the Roberts Court majority in recent campaign finance decisions—the prevention of corruption or the appearance of corruption—is itself an interest in representative democracy. Section IIC discusses government interests that have been expressed by some of the Justices during their review of campaign finance regulations that reflect an interest in representative democracy.

Part III asserts that First Amendment speech rights must be balanced against a compelling interest in representative democracy. Section IIIA shows that the First Amendment's purpose is to preserve a representative democracy. Section IIIB asserts that many campaign finance regulations, including aggregate limits on campaign contributions, are modest restraints on political speech that may not outweigh a government interest in preserving representative democracy.

Part IV focuses on McCutcheon v. FEC, where an interest in protecting representative democracy is strikingly relevant. Section IVA argues that representatives should be elected by and reflect the views of their voting constituents rather than the policy preferences of money donors who reside outside of their districts. Section IVB presents the concern that an increase in the number of money donors may dilute the influence of voters. Section IVC argues that representatives should not be controlled by a favored class.

6. LAWRENCE LESSIG, REPUBLIC, LOST: HOW MONEY CORRUPTS CONGRESS – AND A PLAN TO STOP IT 317 (2011). Lessig discusses the many ways in which the influence of campaign cash has drawn the nation's democracy away from the will of the people. Lessig also filed an amicus brief in McCutcheon that surveys the Constitution's Framers' conception of corruption. He concludes that they were concerned primarily with the corruption of democratic institutions of government, which would occur if the government's dependency on the people alone was impaired. Lessig notes that the historical record leaves no doubt that the Founders understood corruption as more than just individual quid pro quo payments for legislation. To them corruption encompassed any use of public power for private purposes-not merely theft, but any use of government power and assets to benefit special interests rather than the broader public. Brief of Professor Lawrence Lessig as Amicus Curiae Supporting Appellee, McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. 1434 (No. 12-536), 2013 WL 3874388.

Part V recommends that the Supreme Court give more deference to the role of legislators in undertaking the challenge of balancing representative democracy against First Amendment interests in political speech. In Part VI, the Article concludes by advising the Court to recognize an interest in representative democracy, balancing that fundamental constitutional interest against the often modest restraints on political speech that Congress places on a donor's ability to provide money to candidates for elected office.

II. REPRESENTATIVE DEMOCRACY IS A COMPELLING INTEREST

A. The Framers Established a Representative Democracy

The Framers of the United States Constitution established a specific type of democracy—a representative democracy.[7] In a representative democracy, a citizen exercises his basic right to participate in the democracy by electing representatives who will advocate for his views regarding public policy. Thomas Jefferson, describing the republic that he helped to found, wrote:

> [A] government is republican in proportion as every member composing it has his equal voice in the direction of its concerns (not indeed in person, which > would be impracticable beyond the limits of a city, or small township, but) by representatives chosen by himself, and responsible to him at short periods . . . .[8]

7. For a further discussion of the importance of representation to the Constitution's Framers, see ROBERT C. POST, CITIZENS DIVIDED: CAMPAIGN FINANCE REFORM AND THE CONSTITUTION 12–16 (2014). Post's volume of Tanner Lectures makes an important contribution to this article and to the current discussion of campaign finance jurisprudence. He argues, "that a primary purpose of First Amendment rights is to make possible the value of self-government, and that this purpose requires public trust that elections select officials who are responsive to public opinion. Government regulations that maintain this trust advance the constitutional purpose of the First Amendment." Id. at 4. In his McCutcheon dissent, Justice Stephen Breyer cites Post for his discussion of electoral integrity as a necessary condition for American democracy to thrive. McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1468 (Breyer, J. dissenting).

The delegates to the Philadelphia Constitutional Convention of 1787 affirmed that the first principle of the Constitution's representative democracy is that the people express their will through the actions of their representatives. James Wilson of Pennsylvania[9] advised that in order to adhere to the principle that all authority in the new government would derive from the people, their representatives must "express the Sentiments of the represented."[10] Wilson expressed the foundational principle that the people control the government through their elected representatives.[11] For the people to maintain that control, representatives must express the views of their constituents when enacting public policy.

Justice Stephen Breyer expressed Wilson's view of the link between constituent and representative writing, "it should be possible to trace without much difficulty a line of authority for the making of governmental decisions back to the people themselves—either directly, or indirectly through those whom the people have chosen, perhaps instructed, to make certain kinds of decisions in certain ways."[12] In McCutcheon v. FEC, Justice Breyer cited Wilson for the proposition that there is a "chain of communication between the people, and those, to whom they have commit-

---

8. Letter from Thomas Jefferson to Samuel Kercheval (June 12, 1816), http://teachingamericanhistory.org/library/document/letter-to-samuel-kercheval/.

9. Although James Wilson is not as well known as other Framers, his influence in the drafting of the Constitution is considered to be second only to that of James Madison. MARK DAVID HALL, THE POLITICAL AND LEGAL PHILOSOPHY OF JAMES WILSON 1742–1798 1 (1997); see also Nicholas Pedersen, Note, The Lost Founder: James Wilson in American Memory, 22 YALE J.L. & HUMAN. 257 (2010).

10. 1 THE RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787 191 (Max Farrand, ed., 1911) [hereinafter FEDERAL CONVENTION RECORDS—VOLUME I] (notes of William Paterson).

11. Id.

12. STEPHEN BREYER, ACTIVE LIBERTY: INTERPRETING OUR DEMOCRATIC CONSTITUTION 15 (2005).

ted the exercise of the powers of government."[13] During the Pennsylvania Convention, Wilson stated in regard to the principle of representation:

> I believe it does not extend farther, if so far in any other government in Europe. For the American States, were reserved the glory and the happiness of diffusing this vital principle throughout the constituent parts of government. Representation is the chain of communication between the people, and those, to whom they have committed the exercise of the powers of government. This chain may consist of one or more links; but in all cases it should be sufficiently strong and discernible.[14]

The importance to the Framers of creating a strong chain of communication between the people and their representatives is illustrated by an event occurring at the end of the Philadelphia Convention when the delegates re-considered the proper number of representatives in the new House of Representatives.[15] Article I of

---

13. McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1467, (Breyer, J., dissenting) (quoting J. WILSON & THOMAS M'KEAN, COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA 30–31 (Philadelphia, T. Lloyd 1792)). The Framers emphasized the connection between political speech and government action by requiring frequent elections to federal office, and by enacting a First Amendment that would facilitate a "chain of communication between the people, and those, to whom they have committed the exercise of the powers of government."

14. COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION, supra note 13, at 30–31.

15. The House of Representatives was intended to provide the important link between the people and their government. See THE FEDERALIST NO. 52 (James Madison). James Madison wrote that the House of Representatives should have "an immediate dependence on, and an intimate sympathy with, the people." Id.; see also FEDERAL CONVENTION RECORDS—VOLUME I, supra note 10, at 133–34 (quoting George Mason) (notes of James Madison). Delegate George Mason stated that representatives "should sympathize with their constituents; shd. think as they think, & feel as they feel; and that for these purposes shd. even be residents among them." Id. at 134. During the debates over whether elections for the House of Representatives should be conducted annually or biennially, Roger Sherman advocated that representatives should have the opportunity "to return home and mix with the people." Id. at 351. By mixing with the people, the representative will become better acquainted with the views the U.S. Constitution, which establishes the Congress of the United States consisting of a Senate and a House of Representatives, includes a clause providing that "[t]he number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every thirty thousand."[16] The Framers initially set the number of Representatives referenced in this clause at one for every forty thousand. On September 17, 1787, at the end of three months during which the delegates to the Philadelphia Constitutional Convention had drafted the republic's founding document, Nathaniel Gorham of Massachusetts[17] rose to propose one last amendment to the Constitution. Gorman proposed that the "forty thousand" be struck out and replaced with "thirty thousand."[18] Gorham stated that this would not be an absolute rule, but would "give Congress a greater latitude which could not be thought unreasonable."[19]

George Washington, the Constitutional Convention's presiding officer, rose to put Gorham's question to the delegates. In his convention notes, James Madison wrote that although Washington had previously refrained from offering his thoughts on matters relating to the House of Representatives, he "could not forbear expressing his wish that the alteration proposed might take place."[20] Washington stated that "[t]he smallness of the proportion of Representatives has been considered by many members of the Convention, an insufficient security for the rights & interests of the and sentiments that he is trusted to represent in the national legislature. In a truly prescient moment, Sherman observed that "by remaining at the seat of Govt. [representatives] would acquire the habits of the place which might differ from those of their Constituents." Id.

---

16. U.S. CONST. art I, § 2, cl. 3.

17. Gorham (1738–1796), who had little formal education, established a successful mercantile career. He served in the Massachusetts Provincial Congress in the years prior to independence and was a member of the Massachusetts Board of War throughout much of the American Revolutionary War. As a delegate from Massachusetts to the Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia, he spoke often and served as chairman of the Committee of the Whole and the Committee of Detail. See CAROL BERKIN, A BRILLIANT SOLUTION: INVENTING THE AMERICAN CONSTITUTION 214 (2003).

18. 2 THE RECORDS OF THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787 643–44 (Max Farrand, ed. 1911) (notes of James Madison) [hereinafter FEDERAL CONVENTION RECORDS—VOLUME II].

19. Id. at 644.

20. Id.

people."[21] Although noting that the present moment was late for admitting amendments, Washington told the delegates that he thought Gorham's proposal was "of so much consequence that it would give him satisfaction to see it adopted."[22] Following Washington's statement, Madison records that no opposition was made to Mr. Gorham's proposal to decrease the number of constituents represented by each legislator and the delegates agreed to it unanimously.[23]

The attention paid to enhancing representation in the Constitution shows that the Framers viewed the link between the people and their representatives to be a crucial component of the representative democracy that they had labored exhaustively to found.[24] George Washington viewed representation as the means to secure the rights and interests of the people.[25] The fewer number of constituents represented by each member of the national legislature would enhance the ability of each representative to maintain a chain of communication with his constituents, better assuring that their interests would be represented.[26] And Nathaniel Gorham had the wisdom to state that the Congress should be given the "latitude" to determine whether that number would adequately ensure that the people would be represented by their legislators.[27] He recognized that the responsibility to ensure proper representation lay with the Congress.[28]

The Constitution's Framers established that all authority in the new government was retained by the people of the United States. The people exercise their sovereignty when they participate in their democracy by electing representatives. Once elected, the people have a right to representation by an elected official who makes decisions that reflect the sentiments of those constituents who exercised their fundamental right to vote.[29] Through election

---

21. Id.
22. Id.
23. Id.
24. Id.
25. Id.
26. Id.
27. Id.
28. Id.
29. FEDERAL CONVENTION RECORDS—VOLUME I, supra note 10, at 191.

and representation, the Framers' first principle of democratic self-government is preserved in a representative democracy.[30]

B. Buckley v. Valeo*: Representation is at the Base of Corruption*

Since it was decided in 1976, Buckley has been cited as having upheld contribution limits solely based on a compelling government interest in preventing corruption or the appearance of corruption.[31] Buckley, however, did not hold that preventing corruption was the only compelling interest that can be considered by the Court when it reviews campaign finance regulations.[32] And significantly, in relation to this Article's argument that there is a government interest in preserving representative democracy, Buck-

30. CITIZENS DIVIDED, supra note 7, at 12–16.

31. McCutcheon v. FEC, 134 S. Ct. 1434, 1444–45 (2014) (plurality opinion) (finding that Buckley held that the government's interest in quid pro quo corruption is sufficiently important to satisfy strict scrutiny); Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310, 357 (noting that the Buckley Court sustained limits on direct contributions in order to prevent the reality or appearance of corruption); FEC v. Wis. Right to Life, Inc., 551 U.S. 449, 478 (2007) ("The Court has long recognized 'the governmental interest in preventing corruption or the appearance of corruption' in election campaigns . . . .") (quoting Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 45 (1976)).

32. Davis v. FEC, 554 U.S. 724, 754–55 (2008) (Stevens, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part). The Court in Davis noted that although the Buckley Court held that preventing both actual corruption and the appearance of corruption were government interests with sufficient weight to support any infringement on First Amendment freedoms that resulted from FECA's contribution limits, "it does not follow that the Buckley Court concluded that only the interest in combating corruption and the appearance of corruption can justify congressional regulation of campaign financing." Id. In Davis, the Court invalidated the "Millionaire's Amendment" to the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002 ("BCRA"), which provided that if a candidate for the U.S. House of Representatives spent more than $350,000 of his personal funds, the candidate's opponents could collect individual contributions up to $6,900 per contributor—three times the normal contribution limit of $2,300. Id. at 729 (majority opinion). The Court viewed the additional money that the opponent could collect as a substantial burden on the individual who had the ability to spend substantially more on his election from his personal funds. Id. at 739–40, 745.

ley's concern with corruption arose out of a more fundamental concern with the integrity of the electoral process.[33]

The integrity of the system of representative democracy can only be maintained if the important link between constituents and representative is preserved. The Buckley Court explained that large contributions that secured a political quid pro quo from elected officials undermined "the integrity of our system of representative democracy."[34] Corruption undermines representative democracy in the sense that a corrupt legislator does not represent the interests of his voting constituents. The important link between constituent and representative, which consists of both the communication of constituent interests to the representative and the actualization of the communication into public policy, is disrupted when the representative acts on behalf of a large contributor rather than on behalf of the constituents.[35]

Additionally, the Buckley Court's holding regarding contribution limits did not use the word "corruption," but rather referred to "improper influence" and referenced the government interest in "safeguarding the integrity of the electoral process."[36] The Court held:

> In sum, the provisions of the Act that impose a $1,000 limitation on contributions to a single candidate, § 608(b)(1) . . . and a $25,000 limitation on total contributions by an individual during any calendar year, § 608(b)(3), are constitutionally valid. These limitations, along with the disclosure provisions, constitute the Act's primary weapons against

33. CITIZENS DIVIDED, supra note 7, at 55–56 ("[T]he [Buckley] Court has conceptualized the state's interest in preventing corruption as the state's interest in preserving the integrity of representative government."). Buckley noted that the Court of Appeals had upheld, for the most part, the campaign finance restrictions, finding a clear and compelling interest in preserving the integrity of the electoral process. Buckley, 424 U.S. at 10.

34. Buckley, 424 U.S. at 26–27 ("Of almost equal concern as the danger of actual quid pro quo arrangements is the impact of the appearance of corruption stemming from public awareness of the opportunities for abuse inherent in a regime of large individual financial contributions.").

35. Id. at 45.

36. Id. at 58 (emphasis added).

> the reality or appearance of improper influence stemming from the dependence of candidates on large campaign contributions. The contribution ceilings thus serve the basic governmental interest in safeguarding the integrity of the electoral process without directly impinging upon the rights of individual citizens and candidates to engage in political debate and discussion.[37]

The Buckley Court identified the concern being addressed by campaign finance regulations as "improper influence," where representatives act on behalf of donors who make large money contributions to their campaigns for elected office.[38] The Court then recognized that undue influence undermines the fundamental government interest in safeguarding the integrity of the electoral process, and thereby, threatens representative democracy.[39] In fact, the Court stated that it was concerned with money influencing public officials beyond the most blatant form of quid pro quo corruption, such as the bribery of a public official, which the Court pointed out could be addressed by criminal laws.[40] The Buckley Court was concerned with more subtle influences beyond quid pro quo corruption.[41]

In McConnell v. FEC, one of the last Supreme Court decisions to uphold campaign finance regulations,[42] the majority also distinguished undue influence from quid pro quo corruption:

---

37. Id. (emphasis added).
38. Id. at 27.
39. Id. at 27–28.
40. Id.
41. Buckley referenced the scope of abuses identified in the opinion of the D.C. Court of Appeals. Id. at 27 n.28. The Court of Appeals wrote that "[l]arge contributions are intended to, and do, gain access to the elected official after the campaign for consideration of the contributor's particular concerns." Buckley v. Valeo, 519 F.2d 821, 838 (D.C. Cir. 1975). It further supported its finding by noting that Congress and the District Court confirmed such contributions were often made for the purpose of furthering business or private interests by facilitating access to government officials or influencing government decisions, and elected officials have tended to afford special treatment to large contributors. Id. (citations omitted).
42. McConnell was decided in 2003 with Justice Sandra Day O'Connor upholding most of the campaign finance regulations before she left the court in

> Just as troubling to a functioning democracy as quid pro quo corruption is the danger that officeholders will decide issues not on the merits of the desires of their constituencies, but according to the wishes of those who have made large financial contributions valued by the officeholder. Even if it occurs only occasionally, the potential for undue influence is manifest.[43]

The McConnell majority noted that the many "deeply disturbing examples" of corruption cited by the Court in Buckley were not singular episodes of vote buying, but instead were broader examples of special interests using their substantial money donations to secure actual or perceived influence over representatives.[44] The McConnell Court recognized that Buckley's holding was not solely based on a concern with quid pro quo corruption. Instead, the Buckley Court was concerned that when representatives become dependent on their large money donors rather than on the broad base of their constituents, the ability of the representative democracy to fulfill its purpose of securing citizen self-government through representatives is threatened.

Subsequent court decisions have viewed Buckley's holding on contribution limits too narrowly as a concern with the corruption of individual representatives, rather than a broader one of preventing the undue influence of elected officials that undermines 2006. McConnell v. FEC, 540 U.S. 93 (2003), overruled in part by Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310 (2010). Justice Samuel Alito, who would join the Roberts Court's majority to overturn campaign finance regulations in future decisions, replaced her. See generally Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310 (2010); McCutcheon v. FEC, 134 S. Ct. 1434 (2014) (plurality opinion).

---

43. McConnell, 540 U.S. at 153. In McConnell, the Court stated that the government interest in corruption or its appearance is not limited to quid pro quo exchanges of votes for cash, but extends to "the broader threat from politicians too compliant with the wishes of large contributors." Id. at 143 (quoting Nixon v. Shrink Mo. Gov't PAC, 528 U.S. 377, 389 (2000)). In his McCutcheon dissent, Justice Breyer pointed out that the plurality's adoption of a narrow definition of corruption excludes the influence and access a donor may obtain over elected officials, which is "virtually impossible to reconcile" with the Court's holding in McConnell. McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1466 (Breyer, J., dissenting).

44. McConnell, 540 U.S. at 150.

representative democracy.[45] The latter is a more compelling government interest that should be raised, briefed, and argued by parties seeking to uphold campaign finance regulations. The Court's recognition of an interest in preserving a representative democracy when reviewing campaign finance regulations would be more faithful to the Constitution and is a more substantial concern than single acts of quid pro quo corruption.[46]

C. The Supreme Court's Consideration of Representative Democracy

Government interests that are broader than quid pro quo corruption have been identified by dissenting Justices in cases in which the majority struck down campaign finance regulations. The dissenters, however, have failed to articulate these government interests in a clear, focused, and consistent voice. Their concerns arise from an interest in the protection of representative democracy and a recognition of the important government interest in having legislators represent the interests of their constituents rather than large, non-constituent donors.

In 2007, Justice David Souter, dissenting in FEC v. Wisconsin Right to Life,[47] expressed an interest in "political" or "representative" or "democratic" integrity, using the terms interchangeably. He wrote:

> Devoting concentrations of money in self-interested hands to the support of political campaigning there-

---

45. See generally Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 359; Ariz. Free Enter. Club's Freedom Club PAC v. Bennett, 131 S. Ct. 2806, 2826–27 (2011) (citing Citizens United, 558 U.S. 310, 313, 360).

46. See Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 449 (Stevens, J., dissenting) ("There are threats of corruption that are far more destructive to a democratic society than the odd bribe.") Justice Stevens referred to cases of undue influence and advocated for a broader understanding of corruption than the majority's "myopic focus" on quid pro quo corruption. Id. at 449–51.

47. FEC v. Wis. Right to Life, Inc., 551 U.S. 449 (2007). The Court struck down BCRA's prohibition on the use of corporate funds to finance electioneering communications during pre-federal-election periods as applied to issue-advocacy advertisements. Id. at 457. The Court drew a distinction between campaign advocacy and issue advocacy, concluding that the interests supporting restrictions of corporate campaign speech did not justify restricting issue advocacy advertisements that were under review in the case. Id.

> fore threatens the capacity of this democracy to represent its constituents and the confidence of its citizens in their capacity to govern themselves. These are the elements summed up in the notion of political integrity, giving it a value second to none in a free society.[48]

Justice Souter recognized that the core principle of this country's democracy is that constituents are only able to exercise their right to self-government if their interests are represented. He finds that this interest is compelling—"second to none in a free society."[49] He expressed a concern that the value of political integrity is threatened by concentrations of money in politics.[50] In his dissent, Justice Souter stated that "the purchase of influence and the cynicism of voters threaten the integrity and stability of democratic government, each derived from the responsiveness of its law to the interests of citizens and their confidence in that focus."[51] In Justice Souter's view, this threat can be ameliorated by "reasonable limits" on the influence of money in campaign activities.[52]

After providing a history of government limitations on the use of general treasury funds by corporations and unions for electioneering activities during the 20th Century, Justice Souter observed:

> Neither Congress's decisions nor our own have understood the corrupting influence of money in politics as being limited to outright bribery or discrete quid pro quo; campaign finance reform has instead consistently focused on the more pervasive distortion of electoral institutions by concentrated wealth, on the special access and guaranteed favor that sap

48. Id. at 507 (Souter, J., dissenting) (emphasis added). Justice Souter's dissent was joined by Justices Stevens, Ginsburg, and Breyer. Id. at 504.
49. Id. at 507.
50. Id.
51. Id. at 507–08.
52. Id.

> the representative integrity of American government and defy public confidence in its institutions.[53]

Unrestrained corporate and union spending has always seriously jeopardized the integrity of democratic government.[54] Justice Souter noted, however, that although the facts relating to campaign finance had not changed, the legal analysis had, leading to the majority's departure from precedent in FEC v. Wisconsin Right to Life.[55] He further observed that the facts are too powerful to ignore and voters and the Congress will continue to seek campaign finance reforms.[56] In 2007, when he wrote the FEC v. Wisconsin Right to Life dissent, Justice Souter did not know how far the direction of the Court would depart from the principles that he articulated. He appears, however, to have had some sense of it because he closed his dissent by writing, "I cannot tell what the future will force upon us."[57]

The future brought the Supreme Court's 2010 decision in Citizens United, which over-turned limits on the ability of corporations and unions to finance campaign speech within a period of time prior to an election.[58] Justice Stevens authored a lengthy dissent in Citizens United, writing that the majority's decision threatened a cluster of interrelated interests that had been well-captured under the rubric of "democratic integrity" by Justice Souter's dis-

---

53. Id. at 522 (emphasis added).
54. Id.
55. Id. at 521–26.
56. Id. at 536.
57. Id. Justice Stevens stated that Justice Souter told him that he would have joined Stevens' dissent in Citizens United had he still been a member of the Court when it was reargued. JOHN PAUL STEVENS, SIX AMENDMENTS: HOW AND WHY WE SHOULD CHANGE THE CONSTITUTION 59 (2014).
58. See Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310 (2010). The decision also sanctioned unlimited campaign spending by corporations as long as those expenditures were not coordinated with a candidate. Id. at 357. In SpeechNow.org, the D.C. Circuit, relying on Citizens United, held that there was no government interest in limiting the independent expenditures of non-profit organizations. SpeechNow.org v. FEC, 599 F.3d 686 (D.C. Cir. 2010). The holding resulted in the proliferation of "Super PACs," entities that can spend unlimited amounts of money to overtly advocate for or against political candidates.

sent in Wisconsin Right to Life.[59] Justice Stevens would uphold limitations on corporate campaign expenditures reasoning that > [a]lthough they make enormous contributions to our society, corporations are not actually members of it. They cannot vote or run for office. Because they may be managed and controlled by nonresidents, their interests may conflict in fundamental respects with the interests of eligible voters.[60]

Justice Stevens made the important distinction that a corporation may not be resident in the legislative district in which it is trying to gain influence and it is never a voter.[61] At the same time its interests may be in direct conflict with the interests of resident, eligible voters. For this reason, he was concerned that the Citizens United ruling "threatens to undermine the integrity of elected institutions across the Nation."[62]

Citizens United overruled Austin v. Michigan Chamber of Commerce,[63] a case that is noted for what has been labeled as an "anti-distortion rationale."[64] Austin upheld a state statute that prohibited corporations from using their general treasury funds for independent expenditures on express election advocacy.[65] The Austin majority identified a concern with "the corrosive and dis-

59. Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 451 (Stevens, J. dissenting); see also Wis. Right to Life, 551 U.S. at 522 (Souter, J. dissenting).

60. Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 394.

61. Id. at 470.

62. Id. at 396.

63. 494 U.S. 652 (1990*), overruled by Citizens United*, 558 U.S. 310. Citizens United overruled the holding in Austin that campaign finance regulations could restrict expenditures based on the donor's corporate identity. Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 379–80.

64. See Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 348 (stating that Austin identified a new governmental interest in limiting political speech: an anti-distortion interest).

65. Austin, 494 U.S. at 654–55. Justice Thurgood Marshall's majority opinion upheld a Michigan statute that prohibited corporations from contributing corporate treasury funds to candidates for state office. Id. The corporate treasury funds were acquired from individuals who contributed their money to the corporation for economic reasons and not to support the corporation's political ideas. Id. at 659–60.

torting effects of immense aggregations of wealth that are accumulated with the help of the corporate form and that have little or no correlation to the public's support for the corporation's political ideas."[66] The Court was concerned that corporations, who may not represent the views of the public—and perhaps not even of their shareholders—would distort the political debate and affect the outcome of elections. Thereafter, elected officials would reflect the views of their corporate donors rather than represent the interests of the public generally and, more specifically, of their voting constituents.[67] The Austin Court, however, approved of the corporation's use of funds from a Political Action Committee ("PAC") that relied on voluntary contributions because they "reflect actual public support for the political ideals espoused by corporations."[68]

The Citizens United majority, and specifically Chief Justice Roberts's concurrence, misinterpreted Austin's anti-distortion rationale as an interest in "equalizing" the relative ability of speakers to influence the outcome of elections.[69] The interest, in fact, was in assuring that elected representatives reflect the policy choices of constituent voters rather than the views of non-voting corporations. Austin stated this explicitly, explaining that the Michigan campaign finance regulation "does not attempt 'to equalize the relative influence of speakers on elections'; rather, it ensures that expenditures reflect actual public support for the political ideas espoused by corporations."[70] Perhaps Citizens United would not have over-

---

66. Id. at 660.

67. See STEVENS, supra note 57, at 75–77 (stating that the interest in Austin was to preserve the power of voters to control the outcome of elections by limiting the right of non-voters-corporations to influence the outcome of elections); see also Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 470 (Stevens, J., dissenting) ("In a state election such as the one at issue in Austin, the interests of nonresident corporations may be fundamentally adverse to the interests of local voters.") This outcome results in the possibility that a flood of money on an election eve would marginalize the opinions of residents. See id.

68. Austin, 494 U.S at 660.

69. Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 350 (equating Austin's anti-distortion rationale with equalizing the relative ability of speakers to influence the outcome of elections); id. at 381 (Roberts, C.J., concurring) ("Austin's logic would authorize government prohibition of political speech by a category of speakers in the name of equality . . . .").

70. Austin, 494 U.S. at 659–60 (internal citations omitted); see also FEC v. Mass. Citizens for Life, Inc., 479 U.S. 238, 257–58 (1986) (explaining that ruled Austin if the government interest at issue was recognized as representative democracy rather than equalizing the relative ability of speakers to influence elections.

Justice Stephen Breyer, writing for the dissent in McCutcheon v. FEC, identified "political integrity" as underlying the government interest in corruption.[71] McCutcheon, which is discussed in Section IVA of this article, overturned regulations limiting aggregate campaign finance contributions. Justice Breyer explained that the plurality found that the aggregate limits did not give rise to corruption only because it defined corruption too narrowly,[72] and he asserted that the plurality misunderstood the constitutional importance of the issue at stake.[73] The issue at stake was whether political communication in the marketplace of ideas—reflecting public opinion—secures government action.[74] Corruption is a concern only because "[i]t derails the essential speech-to-government-action tie" when representatives respond to money donors rather than the public.[75] Justice Breyer wrote that "the anti-corruption interest that drives Congress to regulate campaign contributions is a far broader, more important interest than the plurality acknowledges. It is an interest in protecting the integrity of our public governmental institutions."[76] He relates maintaining the integrity of government to an interest in assuring that elected representatives express the interests of the people, rather than having a system where money "calls the tune."[77] He also finds that the cor-although the interest in the free trade of political ideas does not require all participants to have equal resources, money donated from a corporate treasury reflects economic power and not public support for the corporation's ideas).

71. McCutcheon v. FEC, 134 S. Ct. 1434, 1465–68 (2014) (Breyer, J., dissenting).

72. Id. at 1466.

73. Id.

74. Id. at 1467.

75. Id.

76. Id. at 1466–67. During McCutcheon's oral argument, Justice Breyer stated that he did not like to use the word "corrupting." Transcript of Oral Argument, McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. 1434 (No. 12-536), 2013 WL 5845702, at *55. Instead, he liked to use the phrase "integrity of the process" which he defined as "that notion of getting people to think that their First Amendment speech makes a difference." Id.

77. McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1467 (Breyer, J., dissenting); see also Nixon v. Shrink Mo. Gov't PAC, 528 U.S. 377, 390 (2000) ("[T]he cynical ruption interest that the Court has expressed in campaign finance cases is "rooted in the constitutional effort to create a democracy responsive to the people—a government where laws reflect the very thoughts, views, ideas, and sentiments" expressed by the people.[78] In sum, Justice Breyer expressed at least an interest in preserving representative democracy.

Justice Elena Kagan also expressed an interest in representative democracy in her dissent in Arizona Free Enterprise v. Bennett, where the majority overturned an Arizona statute passed by voter referendum that provided matching funds to publicly financed candidates.[79] Justice Kagan recognized the concern underlying the government interest in preventing corruption is that an officeholder will act for the benefit of wealthy contributors, rather than on behalf of all of the people.[80] She noted that this country's core values include a "devotion to democratic self-governance" as well as a fidelity to robust political debate.[81] Justice Kagan pointed out that underlying Buckley's concern that large campaign contributions lead to a political quid pro quo is the interest in protecting, not undermining, "the integrity of our democracy."[82] She concluded her dissent by writing that citizens' efforts to preserve their absolute sovereignty in their democratic government by passing campaign finance laws in order to ensure that government is "responsive to the will of the people" should be respected.[83] Those laws, whether passed by initiative or the people's representatives, should be upheld. "Truly, democracy is not a game."[84] assumption that large donors call the tune could jeopardize the willingness of voters to take part in democratic governance.").

---

78. McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1468.

79. Ariz. Free Enter. Club's Freedom Club PAC v. Bennett, 131 S. Ct. 2806 (2011) (Kagan, J., dissenting). Justice Kagan's dissent was joined by Justices Breyer, Ginsburg, and Sotomayor. Id.

80. Id. at 2830.

81. Id. at 2829.

82. Id. at 2830.

83. Id. at 2846.

84. Id. Justice Kagan sparred with Justice Roberts, who wrote in the majority opinion that although "'leveling the playing field' through campaign finance reform can sound like a good thing, in a democracy campaigning for office is not a game, it is a critically important form of speech." Id. at 2826 (majority opinion). In the exchange, Justice Kagan emphasizes representative

Where the Constitution's Framers made it explicit at the Philadelphia Constitutional Convention that the new government was founded on representation,[85] and elections were the means for choosing the people's representatives, it is confounding that neither the government seeking to uphold campaign finance regulations nor the Justices have clearly articulated an independent compelling government interest in the preservation of representative democracy. Instead, the interest in representative democracy lies silent, masked by the Roberts Court's myopic focus on a government interest in preventing quid pro quo corruption. In fact, the corruption or harm is to the representative democracy.

An interest in protecting representative democracy is a more fundamental, compelling interest than corruption, which has a value that has effectively been discounted to zero by the Roberts majority.[86] Dissenting Justices have approached an interest in preserving representative democracy when they state interests in "political integrity" and "democratic integrity" and "electoral integrity."[87] All of these interests can fall under the concept of representative democracy, a term that reflects the interest in maintaining a republic in which the people govern through their representatives. There is sufficient basis in the Court's discussion of these interests, and in the original views of the Constitution's Framers as to the foundational principle of representation, for the Court to consider a compelling government interest in representative democracy.

---

democracy, while Justice Roberts emphasizes freedom of speech. Id. at 2826, 2846 (Kagan, J. dissenting).

85. See supra Section IIA.

86. Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310, 463 (2010).

87. See First Nat'l Bank of Boston v. Bellotti, 435 U.S. 765, 788–89 (1978) ("Preserving the integrity of the electoral process [and] preventing corruption . . . are interests of the highest importance."); see also United States. v. UAW, 352 U.S. 567, 570 (1957) (stating that labor organizations' use of union dues to influence elections involves the "integrity of our electoral process"). But see Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 334 (referring to speech as the important factor in preserving "the integrity of the election process," which is undermined by rules regulating political speech).

III. The First Amendment Supports Representative Democracy

A. A Right of Instruction

The First Amendment's Free Speech Clauses were intended by the Framers to support the representative democracy established by the U.S. Constitution.[88] In 1787, the Delegates to the Philadelphia Constitutional Convention established a representative democracy before the First Amendment was considered and passed by the First Congress in 1789. The importance of establishing a communicative link between the people and their representatives is evidenced by the First Congress's consideration of adding a clause to the First Amendment providing for a "right of instruction."[89] A South Carolina congressman introduced the clause which would have added a right of the people "to instruct their representatives" to the rights to speech, peaceably assemble, and petition the government. During the debate on inclusion of the right of instruction, one of the representatives observed, "Representation is the principle of our Government."[90] Additionally, he stated that "[a]ccording to the principles laid down in the Constitution, it is presumable that the persons elected know the interests and the circumstances of their constituents."[91] Another representative explained that representation was necessary because it was not feasible for each person to be present in a national legislature:

> If it were consistent with the peace and tranquility of the inhabitants, every freeman would have a right to come and give his vote upon the law; but, inasmuch as this cannot be done, by reason of the extent of territory, and some other causes, the people have

---

88. See CITIZENS DIVIDED, supra note 7, at 4 ("[A] primary purpose of First Amendment rights is to make possible the value of self-government, and that this purpose requires public trust that elections select officials who are responsive to public opinion.").

89. Id. at 12–13 (discussing the debates in the First Congress on whether to adopt the clause).

90. THOMAS HART BENTON, ABRIDGMENT OF THE DEBATES OF CONGRESS, FROM 1789 TO 1856: MARCH 4, 1789–JUNE 1, 1796 138 (D. Appleton, ed. 1857) (statement of Mr. Hartley).

91. Id.

> agreed that their representatives shall exercise a part of their authority.[92]

As it debated the First Amendment, the First Congress affirmed the Constitutional principle that the government is a representative democracy in which the people govern by communicating their views to their representatives.

The First Congress's consideration of including a right of instruction in the First Amendment demonstrates that it viewed the amendment's free speech rights as facilitating the people's fundamental right to participate in the representative democracy by communicating their views to their representatives. During the debate on the right of instruction, Elbridge Gerry of Massachusetts stated:

> The friends and patrons of this constitution have always declared that the sovereignty resides in the people, and that they do not part with it on any occasion; to say the sovereignty vests in the people and that they have not a right to instruct and control their representatives is absurd to the last degree.[93]

Following the debate, a right of instruction was not included in the First Amendment primarily because the First Congress concluded that the Amendment's free speech provisions secured the ability of the people to express their views to their representatives. James Madison explained that Congress had asserted the right of instruction sufficiently by assuring that the First Amendment protects the right of the people to express and communicate their sentiments and wishes to their representatives.[94] Madison further stated:

> The right of freedom of speech is secured; the liberty of the press is expressly declared to be beyond the reach of this Government; the people may therefore publicly address their representatives, may privately advise them, or declare their sentiments by 92. Id. at 143 (statement of Mr. Page).

93. Id. at 140 (statement of Mr. Gerry).
94. Id. at 141 (statement of Mr. Madison).

> petition to the whole body; in all these ways they may communicate their will.[95]

Although representatives are not required to take direct instructions from their constituents, the First Amendment was enacted to allow the people to freely communicate their views on issues to their representatives who are expected to be responsive to the sentiments and wishes of their constituents.[96] The right to influence representatives, however, belongs to the people and it is not intended to be exercised only by certain special interests.

Justice Breyer recognized "the importance of reading the First Amendment not in isolation but as seeking to maintain a system of free expression designed to further a basic purpose: creating and maintaining democratic decision-making institutions."[97] He wrote, "Speech does not exist in a vacuum. Rather, political communication seeks to secure government action. A politically oriented 'marketplace of ideas' seeks to form a public opinion that can and will influence elected representatives."[98] Justice Breyer understood that the First Amendment's purpose is to create a chain of communication between the people and their representatives so that the public's policy preferences could be "channeled into effective government action."[99]

One of the Court's most significant First Amendment decisions, New York Times v. Sullivan, is often cited for the proposition that "debate on public issues should be uninhibited, robust, and wide-open."[100] The Sullivan Court, however, linked the im-

---

95. Id.

96. Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310, 339 (2010) ("Speech is an essential mechanism of democracy, for it is the means to hold officials accountable to the people.").

97. BREYER, supra note 12, at 39.

98. McCutcheon v. FEC, 134 S. Ct. 1434, 1467 (2014) (Breyer, J., dissenting).

99. Id.; see also McConnell v. FEC, 540 U.S. 93, 136–37 (2003) ("[T]he electoral process is the very 'means through which a free society democratically translates political speech into concrete governmental action.'" (quoting Nixon v. Shrink Mo. Gov't PAC, 528 U.S. 377, 401 (2000) (Breyer, J., concurring))), overruled in part by Citizens United, 558 U.S. 310.

100. N.Y. Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 270 (1964); see Ariz. Free Enter. Club's Freedom Club PAC v. Bennett, 131 S. Ct. 2806, 2829 (2011);

portance of free political discussion to "the end that government may be responsive to the will of the people," which the Court recognized as a principle fundamental to the Republic.[101] In Buckley, the Court also linked robust debate to the preservation of a representative democracy, stating that "the central purpose of the [First Amendment's] Speech and Press Clauses was to assure a society in which 'uninhibited, robust, and wide-open' public debate concerning matters of public interest would thrive, for only in such a society can a healthy representative democracy flourish."[102] To fulfill the promise of the First Amendment, citizens' robust political speech must matter to the representative democracy.

For the First Amendment to have meaning, constituents must believe that their representatives respond to their political speech. Robert C. Post observes, "If the people do not believe that elected officials listen to public opinion, participation in public discourse, no matter how free, cannot create the experience of self-government."[103] Similarly, Justice Breyer remarked, "If the average person thinks that what he says, exercising his First Amend-

---

FEC v. Wis. Right to Life, Inc., 551 U.S. 449, 467 (2007); Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 14 (1976).

101. N.Y. Times, 376 U.S. at 269 (quoting Stromberg v. California, 283 U.S. 359, 369 (1931)).

102. Buckley, 424 U.S. at 93, n.127 (citing N.Y. Times, 376 U.S. at 270). The author of this statement in Buckley, linking robust political speech to representative democracy, is Justice William J. Brennan, Jr., who wrote the opinion in New York Times Co. v. Sullivan. Buckley is a per curiam opinion with several justices contributing to the drafting of the majority decision. Potter Stewart authored the contribution and expenditures section; Lewis F. Powell, Jr., the disclosure section; William Rehnquist wrote regarding the FEC; and William J. Brennan, Jr. wrote regarding the public financing provisions. Warren E. Burger, Memorandum to the Conference, Buckley v. Valeo (Nov. 18, 1975) (on file with the Library of Congress, Manuscript Division, Papers of William J. Brennan, Jr., Part I, Box 395); Thurgood Marshall, Memorandum to the Conference, Buckley v. Valeo (Jan. 19, 1976) (on file with the Library of Congress, Manuscript Division, Papers of Thurgood Marshall, Part I, Box 173); see also Ariz. Free Enter., 131 S. Ct. at 2836 (Kagan, J., dissenting) ("Buckley recognized that public financing of elections fosters First Amendment Principles." (citing Buckley, 424 U.S. at 93, n.127)).

103. CITIZENS DIVIDED, supra note 7, at 60.

ment rights, just can't have an impact on his representative, he says, what is the point of the First Amendment?"[104]

The First Amendment's protection of public discourse and the interest in preserving representative democracy are inextricably linked. In FEC v. Wisconsin Right to Life, Chief Justice Roberts wrote, "Where the First Amendment is implicated, the tie goes to the speaker, not the censor."[105] Roberts, however, fails to credit the interest in representative democracy that has been implicit in the First Amendment since it was enacted by the first Congress. Where the First Amendment right is speech in the form of money contributed to candidates for elected office, the tie goes to the preservation of representative democracy. Should the representative democracy fail, the First Amendment's protection of political speech becomes meaningless.

B. A Marginal Impact on Speech

The government interest in protecting representative democracy outweighs the burden imposed by many campaign finance regulations, which often have only a marginal and indirect impact on the ability of citizens to engage in political speech. The Roberts Court, however, has taken nearly an absolutist position on the First Amendment's protection of money as political speech, even though the Supreme Court's jurisprudence has often found that government regulations may survive First Amendment scrutiny.[106] In Buckley, the Court found that a limit on the amount or the aggregate amount that a person or group may contribute to a candidate or political committee had only a marginal or modest impact on speech.[107] In contrast, the Roberts Court's hyper-vigilance is

---

104. Transcript of Oral Argument, supra note 76, at *33. Justice Breyer raised the question of "whether being able to write a $3.6 million check to a lot of people does leave the average person to think, my First Amendment speech, in terms of influencing my representative, means nothing." Id. at *42.

105. Wis. Right to Life, 551 U.S. at 474.

106. Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310, 420 (2010) (stating that speech can be regulated based on the speaker's identity, e.g. students and government employees).

107. Buckley, 424 U.S. at 20, 38.

> A limitation on the amount of money a person may give to a candidate or campaign organization thus involves little direct restraint on his political communication, for it permits the symbolic expression of support evidenced by a contribution not warranted by the burden that campaign finance regulations impose. At the same time that the Roberts Court has narrowed the government interest in campaign finance regulation, it has expanded free speech to include all money that is spent in a political campaign.

Justice William J. Brennan, Jr. wrote the opinion in New York Times v. Sullivan upholding the principle that "debate on public issues should be uninhibited, robust, and wide-open."[108] Although Justice Brennan's opinion is noted for strongly upholding freedom of political speech, he did not have an absolutist view of the First Amendment.[109] Justice Brennan thought that regulations on speech should be reviewed by considering the impact on the speaker's ability to speak. In a letter to Justice Antonin Scalia during the Court's consideration of FEC v. Massachusetts Citizens for Life, Inc., Brennan wrote:

> Any regulation of speech can, of course, be cast as an absolute prohibition, since it forbids speech except in accordance with the regulation. However, since absolute prohibition is the ultimate restriction of speech, characterizing regulation in this way > but does not in any way infringe the contributor's freedom to discuss candidates and issues.

Id. at 21. The compelling interest in representative democracy might also outweigh the burden imposed by expenditure limits where so much money is spent by one candidate that the citizens are unable to make an informed choice about which candidate will best represent their interests. Justice Byron White would have upheld the campaign expenditure limits in Buckley, writing in dissent, "[t]he ceiling on candidate expenditures represents the considered judgment of Congress that elections are to be decided among candidates none of whom has overpowering advantage by reason of a huge campaign war chest." Id. at 265 (White, J., dissenting).

108. N.Y. Times Co. v. Sullivan, 376 U.S. 254, 270 (1964).

109. Chief Justice Roberts appears to acknowledge that the First Amendment's protection of political speech is not an absolute prohibition of all government regulation of speech. He wrote that "[t]he right to participate in democracy through political contributions is protected by the First Amendment, but the right is not absolute." McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1441; see also Wis. Right to Life, 551 U.S. at 482. "Our jurisprudence over the past 216 years has rejected an absolutist interpretation" of the First Amendment's words stating that "Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech." Id. at 482 (quoting U.S. CONST. amend. I).

> would require that every provision be justified by something akin to a "clear and present danger." Most regulations, including many we currently consider both useful and minimally intrusive, would fail this test. It seems a fairer assessment of the impact of a regulation simply to examine how difficult it is to engage in speech as a result of that regulation.[110]

The First Amendment has never acted as an absolute bar to the regulation of speech and should not do so when the regulation is of money and not of pure speech. As Justice Brennan advises, the Court should take a fair look at how difficult it is to engage in political speech as a result of limits on the amount of money that can be contributed to political candidates during an election cycle. The Buckley Court found a variation in the burden that regulations could impose on money as election speech, finding that regulations on campaign expenditures resulted in a higher burden on speech than regulations on contributions.[111] In applying the First Amendment to political speech, there must be an analysis of the level of burden that a campaign finance regulation imposes on an individual's ability to express his views.

There are many reasons why campaign finance regulations may have only a marginal impact on political speech. As a foundational point, campaign finance regulations do not impact pure

---

110. William J. Brennan, Jr., Letter to Justice Antonin Scalia, re: FEC v. Mass. Citizens for Life, Inc., No. 85-701 (Nov. 17, 1986) (on file with the Library of Congress, Manuscript Division, Papers of William J. Brennan, Jr., Part I, Box 729).

111. In McCutcheon, Roberts explained the distinction that the Buckley Court drew between expenditures and contributions: Expenditure limits address "core First Amendment rights of political expression" and must be analyzed under exacting scrutiny: the government may regulate protected speech only if such regulation promotes a compelling interest and is the least restrictive means to further the articulated interest. McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1444 (quoting Buckley, 424 U.S. 44–45). In contrast, contribution limits impose a lesser restraint on political speech and affected political association, which requires a lesser standard of review. The government must demonstrate a sufficiently important interest and employ means closely drawn to avoid unnecessary abridgement of associational freedoms. Id.

speech.[112] Contributing money to be used for expenditures in a campaign for political office is not in itself engaging in speech.[113] Money does not have any speech characteristics; it is neither loud nor soft, kind nor harsh, coherent nor garbled. It doesn't communicate anything in itself. The Court, however, has accepted the proposition that money, although not speech, enables speech. Justice Breyer wrote, "Money is not speech, it is money. But the expenditure of money enables speech, and that expenditure is often necessary to communicate a message, particularly in a political context."[114] The Buckley Court did not unequivocally hold that political expenditures are speech. Instead, it considered that "every means of communicating ideas in today's mass society requires the expenditure of money."[115] The Court found that "[t]he electorate's increasing dependence on television, radio, and other mass media for news and information has made these expensive modes of communication indispensable instruments of effective political speech."[116] It is notable, however, that Buckley was decided in 1976. Today the electorate is increasingly using lower cost modes of communication including e-mails, Facebook, and Twitter Accounts, which unlike handbills and leaflets do not entail printing,

---

112. See Davis v. FEC, 554 U.S. 724, 752 n.3 (2008) (Stevens, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) ("[C]ampaign expenditures are not themselves 'core political speech'; they merely may enable such speech (as well as its repetition ad nauseum) . . . it is simply not the case that the First Amendment 'provides the same measure of protection' to the use of money to enable speech as it does to speech itself." (quoting Nixon v. Shrink Mo. Gov't PAC, 528 U.S. 377, 398 (2000) (Stevens, J., concurring))).

113. See FEC v. Nat'l Conservative PAC, 470 U.S. 480, 508 (1985) (White, J., dissenting) ("The First Amendment protects the right to speak, not the right to spend, and limitations on the amount of money that can be spent are not the same as restrictions on speaking. I agree with the majority that the expenditures in this case 'produce' core First Amendment speech. But that is precisely the point: they produce such speech; they are not speech itself. At least in these circumstances, I cannot accept the identification of speech with its antecedents. Such a house-that-Jack-built approach could equally be used to find a First Amendment right to a job or to a minimum wage to 'produce' the money to 'produce' the speech.").

114. BREYER, supra note 12, at 46.

115. Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 19 (1976).

116. Id.

paper, and circulation costs.[117] The Buckley Court, considering the issue today, might not find that "every means of communicating" requires the expenditure of money.[118]

Even accepting that political campaign contributions, although not speech, enable speech, not all the money contributed to a campaign funds speech. Retired Justice John Paul Stevens observed during testimony before a Senate committee that: "Speech is only one of the activities that are financed by campaign contributions and expenditures. Those financial activities should not receive the same constitutional protection as speech itself. After all, campaign funds were used to finance the Watergate burglaries—actions that clearly were not protected by the First Amendment."[119] In addition to funding burglaries, campaign funds can be used to pay for campaign staff's salaries, pizza, and gasoline, which are not themselves intrinsically expressive or pure speech protected by the First Amendment.[120]

In McCutcheon, even Chief Justice Roberts recognized that contributing money to a candidate's campaign is only one option a citizen has for expressing his political views in the context of an election.[121] He identifies as additional options, urging others to vote for a particular candidate and volunteering to work on a campaign.[122] Justice Byron White, who had first-hand knowledge of political campaigns having participated in the presidential campaign of John F. Kennedy, wrote, "The burden on actual speech imposed by limitations on the spending of money is minimal and indirect. All rights of direct political expression and advocacy are

---

117. Id. ("The distribution of the humblest handbill or leaflet entails printing, paper, and circulation costs.").

118. Id. (emphasis added). But see Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310, 353 (2010) (finding that television networks and major newspapers owned by media corporations are the most important means of mass communication).

119. *Dollars and Sense: How Undisclosed Money and Post-*McCutcheon Campaign Finance Will Affect 2014 and Beyond: Hearing Before the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration, 113th Cong. 5 (2014) [hereinafter Dollars and Sense] (statement of Justice John Paul Stevens (Ret.)).

120. Akhil Reed Amar, The First Amendment's Firstness, 47 U.C. DAVIS L. REV. 1015, 1034 (2014).

121. McCutcheon v. FEC, 134 S. Ct. 1434, 1441 (2014) (plurality opinion).

122. Id.

retained."[123] It is key to a consideration of the burden that campaign finance regulations impose on political speech that the restrictions are on the money that enables speech and not on speech itself. No matter how close the Court believes the relationship between money and speech to be, money enables speech, it is not speech.

Also of significance, campaign finance regulations do not restrict what the speaker says. The effect of the regulations is on the quantity of permissible speech, not the content of the speech. Therefore, the Supreme Court's cases protecting the right of individuals to express their viewpoint by burning the American flag, holding offensive posters at funerals, and participating in Nazi parades are not relevant to campaign finance regulations.[124] Justice Brennan's admonition in Texas v. Johnson, upholding a protester's right to burn a flag, that "a bedrock principle underlying the First Amendment . . . that the government may not prohibit the expression of an idea simply because society finds the idea itself offensive or disagreeable" is not relevant to whether a donor can contribute money to an election campaign.[125] Campaign finance regulations are invariably viewpoint neutral. Buckley noted, "[C]ontribution limitations in themselves do not undermine to any material degree the potential for robust and effective discussion of candidates and campaign issues by individual citizens, associations, the institutional press, candidates, and political parties."[126] It is only in the unusual circumstance where a campaign finance regulation discriminates based on viewpoint that a heightened level of scrutiny is warranted.

Finally, speech in the context of campaigns for elected office is distinct from speech in other contexts.

---

123. FEC v. Nat'l Conservative PAC, 470 U.S. 480, 508–09 (1985) (White, J., dissenting). Justice White was the only justice to dissent in Buckley by upholding expenditure restrictions, as well as contribution limits. Id.

124. McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1441 ("If the First Amendment protects flag burning, funeral protests, and Nazi parades—despite the profound offense such spectacles cause—it surely protects political campaign speech despite popular opposition."). The plurality in McCutcheon, however, failed to distinguish these cases in which the government regulation was motivated by the content of the speech. Id.

125. 491 U.S. 397, 414 (1989).

126. Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 29 (1976).

> Elections are distinct from the more general arena of democratic debate, both because elections serve a specific set of purposes and because those purposes can, arguably, be undermined or corrupted by actions such as the willingness of candidates or officeholders to trade their votes on issues for campaign contributions or spending.[127]

In First National Bank v. Bellotti, the Court drew a distinction between the right to speak on issues of general public interest and the "quite different context of participation in a political campaign for election to public office."[128] Campaigns for public office elect the people's representatives, and thus, are at the core of the compelling government interest in representative democracy.

One of the most passionate assertions that there is a government interest in protecting the integrity of elections—an interest that should not be overwhelmed by the First Amendment—was made by Justice James C. Nelson, sitting on the Supreme Court of Montana, who wrote a dissent in Western Tradition Partnership, Inc. v. Attorney General of Montana.[129] Both the majority who

---

127. Richard H. Pildes, Elections as a Distinct Sphere Under the First Amendment, in MONEY, POLITICS, AND THE CONSTITUTION: BEYOND CITIZENS UNITED 19, 19 (Monica Youn ed., 2011) (advocating for "electoral exceptionalism," which would permit the regulation of speech in the context of campaigns as distinct from other contexts); see also Geoffrey R. Stone, "Electoral Exceptionalism" and the First Amendment, in MONEY, POLITICS AND THE CONSTITUTION, supra, at 37.

128. 435 U.S. 765, 787 n.26 (1978) (noting that Congress might be able to demonstrate a danger of real or apparent corruption where the independent expenditures of corporations are used to influence candidate elections rather than to influence a referendum on an issue of public interest).

129. 271 P.3d 1, 16 (Mont. 2011) (Nelson, J. dissenting), rev'd sub nom., Am. Tradition P'ship, Inc. v. Bullock, 132 S. Ct. 2490 (2012) (granting certiorari and summarily reversing without argument based on the holding in Citizens United). Justice Stephen Breyer, joined by Justices Ginsburg, Sotomayor, and Kagan dissented, stating that the decision in Citizens United:

> [S]hould not bar the Montana Supreme Court's finding, made on the record before it, that independent expenditures by corporations did in fact lead to corruption or the appearance of corruption in Montana. Given the history and political landscape in Montana, that court concluded that the State had a compelling interest in limiting independent expenditures by strove to uphold a state statute regulating corporate expenditures by distinguishing Citizens United and Justice Nelson who reluctantly wrote that Citizens United controlled, expressed frustration with a campaign finance jurisprudence that impaired Montana's citizens from voting for an initiative that would protect their political institutions from the corrupt practices and heavy-handed influences of special interests.[130] Justice Nelson, acknowledging that he thoroughly disagreed with the Citizens United decision, wrote:

> I cannot agree with [Citizens United's] holding that the prevention of corruption in the form of independent expenditures is not a compelling state interest. There is no plausible reason why a state would not want to protect the integrity of its election process against corruption and undue influence; to do otherwise would render the fundamental right to vote a meaningless exercise. To my knowledge, the First Amendment has never been interpreted to be absolute and gloriously isolated from other fundamental rights and values protected by the Constitution. Yet, Citizens United distorts the right to speech beyond recognition. Indeed, I am shocked that the Supreme Court did not balance the right to speech with the government's compelling interest in preserving the fundamental right to vote in elections.[131]

It is unfortunate that the Roberts Court chose to dismiss the interest of voters in protecting the integrity of Montana's election process, in favor of a hyper-vigilant protection of First Amendment speech rights. Instead, the Court should shift its focus from the right of speakers with the financial resources to spend above the thresholds > corporations. Thus, Montana's experience, like considerable experience elsewhere since the Court's decision in Citizens United, casts grave doubt on the Court's supposition that independent expenditures do not corrupt or appear to do so.

---

Am. Tradition P'ship, 132 S. Ct. 2491–92 (Breyer, J. dissenting) (citation omitted).

130. W. Tradition P'ship, 271 P.3d at 11; id. at 19 (Nelson, J. dissenting).

131. Id. at 35.

set by voters and legislators, to the rights of the vast majority of citizens to have confidence in the integrity of their elected representatives. There is a danger that if the Court does not "temper its doctrinaire logic" regarding the First Amendment "with a little practical wisdom, it will convert the constitutional Bill of Rights into a suicide pact" destroying representative democracy.[132]

This section argues that monetary contributions for expenditures by candidates for elected office are not at the core of political speech. The regulation of money contributions and expenditures does not unreasonably impair the ability of the individual to persuade through the power of her ideas. Today, there are more increasingly available avenues, such as a vibrant internet, for an individual to distribute her ideas. Moreover, these avenues are not dependent on significant monetary investments. Where the effect of campaign regulations on political speech is only marginal or modest, First Amendment interests should not outweigh the compelling government interest in protecting representative democracy that is at the foundation of the Constitution.[133]

IV. McCutcheon v. FEC: Representation Lost

A. McCutcheon v. FEC

The government interest in preserving representative democracy is particularly relevant to McCutcheon v. FEC, in which the United States Supreme Court struck down a federal campaign finance law that restricted the number of candidates for elected office that an individual donor could contribute money to during an election cycle.[134] The Court's decision in McCutcheon enables 132. Terminiello v. City of Chicago, 337 U.S. 1, 37 (1949) (Jackson, J., dissenting) (opining that upholding the right of anarchists to speak and create public disorder could jeopardize the security of democratic government). A debasement of representative democracy today is a weightier concern than the public disorder disdained by Justice Jackson. A "suicide pact," however, is an apt reference.

---

133. See Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 29 (1976) ("[T]he weighty interests served by restricting the size of financial contributions to political candidates are sufficient to justify the limited effect upon First Amendment freedoms caused by the $1,000 contribution ceiling.").

134. 134 S. Ct. 1434, 1442 (2014). The Court also overturned the regulations that limited aggregate contributions to political parties and non-party committees. Id.

donors to contribute money to an unlimited number of candidates for federal office, including every candidate for the U.S. Congress. The base limit on the amount of money that can be contributed to each of the candidates was not challenged and remains in effect.[135] In McCutcheon, the interest in representative democracy is relevant because the decision removes all limits on the ability of a donor to contribute money to candidates in congressional districts across the country. Wealthy donors can contribute to the election of any number of congressional candidates or gain influence by donating to all of a political party's candidates.

A likely result of McCutcheon is that the views of constituents will be disregarded due to an increase in campaign contributions to their representatives from non-constituents. Non-resident money donors contribute to a candidate who will advocate for their policy preferences, which may not reflect the views of the elected representative's constituents. The Court's decision may not only impair the important link between a representative and her constituents, but create a national legislature that is not representative of the people of the United States as a whole.

The aggregate limit at issue in McCutcheon placed some restriction on the ability to fund candidates outside of a donor's legislative district, but it did not prohibit all such contributions. Shaun McCutcheon, a resident of the State of Alabama,[136] sought to contribute money to candidates for elected office who shared his views on public policy so that those officials would enact legislation consistent with McCutcheon's policy preferences.[137] He did not want to be limited in the number of candidates that he could support by the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971 ("FECA"), as amended by the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002, FECA's aggregate contribution limits.[138] McCutcheon, together

135. The limit on the amount that an individual can contribute to a candidate during an election cycle remains at $2,600. Id. at 1442.

136. McCutcheon v. FEC, 893 F. Supp. 2d 133, 136 (D.D.C. 2012), rev'd 134 S. Ct. 1434.

137. Brief for Appellant Shaun McCutcheon at 11, McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. 1434 (No. 12-536).

138. The Federal Elections Campaign Act ("FECA") of 1971 was enacted on February 7, 1972, and the FECA Amendments on October 15, 1974. Pub. L. No. 92-225, 86 Stat. 3 (1972); Pub. L. No. 93-443, 88 Stat. 1263 (1974). A quarter-century later, Congress amended FECA via the Bipartisan Campaign with co-plaintiff the Republican National Committee ("RNC"), challenged FECA's aggregate contribution limits that restricted the total amount of money that an individual could contribute to federal candidates, as well as FECA's limits on donations to other political party and non-party committees.

In the 2011–2012 election cycle, McCutcheon contributed a total of $33,088 to sixteen different candidates in "congressional races across the nation."[139] McCutcheon wished to contribute to twelve additional candidates for Congress.[140] FECA's aggregate limits prohibited McCutcheon from contributing to all of the additional candidates because it limited his contributions to federal candidates to a total of $48,600. FECA's base limit allowed McCutcheon to contribute up to $5,200 to each of nine candidates, but the aggregate limit prevented further contributions to any other candidate (beyond the additional $1,800 that may be spent before reaching the $48,600 aggregate limit).[141] McCutcheon also wanted to contribute to various political committees, but was prevented from doing so by the aggregate limit on contributions to such committees.[142] The RNC wanted to receive the donations that McCutcheon and similarly situated individuals would give to it but for the aggregate contribution limits.[143]

The U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia upheld FECA's aggregate limits on campaign contributions as a permissible means of preventing corruption or the appearance of corruption, reasoning that the aggregate limits prevented evasion of the Reform Act of 2002 ("BCRA"). Pub. L. No 107-115, 116 Stat. 81 (2002). FECA's base contribution limits permitted an individual to contribute up to $2,600 per election to any candidate ($5,200 total for the primary and general elections). The aggregate limits allowed an individual to contribute $48,600 to federal candidates and a total of $74,600 to other political committees. Together an individual could contribute up to $123,200 to candidates and non-candidate committees during each two-year election cycle. See McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1442–43.

---

139. Brief for Appellant, supra note 137, at 12.

140. McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1436; Brief for Appellant, supra note 137, at 12.

141. Brief for Appellant, supra note 137.

142. McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1443.

143. Id.

base limits.[144] Buckley had originally upheld FECA's aggregate contribution limits under this anti-circumvention rationale.[145] The district court noted that Buckley applied a lower level of scrutiny to regulations affecting campaign contributions than to regulations affecting expenditures.[146] The district court reviewed the aggregate limits as a restriction on contributions and applied the lower level of scrutiny.[147] McCutcheon and the RNC appealed the district court's decision directly to the Supreme Court.[148]

In its argument before the Supreme Court, the Government argued the anti-circumvention interest that had been articulated by the district court.[149] This led the litigants and the Court to engage in debating a myriad of different scenarios under which a contributor could or could not circumvent the base contribution limits if the 144. McCutcheon v. FEC, 893 F. Supp. 2d 133, 138–40 (D.D.C. 2012), ("The government may justify the aggregate limits as a means of preventing corruption or the appearance of corruption, or as a means of preventing circumvention of contribution limits imposed to further its anticorruption interest." (citing Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 26–27 (1976))), rev'd 134 S. Ct. 1434.

---

145. Buckley, 424 U.S. at 38.

146. McCutcheon, 893 F. Supp. 2d at 137. Expenditure limits are subject to strict scrutiny, while contribution limits need only satisfy the lesser demand of being closely drawn to match a sufficiently important interest. Id. Buckley had distinguished between government regulations that restricted campaign finance contributions and those that restricted campaign finance expenditures. Buckley, 424 U.S. at 58–59. The Court applied a lesser standard of review to the regulation of contributions to candidates for elected office, upholding both the base and aggregate contribution limits. McCutcheon, 893 F. Supp. 2d at 138 (citing Buckley, 424 U.S. at 19).

147. McCutcheon, 893 F. Supp. 2d at 137–38.

148. A party may appeal directly to the Supreme Court an order granting or denying an injunction in a civil action in which an act of Congress requires a hearing by a three-judge panel in a district court. 28 U.S.C. § 1253 (Westlaw through Pub. L. No. 114-61). A constitutional challenge to any BCRA provision shall be filed in the District of Columbia and heard by a three-judge panel. Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002, sec. 403(a), Pub. L. No. 107-155, 116 Stat. 81 (2002). A three-judge panel of the United States District Court for the District of Columbia denied McCutcheon's motion for a preliminary injunction. McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1443. He appealed the District Court's decision directly to the Supreme Court. Id. at 1444.

149. McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1442 (noting the Government argued that the aggregate limits serve the permissible objective of combatting corruption by preventing circumvention of FECA's base contribution limits).

aggregate limits were removed.[150] In assessing a proposed circumvention scenario, Justice Roberts speculated, "it is hard to believe that a rational actor would engage in such machinations."[151] Finding that the aggregate limits did little, if anything, to prevent circumvention of the base contribution limits, the Court struck down the aggregate limits in a plurality opinion.[152] The Court found a "substantial mismatch" between the government's objective of preventing circumvention of the base limits and the means selected to achieve it, noting that the aggregate limits were not "closely drawn" to the government interest.[153]

Four years earlier in Citizens United,[154] the Court overruled existing precedent to strike down corporate expenditure limits on electioneering communications under the heightened standard of review applicable to expenditures. In McCutcheon, the Court struck down a government regulation limiting aggregate contributions to candidates and political committees under the lower standard of review applicable to contributions.[155] FECA's aggregate contribution limits had been upheld in Buckley as a "modest restraint" on protected political activity that served to prevent evasion of the base contribution limits.[156] In McCutcheon, the Roberts

---

150. Id. at 1453–56.

151. Id. at 1454.

152. Id. at 1442–43, 1446. Chief Justice John Roberts wrote an opinion joined by Justices Antonin Scalia, Anthony Kennedy, and Samuel Alito. Id. at 1440–41. Justice Thomas concurred in the judgment, writing separately to state his view that the decision in Buckley should be overruled, including its holding that contribution limits could be subjected to a lesser standard of constitutional scrutiny than expenditure limits. Id. at 1462–65 (Thomas, J., concurring). Justice Stephen Breyer wrote a dissent that was joined by Justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg, Sonia Sotomayor, and Elena Kagan. Id. at 1465 (Breyer, J., dissenting).

153. Id. at 1446 (plurality opinion). The Court stated that even where it was not applying strict scrutiny—requiring a means narrowly tailored to the desired objective—it requires a fit that although not necessarily perfect, is at least reasonable. Id. at 1456. The Court found that the aggregate contribution limit was "poorly tailored to the Government's interest in preventing circumvention of the base limits . . . impermissibly restrict[ing] participation in the political process." Id. at 1457.

154. 558 U.S. 310, 365 (2010) (Kennedy, J.).

155. McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1456–57.

156. Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 38 (1976).

Court continued to chip away at the support structure underpinning campaign finance regulations that was established in Buckley.

The Government likely restricted itself to arguing the ineffective anti-circumvention rationale because of the Supreme Court's cramped view that only an interest in preventing quid pro quo corruption, the exchange of dollars for political favors, is compelling enough to support campaign finance regulation.[157] The anti-circumvention rationale is a weak one, dependent on consideration of the feasibility of hypothetical schemes involving the complex facts of campaign finance. The McCutcheon dissent also was constrained to consider the government interest in preventing corruption, although it defined corruption more broadly than the plurality.[158] The Government would fare better in defending campaign finance regulations if it began to build the foundation for a more compelling interest that is firmly embedded in the U.S. Constitution. And no interest is more firmly entrenched than the interest in preserving the representative democracy.

B. Representatives Should Respond to Voters, not Donors

In McCutcheon, Chief Justice Roberts describes the representative nature of the American democracy. He writes that "a central feature of democracy" is "that constituents support candidates who share their beliefs and interests, and candidates who are elected can be expected to be responsive to those concerns."[159] He states that responsiveness to constituents "is key to the very concept of self-governance through elected officials."[160] The holding in McCutcheon, however, undermines representative democracy because it increases the probability that representatives will be responsive to non-resident money donors and not to their voting constituents.[161]

157. See McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1441 (stating that to survive scrutiny any government regulation must target "quid pro quo" corruption or its appearance, the hallmark of which is exchanging dollars for political favors).

158. Id. at 1465–67 (Breyer, J., dissenting) (finding that the plurality defined corruption too narrowly; it is a broader interest in maintaining the integrity of our public governmental institutions).

159. Id. at 1441 (plurality opinion).

160. Id. at 1462.

161. See FEC v. Nat'l Conservative PAC, 470 U.S. 480, 517 (1985) (White, J., dissenting) ("[T]he infusion of massive PAC expenditures into the

The McCutcheon plurality, echoing the view of the Court in Citizens United, does not recognize a viable concern where a campaign contributor spends large sums of money and garners "influence over or access to" elected officials.[162] The Court accepts an election system in which any money donor may establish a direct link between his donations and influence on any representative. Wealthy donors can now contribute the maximum base limit to all candidates of a political party, which will likely gain them special access to that party's representatives. By striking down FECA's aggregate contribution limits, the McCutcheon plurality appears to be at rest with money donors directly influencing the policy choices of any number of federal legislators even though the donor does not live in the representatives' legislative districts and is not entitled to vote for them.

Chief Justice Roberts describes contributions to candidates who do not represent the legislative district in which an individual resides as "broader participation in the democratic process."[163] It is actually not broader in the sense that more people can participate since most people do not have the financial resources to contribute to numerous candidates. The broader participation that Chief Justice Roberts envisions is that wealthy individuals will be able to participate more broadly, influencing election results in more legislative districts, while gaining the special access to representatives that the plurality acknowledges money donors receive.

The McCutcheon plurality notes that volunteering to work on the campaign of a candidate for elected office is not an alternative for the individual who wants to support numerous candidates political process . . . may [force candidates] to please the spenders rather than the voters, and the two groups are not identical.").

---

162. McCutcheon v. FEC, 134 S. Ct. 1434, 1450–51 (2014) (plurality opinion) (quoting Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310, 360 (2010)). Citizens United states—implausibly—that even though there is little evidence that independent expenditures ingratiate donors to elected officials, "[i]ngratiation and access, in any event, are not corruption." Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 360. In 2003, the McConnell Court articulated a concern with the pernicious effects of "undue influence." McConnell v. FEC, 540 U.S. 93, 153 (2003), overruled in part by Citizens United, 558 U.S. 310. That concern—inexplicably—has disappeared from the current Court's review of campaign finance regulations.

163. McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1449.

who are located outside of his legislative district.[164] The Court's holding, however, enables wealthy individuals to donate money to candidates in all 435 federal congressional districts. Although the donor would be unable to volunteer to work for candidates who are located outside of the donor's own district, the plurality endorses his ability to provide money to those candidates. Money, traversing the nation and passing from a non-resident contributor directly to a potential representative, disrupts the link between representatives and their constituents. Residency is an important factor in a representative democracy. For example, the Constitution provides that a representative must be an inhabitant of the State in which she will be elected.[165] Lawrence Lessig asserts that "[t]his residency requirement was a response to the fear that wealthy non-residents would purchase elected office."[166] The McCutcheon plurality appears not to be concerned that wealthy non-residents might purchase elected office for representatives that support their viewpoints, rather than the policy preferences of the representative's voting constituents.

Retired Justice John Paul Stevens, testifying before a Senate committee hearing on a constitutional amendment to address the Roberts Court's campaign finance decisions, stated that "rules limiting campaign contributions and expenditures should recognize the distinction between money provided by their constituents and money provided by non-voters, such as corporations and people living in other jurisdictions."[167] Justice Stevens warned that "[u]nlimited campaign expenditures impair the process of democratic self-government. They create a risk that successful candidates will pay more attention to the interests of non-voters who

---

164. Id.

165. U.S. CONST. art. I, § 2, cl. 2.

166. Brief of Professor Lawrence Lessig, supra note 6, at 14.

167. Dollars and Sense, supra note 119, at 3. In his dissent in Citizens United v. FEC, Justice Stevens wrote regarding corporations, "[t]hey cannot vote or run for office. Because they may be managed and controlled by non-residents, their interests may conflict in fundamental respects with the interests of eligible voters." Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310, 394 (2010) (Stevens, J., dissenting); see also STEVENS, supra note 57, at 57–79 (explaining why it is unwise to allow persons who are not qualified to vote—whether they be corporations or nonresident individuals—to have a potentially greater power to affect the outcome of elections than eligible voters).

provided them with money that to the interests of the voters who elected them. That risk is unacceptable."[168] Legislators should be dependent on voters, not money contributors. As aptly noted by Lawrence Lessig, "The framers did not intend to make representatives dependent upon contributors."[169]

C. Diluting the Votes of Constituents

Striking down FECA'S aggregate campaign contribution limits means that candidates for elected office will receive money contributions from an increased number of donors who reside outside of their legislative districts. Shaun McCutcheon had donated money to sixteen different candidates in elections across the country without triggering FECA's modest aggregate limit. He wanted to contribute to twelve additional candidates. Following the Supreme Court's decision, Mr. McCutcheon can now contribute to an unlimited number of candidates in every legislative district. The effect of McCutcheon will be that representatives will become increasingly responsive to the policy preferences of non-constituent donors.

A representative's disproportionate attention to non-constituent money donors is much like disproportionate voting power. In Baker v. Carr, the Court found that existing state legislative districts giving voters residing in rural areas of a state greater representation in the state's legislature than voters residing in urban areas affected a basic right of representation that was justiciable by the courts.[170] The concept of proportional representation can be traced back to the Philadelphia Constitutional Convention. James Madison's journal from the Convention notes:

> [Mr. Wilson] entered elaborately into the defence of a proportional representation, stating for his first position that as all authority was derived from the people, equal numbers of people ought to have an equal n[umber] of representatives, and different

168. Dollars and Sense, supra note 119, at 7.
169. LESSIG, supra note 6, at 242.
170. 369 U.S. 186, 255 (1962).

> numbers of people different numbers of representatives.[171]

Proportional representation embraces the principle that each American citizen has a right to representation in the government and not to have the weight of his views on public policy lessened by reason of rural or urban residence or by reason of financial resources that govern his ability to donate money to elected representatives.

In Reynolds v. Sims, which upheld the principle of "one citizen, one vote," Chief Justice Earl Warren wrote, > [R]epresentative government is in essence self-government through the medium of elected representatives of the people, and each and every citizen has an inalienable right to full and effective participation in the political processes of his State's legislative bodies. Most citizens can achieve this participation only as qualified voters through the election of legislators to represent them.[172]

Warren found that "the right of suffrage can be denied by a debasement or dilution of the weight of a citizen's vote just as effectively as by wholly prohibiting the free exercise of the franchise."[173] He further observed:

> Legislators are elected by voters, not farms or cities or economic interests. As long as ours is a representative form of government, and our legislatures are those instruments of government elected directly by and directly representative of the people, the right to elect legislators in a free and unimpaired fashion is a bedrock of our political system.[174]

171. JAMES MADISON, REMARKS OF JAMES WILSON IN THE FEDERAL CONVENTION, 1787, reprinted in 1 COLLECTED WORKS OF JAMES WILSON 80, 93 (Kermit L. Hall & Mark David Hall eds., 2007).

172. 377 U.S. 533, 565 (1964).

173. Id. at 555.

174. Id. at 562.

Warren makes the important point that voters elect representatives. Economic interests, especially those that are not resident in the legislative district, should not elect representatives or have undue influence on them.

The rationale for campaign finance regulations is similar to the principle of "one citizen, one vote"; large contributions by wealthy non-resident donors makes their voices more effective than the voice of those unable to make comparable donations. Where the elector's influence on his representative is diluted because individuals who are not constituents have provided money donations to his representative, then the elector's right of suffrage is impaired. On a broader scale, if the legislature as a whole is disproportionately influenced by the donations of a group of wealthy individuals who can afford to donate to an unlimited number of candidates for elected office, then the Constitution's principle of democratic self-government by the broad base of the people will be substantially undermined and the republic envisioned by the Framers will be lost. Reynolds v. Sims restored the balance of one-citizen, one-vote for residents of cities and rural counties. Today, courts should allow legislatures to enact campaign finance regulations to restore the balance of one-citizen, one vote for wealthy citizens and citizens with limited financial resources.

D. Enhancing the Power of the Donor Class

Lawrence Lessig observed, in reference to McCutcheon, "once you remove aggregate contribution limits, you shrink even further the likely number of funders of elections and exacerbate even more the gap between 'the funders' and 'the People.'"[175] Nonetheless, the McCutcheon plurality focused on enhancing the influence of those persons who are able to donate $5,200 to more than nine candidates in an election cycle. In the representative democracy envisioned by the Constitution's Framers, representatives weigh the views of all of their constituents in making policy choices. And the national legislature reflects the broad base of all of the people. If instead, representatives focus on a small number of money donors, those donors will "call the tune" and dilute the influence of the larger body of constituents.[176]

175. Lawrence Lessig, Out-Posting Post, in CITIZENS DIVIDED, supra note 7, at 97, 104.

At the foundation of the republic established by the U.S. Constitution is the principle that the government should be responsive to the people of the United States and not to a favored class. James Madison defined the republic to recognize this principle:

> [W]e may define a republic to be, or at least may bestow that name on, a government which derives all its powers directly or indirectly from the great body of the people, and is administered by persons holding their offices during pleasure, for a limited period, or during good behaviour. It is essential to such a government that it be derived from the great body of the society, not from an inconsiderable proportion, or favoured class of it; otherwise a handful of tyrannical nobles, exercising their oppressions by a delegation of their powers, might aspire to the rank of republicans, and claim for their government the honourable title of republic.[177]

The delegates to the Philadelphia Constitutional Convention were concerned about the consolidation and abuse of power. They established a government that dispersed power in three branches of government and incorporated checks and balances to guard against the concentration of power in any group of persons. The Framers wanted the republican democracy that they had founded to rest on the broadest base of the people. James Wilson sought to raise "the federal pyramid to a considerable altitude, and for that reason wished to give it as broad a basis as possible. No government could long subsist without the confidence of the people. In a republican government this confidence was peculiarly 176. See McCutcheon v. FEC, 134 S. Ct. 1434, 1468 (2014) (Breyer, J., dissenting) (quoting Nixon v. Shrink Mo. Gov't PAC, 528 U.S. 377, 390 (2000)).

177. FEDERALIST NO. 39 (James Madison); see also FEDERALIST NO. 57 (James Madison) ("Who are to be the electors of the Federal Representatives? Not the rich, more than the poor; not the learned, more than the ignorant; not the haughty heirs . . . . The electors are to be the great body of the people of the United States.").

essential."[178] Wilson stated, "The legislature ought to be the most exact transcript of the whole society."[179]

Since enactment of the Constitution in 1787, the history of the United States has been to expand the right of persons to participate in the democracy. The Fifteenth Amendment gave persons of all races the right to vote and the Nineteenth Amendment expanded suffrage to women. "Past restrictions on political participation based upon wealth, property ownership, race, gender, and other factors have given way to a nearly universal belief that representative democracy requires all citizens to have a substantially equal voice in making the decisions that affect their lives."[180] This forward progress in expanding democratic participation may be substantially slowed if a small number of money donors to candidates become a favored class outweighing the influence of the people as a whole.

In Arizona Free Enterprise v. Bennett, the Court assessed the constitutionality of an Arizona campaign finance regulation enacted to assure that Arizona's state government worked on behalf of all of the people of the State and not for a class of wealthy contributors to their elections.[181] The law allowed candidates for state office who accepted public financing for their campaign to receive additional money from the state if their privately financed opponent's campaign expenditures exceeded a certain limit.[182] Chief Justice Roberts, writing for the majority, held that Arizona's matching funds law imposed a substantial burden on the speech of privately financed candidates which could not be justified by a compelling state interest.[183] In the plurality's view in McCutcheon, "Congress may not regulate contributions simply to reduce the amount of money in politics, or to restrict the political participation 178. FEDERAL CONVENTION RECORDS—VOLUME I, supra note 10, at 49 (notes of James Madison).

179. Id. at 132.

180. Adam Lioz, Breaking the Vicious Cycle: How the Supreme Court Helped Create the Inequality Era and Why a New Jurisprudence Must Lead Us Out, 43 SETON HALL L. REV. 1227, 1258 (2013).

181. 131 S. Ct. 2806, 2813–14 (2011).

182. Id. at 2813.

183. Id. at 2824.

of some in order to enhance the relative influence of others."[184] The effect of striking down the Arizona statute was to maintain the existing advantage that wealthy donors had to influence state representatives through their campaign contributions.

Dissenting in Arizona Free Enterprise, Justice Kagan wrote that campaign finance regulations were enacted over the last century to prevent representatives from acting for the benefit of wealthy contributors rather than on behalf of all of the people.[185] The Arizona campaign finance regulation containing the matching funds provision was passed, not by the state's legislature, but by the citizens of Arizona themselves through an initiative.[186] The initiative followed "a political scandal involving the near-routine purchase of legislators' votes."[187] Justice Kagan wrote that Arizonians supported the campaign finance regulation in order to "ensure that their representatives serve the public, and not just the wealthy donors who helped put them in office."[188] Justice Kagan expressed a first principle of representative democracy—representatives should be linked first and foremost to a broad base of their constituents, and not to a segment of wealthy donors.[189]

During McCutcheon's Oral Argument, Justice Ginsburg suggested that aggregate limits could force a candidate for elected office to affirmatively seek support from a wider number of her constituents, rather than concentrating on a smaller number of wealthy donors.[190] Justice Ginsburg stated:

> It has been argued that these limits promote expression, promote democratic participation because 184. McCutcheon v. FEC, 134 S. Ct. 1434, 1441 (2014) (plurality opinion).

185. Ariz. Free Enter.,, 131 S. Ct at 2830 (Kagan, J., dissenting).

186. Id. at 2813 (majority opinion).

187. Id. at 2845 (Kagan, J., dissenting). In a scandal, known as "AzScam," nearly ten percent of Arizona's state legislators were caught accepting campaign contributions or bribes in exchange for their support of a piece of legislation. Id. at 2832.

188. Id. at 2845. Justice Kagan opined that the people of Arizona should be respected for passing an initiative that promoted "[r]obust campaigns leading to the election of representatives not beholden to the few, but accountable to the many." Id. at 2845.

189. See id.

190. Transcript of Oral Argument, supra note 76, at *19.

> what they require the candidate to do is, instead of concentrating fundraising on the super-affluent, the candidate would then have to try to raise money more broadly in the electorate. So that, by having these limits, you are promoting democratic participation . . . .[191]

Solicitor General Donald B. Verrilli, Jr. informed the Court during the argument that the cost of the 2010 congressional campaigns was about $1.5 billion and with aggregate contribution caps lifted to $3.6 million, less than 500 people are required to fund the entire campaign.[192] He noted that this results in the risk that "the government will be run of, by, and for those 500 people and that the public will perceive that the government is being run of, by, and for those 500 people."[193]

In fact, Solicitor General Verrilli may have overestimated the number of people who would effectively run the government based on the influence gained through their campaign contributions. In 2014, the 100 biggest campaign donors gave $323 million—almost as much as the $356 million given by the estimated 4.75 million people who gave $200 or less.[194] These numbers almost certainly result in part from the Roberts Court's dismantling of campaign finance regulations crafted by legislators knowledgeable about the pernicious effects of endless campaign fund raising from individuals seeking influence and by voters who passed initiatives to protect the integrity of their government. A critic of big money in politics, who formed a group entitled "Take Back our Republic" with the goal of reducing the influence of wealthy interests on politics stated, "If your real constituency is anyone with a

---

191. Id.; see also Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 21–22 (1976) ("The overall effect of the Act's contribution ceilings is merely to require candidates and political committees to raise funds from a greater number of persons . . . .").

192. Transcript of Oral Argument, supra note 76, at *46–47.

193. Id. at *47.

194. Kenneth P. Vogel, Big Money Breaks Out, POLITICO (Dec. 29, 2014, 5:32 AM), http://www.politico.com/story/2014/12/top-political-donors-113833.html.

bigger check, it just seems to break down representative democracy."[195]

If the representative nature of the democracy is lost, not only will individual constituents be untethered from their representative, but overall the government will not represent the consensus of the people, but only the views of a favored class.[196] Constitutional Scholar Akhil Reed Amar remarks that reasonable limits on the total amount a person may give to all candidates guards against the corruption of the legislature as a whole, otherwise if "every single legislator feels financially beholden to the same one person or the same tiny group of oligarchs, then the soul of democracy itself is at risk."[197] The danger to representative democracy in a holding such as McCutcheon is that representatives will not represent the policy preferences of their constituents and, more broadly, that the Congress of the United States will not represent the interests of the American people, but rather the interests of a wealthy faction of the American people.

---

195. Matea Gold, A Critic of Big Money Emerges on the Right, WASH. POST, Jan. 14, 2015, at A2 (quoting John Pudner).

196. Mark C. Alexander expresses this section's concern that decisions such as McCutcheon may increase the likelihood that representatives will act on behalf of wealthy donors rather than for the broad base of their constituents. Mark C. Alexander, Citizens United and Equality Forgotten, in MONEY, POLITICS, AND THE CONSTITUTION, supra note 127, at 153. Alexander writes that:

> The unchecked presence of money in politics presents a threat to the republican form of government. Currently, wealthy individuals maintain a disproportionate influence at the expense of the many, resulting in the potential for elected officials to betray their responsibility of representation. As the few maintain a disproportionate sway over elected representatives, the representative is more likely to exercise judgment on behalf of the few than on behalf of the many.
>
> . . . .
>
> In order for the republic to be truly representative, the people must have control of their choices—not simply being able to vote, but having their representatives reflect their interests, not those whose financial support enabled their election. Properly understood against this backdrop, regulating money in politics is essential to ensuring a republican government that is responsive to the people.

Id. at 167–68.

197. Amar, supra note 120, at 1034.

V. Deference to the Legislature

In Buckley, the Supreme Court created a judicially-imposed regulatory structure for campaign finance rather than deferring to Congress's constitutional authority to regulate federal elections.[198] In subsequent decisions, the Court modified the regulatory structure that it had established in Buckley. Having taken the dominant role in forging the nation's campaign finance system away from the legislature, the Court has failed to articulate a clear and consistent doctrine that can hold nine Justices. The history since Buckley has been one of a fragmented Court whose members frequently file separate concurrences and dissents.[199] As a result, the Court's campaign finance jurisprudence sustains a significant degree of criticism even from the Justices themselves.[200]

---

198. Article 1, § 4 of the Constitution grants Congress the power to regulate elections of members of the Senate and House of Representatives. U.S. Const. art. 1, § 4. Buckley noted that "The constitutional power of Congress to regulate federal elections is well established and is not questioned by any of the parties in this case." Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 13 (1976).

199. See Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310 (2010), in which Justice Kennedy wrote the opinion for the Court; Justice Thomas joined Justice Kennedy's opinion except for Part IV; Justices Stevens, Ginsburg, Breyer, and Sotomayor joined only Part IV of Justice Kennedy's opinion; Chief Justice Roberts filed a concurring opinion, in which Justice Alito joined; Justice Scalia filed a concurring opinion in which Justice Alito joined and Justice Thomas joined in part; Justice Stevens filed an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part, in which Justices Ginsburg, Breyer, and Sotomayor joined; and Justice Thomas filed an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part. Id. See also McConnell v. FEC, 540 U.S. 93 (2003), overruled in part by Citizens United, 588 U.S. 310, in which Justices Stevens and O'Connor delivered the Court's opinion with respect to BCRA Titles I and II in which Justices Souter, Ginsburg, and Breyer joined; Chief Justice Rehnquist delivered the opinion of the Court with respect to BCRA Titles III and IV, in which Justices O'Connor, Scalia, Kennedy, and Souter joined; Justice Breyer delivered the Court's opinion with respect to BCRA Title V, in which Stevens, O'Connor, Souter, and Ginsburg joined; Justice Scalia filed a concurrence in part and a dissent in part; Justice Thomas filed a concurrence in part and a dissent in part; Justice Kennedy filed a concurrence in part and a dissent in part; Chief Justice Rehnquist filed an opinion dissenting in part; and Justice Stevens filed an opinion dissenting in part. Id.

200. In Randall v. Sorrell, Justice Thomas joined by Justice Scalia referred to "the continuing inability of the Court (and the plurality here) to apply Buckley in a coherent and principled fashion." 548 U.S. 230, 266 (2006) (Thomas, J., concurring). Justice Stevens observed that the Justices "have not always spoken

In effect, the Court has given itself the authority to demarcate permissible and impermissible campaign finance practices. Chief Justice Roberts acknowledged that the Court engages in constitutional line drawing in its campaign finance jurisprudence. "In a series of cases over the past 40 years, we have spelled out how to draw the constitutional line between the permissible goal of avoiding corruption in the political process and the impermissible desire to simply limit political speech."[201] The Chief Justice preceding Roberts, William Rehnquist, questioned whether the Court should be involved in such line drawing. Dissenting in Massachusetts Citizens for Life, Chief Justice Rehnquist wrote that the lines drawn by the majority's decision distinguishing among corporations would more properly be drawn by a legislature rather than the about corruption in a clear or consistent voice." Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 360 (Stevens, J., dissenting). In McCutcheon, Chief Justice Roberts acknowledged that Justice Stevens had made a fair point regarding the Court's lack of clarity or consistency. McCutcheon v. FEC, 134 S. Ct. 1434, 1451 (2014) (plurality opinion). In his FEC v. Nat'l Conservative PAC dissent, Justice White wrote that, "By striking down one portion of an integrated and comprehensive statute, the Court has once again transformed a coherent regulatory scheme into a nonsensical, loophole-ridden patchwork." 470 U.S. 480, 518 (1985) (White, J., dissenting). Robert C. Post wrote that "the Court has been nothing but confused" on the issue of campaign finance and that by "[l]acking a coherent intellectual foundation," the Court has been "bitterly divided, sometimes leaning in favor of reform, sometimes against." CITIZENS DIVIDED, supra note 7, at 3.

---

201. McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1441. Chief Justice Roberts would have the Court draw a line between quid pro quo corruption and general influence, while acknowledging that the line may seem vague. Id. at 1451. In Citizens United, Roberts referred to the "careful line that Buckley drew to distinguish limits on contributions to candidates from limits on independent expenditures on speech." 558 U.S. at 379; see also FEC v. Wis. Right to Life, Inc., 551 U.S. 449, 457 (2007) (drawing a line between campaign advocacy and issue advocacy) ("Our development of the law in this area requires us, however, to draw such a line, because we have recognized that the interests held to justify the regulation of campaign speech and its 'functional equivalent' 'might not apply' to the regulation of issue advocacy (citing McConnell, 540 U.S. at 105, 206 n.88)); Randall, 548 U.S. at 273 (Thomas, J., concurring in the judgment) ("[T]he plurality's determination that this statute clearly lies on the impermissible side of the constitutional line gives no assistance in drawing this line, and it is clear no such line can be drawn rationally."). Justice Thomas was referring to drawing a line to demarcate the amount of money contributed to a candidate for public office that would result in corruption. Id.

judiciary.[202] He observed that the majority's decision was basically legislative in character and recommended leaving the drawing of such lines to Congress if those lines are within Constitutional bounds.[203]

In McCutcheon, Chief Justice Roberts opined that Congress should not be the branch of government to determine the structure of elections, writing: "And those who govern should be the last people to help decide who should govern."[204] It is curious that Chief Justice Roberts would make such a statement because there are significant reasons why the legislature and not the Courts should have the primary role in structuring the election laws. Members of Congress have more knowledge of the intricacies of elections and, more importantly, understand how money is used in elections to gain influence.[205] Judge Richard A. Posner also questioned whether the Court should be so involved in reviewing legislative restrictions on contributions to political campaigns, observing that "the Supreme Court and the lower federal courts have 202. FEC v. Mass. Citizens for Life, 479 U.S. 238, 268 (1986) (Rehnquist, C.J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

203. Id. at 271.

204. McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1441–42.

205. See Citizens United, 558 U.S. at 461 (Stevens, J., dissenting). Justice Stevens wrote instead of running "roughshod over Congress' handwork" by undermining campaign finance laws, the Court should acknowledge that "Congress surely has both wisdom and experience in these matters that is far superior to ours." Id. (quoting Colo. Republican Fed. Campaign Comm'n. v. FEC, 518 U.S. 604, 650 (1996) (Stevens, J., dissenting)). It is incontrovertible that legislators have a better understanding of how their institution works than the judiciary. In McConnell, the Court cited testimony introduced during the district court proceedings in which a former Senator stated, based on his experience, that:

> Special interests who give large amounts of soft money to political parties do in fact achieve their objectives. They do get special access. Sitting Senators and House Members have limited amounts of time, but they make time available in their schedules to meet with representatives of business and unions and wealthy individuals who gave large sums to their parties. These are not idle chit-chats about the philosophy of democracy . . . Senators are pressed by their benefactors to introduce legislation, to amend legislation, to block legislation, and to vote on legislation in a certain way.

540 U.S. at 150–51 (quoting McConnell, 251 F. Supp. 2d 176, 496 (2003), rev'd in part, 540 U.S. 93).

managed to enmesh themselves deeply in the electoral process without understanding it sufficiently well to be able to gauge the consequences of their decisions."[206] Two justices who had actual experience in elections, Byron White,[207] who had a significant role in the campaign of President John F. Kennedy, and Justice Sandra Day O'Connor,[208] who had been elected to state office in Arizona, were inclined to give more deference to Congress's attempts to regulate campaign finance.[209]

The legislature is also better able than the Court to develop a record on the issues involved in campaign finance regulation. It can hold hearings, solicit the verbal and written testimony of ex-

---

206. RICHARD A. POSNER, REFLECTIONS ON JUDGING 84 (2013) ("The Citizens United decision, which removed restrictions on campaign financing by allies and opponents of candidates (provided they are not caught covertly coordinating with their favored candidates), increasingly seems naïve in its denial that massive campaign contributions corrupt the political process, and in it simplistic equation of money to speech."); Richard Briffault, On Dejudicializing American Campaign Finance Law, in MONEY, POLITICS, AND THE CONSTITUTION, supra note 127, at 173, 187 ("Moreover, the Court certainly lacks the deep understanding of how campaign finance operates in practice—how money affects elections and how the raising and spending of campaign money affect the behavior of government and its ability to represent and respond to the interest of the entire electorate—that is hard-wired into the consciousness of elected officials. Today, we have a Court in which not a single justice ever ran for or held elected office.").

207. In Buckley, Justice Byron White was the only justice who would have upheld both FECA's contribution and expenditure limitations. He advocated for the Court to give greater deference to the legislature when reviewing campaign finance regulations. See FEC v. Nat'l Conservative PAC, 470 U.S. 480, 509 (1985) (White, J., dissenting) ("If the elected Members of the Legislature, who are surely in the best position to know, conclude that large-scale expenditures are a significant threat to the integrity and fairness of the electoral process, we should not second-guess that judgment." (citing FEC v. Nat'l Right to Work Comm., 459 U.S. 197, 210 (1982))).

208. Justice O'Connor was a co-author with Justice Stevens of certain sections in McConnell, which upheld most of BCRA in 2003 and adopted a deferential view of Congressional authority to regulate campaign finance. McConnell, 540 U.S. 93. Her departure from the Court and replacement by Justice Samuel Alito tilted the Court's subsequent jurisprudence toward striking down campaign finance laws. In fact, part of Justice O'Connor's opinion in McConnell was overruled by Citizens United where Justice Alito joined the majority opinion.

209. Id. at 189.

perts, and obtain information from across the fifty states. In his McCutcheon dissent, Justice Breyer complained that a record had not been developed in the District Court because the case had been appealed from the grant of a motion to dismiss, preventing the District Court from developing an evidentiary record.[210] Justice Breyer wrote that the development of a record would help the Court determine "the extent to which we should defer to Congress' own judgments, particularly those reflecting a balance of the countervailing First Amendment interests."[211] He observed that the empirical issues regarding the effect of campaign spending on the democratic system "are questions that Congress is far better suited to resolve than are judges."[212] In concluding his dissent, Justice Breyer stated that the McCutcheon plurality "substitutes judges' understandings of how the political process works for the understanding of Congress."[213]

In McCutcheon, the Court devoted substantial time to positing and debating various hypotheticals relating to how a campaign donor might circumvent FECA's base contribution limits. During the oral argument, several justices raised factual hypotheticals. Justice Breyer posed one regarding whether donors can use Super PACs to circumvent the base contribution limits:

> Candidate Smith, we only give him $2,600, but he has a lot of supporters. And each of them—[forty] of them gets a brainstorm. And each of the [forty] puts on the internet a little sign that says, "Sam Smith PAC. This money goes to people like Sam Smith. Great people." Now, we can give each of those [forty] $5,000. They aren't coordinated. They're not established by a single person. Each is independently run. And we know pretty well that that total of $5,000 times [forty] will go to Sam Smith. Okay? What does that violate.[214]

---

210. McCutcheon v. FEC, 134 S. Ct. 1434, 1479 (2014) (Breyer, J., dissenting).

211. Id. at 1480.

212. Id.

213. Id. at 1481.

214. Transcript of Oral Argument, supra note 76, at *4.

This was followed by a back and forth between Justice Breyer and McCutcheon's attorney on whether this set of facts would actually occur. Justice Elena Kagan interjected with another hypothetical that altered the facts.[215] Justice Samuel Alito later described the scenarios as "wild hypotheticals" that are not plausible and lack empirical support.[216] Justice Breyer pointed out that the plurality and the dissent had "differences of opinion on fact-related matters."[217] They disagreed "on the possibilities for circumvention of the base limits in the absence of aggregate limits" and "about how effectively the plurality's 'alternatives' could prevent evasion."[218]

When the Court finds itself enmeshed in debating various hypotheticals, it should consider whether the issue is one better left to the legislature,[219] the branch of government that is best suited to engage in robust debates. Legislators can create a factual record and vote on a resolution of an issue that reflects a consensus judgment among their colleagues who hold diverse views.[220] In contrast, the Court's majority opinions generally do not incorporate the views of the dissenters or find middle ground between strongly held views that exist among the Justices, as well as among the people of a very diverse nation. The legislature's resolution of difficult questions relating to how the political process works will better reflect the views of the people on the foundational issue of representative democracy. In fact, reflecting judicial overreach on the review of campaign finance regulations, the Court has struck-down a referendum enacted by the people themselves.[221]

---

215. Id. at *6–7.

216. Id. at *36.

217. McCutcheon, 134 S. Ct. at 1480 (Breyer, J., dissenting).

218. Id.

219. In his concurrence in Nixon v. Shrink Mo. Gov't PAC, 528 U.S. 377 (2000), Justice Breyer stated that the principal dissent oversimplifies a complex problem in the context of campaign finance turning a difficult constitutional problem into a lopsided dispute between political expression and government censorship. Id. at 399 (Breyer, J., concurring). He advises that it is a question better left to the political branches. Id.

220. In his dissent in Citizens United v. FEC, 558 U.S. 310 (2010), Justice Stevens aptly observed, "In a democratic society, the longstanding consensus on the need to limit corporate campaign spending should outweigh the wooden application of judge-made rules." Id. at 479 (Stevens, J., dissenting).

221. See Ariz. Free Enter. Club's Freedom Club PAC v. Bennett, 131 S. Ct. 2806 (2011).

The Guaranty Clause of the Constitution requires that the government of the United States preserve a republican form of government in the states,[222] and certainly the clause assumes that the federal government has a republican form as well. "The United States shall guarantee to every state in this Union a Republican Form of Government . . . ."[223] The Supreme Court has interpreted the Guaranty Clause as assigning the responsibility of the United States to guarantee a republican form of government to the U.S. Congress.[224] Under this provision of the Constitution, the Court has found that it is Congress's responsibility to determine the contours of the Republic's representative democracy.[225]

In 1884, the Supreme Court recognized the interest that a republican government has in protecting elections from the influence of "insidious corruption."[226] In a unanimous opinion, Justice Samuel Freeman Miller wrote:

> That a government whose essential character is republican, whose executive head and legislative body are both elective, whose numerous and powerful branch of the legislature is elected by the people directly, has no power by appropriate laws to secure this election from the influence of violence, of corruption, and of fraud, is a proposition so startling as to attest attention and demand gravest consideration. If this government is anything more than a mere aggregation of delegated agents of other states and governments, each of which is superior to the general government, it must have the power to pro-

222. U.S. CONST. art. IV, §4. A republic is defined as "a political order in which the supreme power is held by a body of citizens who are entitled to vote for officers and representatives responsible to them." WEBSTER'S II DICTIONARY 998 (1984).

223. U.S. CONST. art. IV, §4.

224. Pac. States Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Oregon, 223 U.S. 118 (1912) (holding that Congress, not the Court, should decide whether an Oregon law enacted by referendum violated the Republican Guarantee Clause); see Deborah Hellman, Defining Corruption and Constitutionalizing Democracy, 111 MICH. L. REV. 1385, 1403–04 (2013) (citing Pac. States Tel., 223 U.S. 118).

225. Hellman, supra note 224, at 1403.

226. Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U.S. 651, 658 (1884).

> tect elections on which its very existence depends, from violence and corruption. If it has not this power it is left helpless before the two great natural and historical enemies of all republics, open violence and insidious corruption.[227]

At this early date in the nation's history, the Court had the wisdom to further observe that "the free use of money in elections, arising from the vast growth of recent wealth in other quarters, presents equal cause for anxiety."[228]

Congress has the authority and responsibility to regulate federal elections and to preserve the Republic. Instead of engaging in constitutional line-drawing that the Justices themselves cannot agree on, the Court should give an increased level of deference to Congress's judgment on campaign finance regulations that are intended to preserve a representative democracy. Moreover, while the Court has an important role in guaranteeing First Amendment freedoms, the issue of money donated to candidates for elected office does not require the high level of constitutional vigilance that the Court has applied to legislative experience and judgment regarding the value of reasonable campaign finance regulations.[229] The Court's emphasis on First Amendment interests has dwarfed the fundamental concern with the preservation of a Republican form of government.

227. Id. at 657–58 (emphasis added). The case itself upheld laws that prohibited two or more persons from conspiring to threaten or intimidate any person from exercising a constitutional right. Id. at 657; see also Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 257 (1967) (White, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part) (quoting Yarbrough, 110 U.S. at 657–58). Justice Byron White began his dissent from the Buckley Court's holding striking down expenditure limits by referencing this passage from Yarbrough. Id.

228. Yarbrough, 110 U.S. at 667.

229. In Randall v. Sorrell, 548 U.S. 230 (2006), Justice Stevens writes that "a legislative judgment that 'enough is enough' should command the greatest possible deference from judges interpreting a constitutional provision that, at best, has an indirect relationship to activity that affects quantity—rather than the quality or the content—of repetitive speech in the marketplace of ideas." Id. at 279–80.

VI. CONCLUSION

Preserving the representative democracy that was carefully and thoughtfully established by this country's founders should be recognized as a compelling government interest. Campaign finance regulations address the concern that money—and not constituent views—may influence the election of and the decisions made by the people's representatives. The Constitution was founded on the principle that the people delegate authority to their representatives. Thereafter, the First Amendment was enacted to enable the people to speak freely on public issues so that their views would be transferred into the policies enacted by their representatives. If the representatives are not reflecting the views expressed by their constituents, then the First Amendment's speech clauses have lost their fundamental purpose.

Moreover, while the First Amendment protects political speech, the burden on speech imposed by campaign finance regulations is measured. The regulations impose limits; they do not suppress all political speech by any speaker, nor do they place any restriction on the content of his speech. In many instances the money donated to a candidate does not fund any speech, but is used solely for non-speech campaign expenses. The Roberts majority in recent campaign finance decisions has taken a nearly absolutist position upholding First Amendment speech in disregard of the actual effect that the regulation has on a money donor's ability to express his political views. The Court fails to balance the speech limitation against the compelling government interest in preserving a representative democracy.

This Article does not assert that all campaign finance regulations should survive First Amendment scrutiny. It does, however, raise a concern that the important government interest in preserving representative democracy is missing from the Court's consideration of campaign finance regulations. And there is no reason for the Court to limit the compelling government interests that can support campaign finance regulations to quid pro quo corruption. The interest in preserving representative democracy may be a sufficiently compelling reason that outweighs the burden on a money donor's First Amendment right to contribute money to candidates for elected office. Further, legislatures should be given some degree of latitude to determine whether campaign finance regulations reasonably protect representative democracy. The result may be that candidates for elected office can focus on engaging voters rather than donors, and the link between constituents and their representatives can be strengthened.

Treating Members of the Military at Least as Well as Inmates and Students: Determining When Military Necessity Requires Infringing Upon Constitutional Rights in Cases Before the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces

RODRIGO M. CARUÇO*

I. INTRODUCTION 62
A. The Inmate Community...64
B. The Student Community...68
C. The Military Community 74
II. THE CONSTITUTION AND THE MILITARY....................................77
A. The Military Deference Doctrine 78
B. The Military Community...81
C. The Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces 91
D. Evolution from Congressional Prerogative to Constitutional Roots..93
E. The Military Necessity Doctrine......................................101
III. SHAPING AN UNDERSTANDING OF MILITARY NECESSITY.......105
A. Defining Military Necessity..105
B. Research Method...107
C. Some Initial Observations on the Results.........................108
1. Inconsistent Articulation of When and How the Military Necessity Doctrine is Applied........109
2. Simple Assertion is Not Enough...............................110
3. Military Necessity Examples in Light of the Evolution in the Military Community and the Court's Constitutional Interpretation....................113
IV. THEMES AND EXAMPLES OF MILITARY NECESSITY................115
A. Mission Accomplishment...116
1. Essential to Mission Accomplishment.......................116
2. Impedes Mission Accomplishment............................119

B. Injury Avoidance 122
1. Grave Danger to Society 122
2. Manifest Injury to the Armed Forces 123
C. Good Order and Discipline 124
1. Demand for Discipline and Duty 125
2. Responsiveness to Command 127
V. A PROPOSED FRAMEWORK FOR THE MILITARY NECESSITY DOCTRINE 129
A. Meeting the Burden for a Different Application of a Rule 129
B. The Proposed Framework in Which to Argue Military Necessity 130
1. Similar Threshold Requirements 130
2. Military Necessity is a Compelling Interest 131
3. The Value of a Narrow Tailoring Approach 131
VI. CONCLUSION 132

I. INTRODUCTION

For substantially similar reasons, three communities in American society are not entitled to the full panoply of rights protected by the Constitution of the United States: inmates, students, and members of the United States military. The individuals within these communities do not give up their rights due to membership. The compelling need for order, discipline, and safety, however, requires that the Constitution be applied to each community differently than how it is applied to the remaining members of American society. For student and inmate communities, the Supreme Court of the United States ("the Court") has remained actively involved in this process. Not only has the Court determined that the needs of these two communities require a different application of the Constitution, it has also articulated the framework that specifically delineates how the Constitution is to be applied.

That has not been the case with regard to the Court's involvement in the military community. Instead, the Court has largely deferred supervision of service member rights to the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces ("CAAF"), the highest court in the military criminal justice system. This Article proposes that the existence of CAAF makes it unnecessary for the Court to supervise the military community as actively as it has in both the inmate and student communities. Unlike the Court in these communities, however, CAAF has yet to adequately develop its framework for how the Constitution interacts with the military community in regards to criminal law.

Cases and controversies within the inmate and student communities arise under existing state and federal judicial systems, and the Court has declared that the unique need for order, discipline, and safety requires that the Constitution be applied to these communities differently than how it is applied to broader American society. Concerning the inmate community, the Court's decision in Turner v. Safley[1] encapsulates its understanding of that community and includes the applicable framework to virtually all circumstances that arise in the inmate community.[2] In slight contrast, the Court's understanding of the student community, as well as the appropriate framework to be applied in an individual case, is best understood through a series of decisions arising in various contexts.

Regardless of which community is the subject of description, it is remarkable how similarly the needs of each community are described. Good order and discipline is paramount. It is, in actuality, the judiciary's response to this compelling interest that is worthy of study.

---

* Rodrigo M. Caruço, Captain, United States Air Force (B.A., University of Central Florida (2006); J.D., magna cum laude, Barry University Dwayne O. Andreas School of Law (2010)), is an Assistant Staff Judge Advocate assigned to the 11th Wing, Joint Base Andrews, Maryland. Prior to entering active duty, Captain Caruço served as a law clerk to the Honorable Charles E. "Chip" Erdmann, United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces. The author is most grateful for the support and encouragement of his wife, Sandy L. Caruço. The opinions and assertions contained herein are the private opinions of the author and are not to be construed as official or reflecting the views of the Department of the Air Force or the Department of Defense.

1. 482 U.S. 78 (1987).

2. Turner remains the landmark expression of the Court's understanding of the inmate community and its principal articulation of how the Constitution is to be applied to that community, though some recent decisions have applied the traditional constitutional rule rather than the Turner framework. See Michael Keegan, The Supreme Court's "Prisoner Dilemma:" How Johnson*, RLUIPA, and* Cutter Re-Defined Inmate Constitutional Claims, 86 NEB. L. REV. 279 (2007) (examining how recent decisions applying strict scrutiny to certain categories of cases impact the traditional Turner framework).

A. The Inmate Community

Though the Court has admitted that prison officials are better positioned to manage and respond to the needs of the inmate community, it has not hesitated to specify the source of inmate rights and the standards to be applied when those rights are infringed. Inmates are not stripped of their constitutional rights solely due to incarceration. The nature of the community, however, requires a different application of those rights. The need for discipline and the imperative of ensuring safety serve as the basis for deferring to the decisions of prison officials. Though those officials are afforded great deference to those ends, their actions are governed by a reasonableness standard. The Court has articulated a multi-factor test for reviewing courts to apply to regulations and actions by prison officials in the inmate community.

Turner remains the leading decision that explores the interplay between the Constitution and the inmate community. In that case, the Missouri Division of Corrections adopted two problematic regulations.[3] The first concerned correspondence between inmates at different institutions.[4] The Division of Corrections allowed inmates to correspond with family members incarcerated in other institutions.[5] It also allowed correspondence concerning legal matters.[6] All other correspondence, however, depended upon how good a particular inmate was, rather than the content of an individual message.[7] The second regulation allowed inmates to marry only upon receiving permission from the superintendent of the prison, which was only given if there was a "compelling reason."[8]

---

3. Turner, 482 U.S. at 81–82.
4. Id. at 81.
5. Id.
6. Id.
7. Id. at 82 ("Trial testimony indicated that as a matter of practice, the determination whether to permit inmates to correspond was based on team members' familiarity with the progress reports, conduct violations, and psychological reports in the inmates' files rather than on individual review of each piece of mail.").
8. Id. The District Court applied the strict scrutiny standard of review and found both regulations to be unconstitutional. Id. at 83. The Eighth Circuit affirmed and "held that the District Court properly used strict scrutiny in evalu-

The Court began by reaffirming a series of principles that frame the analysis of constitutional claims asserted by inmates. First, federal courts are charged with recognizing the valid constitutional claims of inmates.[9] Second, they must protect these fundamental guarantees when unconstitutionally abridged by a prison regulation or practice.[10] Third, it declared that "courts are ill equipped to deal with the increasingly urgent problems of prison administration and reform."[11]

The Court went on to outline why courts must ultimately defer to those charged with administering the prison system. The issues in prison administration were "complex and intractable," and "not readily susceptible of resolution by decree."[12] Consequently, courts must adopt judicial restraint.[13] The Court's role, thus, was to "formulate a standard of review for prisoners' constitutional claims that is responsive both to the 'policy of judicial restraint regarding prisoner complaints and [to] the need to protect constitutional rights.'"[14] It did so in Turner v. Safely by synthesizing four prior decisions that separately addressed inmate rights.[15] ating the constitutionality of the Missouri correspondence and marriage regulations." Id.

---

9. Id. at 84 ("Prison walls do not form a barrier separating prison inmates from the protections of the Constitution.").

10. Id. ("Because prisoners retain these rights, '[w]hen a prison regulation or practice offends a fundamental constitutional guarantee, federal courts will discharge their duty to protect constitutional rights.'" (quoting Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 405–06 (1974))).

11. Id. (quoting Martinez, 416 U.S. at 405).

12. Id. ("As the Martinez Court acknowledged, 'the problems of prisons in America are complex and intractable, and, more to the point, they are not readily susceptible of resolution by decree.'" (quoting Martinez, 416 U.S. at 404–05)). The Court went on to state that "[r]unning a prison is an inordinately difficult undertaking that requires expertise, planning, and the commitment of resources, all of which are peculiarly within the province of the legislative and executive branches of government." Id. at 84–85.

13. Id. at 85. Even further deference is required to state officials. Id. ("Where a state penal system is involved, federal courts have, as we indicated in Martinez, additional reason to accord deference to the appropriate prison authorities." (citing Martinez, 416 U.S. at 405)).

14. Id. (alteration in original) (quoting Martinez, 416 U.S. at 406).

15. Id. at 85–87. The Court recognized that its decision in Martinez established "the proper standard of review" without addressing the "broad questions of 'prisoners' rights.'" Id. at 85 (quoting Martinez, 416 U.S. at 408).

Prison regulations abridging inmates' constitutional rights were to be subject to rational basis review. So long as a regulation remained "rationally related" to the "objectives of prison administration," it would be upheld.[16] This was because decisions regarding prison security are "peculiarly within the province and professional expertise of corrections officials."[17] Thus, they are entitled to substantial deference.[18] Consequently, courts must defer to those officials unless "substantial evidence" indicates that the Government has "exaggerated [its] response" to prison conditions.[19]

The Court went on to articulate a multi-factor test for courts to utilize to determine when a regulation is rationally related to prison administration objectives.[20] There must first "be a 'valid, rational connection' between the prison regulation and the legitimate governmental interest put forward to justify it."[21] Thus, regulations that are "arbitrary or irrational" will not survive.[22] The objective "must be a legitimate and neutral one."[23]

Second, a prison regulation is more likely to survive scrutiny if "'other avenues' remain available for the exercise of the asserted right."[24] Third, courts must look to the effect equal application of the Constitution will have on other inmates and the general allocation of prison resources.[25] Courts should be "particularly deferential" if acknowledging a particular constitutional right "will have a significant 'ripple effect' on fellow inmates or on prison staff."[26]

16. Id. at 86 (quoting Jones v. N.C. Prisoners' Labor Union, Inc., 433 U.S. 119, 129 (1977)).

17. Id. (quoting Pell v. Procunier, 417 U.S. 817, 827 (1974)).

18. Id. at 87 ("[T]he considered judgment of these experts must control . . . ." (quoting Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 551 (1979))).

19. Id. at 86 (quoting Pell, 417 U.S. at 827).

20. Id. at 89–91.

21. Id. at 89 (quoting Block v. Rutherford, 468 U.S. 576, 586 (1984)).

22. Id. at 89–90.

23. Id. at 90.

24. Id. (citing Jones, 433 U.S. at 131). This is clearly more applicable to regulations infringing upon an inmate's First Amendment rights.

25. Id.

26. Id. (citing Jones, 433 U.S. at 132–33).

Finally, a regulation's validity is bolstered if there is no ready alternative.[27] The Court was careful not to employ a "least restrictive means" analysis; it explained that "prison officials do not have to set up and then shoot down every conceivable alternative method of accommodating the claimant's constitutional complaint."[28] Accommodations that result in a "de minimis cost to valid penological interests," however, should always be considered.[29]

This framework, the Court further explained, was necessary in light of the unique needs of the inmate community. Consequently, "[s]ubjecting the day-to-day judgments of prison officials to an inflexible strict scrutiny analysis would seriously hamper their ability to anticipate security problems and to adopt innovative solutions to the intractable problems of prison administration."[30] It would subject every decision by prison administration to Monday morning quarterbacking by a court far removed from the facts on the ground.[31] Thus, courts would become prison administers—meddling, incompetent administrators.[32]

The Court explained that prison officials are charged with the difficult task of maintaining discipline in the inmate community while ensuring the safety of prison officials and the inmates themselves. To this end, prison officials must enjoy a large degree of deference to accomplish that compelling societal interest. The Court, however, has not hesitated to step in to establish the standard to be applied to decisions by those officials, and to articulate its steps. The student community has received similar treatment.

---

27. Id. In contrast, obvious alternatives make it more likely that the challenged regulation is an "exaggerated response." Id.

28. Id. at 90–91.

29. Id. at 91.

30. Id. at 89.

31. Id. ("The rule would also distort the decisionmaking process, for every administrative judgment would be subject to the possibility that some court somewhere would conclude that it had a less restrictive way of solving the problem at hand.").

32. Id. ("Courts inevitably would become the primary arbiters of what constitutes the best solution to every administrative problem, thereby 'unnecessarily perpetuat[ing] the involvement of the federal courts in affairs of prison administration.'" (alteration in original) (quoting Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 407 (1974))).

B. The Student Community

In a fashion similar to the inmate community, the Court has developed and articulated the framework to be applied to constitutional cases in the student community. Students receive the full panoply of constitutional rights; however, the unique needs of the community warrant a different application of the Constitution than that enjoyed by broader American society. Consequently, the need for flexibility in application and deference to leaders of the community requires this different application. In addition, school officials have an obligation to the greater society. They must educate students and inculcate the greater society's values in students in order to prepare them to be productive members of the American democracy. In doing so, school officials must maintain discipline and order in the school. This is imperative to the community's mission of ensuring the health and safety of those it leads. As in the inmate community, the Court has gone further than simply describing why a different application is necessary; it has articulated the specific test, as well as its breadth and depth. Unlike the inmate community, however, the Court's view of the student community is expressed over multiple decisions.

An early example of the Court's view of the student community, and the test it articulated, involved political speech. In December 1965, parents and students in a Des Moines, Iowa school district decided to protest the Vietnam War by wearing black armbands during the holiday season.[33] Upon discovering this plan, school officials met and adopted a policy that required a student wearing such an armband to remove it, or be suspended.[34] Undeterred, three students wore black armbands to school and were subsequently suspended.[35]

The Court acknowledged that the First Amendment applied to students,[36] however, it applied "in light of the special character-33. Tinker v. Des Moines Indep. Cmty. Sch. Dist., 393 U.S. 503, 504 (1969).

34. Id.

35. Id.

36. Id. at 506 ("It can hardly be argued that either students or teachers shed their constitutional rights to freedom of speech or expression at the schoolhouse gate."). Full recognition was the default. Id. at 511 ("In the absence of a istics of the school environment."[37] The Court did not elaborate on these special characteristics in its decision, but made it clear that discipline was essential to the community. Consequently, it articulated the test courts should apply to regulations that infringe upon a student's First Amendment rights.[38] Attempts to prohibit conduct that are nothing more than "a mere desire to avoid the discomfort and unpleasantness that . . . accompany an unpopular viewpoint" will not survive scrutiny.[39] However, rules or regulations that prohibit conduct that would "materially and substantially interfere with the requirements of appropriate discipline in the operation of the school" will be upheld.[40]

The Court fleshed out these special characteristics in a series of subsequent decisions. One such decision involved a challenge to an Ohio statute that empowered a school principal to suspend or expel a student without any sort of due process.[41] Under this statute, the principal need only notify the student's parents within twenty-four hours and state his reasons for the discipline.[42]

Writing for the majority, Justice White acknowledged that "schools are vast and complex."[43] Thus, "[s]ome modicum of discipline and order is essential if the educational function is to be performed."[44] The need for discipline, he continued, arose frequently and at times needed "immediate, effective action."[45] Due process procedures common in criminal proceedings just were not compatible in these situations.[46] Incidents requiring low-level dis-specific showing of constitutionally valid reasons to regulate their speech, students are entitled to freedom of expression of their views.").

---

37. Id.

38. Id. at 509.

39. Id.

40. Id. (quoting Burnside v. Byars, 363 F.2d 744, 749 (5th Cir. 1966)).

41. Goss v. Lopez, 419 U.S. 565, 567 (1975).

42. See OHIO REV. CODE ANN. § 3313.66 (West 1972).

43. Goss, 419 U.S. at 580.

44. Id. In fact, the Court used language in a later decision that, as will be seen later in this Article, appears often in the military setting. See Bd. of Educ. v. Earls, 536 U.S. 822, 830 (2002) ("A student's privacy interest is limited in a public school environment where the State is responsible for maintaining discipline, health, and safety." (emphasis added)).

45. Goss, 419 U.S. at 580.

46. Id. at 583 ("We stop short of construing the Due Process Clause to require, countrywide, that hearings in connection with short suspensions must cipline such as suspension occurred too frequently.[47] To require "even truncated trial-type procedures might well overwhelm administrative facilities in many places and, by diverting resources, cost more than it would save in educational effectiveness."[48] Turning the suspension process into a formal, adversarial process threatened to "make it too costly as a regular disciplinary tool" and may "destroy its effectiveness as part of the teaching process."[49] However, though school officials' authority in the schoolhouse community remained very broad, Justice White concluded, it must comply with constitutional requirements.[50] The Constitution must bend, it seemed, but it shall not break.[51] afford the student the opportunity to secure counsel, to confront and cross-examine witnesses supporting the charge, or to call his own witnesses to verify his version of the incident.").

---

47. Id.

48. Id.

49. Id.

50. Id. at 574 ("The authority possessed by the State to prescribe and enforce standards of conduct in its schools, although concededly very broad, must be exercised consistently with constitutional safeguards.").

51. Four justices dissented on the grounds that the majority did not go far enough in its deference to school officials. Id. at 585 (Powell, J. dissenting) ("The Court holds for the first time that the federal courts, rather than educational officials and state legislatures, have the authority to determine the rules applicable to routine classroom discipline . . . ."). School officials, the dissent argued, needed "wide latitude with respect to maintaining discipline and good order." Id. at 590 (emphasis added). The dissenting justices, who at other times would be in the majority in cases involving the student and military community, expressed a parochial view that sounds eerily familiar to the ears of a member of the military. Id. at 593.

> One who does not comprehend the meaning and necessity of discipline is handicapped not merely in his education but throughout his subsequent life. . . . When an immature student merits censure for his conduct, he is rendered a disservice if appropriate sanctions are not applied or if procedures for their application are so formalized as to invite a challenge to the teacher's authority . . . .

Id. Students must obey. Id. ("Education in any meaningful sense includes the inculcation of an understanding in each pupil of the necessity of rules and obedience thereto."). To the civilian reader, these words carry little to no precedent. To the military lawyer, however, these principles are asserted time and again in the abridgment of certain constitutional rights for the sake of military discipline.

The Court further explained the special needs of the student community in a subsequent decision that determined "the proper standard for assessing the legality of searches conducted by public school officials."[52] A high school teacher in New Jersey discovered two students smoking in the bathroom, a violation of school policy.[53] One admitted violating the policy, but the second, T.L.O., maintained her innocence.[54] The assistant vice principal subsequently escorted T.L.O. to a private office and demanded to see her purse.[55] A visual inspection inside the purse revealed a pack of cigarettes.[56] As he reached into the purse for the cigarettes, the assistant vice principal "noticed a package of cigarette rolling papers."[57] The assistant vice principal thus proceeded to thoroughly search the purse for "further evidence of drug use."[58] He subsequently discovered a small amount of marijuana, a pipe, empty plastic bags, a substantial number of one-dollar bills, an index card listing people that owed T.L.O. money, and letters implicating T.L.O. in drug dealing.[59]

The Court recognized that the Fourth Amendment applied to students[60] and the touchstone of that amendment is reasonableness.[61] However, "what is reasonable depends on the context within which a search takes place."[62] Thus, to determine the appropriate standard of reasonableness for a given class of searches, a court must balance "the need to search against the invasion which the 52. New Jersey v. T.L.O., 469 U.S. 325, 328 (1985).

---

53. Id.

54. Id.

55. Id.

56. Id.

57. Id.

58. Id.

59. Id.

60. Id. at 334 ("It is now beyond dispute that 'the Federal Constitution, by virtue of the Fourteenth Amendment, prohibits unreasonable searches and seizures by state officers.' Equally indisputable is the proposition that the Fourteenth Amendment protects the rights of students against encroachment by public school officials . . . ." (quoting Elkins v. United States, 364 U.S. 206, 213 (1960))).

61. Id. at 337 ("[T]he underlying command of the Fourth Amendment is always that searches and seizures be reasonable . . . .").

62. Id.

search entails."[63] What is noteworthy is the Court did not diminish student rights solely because of a citizen's status as a student. Instead, the compelling need for good order and discipline required some sort of abridgment of rights to the extent necessary to succeed in the educational mission.

Though the need for order and discipline existed in both the schoolhouse and correctional communities, students retained a legitimate expectation of privacy in their personal items, unlike inmates in their prison cells.[64] But this expectation of privacy, the Court held, must be weighed against the "substantial interest of teachers and administrators in maintaining discipline in the classroom and on school grounds."[65] A proper educational environment requires enforcing rules curtailing conduct that "would be perfectly permissible if undertaken by an adult."[66] "[M]aintaining security and order in the schools requires a certain degree of flexibility in school disciplinary procedures, and [the Court has] respected the

---

63. Id. (quoting Camara v. Mun. Court, 387 U.S. 523, 536–37 (1967)). "On one side of the balance are arrayed the individual's legitimate expectations of privacy and personal security; on the other, the government's need for effective methods to deal with breaches of public order." Id.

64. Id. at 338. Here, the Court appears to acknowledge that the Government retains the same interest in both communities, though there should be a distinction between the two:

> Although this Court may take notice of the difficulty of maintaining discipline in the public schools today, the situation is not so dire that students in the schools may claim no legitimate expectations of privacy. We have recently recognized that the need to maintain order in a prison is such that prisoners retain no legitimate expectations of privacy in their cells, but it goes almost without saying that "[t]he prisoner and the schoolchild stand in wholly different circumstances, separated by the harsh facts of criminal conviction and incarceration." We are not yet ready to hold that the schools and the prisons need be equated for purposes of the Fourth Amendment.

Id. at 338–39 (quoting Ingraham v. Wright, 430 U.S. 651, 669 (1977)).

65. Id. at 339.

66. Id. ("Even in schools that have been spared the most severe disciplinary problems, the preservation of order and a proper educational environment requires close supervision of schoolchildren, as well as the enforcement of rules against conduct that would be perfectly permissible if undertaken by an adult.").

value of preserving the informality of the student-teacher relationship."[67]

The interest in maintaining order and discipline in the schoolhouse community "is best served by a Fourth Amendment standard of reasonableness that stops short of probable cause."[68] To assist lower courts in applying this standard, the majority specifically articulated the framework.[69] First, a court must determine if the search was "justified at its inception."[70] This threshold is met if "there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that the search will turn up evidence that the student has violated or is violating either the law or the rules of the school."[71] Second, a court must determine if the actual search was reasonably related "to the cir-

---

67. Id. at 340. Justices Powell and O'Connor concurred but argued that school officials stood in a patriarchal (or matriarchal) role vis-à-vis students:

> The primary duty of school officials and teachers, as the Court states, is the education and training of young people. A State has a compelling interest in assuring that the schools meet this responsibility. Without first establishing discipline and maintaining order, teachers cannot begin to educate their students. And apart from education, the school has the obligation to protect pupils from mistreatment by other children, and also to protect teachers themselves from violence by the few students whose conduct in recent years has prompted national concern. For me, it would be unreasonable and at odds with history to argue that the full panoply of constitutional rules applies with the same force and effect in the schoolhouse as it does in the enforcement of criminal laws.

Id. at 350 (Powell, J., joined by O'Connor, J., concurring). Even the dissent agreed that officials had a legitimate need to swiftly enforce order and discipline:

> When viewed from the institutional perspective, "the substantial need of teachers and administrators for freedom to maintain order in the schools" is no less acute. Violent, unlawful, or seriously disruptive conduct is fundamentally inconsistent with the principal function of teaching institutions which is to educate young people and prepare them for citizenship.

Id. at 376 (Stevens, J., joined by Marshall, J., joined by Brennan, J. as to Part I, concurring in part and dissenting in part) (citation omitted). These views appear again in the Court's decisions on the military community and are applied daily in the application of military discipline. See infra note 74.

68. T.L.O., 469 U.S. at 341–42 (majority opinion).

69. Id.

70. Id. at 341 (quoting Terry v. Ohio, 392 U.S. 1, 20 (1968)).

71. Id. at 342.

cumstances which justified the interference in the first place."[72] Thus, "a search will be permissible in its scope when the measures adopted are reasonably related to the objectives of the search and not excessively intrusive in light of the age and sex of the student and the nature of the infraction."[73]

The preceding paragraphs demonstrate that the Court looks at the inmate and student communities in substantially similar fashion. Though the membership of the two communities stand in substantially different positions, the leaders of the student community are charged with a compelling governmental interest—educating and inculcating students. They consequently need the ability to maintain order and discipline while ensuring the health and safety of those in their charge.

As in the inmate community, the Court has not only declared the framework lower courts are to apply, it has also expanded on its explanation in substantial detail in subsequent decisions. At great length, and over multiple decisions, the Court has explained why order, discipline, and safety are of upmost importance in these communities. It has not approached the military community with the same level of engagement.

C. The Military Community

In contrast to both the inmate and student communities, the Court has never expressly declared that the Constitution applies to members of the military.[74] Instead, it has largely relied upon a

---

72. Id. at 341 (quoting Terry, 392 U.S. at 20).

73. Id. at 342.

74. The Court has charged military courts with protecting the constitutional rights of service members. Burns v. Wilson, 346 U.S. 137, 142 (1953) ("The military courts, like the state courts, have the same responsibilities as do the federal courts to protect a person from a violation of his constitutional rights."). However, just four years later, the Court was unsure to what extent the Bill of Rights applied to the members of the military. Reid v. Covert, 354 U.S. 1, 37 (1957) ("As yet it has not been clearly settled to what extent the Bill of Rights and other protective parts of the Constitution apply to military trials."). A few years later, the military's highest court declared that the Bill of Rights did apply. United States v. Jacoby, 11 U.S.C.M.A. 428, 429 (1960). Since then, the Court appears to assume, without deciding, that the Constitution applies. See, e.g., Parker v. Levy, 417 U.S. 733, 758 (1974) ("While the members of the military are not excluded from the protection granted by the First Amendment, the unique lower court's decisions in that area. Congress created The Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces ("CAAF") in 1950 when it enacted the Uniform Code of Military Justice ("UCMJ").[75] This Article I court, composed of five civilians, supervises a three-tiered military justice system with jurisdiction over three million individuals.[76] In 1960, CAAF declared that the Constitution did apply to service members.[77] Since that declaration, the Court's approach to the military community has been to assume, without deciding, that the Constitution applies.[78]

The existence of CAAF explains the Court's approach to the military community. Unlike in the inmate and student communities, which have no separate judicial system, the Court has not articulated a framework for military courts to apply in constitutional cases. Instead, applying what has been described as the military deference doctrine, the Court has left the development of military law to CAAF.[79] Essentially, the Court has treated the mildifferent character of the military community and of the military mission requires a different application of those protections.").

---

75. Uniform Code of Military Justice, Pub. L. No. 81-506, 64 Stat. 107 (1950) ("An Act to unify, consolidate, revise, and codify the Articles of War, the Articles for the Government of the Navy, and the disciplinary laws of the Coast Guard, and to enact and establish a Uniform Code of Military Justice.").

76. 10 U.S.C. §§ 866–67 (2013); DEP'T OF DEF., 2013 DEMOGRAPHICS: PROFILE OF THE MILITARY COMMUNITY 3 (2013), http://www.militaryonesource.mil/12038/MOS/Reports/2013-Demographics-Report.pdf.

77. Jacoby, 11 U.S.C.M.A. at 429.

78. Compare Reid, 354 U.S. at 37 ("As yet it has not been clearly settled to what extent the Bill of Rights and other protective parts of the Constitution apply to military trials."), with Parker, 417 U.S. at 758 ("While the members of the military are not excluded from the protection granted by the First Amendment, the different character of the military community and of the military mission requires a different application of those protections."). Parker is just one example. There, the Court explained this statement by citing to CAAF's case law, not to any authority in the Constitution itself. Id. at 758 ("The United States Court of Military Appeals has sensibly expounded the reason for this different application of First Amendment doctrines in its opinion in United States v. Priest." (citation omitted)).

79. Further explained in Part II, the military deference doctrine describes the Court's deference to military courts regarding the rights of service members vis-à-vis the Constitution. John F. O'Connor, The Origins and Application of the Military Deference Doctrine, 35 GA. L. REV. 161 (2000). It has evolved from complete non-interference, to patent skepticism of the military justice sysitary community as if it were a state, with CAAF as its highest court, rather than as a part of the federal judicial system.

This makes CAAF a worthy subject of study. Unlike the Court in student and inmate cases, CAAF has not articulated a clear test to determine when military necessity exists and, when it is found, how to determine the boundaries of a rule created due to such necessity. This article seeks to advance the literature toward establishing a clearer framework.[80] As stated earlier, it proposes that the existence of CAAF makes it unnecessary for the Court to inject itself into the military community to the same degree as it has in both the inmate and student communities. Like a state court of last resort, CAAF is entrusted by the Court with supervising the military community, albeit limited to military justice. This is apparent in the Court's more recent decisions, which rely on CAAF's description of the military community, rather than the Court's own understanding of it. Consequently, CAAF is the necessary legal institution to study in order to understand how the Constitution interacts with the military community. Part II turns to CAAF, the Constitution, and the military. It begins with the Court's view of its relationship with the military community, best described as the tem, to the modern day professional deference akin to that given to a state court of last resort. Id. at 164.

---

80. To some degree, this study builds upon John T. Willis's brilliant three article study of CAAF in the 1970s, particularly his second article on the court that studied its development of a constitutional philosophy and the emerging issue of military necessity. See John T. Willis, The United States Court of Military Appeals: Its Origin, Operations and Future, 55 MIL. L. REV. 39 (1972); John T. Willis, The Constitution, The Court of Military Appeals and the Future, 57 MIL. L. REV. 27 (1972); John T. Willis, The United States Court of Military Appeals—"Born Again," 52 IND. L.J. 151 (1976). Around this same time period, Professors Imwinkelried and Zillman compared certain aspects of military and civilian society in response to the Court's decision in Parker, 417 U.S. at 744, in which the Court reiterated that the military is a "society apart" from civilian society. Donald N. Zillman & Edward J. Imwinkelried, Constitutional Rights and Military Necessity: Reflections on the Society Apart, 51 NOTRE DAME L. REV. 396 (1976). The authors identified seven areas in which an argument could be made that require different rules in each society. Id. at 396. Though the authors cited some of CAAF's opinions, their focus was not on how it addressed military necessity. It was, instead, a topical approach drawn from a larger universe. The author has been unable to uncover articles specifically analyzing how CAAF itself has addressed military necessity.

military deference doctrine. Next it describes how the Court has described the community in light of that doctrine. Then, after an introduction to CAAF, it turns to the evolution of CAAF's constitutional interpretation that began with grounding service member rights in the prerogative of Congress and ultimately resulted in grounding service member rights in the Constitution. The analysis then turns to the development of the military necessity doctrine. Two subsequent Parts review CAAF's decisions and group them into three broad categories and six more specific examples of military necessity. Part III begins this process by summarizing some existing attempts by CAAF to define military necessity, the research methods employed by the author in this study, and some initial results that are obstacles to understanding and applying the military necessity doctrine. This section attempts to move the literature forward toward a clear definition of military necessity, particularly in the absence a comprehensive definition developed by CAAF.[81] Part IV separates out three overarching themes and six broad examples of military necessity. It organizes the results of this study into three themes and six examples of military necessity that exist in CAAF's jurisprudence. Practitioners may utilize these examples immediately. In addition, military courts, particularly CAAF itself, may build on these themes and examples to further develop the military necessity doctrine. These results may serve to continue the scholarly discussion toward not only where the doctrine should be today, but also where it is likely to lead tomorrow. Finally, Part V recommends an analytic framework similar to strict scrutiny that can be used to determine when and how to apply a different constitutional standard to the military community.

II. THE CONSTITUTION AND THE MILITARY

The Court has described the needs of the military community in similar terms as used to describe both the inmate and student communities. The needs and characteristics of the student and military communities and the deference that must be given to their leaders are described in particularly similar ways. The Court, however, has intervened in the military community differently than in the inmate and student communities, arguably, because of the existence of CAAF. As mentioned earlier, the Court has assumed, without deciding, that the Constitution applies to the military community. Like the previously discussed communities, the military requires obedience and discipline. Its leaders must also ensure the safety of its members, as well as the safety of the broader society. However, the Court does not go much further than declaring the principle that the needs of the military community, like the inmate and student communities, require a different application of the Constitution. It has not articulated a framework and defined its boundaries as it has for the inmate and student community.

81. Advocates may also advance this literature through appellate advocacy before CAAF by advancing well-researched and reasoned extensions of the definition.

CAAF applies the Constitution to the military in light of the need for order and discipline through what can be termed the military necessity doctrine. This doctrine, however, is not as developed as the Court's doctrine regarding the inmate and student communities. The remainder of this article seeks to advance the development of the military necessity doctrine. At the conclusion of this Part, the reader should understand how the Court views the military community, CAAF's role as the leading legal institution in this community, and CAAF's development of a constitutional framework relative to the Court's actions in the previously discussed inmate and student communities.

A. The Military Deference Doctrine

This selective overview of the military deference doctrine primarily relies on John O'Connor's 2000 study, The Origins and Application of the Military Deference Doctrine.[82] He argues that the doctrine can be classified into three chronological periods: non-interference, patent skepticism, and professional deference.[83] For purposes here, the transition between each period resulted in a shift in the Court's level of engagement with the military community.[84]

82. O'Connor, supra note 79, at 161.

83. See id. at 164.

84. The transitions may also characterize a general shift in society's views toward the military, but that question is beyond the scope of this Article.

Until the 1950s, the Court maintained a nearly complete hands-off approach to military justice cases.[85] So long as the court-martial was convened according to proper procedure, civilian courts were precluded from any sort of substantive review.[86] O'Connor referred to this as the "doctrine of non-interference."[87] O'Connor's analysis of this period is encyclopedic, covering a line of decisions from 1828 to 1953.[88] In sum, the Court held during this period that the Constitution placed complete control over the military in the political branches.[89] Congress raised and supported the army and navy; the President served as Commander-in-Chief.[90] The Constitution, however, said nothing of the judiciary's role in military affairs.[91] Therefore, according to the Court, the Constitution had no legitimate role to play. The need for discipline required this non-interference. Thus, "the military's extraordinary need for obedience and discipline within the ranks was inconsistent with the availability of judicial review for soldiers aggrieved by military practices."[92] As a result, if a court-martial convened in accordance with proper procedure, proceeded according to that procedure, and did not issue a punishment forbidden by law, civilian courts would not interfere.[93]

The pendulum swung to the complete opposite end of the spectrum by the mid-1950s as the Court transitioned from non-interference to patent skepticism. Over the subsequent two decades, the Court appeared to have lost faith in the military justice system as a whole.[94] Thus, in a series of decisions, it sought to

---

85. See O'Connor, supra note 79, at 164.

86. See id.

87. See id.

88. See id. at 165–97.

89. Id. at 166.

90. Id.

91. Id.

92. Id. at 167.

93. Id. at 175 (quoting Dynes v. Hoover, 61 U.S. (20 How.) 65, 82 (1857). It is important to note that at this point in military legal history, no judicial appellate system existed. Courts-martial were reviewed administratively within the particular service. See Dynes, 61 U.S. (20 How.) at 74 ("No reviewing tribunal has been established, although the Secretary of the Navy and the President, in effect, act as revising officers, where their concurrence is required before the adjudication of the court can be carried into effect.").

94. See O'Connor, supra note 79, at 164.

limit the reach of military courts to the maximum extent possible.[95] This period culminated in Justice Douglas's majority decision in O'Callahan v. Parker, which required the military to prove a service connection between the offense and military service in order for the military to have jurisdiction over the offense.[96] Consequently, crimes committed by service members off base and out of uniform, without any connection to the member's military service, were now beyond the reach of military courts. Nearly two decades after Congress enacted monumental and sweeping reforms to military justice through the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ), the Court doubted "the legitimacy of the entire process of military justice."[97] It was a system necessary for maintaining discipline, and thus inept at ensuring justice.[98]

By the 1970s, the Court's membership changed yet again, and so did its view of the military justice system.[99] Over the next two decades, and primarily through the pen of then-Justice Rehnquist, the Court firmly established the modern day military deference doctrine.[100] It is not quite complete non-interference. Today, the Court will entertain substantive constitutional challeng-

---

95. See id.

96. 395 U.S. 258, 273–74 (1969), overruled by Solorio v. United States, 483 U.S. 435, 450–51 (1987).

97. O'Connor, supra note 79, at 198. For one scholar's argument on Justice Douglas's anti-military ideology and its impact on the O'Callahan decision, see Joshua E. Kastenberg, Cause and Effect: The Origins and Impact of Justice William O. Douglas's Anti-Military Ideology from World War II to O'Callahan v. Parker, 26 T.M. COOLEY L. REV. 163 (2009).

98. O'Callahan, 395 U.S. at 265–66.

99. See O'Connor, supra note 79, at 164.

100. See id. at 216–17 ("It was Justice Rehnquist who deftly wove together precedents from the Court's era of noninterference and from the Warren Court's era of skepticism to create the Court's modern military deference doctrine."). Justice Rehnquist's majority opinion in Solorio expressly overruled O'Callahan, eliminating the service connection requirement and granting jurisdiction to military courts solely on the military status of the service member. Solorio, 483 U.S. at 450–51. Justice Rehnquist's approach to military justice was buoyed by legislative enactments, such as the creation of a military judge in the Military Justice Act of 1968. O'Connor, supra note 79, at 217. "Thus, by the 1970s, courts-martial resembled civilian court proceedings much more than they had prior to the creation of the office of the military judge." Id.

es; however, it grants tremendous deference to military courts.[101] This professional deference, as will be seen in subsequent paragraphs, is due to the extraordinary need for discipline and order in the military community.

Whether the military's existence is necessary to fight and win wars or is a danger to the Bill of Rights, the Court has articulated a consistent vision of the community and its needs. Its quibbles have been with the military as an institution and its justice system, not with the community it controls. With that in mind, it is now possible to compare the Court's engagement with the military community to its engagement with the inmate and student communities.

B. The Military Community

A sampling of decisions in the middle to later twentieth century encapsulates the Court's modern vision of the military community, and its unwillingness to engage at the same breadth and depth as the inmate and student communities. An initial example involved an Army doctor that filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus in a U.S. district court, requesting that the court order the Army to discharge the doctor because he had not been "assigned to the specialized duties nor given the commissioned rank to which he claim[ed] to be entitled."[102] Perhaps as part of working through the transition from non-interference to patent skepticism, the Court wasted little time disposing of the case.[103] However, the following description of the military community would find itself often repeated in later military courts as the justification for a different application of the Constitution to service members: "The military constitutes a specialized community governed by a separate discipline from that of the civilian. Orderly government requires that the judiciary be as scrupulous not to interfere with legitimate Army matters as the Army must be scrupulous not to intervene in judicial matters."[104] Later in the same term, the Court de-

101. See O'Connor, supra note 79, at 215–16 ("There would be a substantive review to constitutional challenges of military legislation, but that review would be particularly solicitous of Congress's estimation of the needs of a well-functioning military.").

102. Orloff v. Willoughby, 345 U.S. 83, 84 (1953).

103. See id. at 93 ("[J]udges are not given the task of running the Army.").

104. Id. at 94.

clared that civilian habeas corpus review will only reach whether the military system gave fair consideration to an accused's claims.[105] In doing so, it reinforced why the military community needed different rules, but unlike in inmate and student cases, the Court also declared that it would not be the one to determine the parameters of this framework:

> Military law, like state law, is a jurisprudence which exists separate and apart from the law which governs in our federal judicial establishment. This Court has played no role in its development; we have exerted no supervisory power over the courts which enforce it; the rights of men in the armed forces must perforce be conditioned to meet certain overriding demands of discipline and duty, and the civil courts are not the agencies which must determine the precise balance to be struck in this adjustment. The Framers expressly entrusted that task to Congress.[106]

In later decisions, the Court began describing the military community in more detail, though never to the extent it did in inmate and student cases.

One such decision involved the military's attempt to court-martial a civilian for crimes committed prior to his honorable discharge from the United States Air Force ("USAF"). The USAF convicted Robert W. Toth for a murder he committed in Korea while on active duty.[107] At the time of his arrest and subsequent court-martial, Toth was a civilian, honorably discharged from service five months prior to his arrest.[108] At that time, Article 3 of the UCMJ allowed the military to prosecute former service members 105. Burns v. Wilson, 346 U.S. 137, 144 (1953) ("[W]hen a military decision has dealt fully and fairly with an allegation raised in that application, it is not open to a federal civil court to grant the writ simply to re-evaluate the evidence." (citing Whelchel v. McDonald, 340 U.S. 122 (1950))).

106. Id. at 140.

107. United States ex rel. Toth v. Quarles, 350 U.S. 11, 13 (1955).

108. Id.

for offenses committed while on active duty, if that offense carried a maximum punishment of five years or more in confinement.[109]

The Toth decision occurred during the Court's period of patent skepticism of military justice. The Court determined that the military could not exercise court-martial jurisdiction over a civilian no longer connected to military service.[110] In describing why military courts were insufficient in judicial matters, the Court described the military as a monolithic community with a single, overriding purpose for existence. It began by stating that "[i]t is the primary, indeed the sole business of [Article III] courts to try cases and controversies between individuals and between individuals and the Government."[111] In contrast, "it is the primary business of armies and navies to fight or be ready to fight wars should the occasion arise."[112] Criminal prosecution as a means to maintain discipline is but an incidental part of the military community's existence.[113] At the time, the Court stated, military justice amounted to an additional duty, one that diverts those involved from their primary function.[114] The Toth decision then turned briefly to the needs of the military community:

> Free countries of the world have tried to restrict military tribunals to the narrowest jurisdiction deemed absolutely essential to maintaining discipline among troops in active service. Even as late as the Seventeenth Century standing armies and courts-martial were not established institutions in England. Court-martial jurisdiction sprang from the belief that within the military ranks there is need for

---

109. Id. at 13 n.2.

110. Id. at 23.

111. Id. at 15.

112. Id. at 17.

113. Id. ("But trial of soldiers to maintain discipline is merely incidental to an army's primary fighting function.").

114. Id. ("To the extent that those responsible for performance of this primary function are diverted from it by the necessity of trying cases, the basic fighting purpose of armies is not served.").

> a prompt, ready-at-hand means of compelling obedience and order.[115]

In a sense, this view makes sense. Toth was decided in 1955, with World War II and the Korean War fresh in the minds of American society, as well as the Court. The military of that era looked far different than the military of today.[116] The mobilization required to fight those wars was unheard of in American society. It thus makes sense to understand the military community of that time as existing solely for the purpose of fighting wars. As those wars gave way to the guerilla warfare of Vietnam, however, the Court had additional opportunities to examine the military community.

The standard bearer of the Court's patent skepticism decisions, O'Callahan v. Parker, provides some of that additional insight into its theory of the military community. Off base and in civilian clothes, James O'Callahan, a member of the United States Army, broke into a hotel room and tried to rape a young girl.[117] Honolulu police turned him over to military police after determining that he was a member of the military.[118] The Army subsequently convicted O'Callahan of a number of offenses, including Article 134 of the UCMJ.[119] Article 134 prohibits conduct that

---

115. Id. at 22. The dissent might have disagreed with the majority's legal analysis, but it did not disagree with the needs of the military community:

> War is a grim business, requiring sacrifice of ease, opportunity, freedom from restraint, and liberty of action. Experience has demonstrated that the law of the military must be capable of prompt punishment to maintain discipline. The power to regulate the armed forces must have been granted to Congress so that it would have the authority over its armed forces that other nations have long exercised, subject only to limitations of the Constitution.

Id. at 29.

116. A social history of military life in earlier eras relative to modern military life would be particularly relevant to understanding the role of military legal institutions. However, that is beyond the scope of this Article.

117. O'Callahan v. Parker, 395 U.S. 258, 259–60 (1969), overruled by Solorio v. United States, 483 U.S. 435 (1987).

118. Id. at 260.

119. Id.

results in prejudice to good order and discipline or tends to bring discredit to the armed forces.[120]

After a scathing rebuke of the military justice system, Justice Douglas's majority opinion held that in order for the military to have jurisdiction to prosecute a military member, there must be a connection between the offense and military service; finding no such connection, the Court overturned O'Callahan's conviction.[121]

The Court began by reinforcing the principle that military society required a different application of the Constitution.[122] The opinion subsequently explained why the majority was prepared to accept this principle, though only to the extent necessary to maintain order:

> That a system of specialized military courts, proceeding by practices different from those obtaining in the regular courts and in general less favorable to defendants, is necessary to an effective national defense establishment, few would deny. But the justification for such a system rests on the special needs of the military, and history teaches that expansion of military discipline beyond its proper domain carries with it a threat to liberty. This Court, mindful of the genuine need for special military courts, has recognized their propriety in their appropriate sphere . . . .[123]

After all, the majority noted, "military law has always been and continues to be primarily an instrument of discipline, not justice."[124] It was, essentially, a necessary evil.[125]

---

120. Id. at 260 n.1.

121. Id. at 273–74.

122. Id. at 261 ("[The Constitution] recognizes that the exigencies of military discipline require the existence of a special system of military courts in which not all of the specific procedural protections deemed essential in Art. III trials need apply.").

123. Id. at 265.

124. Id. at 266 (quoting Glasser, Justice and Captain Levy, 12 COLUM. F. 46, 49 (1969)).

125. Though the dissent strenuously objected to the majority's creation of the service connection requirement, it appeared to agree with the majority's characterization of the military community. Id. at 274 (Harlan, J., joined by

With the addition of Justice Rehnquist to the Court in 1971, its view of the military transitioned to one of professional deference. Though the lens changed, the description of the military community remained relatively the same. This is best demonstrated in a landmark military justice opinion that reviewed the court-martial of an Army doctor who refused to execute his duties and attempted to dissuade Special Forces personnel from participating in the Vietnam War.[126]

Captain (CPT) Howard Levy served as the Chief of the Dermatological Service of the United States Army Hospital at Fort Jackson, South Carolina.[127] Disagreeable to the Vietnam War, he refused a direct order to train members of the Army Special Forces.[128] He also made a series of public statements thought to be

---

Stewart, J., and White, J., dissenting). Justice Harlan argued that "[t]he United States has a vital interest in creating and maintaining an armed force of honest, upright, and well-disciplined persons, and in preserving the reputation, morale, and integrity of the military services." Id. at 281. This requires controlling what service members can do both on and off base:

> [B]ecause its personnel must, perforce, live and work in close proximity to one another, the military has an obligation to protect each of its members from the misconduct of fellow servicemen. The commission of offenses against the civil order manifests qualities of attitude and character equally destructive of military order and safety. The soldier who acts the part of Mr. Hyde while on leave is, at best, a precarious Dr. Jekyll when back on duty.

Id. (footnote omitted). The military's mission, the dissent continued, required different rules. Thus, the military had "a proper concern in keeping its own house in order, by deterring members of the armed forces from engaging in criminal misconduct on or off the base, and by rehabilitating offenders to return them to useful military service." Id. at 282. The soldier, the dissent argued, must remain with his unit:

> A soldier detained by the civil authorities pending trial, or subsequently imprisoned, is to that extent rendered useless to the service. Even if he is released on bail or recognizance, or ultimately placed on probation, the civil authorities may require him to remain within the jurisdiction, thus making him unavailable for transfer with the rest of his unit or as the service otherwise requires.

Id. at 282–83.

126. Parker v. Levy, 417 U.S. 733, 735–37 (1974).

127. Id. at 735–36.

128. Id. at 736.

disloyal to the United States.[129] Consequently, the Army charged and convicted him of disobeying a lawful order and promoting disloyalty and disaffection among the troops, in violation of Articles 133 and 134 of the UCMJ.[130] In upholding Congress's enactment of these two Articles, the Court synthesized all its prior military community decisions and arguably also synthesized its description of the military community.

Writing for the majority, Justice Rehnquist began by blending prior non-intervention and patent skepticism decisions into his theme of a separate community with a nearly unquestionable need for discipline and obedience.[131] What is notable for purposes here is Justice Rehnquist's selected quotes from two prior non-intervention decisions. The first sheds light on the majority's perception of the military community: "[a]n army is not a deliberative body. It is the executive arm. Its law is that of obedience. No question can be left open as to the right to command in the officer, or the duty of obedience in the soldier."[132] It is noteworthy that the majority opinion neglected to address what, if any, differences existed between the Army of 1890 (the army in In re Grimley) and the Army of 1974. The inclusion of this quote, however, may indicate that the majority did not really care to address any differences in the community. The second selected quote from the opinion reinforced the concept that maintaining discipline is "essen-

---

129. Id. at 736–37. The Court provided a sampling of those comments:

> The United States is wrong in being involved in the Viet Nam War. I would refuse to go to Viet Nam if ordered to do so. I don't see why any colored soldier would go to Viet Nam: they should refuse to go to Viet Nam and if sent should refuse to fight because they are discriminated against and denied their freedom in the United States, and they are sacrificed and discriminated against in Viet Nam by being given all the hazardous duty and they are suffering the majority of casualties. If I were a colored soldier I would refuse to go to Viet Nam and if I were a colored soldier and were sent I would refuse to fight. Special Forces personnel are liars and thieves and killers of peasants and murderers of women and children.

Id.

130. Id. at 737–39. Article 133 is a rather broad statute that prohibits conduct determined to be unbecoming of an officer. See 10 U.S.C. § 933 (2013).

131. Levy, 417 U.S. at 734–44 (citations omitted).

132. Id. at 743 (quoting In re Grimley, 137 U.S. 147, 153 (1890)).

tial."[133] This passage served to support the Court's conclusion that it "has long recognized that the military is, by necessity, a specialized society separate from civilian society."[134]

In addition to repurposing passages from arguably outdated or at least questionable precedent, the majority further explored some of the differences that exist between the civilian and military community. One such difference was that the relationship of the Government to service member was different than that of Government to civilian: "It is not only that of lawgiver to citizen, but also that of employer to employee. Indeed, unlike the civilian situation, the Government is often employer, landlord, provisioner, and lawgiver rolled into one. That relationship also reflects the different purposes of the two communities."[135] It is safe to assume that the purpose of the military community referred to in Levy was to fight and win wars, which was quite different than any purpose for a civilian community. Because of that fighting purpose, the military community simply could not have the same autonomy as that found in civilian life:

> While members of the military community enjoy many of the same rights and bear many of the same burdens as do members of the civilian community, within the military community there is simply not the same autonomy as there is in the larger civilian community. The military establishment is subject to the control of the civilian Commander in Chief and the civilian departmental heads under him, and its function is to carry out the policies made by those civilian superiors.[136]

---

133. Id. at 744 ("And to maintain the discipline essential to perform its mission effectively, the military has developed what 'may not unfitly be called the customary military law' or 'general usage of the military service.'" (quoting Martin v. Mott, 12 Wheat. 19, 35 (1827))).

134. Id. at 743.

135. Id. at 751.

136. Id.

The job of the military community, the majority re-asserted, was to obey.[137] As a consequence of these differences, the Court held that Congress was entitled to more flexibility when Articles of the UCMJ enacted by that body were challenged as unconstitutionally vague.[138]

Two additional principles emerged from the majority opinion in Parker v. Levy. First, the Court's description of the military community remains one of its only efforts to explain why the community is different:

> While the members of the military are not excluded from the protection granted by the First Amendment, the different character of the military community and of the military mission requires a different application of those protections. The fundamental necessity for obedience, and the consequent necessity for imposition of discipline, may render permissible within the military that which would be constitutionally impermissible outside it.[139]

The second principle that emerged is the Court's reliance on CAAF to provide the necessary substance. In Levy, the Court quoted CAAF's decision in United States v. Priest to explain the reasons for the differences alluded to in the Court's earlier declaration that the military community was different, in this case regarding free speech rights:

> In the armed forces some restrictions exist for reasons that have no counterpart in the civilian community. Disrespectful and contemptuous speech, 137. Id. ("As we observed in In re Grimley, the military 'is the executive arm' whose 'law is that of obedience.'" (quoting Grimley, 137 U.S. at 153))).

138. Id. at 756–57 ("Because of the factors differentiating military society from civilian society, we hold that the proper standard of review for a vagueness challenge to the articles of the Code is the standard which applies to criminal statutes regulating economic affairs."). This standard would uphold a statute if, in light of the conduct with which an individual was charged, he could have reasonably understood that his conduct was prohibited. Id. at 757 (citations omitted).

139. Id. at 758.

> even advocacy of violent change, is tolerable in the civilian community, for it does not directly affect the capacity of the Government to discharge its responsibilities unless it both is directed to inciting imminent lawless action and is likely to produce such action. In military life, however, other considerations must be weighed. The armed forces depend on a command structure that at times must commit men to combat, not only hazarding their lives but ultimately involving the security of the Nation itself.[140]

This reliance on CAAF to essentially do the "heavy lifting" of explaining the need for a different application of the Constitution to the military community supports this Article's hypothesis that the reason for the Court's hands off approach to articulating and refining a framework for lower courts is due to the existence of a supreme court that operates more akin to a state supreme court than a federal circuit court of appeals.[141]

Though its view of the military community remained consistent and abridged, the Court rejected the service connection requirement established by O'Callahan in 1987 through its decision in Solorio v. United States.[142] As discussed earlier, this occurred

---

140. Id. at 758–59 (citations omitted) (quoting United States v. Priest, 21 U.S.C.M.A. 564, 570 (1972)).

141. The concurring opinion saw the community in the same light. Justice Blackmun wrote that the prospect of war required a different standard: "however unfortunate it may be, it is still necessary to maintain a disciplined and obedient fighting force." Id. at 763 (Blackmun, J., concurring). Even the dissent agreed with the view of the community. Justice Douglas noted that the military community required discipline and obedience. Id. at 768 (Douglas, J., dissenting) ("The military by tradition and by necessity demands discipline; and those necessities require obedience in training and in action."). Orders thus had to be obeyed. Id. ("A command is speech brigaded with action, and permissible commands may not be disobeyed."). Dissent was simply not a part of the military community. Id. at 770 ("The military, of course, tends to produce homogenized individuals who think—as well as march—in unison."). This was a direct consequence of a draft army. Id. at 772 ("The power to draft an army includes, of course, the power to curtail considerably the liberty of the people who make it up.").

142. Solorio v. United States, 483 U.S. 435, 450–51 (1987).

during the Court's formulation of the modern day military deference doctrine. In doing so, the Court proclaimed why it must grant substantial deference to the decisions of military courts. It concluded that, "Congress has primary responsibility for the delicate task of balancing the rights of servicemen against the needs of the military."[143]

Though the Court has viewed the military in different lights over the years, it has been hesitant to engage this community at the same breadth and depth as the inmate and student communities. Even during periods of patent skepticism, the Court sought to limit its deference to the extent necessary to maximize the liberty of service members, but it never stepped into a complete supervisory role of the military justice system.

The advent and evolution of CAAF legitimized this shallow level of engagement. The Court could continue to make general statements that the military community required a different application of the Constitution due to the overriding need for discipline and order, because a court now existed that had the jurisdiction and experience to interpret the relationship between the Constitution and service members similar to the Court's role in interpreting the relationship between the Constitution and students and inmates, and to articulate the framework lower courts should apply when determining whether to sanction the infringement of a student's or inmate's rights.

C. The Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces

CAAF, the highest court in the military community, has jurisdiction and must review all court-martial convictions resulting in a sentence of death and decisions by military intermediate appellate courts ordered reviewed by the Judge Advocate General of either service.[144] In addition, CAAF has jurisdiction to review decisions by these intermediate appellate courts if the accused demonstrates good cause in his petition.[145] Decisions by CAAF are reviewable by the Court.[146] In contrast, the denial of a petition

---

143. Id. at 447.
144. 10 U.S.C. § 867(a)(1)-(2) (2013).
145. Id. at § 867(a)(3).
146. Id. at § 867a(a).

for review is final; no further relief is available within the military justice system.[147]

CAAF has come a long way in the approximately sixty years since its creation.[148] In fact, its name symbolizes CAAF's journey from arguably simply an administrative agency to a federal court of appeals in nearly every substantive way. The original draft of the UCMJ called CAAF the "Judicial Council."[149] After much debate concerning how naming CAAF a "council" may affect its stature (as well as whether to include life tenure for its judges), Congress officially named the new court the Court of Military Appeals ("CMA").[150] This was a compromise of sorts between advocates of a strong independent court made up of civilians, and those who wanted something much less ambitious.[151] Attempts to make CAAF a "court of the United States," thus constituted under Article III, were opposed by senators such as Senator Estes Kefauver, who expressed concern that the initial membership would be made up of "lame ducks" and who argued that experience may eventually demonstrate the necessity of changing CAAF's membership.[152] But in 1968, Congress answered the question of CAAF's status as a court. It renamed the Court of Military Appeals the United States Court of Military Appeals, a court established under Article I of the Constitution and located within the Department of Defense only for administrative purposes.[153] The House made it clear:

> One of the purposes of this bill is to make it abundantly clear in the law that the Court of Military Appeals is a court . . . that the Court of Military

147. Id.

148. Professor Jonathan Lurie's two-volume work on CAAF remains one of the few comprehensive published studies of that legal institution. See JONATHAN LURIE, ARMING MILITARY JUSTICE (Princeton Univ. Press 1992); JONATHAN LURIE, PURSUING MILITARY JUSTICE (Princeton Univ. Press 1998).

149. John T. Willis, The United States Court of Military Appeals: Its Origin, Operation and Future, 55 MIL. L. REV. 39, 61–62 (1972).

150. See id. at 63–71.

151. See id.

152. Uniform Code of Military Justice: Hearing on S. 857 and H.R. 4080 Before the Subcomm. of the S. Comm. on Armed Servs., 81st Cong. 313 (1949); 95 CONG. REC. 1293, 1442–43 (1950).

153. Act of June 15, 1968, Pub. L. No. 90-340, 82 Stat. 178.

> Appeals is a court and does have the power to question any provision of the manual or any executive regulation or action as freely as though it were a court constituted under [A]rticle III of the Constitution.[154]

However, proposals to solidify CAAF's status continued. In one example, then-Chief Judge Everett, a leading military law scholar, argued that CAAF should be renamed once again and its jurisdiction expanded.[155] His proposal included renaming CAAF the United States Court of Appeals for the Military Circuit, with jurisdiction over all legal issues that fit within military related categories established by Congress.[156] To an extent, Congress listened. In 1994, CAAF was renamed again, this time to the United States Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces.[157] Today CAAF, with a few glaring exceptions, such as 15 year terms rather than life tenure and a requirement that no more than three seats come from the same political party, looks and acts just like an Article III court.[158] As such, it has taken the lead in interpreting how the Constitution interacts with the military community in the area of military justice.

D. Evolution from Congressional Prerogative to Constitutional Roots

It has long been settled in military courts that the Constitution applies to service members.[159] But it was not always this way. For a time, service members did not have the same constitutional

---

154. H.R. Rep. No. 90-1480, at 2054 (1968).

155. Robinson O. Everett, Some Observations on Appellate Review of Court-Martial Convictions—Past, Present and Future, 31 FED. B. NEWS & J. 420, 421 (1984).

156. Id. at 421–22.

157. National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1995, Pub. L. No. 103-337, § 924(a)(1), 108 Stat. 2663.

158. See Weiss v. United States, 510 U.S. 163, 179 (1994) ("Congress has taken affirmative steps to make the system of military justice more like the American system of civilian justice . . . .").

159. United States v. Jacoby, 11 U.S.C.M.A. 428, 430 (1960).

rights guaranteed to their fellow citizens; Congress could grant, or exclude, any right it wanted through the UCMJ.[160]

CAAF addressed the origin of service members' rights in its first term. A special court-martial convicted Hospitalman ("HN") Raymond Clay of improperly wearing the uniform and disorderly conduct for getting into a fight with locals in Korea.[161] However, the president of the court[162] did not instruct it "on the elements of the offense, the presumption of innocence, and the burden of proof, as required" by the UCMJ and the Manual for Courts-Martial ("MCM").[163] While deciding whether the president

---

160. United States v. Clay, 1 U.S.C.M.A. 74, 77 (1951). To be sure, the Constitution has always applied to the military. It grants Congress the authority to "make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces." U.S. CONST. art. 1, § 8, cl. 14. In addition, the president, as commander-in-chief, retains authority to command the military. U.S. CONST. art. 2, § 2, cl. 1. Until CAAF first addressed the issue in 1951, it only mattered that the court-martial had jurisdiction over the person and the offense. Johnson v. Sayre, 158 U.S. 109, 118 (1895). If so, such court's decision would be unreviewable by civil courts. Id.

161. Clay, 1 U.S.C.M.A. at 76–77.

162. Prior to the Military Justice Act of 1983, which created the military judge, the president of the court-martial was the closest to the role of judge in a special court-martial. This individual, the highest ranking member of the panel (the military jury), instructed the rest of the panel as required (i.e. elements, presumptions of innocence, reasonable doubt, burden of proof, etc.) and ruled on interlocutory questions. MANUAL FOR COURTS-MARTIAL, UNITED STATES 57–58 (1951) [hereinafter 1951 MCM]. Today, the president of a panel will preside over a special court-martial only in the rare case that a military judge is not appointed to it. MANUAL FOR COURTS-MARTIAL, UNITED STATES, R.C.M. 502(b)(2)(C) (2012) [hereinafter MCM]. In fact, at least one service expressly requires all special courts-martial to include a detailed military judge. See U.S. DEP'T OF ARMY, REG. AR 27-10, MILITARY JUSTICE 37 (2011) [hereinafter AR 27-10], http://www.apd.army.mil/pdffiles/r27_10.pdf ("In each special court-martial (SPCM), a military judge shall be detailed except when a military judge cannot be detailed because of physical conditions or military exigencies . . . .").

163. Clay, 1 U.S.C.M.A. at 76. Clay pleaded guilty to improper wear of the uniform and not guilty to the disorder offense, so the court-martial proceeded to trial only on the disorder offense. Id. The intermediate appellate court affirmed the conviction and held that Clay was not substantially prejudiced; The Judge Advocate General ("TJAG") of the Navy certified to CMA. Id. Article 67, UCMJ, authorizes TJAG of each service to "certify" cases to CAAF. 10 U.S.C. § 867(a)(2) (2013). Certification means that CAAF must hear all cases of the court violated the provision within the MCM and the UCMJ, CAAF addressed service members' rights.

In a unanimous opinion, CAAF held that service members are only entitled to the rights granted them by Congress, not the Constitution.[164] Through the UCMJ, Congress established a series of rights CAAF described as "military due process,"[165] but nothing more. A congressional right that is also a constitutional right might be interpreted in the same way, but a constitutional right not found in the UCMJ simply did not exist in the military.[166] decided by an intermediate appellate court (today known as a Court of Criminal Appeals) that any TJAG orders reviewed.

---

164. "[W]e do not bottom those rights and privileges on the Constitution. We base them on the laws enacted by Congress." Clay, 1 U.S.C.M.A. at 77.

165. Id. Military due process included the following rights:

> To be informed of the charges against him; to be confronted by witnesses testifying against him; to cross-examine witnesses for the government; to challenge members of [CAAF] for cause or peremptorily; to have a specified number of members compose general and special courts-martial; to be represented by counsel; not to be compelled to incriminate himself; to have involuntary confessions excluded from consideration; to have [CAAF] instructed on the elements of the offense, the presumption of innocence, and the burden of proof; to be found guilty of an offense only when a designated number of members concur in a finding to that effect; to be sentenced only when a certain number of members vote in the affirmative; and to have an appellate review.

Id. at 77–78. However, CAAF seemed to carve out an escape valve if it decided to one day change its mind:

> [W]e have not intended to make the list all-inclusive, nor to imply others might not be substantial. We have merely enumerated those which are of such importance as to readily catalogued in that category. . . . [W]e need go no further than to hold that the failure to afford to an accused any of the enumerated rights denied him military due process and furnishes grounds for us to set aside the conviction.

Id. at 78.

166. See, e.g., United States v. Rosato, 3 U.S.C.M.A. 143, 145 (1953) ("Dispelling any doubt of its application to the military services, Congress included the substance of the Fifth Amendment in the Uniform Code of Military Justice, as Article 31 . . . .").

CAAF again rejected the notion that the Constitution applied to service members two years later in 1953.[167] It agreed that military due process included the right to confront witnesses, but since Congress limited that right in the UCMJ rather than apply the full constitutional standard, CAAF remained "powerless."[168] Therefore, so long as a deposition transcript complied with the requirements of the UCMJ, it would be admitted as evidence against the accused as a substitute for the live testimony of the deponent,[169] regardless of his availability. Thus, in a conflict between the UCMJ provision and a constitutional provision, the UCMJ controlled.

---

167. United States v. Sutton, 3 U.S.C.M.A. 220, 222–23 (1953) ("In [United States v. Clay], we specifically stated we were building 'military due process' on the laws enacted by Congress and not on the guarantees found in the Constitution. Particularly, we were speaking of the Uniform Code of Military Justice as the source and strength of military due process."). The intermediate appellate court set aside the offense of malingering after it held that admitting a deposition transcript as done in the trial below violated the accused's right to be confronted by witnesses. Id. at 221. TJAG certified the case for review. Id.

168. CAAF reiterated that it was unwilling to challenge Congress's plenary power in this area:

> Therefore, when we enumerated confrontation of witnesses as one of the privileges accorded an accused by Congress, we had to be considering it in the light of any limitations set out in the Code. Surely we are seeking to place military justice on the same plane as civilian justice but we are powerless to do that in those instances where Congress has set out legally, clearly, and specifically a different level.

Id. at 223.

169. After all, it had always been done this way:

> With an historical background of that length and consistency [referring to the use of depositions as testimony since the Articles of War of 1806 forward], it would take a positive expression by Congress to the contrary before we would feel justified in inferring that a change in the law was intended. But Congress did not express a desire for change. On the contrary, it re-enacted, in substance, the time honored rule [referring to Article 49, which continued to allow the use of deposition testimony].

Id. at 224.

This time, Chief Judge Quinn disagreed.[170] His view was clear: "I have absolutely no doubt in my mind that accused persons in the military service of the Nation are entitled to the rights and privileges secured to all under the Constitution of the United States, unless excluded directly or by necessary implication, by the provisions of the Constitution itself."[171] These exclusions were the express exception within the Fifth Amendment that excluded service members from the grand jury requirement and the implied limitation on the right to trial by jury because only an indictment or presentment required a jury.[172] All other constitutional provisions applied to the military community.[173]

---

170. Id. at 228–31 (Quinn, C.J., dissenting). Chief Judge Quinn had previously joined the unanimous Clay decision that limited service members' rights to those granted them by Congress. See Clay, 1 U.S.C.M.A. at 82. However, his reasons for doing so in light of this later position have yet to be studied.

171. Sutton, 3 U.S.C.M.A. at 228 (Quinn, C.J., dissenting) (citing Burns v. Lovett, 202 F.2d 335, 341 (D.C. Cir. 1952), aff'd sub nom. Burns v. Wilson, 346 U.S. 137 (1953)).

172. Chief Judge Quinn's articulation was apparently based on a plain reading of the text of the Constitution:

> With only a single express exception, there is no withholding of the protection of these rights and privileges from an accused because he is, at the time, serving with the armed forces of his country. Under the express exception, set out in the Fifth Amendment, an accused in the armed forces may be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, without presentment or indictment of a grand jury. To this express exception may be added the implied limitation of the right of trial by jury, as protected by the Sixth Amendment, to the extent that a jury trial is required only where presentment or indictment is necessary.

Id. (citations omitted).

173. Id. ("No other recognized exceptions have been cited and I know of none. The opinions of the appellate courts in the Burns case support the conclusion that there are no other exceptions."). Chief Judge Quinn continued that the D.C. Circuit in Burns found "no intimation in the Constitution itself that [the clause empowering Congress to make rules for the armed forces] and proceedings pursuant thereto are exempt from the requirements and prohibitions of the Fifth and Sixth Amendments." Id. (quoting Burns, 202 F.2d at 341). He noted that the Court seemed to agree. Id. at 229 ("The military courts . . . have the same responsibilities as do the federal courts to protect a person from a violation of his constitutional rights." (quoting Burns, 346 U.S. at 142)). The Chief Judge further noted that Justice Douglas made the point more explicit in his dissent.

Chief Judge Quinn's dissent became law seven years later[174] through the pen of Judge Homer Ferguson.[175] Early in his tenure, Judge Ferguson had initially joined an opinion upholding the Sutton rule that withheld constitutional protections from service members.[176] As he had since 1953, Chief Judge Quinn maintained his full throated dissent that the Constitution fully applied.[177] By 1960, Judge Ferguson became convinced that Chief Judge Quinn was right.

Like Private ("PVT") Sutton before her, a special court-martial convicted Airman Third Class ("A3C") Loretta Jacoby without providing her the opportunity to confront the witnesses

---

Id. (citing Burns, 346 U.S. at 152 (Douglas, J., dissenting)) ("But never have we held that all the rights covered by the Fifth and the Sixth Amendments were abrogated by Art. I, § 8, cl. 14 of the Constitution, empowering Congress to make rules for the armed forces.").

174. The Chief Judge's view did, on one occasion, make it into a majority opinion. United States v. Adams, 5 U.S.C.M.A. 563, 570 (1955) ("No reason in law, logic or military necessity justifies depriving the men and women in the armed forces of a fundamental right to which they would be entitled as civilians."). Though this decision has been cited thirty-six times since 1955, this claim seems to have been lost to history. See, e.g., United States v. Shepherd, 33 M.J. 66, 69 (C.M.A. 1991); United States v. Richey, 20 M.J. 251, 252 (C.M.A. 1985); United States v. Clark, 22 U.S.C.M.A. 576, 579–80 (1973); United States v. Lincoln, 17 U.S.C.M.A. 330, 334 (1967); United States v. Bullock, 12 U.S.C.M.A. 142, 143 (1961). Court watchers at the time did not address what impact, if any, this assertion may have had in the relationship between the Constitution and the military community. An argument can be made that because Chief Judge Quinn did not attempt to specifically overrule Clay, the remaining court membership felt it unnecessary to write separately. Instead, this phrase can be interpreted as asserting that, regardless of whether in the military or civilian community, an individual is "entitled to stand his ground against a trespasser to the same extent that a civilian is entitled to stand fast in his civilian home." Adams, 5 U.S.C.M.A. at 570. In any event, Clay was not specifically overruled until 1960. United States v. Jacoby, 11 U.S.C.M.A. 428, 429 (1960).

175. Judge Ferguson joined CAAF in 1956 after serving as a United States Senator and, most recently, Ambassador to the Philippines. David A. Melson, Military Jurisdiction Over Civilian Contractors: A Historical Overview, 52 NAVAL L. REV. 277, 312 (2005).

176. United States v. Parrish, 7 U.S.C.M.A. 337, 342 (1956) ("Judge Ferguson has chosen to follow the principle announced by the majority [in Sutton] and no good purpose would be served by repeating what was there said.").

177. Id. at 348–49 (Quinn, C.J., dissenting).

against her.[178] Writing for the two judge majority,[179] Judge Ferguson adopted the rationale from Chief Judge Quinn's Sutton dissent: "It is apparent that the protections in the Bill of Rights, except those which are expressly or by necessary implication inapplicable, are available to members of our armed forces."[180] From that day forth, the Bill of Rights applied to members of the United States armed forces.[181]

Since Jacoby, it has been beyond question that the Bill of Rights applies to service members unless expressly or by necessary implication excluded.[182] As noted earlier, the text of the Constitu-

---

178. Jacoby, 11 U.S.C.M.A. at 429. In this case, the Government sought to introduce interrogatories as a substitute for live testimony. Id.

179. Originally a three judge court, Congress expanded CAAF's membership to five in 1989. See National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Years 1990-1991, Pub. L. No. 101-189, § 1301, 103 Stat. 1352, 1570 (1989).

180. Jacoby, 11 U.S.C.M.A. at 430–31. Prior to adopting the Sutton dissent as the new majority rule, Judge Ferguson addressed why his position changed from Parrish to Jacoby. Id. at 430. Parrish was written out of respect for stare decisis, but the court noted, "[I]t should never be applied in order to perpetuate a mistaken view. Indeed, it is our duty to overrule and modify decisions which are erroneous, although there has been no legislative change in the law as originally construed." Id. (citations omitted). However, it is noteworthy that Judge Ferguson did not cite the Sutton dissent for the rule he just established. See id. at 430–31. Instead, he relied on the Supreme Court's holding in Burns, which is what Chief Judge Quinn had relied on as well. Id.

181. Considering that Jacoby adopted the specific language out of Chief Judge Quinn's Sutton dissent, it seems to follow that the Chief Judge's explanation of the only exceptions to the rule are, at least, highly persuasive. Therefore, it may appear that, save for the two exceptions listed in Chief Judge Quinn's Sutton dissent, the rest of the Constitution would apply completely. See United States v. Sutton, 3 U.S.C.M.A. 220, 228–29. The Jacoby decision has held fast in military justice. See, e.g., United States v. Marcum, 60 M.J. 198, 200, 206 (C.A.A.F. 2004) ("Constitutional rights generally apply to members of the armed forces unless by their express terms, or the express language of the Constitution, they are inapplicable. . . . Constitutional rights identified by the Supreme Court generally apply to members of the military unless by text or scope they are plainly inapplicable."); United States v. Tulloch, 47 M.J. 283, 285 (C.A.A.F. 1997) ("[T]he protections in the Bill of Rights, except those which are expressly or by necessary implication inapplicable, are available to members of our armed forces." (quoting Jacoby, 11 U.S.C.M.A. at 430–31)).

182. See, e.g., United States v. Easton, 71 M.J. 168, 177 (C.A.A.F. 2012) (Erdmann, J., dissenting in part and concurring in part) ("[T]his court has long held that the Bill of Rights applies to servicemembers except for those that are tion itself excludes members of the armed forces from the right to indictment by grand jury.[183] Furthermore, the right to trial by a jury composed of a cross-section of society is by necessary implication excluded.[184] Finally, the Court has determined a summary court-martial to be a disciplinary proceeding, not a trial; therefore, the Sixth Amendment right to counsel does not apply in that forum any more then it would to an administrative proceeding in the civilian world.[185]

A straightforward reading of Jacoby indicates that constitutional issues in the military and civilian communities, with the exception of the inmate and student communities, should be analyzed similarly. For example, laws infringing the First Amendment rights to speech, association, and religious liberty are subject to strict scrutiny.[186] In order for the Government to infringe one of these rights, it must assert a compelling interest and the enacted law must be the least restrictive means to accomplish that compel-

---

'expressly or by necessary implication inapplicable.'" (citing Courtney v. Williams, 1 M.J. 267, 270 (C.M.A. 1976))); United States v. Cendejas, 62 M.J. 334, 344 (C.A.A.F. 2006) ("[O]ur Court has long maintained vigilance in preserving the rights of servicemembers in [CAAF-martial] process." (citing Jacoby, 11 U.S.C.M.A. at 430–31)); United States v. Graf, 35 M.J. 450, 460 (C.M.A. 1992) ("This Court's position is clear and well established: '[T]he protections in the Bill of Rights, except those which are expressly or by necessary implication inapplicable, are available to members or our armed forces.'" (alteration in original) (citations omitted) (citing Jacoby, 11 U.S.C.M.A. at 430–31); Courtney v. Williams, 1 M.J. 267, 270 (C.M.A. 1976) (quoting Jacoby, 11 U.S.C.M.A. at 430–31).

183. U.S. CONST. amend. V ("No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces . . . .").

184. United States v. Loving, 41 M.J. 213, 285 (C.A.A.F. 1994) ("The Sixth Amendment right to trial by a jury which is a fair cross-section of the community has long been recognized as inapplicable to trials by court-martial." (first citing Ex parte Quirin, 317 U.S. 1, 39–41 (1942); and then citing Ex parte Milligan, 71 U.S. (4 Wall.) 2, 137–38 (1866))).

185. Middendorf v. Henry, 425 U.S. 25, 42 (1976) ("[W]e conclude that a summary court-martial is not a 'criminal prosecution' for the purposes of the Sixth Amendment.").

186. Adam Winkler, Fundamentally Wrong About Fundamental Rights, 23 CONST. COMMENT. 227, 229 (2006).

ling interest.[187] Fourth Amendment issues are reviewed for reasonableness.[188] Sixth, Seventh, and Eighth Amendment issues are subject to categorical rules.[189] This means that, if the individual sufficiently demonstrates that the right is violated, the denial of that right is unconstitutional.[190] The analysis for each Amendment is certainly more complex than just described, however, for the purposes of this study it is enough to say that Jacoby reasonably asserted that a similar analysis should occur in the military community.[191] CAAF, however, has not applied Jacoby this strictly in constitutional cases. Instead, it has applied the military necessity doctrine.[192]

E. The Military Necessity Doctrine

The military necessity doctrine evolved from CAAF's Jacoby decision.[193] As noted above, the language used in Jacoby mirrors the language used by Chief Judge Quinn in his Sutton dis-

---

187. See, e.g., Hoffman v. United States, 767 F.2d 1431, 1435 (9th Cir. 1985).

188. Winkler, supra note 186, at 229–30.

189. Id. at 230–31.

190. See id.

191. It is unclear whether intermediate, strict, or some other standard of review should be applied to Second Amendment cases. See Patrick J. Charles, The Second Amendment Standard of Review After McDonald*: "Historical Guideposts" and the Missing Arguments in* McDonald v. City of Chicago, 2 AKRON J. CONST. L. & POL'Y 7 (2010).

192. It is noteworthy to recognize that CAAF has applied a different approach in specific circumstances. CAAF has applied the Court's "extraordinarily weighty factors" balancing test to general due process challenges under the Fifth Amendment in cases that challenge the general fairness of a court-martial. See generally United States v. Vazquez, 72 M.J. 13, 18–19 (C.A.A.F. 2013); United States v. Gray, 51 M.J. 1, 50 (C.A.A.F. 1999); United States v. Witham, 47 M.J. 297, 300–01 (C.A.A.F. 1996); United States v. Mitchell, 39 M.J. 131, 133, 135–45 (C.M.A. 1994). It has also created a three factor test to apply the Court's decision in Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558, 563 (2003), to the military community in cases involving private sexual acts between members of the same sex. United States v. Marcum, 60 M.J. 198, 206–07 (C.A.A.F. 2004).

193. See United States v. Jacoby, 11 U.S.C.M.A. 428, 430–31 (1960) ("[T]he protections of the Bill of Rights, except those which are expressly or by necessary implication, are available to members of our armed forces.").

sent.[194] It is thus arguable that the only exceptions to the full application of the Constitution to the military community are the express exclusion of the right to indictment by a grand jury and the necessarily implied exclusion of the right to trial by jury.[195] This position appears consistent with Congress's intent in enacting the UCMJ. One of the primary purposes of the UCMJ was to civilianize the military justice system to the extent practical.[196] However, CAAF has since declined, though not expressly, to apply Jacoby this way. Instead, it appears to have walked back from Jacoby's bright-line rules by referencing military necessity as the basis for a different rule in the military community.[197] Though a statutory interpretation case rather than a constitutional one, the case of Lieutenant Thomas Dowty is such an example of CAAF moving away from Jacoby's language and toward military necessity.[198]

On active duty service in the Naval Medical Service Corps, Dowty operated a private business called Health Care Associ-

---

194. See United States v. Sutton, 3 U.S.C.M.A. 220, 228 (1953) (Quinn, C.J., dissenting) ("I have absolutely no doubt in my mind that accused persons in the military service . . . are entitled to the rights and privileges secured to all under the Constitution of the United States, unless excluded directly or by necessary implication, by the provisions of the Constitution itself.").

195. Id. (Quinn, C.J., dissenting). Since Chief Judge Quinn penned the test in an earlier dissent, his explanation of this phrase is most informative. In addition, the Court has held that a service member is not entitled to his Sixth Amendment right to counsel in summary courts-martial. Middendorf v. Henry, 425 U.S. 25, 34 (1976).

196. Edward F. Sherman, The Civilianization of Military Law, 22 ME. L. REV. 3, 7 (1970) ("Substantial civilianization resulted from the passage of the Uniform Code of Military Justice (UCMJ) in 1950 . . . .").

197. It is unclear what legal basis CAAF relied on to transition from Jacoby's "expressly or by necessary implication excluded" standard to the modern standard of "military necessity." CAAF began incorporating the military necessity language into its opinions over time while still citing Jacoby as the basis for that assertion. Arguably, this could have been the result of the Court's decision in Parker v. Levy. See Stanley Levine, The Doctrine of Military Necessity in the Federal Courts, 89 MIL. L. REV. 3, 12–21 (1980). However, CAAF has not explicitly articulated the reason for this shift. Thus, the lack of scholarly scrutiny during CAAF's transition was a missed opportunity. As noted in this Article, CAAF has welcomed and eagerly sought scholarly attention toward its jurisprudence.

198. See United States v. Dowty, 48 M.J. 102 (C.A.A.F. 1998).

ates.[199] His ex-wife anonymously called the Defense Fraud, Waste, and Abuse Hotline and alleged that Dowty's company had submitted fraudulent claims to the Government for the past three years.[200] As part of the Naval Criminal Investigative Service's ("NCIS") investigation, agents requested the Department of Defense Inspector General ("DoD IG") to issue an administrative subpoena under the Right of Financial Privacy Act ("RFPA") to obtain the bank records of Health Care Associates, which it issued on July 27, 1994.[201] Dowty challenged the Government's access to the records by filing a motion in the United States District Court for the District of Columbia on September 9, 1994.[202] The district court dismissed Dowty's motion eight months later on May 17, 1995, and the Navy preferred charges against Dowty on January 17, 1996.[203]

At his general court-martial, Dowty moved to dismiss twelve of the sixteen charged specifications because the charged offenses occurred beyond the five year statute of limitations.[204] Under the UCMJ, the military generally could only prosecute offenses that occurred within the previous five years.[205] However, the statute of limitations tolled upon the commander exercising summary court-martial convening authority receiving the charges.[206] The Government argued that the RFPA tolled the statute of limitations during the eight month and two day period in which Dowty's motion was litigated in federal court.[207] Consequently, all offenses properly occurred within the five year statute of limitations.[208]

---

199. Id. at 104.

200. Id. Dowty's ex-wife claimed that he defrauded the Government out of $15,000 and deposited each check into his personal checking account. Id.

201. Id.

202. Id.

203. Id. at 104–05.

204. Id. at 105.

205. Id. (citing 10 U.S.C. § 843 (2013)).

206. Id.

207. Id.

208. Id. The relevant provision tolled any applicable statute of limitations if the litigation caused a delay in the Government's access to the requested financial records. Id.

The military judge disagreed.[209] He ruled that Article 43 controlled the issue.[210] That article established the military's five year statute of limitations, and nothing in the text of that article "permits consideration of the RFPA to toll the running of the statute."[211] Even if the RFPA's provision did apply, the military judge ruled, the approximate eight month period did not toll the running of the statute.[212] Since the Government could have obtained Dowty's financial records through his ex-wife, a joint owner of the accounts, the litigation did not delay the Government's access.[213] The Government appealed this ruling, and the intermediate appellate court rejected the military judge's reasoning.[214] In deciding the questions presented, CAAF disclosed an example of its philosophy behind its military necessity doctrine.[215]

CAAF began with the principle that Congress has broad discretion over the military community.[216] Its plenary powers are buttressed by the individual protections found in the Constitution, but "the different character of the military community and of the military mission requires a different application of those protections."[217] CAAF went on to explain how this balancing works:

> While members of the armed forces do not enjoy the full panoply of constitutional and statutory rights available to others, they are no less citizens of the United States. In the absence of a valid military

209. Id.
210. Id.
211. Id.
212. Id.
213. Id.
214. Id. at 105–06.
215. Id. at 106–07. CAAF ultimately decided that the accused properly invoked the provisions of the RFPA and such action tolled the running of the statute. Id. at 111–12 ("When appellant affirmatively invoked the protections of the RFPA in an effort to block government access to his financial records, he submitted himself to the integrated provisions of that statute, including the provision under which the applicable statute of limitations was tolled.").
216. Id. at 106 ("Under the Constitution, 'Congress has "plenary control over rights, duties, and responsibilities in the framework of the Military Establishment, including regulations, procedures, and remedies related to military discipline."'" (quoting Weiss v. United States, 510 U.S. 163, 177 (1994))).
217. Id. (quoting Parker v. Levy, 417 U.S. 733, 758 (1974)).

> purpose requiring a different result, generally applicable statutes normally are available to protect servicemembers in their personal affairs.[218]

Though Dowty did not deal with a constitutional protection under the Bill of Rights, CAAF's analysis sheds light into its philosophy underlying its military necessity doctrine. Though CAAF still often cites Jacoby,[219] it often has not taken the opportunity to go further than it did in Dowty to develop this doctrine.

III. SHAPING AN UNDERSTANDING OF MILITARY NECESSITY

With a foundational understanding of CAAF and its role in constitutional cases, it is now possible to turn to its development and application of the military necessity doctrine. This Part begins by summarizing CAAF's difficulties in defining military necessity. To advance the development of this doctrine, a summary of the research method employed in this study to categorize themes and examples of military necessity in CAAF's jurisprudence follows. The remainder of this Part, as well as the subsequent Part, discusses the results of this study.

A. Defining Military Necessity

While Dowty demonstrates CAAF's modern application of Jacoby, it has yet to flesh out a definition of military necessity. On one occasion, one of its judges noted that the phrase "military necessity" was often used by CAAF, as well as civilian courts, but rarely explained.[220] On a separate occasion, CAAF recognized that

---

218. Id. at 107 (emphasis added).

219. See, e.g., United States v. Marcum, 60 M.J. 198, 205 (C.A.A.F. 2004); United States v. Rendon, 58 M.J. 221, 225 (C.A.A.F. 2003); Dowty, 48 M.J. at 107 (C.A.A.F. 1998); United States v. Tulloch, 47 M.J. 283, 285 (C.A.A.F. 1997); United States v. Rexroat, 38 M.J. 292, 294–95 (C.M.A. 1993); United States v. Lopez, 35 M.J. 35, 41 n.2 (C.M.A. 1992); Courtney v. Williams, 1 M.J. 267, 270 (C.M.A. 1976).

220. Judge Matthew Perry said so in some detail in the majority opinion in Harris:

> While the term "military necessity" has appeared in many cases in this Court as well as in civilian appellate courts, discussion of its meaning has been rare. See United States v. Russell, 13 Wall. 623, 627–28 (1871); Korematsu v. United

"military necessity" is an "amorphous term," but it knew it when it saw it.[221] Members of CAAF have also criticized the majority at times for citing military necessity as a basis to ignore a constitutional rule without proper justification.[222]

> States, 323 U.S. 214, 233, 234 (Murphy J., dissenting) (1944). In context some cases may provide insight into its meaning: United States v. Grow, 3 U.S.C.M.A. 77 (1953); United States v. Hooper, 5 U.S.C.M.A. 391, 396-8 (1955); United States v. Robinson, 6 U.S.C.M.A. 347, 352-3 (1955); United States v. Milldebrandt, 8 U.S.C.M.A. 635, 638 (1958); United States v. Davis, 19 U.S.C.M.A. 217, 223-4 (1970); United States v. Howard, 19 U.S.C.M.A. 547, 551 (1970); United States v. Mohr, 21 U.S.C.M.A. 360, 367 (1973); United States v. Ruiz, 23 U.S.C.M.A. 181, 183 (1974). Other cases merely mention the term without any discussion. They will be referred to only by C.M.A. citation (CMR/page) since they are only of academic interest: 6/92; 17/22; 18/187; 21/149; 21/201; 22/41; 24/240; 27/316; 29/275; 33/68; 226; 36/309; 37/64; 38/78; 40/74; 45/163. The term has also been mentioned in the following Supreme Court decisions: Sterling v. Constantin, 287 U.S. 378, 390-2 (1932); Hirabayashi v. United States, 320 U.S. 81, 86 (1943); Korematsu v. United States, supra at 227, 235, 240-1 (1944); In re Yamashita, 327 U.S. 1, 14, 24, 27, 46, 50, 78 (1946); Duncan v. Kahanamoku, 327 U.S. 304, 328 (1946); NLRB v. Jones and Laughlin Corp., 331 U.S. 416, 426 (1947); Libby et al. v. United States, 340 U.S. 71, 73-5 (1950); Youngstown Sheet and Tube Co. v. Sawyer, 343 U.S. 579, 661, 686 (1952); Reid v. Covert, 354 U.S. 1, 46 (1957); Laird v. Tatum, 408 U.S. 1, 20 (1972); Parker v. Levy, 417 U.S. 733, 788 (1974). See also United States v. Pierce, 505 F.2d 1053, 1055-6 (1st Cir. 1974); Hess v. Schlesinger, 486 F.2d 1311, 1313 (1973); Anderson v. Laird, 466 F.2d 283, 297, 304, 310 (1972), cert. denied, 409 U.S. 1076.

United States v. Harris, 5 M.J. 44, 64 n.28 (C.M.A. 1978) (parallel citations omitted) (overruled on other grounds by United States v. Jones, 24 M.J. 294, 296 (C.M.A. 1987)). Judge Perry would resign from CAAF one year later to accept an appointment as a United States District Judge in South Carolina. See In Memoriam, In Memoriam: Matthew J. Perry, Jr., 63 S.C. L. REV. 769, 771 (2012).

221. See United States v. Alleyne, 13 M.J. 331, 336 (C.M.A. 1982) ("Obviously, 'military necessity' is an amorphous term, but whatever it means, we are sure that [a gate search OCONUS is included].").

222. See Tulloch, 47 M.J. at 289–90 (C.A.A.F. 1997) (Crawford, J., dissenting) ("[T]he majority refuses to follow Supreme Court precedent and con-

The lack of a definition or framework is problematic. Unlike the inmate and student communities, the Court does not wade into the military community to articulate a specific standard to be applied by military courts. Instead, it relies on CAAF to administer the Constitution in the military community. The absence of an articulated framework presents at least two concerns. First, practitioners have no guide to frame issues for CAAF's review. This increases the probability of unfocused briefs that fail to narrow the issues before CAAF, or fail to address CAAF's concerns. Additionally, providing clear standards enables practitioners to properly narrow issues for CAAF, resulting in more effective briefs, consistent application of legal principles, and stability and predictability in military justice. Second, the absence of a clear framework can be a roadblock to CAAF's administration of military justice as a whole. While a particular court membership may understand each other's views on military necessity, it is less able to connect CAAF's jurisprudence throughout its institutional history.

A study of CAAF's jurisprudence uncovers numerous decisions in which it has found sufficient military necessity. As will be discussed below, some of those findings may no longer stand in the face of the evolving nature of the military community and the Court's interpretation of the Constitution. However, the results of this study provide some clarity to the process. The proceeding sections thus discuss the research methodology undertaken, and the results themselves.

B. Research Method

An initial search of the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces database in Westlaw was conducted to by the author to uncover every reference to the phrase, "military necessity."[223] After tinues this Court's practice of fashioning a different rule for the military without adequate justification . . . .").

---

223. The decision to search for the phrase "military necessity" rather than "military purpose" was intentional. Though "military purpose" appears in decisions such as Dowty and the two phrases are at times used interchangeably, the author's experience with CAAF led to the decision that "military necessity" would be more often used and would accurately capture the development of the doctrine without the need to broaden the pool of decisions to review. That said, testing this study against the use of the phrase "military purpose" is a worthwhile endeavor.

eliminating decisions that did not cite the phrase for the purpose of determining whether to apply a civilian constitutional or statutory rule to the military community, the remaining decisions were grouped into categories. A second analysis was then conducted to determine which categories were considered by CAAF to be valid assertions of military necessity. These were grouped into three overarching themes: injury avoidance, good order and discipline, and mission accomplishment. A third analysis was then conducted to further break down each overarching theme into two broad examples of military necessity. These examples do not comprise all possible valid assertions of military necessity. They are as they are aptly described here—examples.

C. Some Initial Observations on the Results

Before turning to the results of this study, three observations on the study are discussed below. First, the study uncovered that at least one decision complicates the understanding of the military necessity doctrine by asserting that military necessity is just one of many factors in a balancing test CAAF undertakes to determine whether to apply a civilian statutory or constitutional rule.[224] Though not relied upon in subsequent cases, that proposition has yet to be expressly overruled or discarded.[225] Second, the results at least demonstrate that merely asserting military necessity, without more, is not enough. The absence of a developed framework for the military necessity doctrine illustrates that this rule is likely both ignored by practitioners and not regularly enforced by CAAF. However, this rule supports the proposition that a working military necessity doctrine requires more than a mere assertion of military necessity. A third and final observation discussed below is that there exists a small number of decisions asserting military necessity that, as stated earlier, may no longer be consistent with the evolution of both the military community and the Court's interpretation of the Constitution in certain areas.

---

224. Harris, 5 M.J. at 64.

225. Admittedly, it could be argued that this proposition has been discarded in practice.

1. Inconsistent Articulation of When and How the Military Necessity Doctrine is Applied

An initial observation that complicates understanding the military necessity doctrine is that CAAF has not consistently articulated how the doctrine is to be applied. On at least one occasion, CAAF proclaimed that though military necessity is a significant and even overriding factor, it is but one factor in a balancing test.[226] In United States v. Harris, CAAF disagreed with the Government's assertion of military necessity for certain procedures undertaken at a military gate for searches of vehicles attempting to enter a military installation.[227] Private (PVT) Charles Harris rode as a passenger in a vehicle seeking to enter the main gate at Marine Base Twentynine Palms in California.[228] The Marine Corps prosecuted PVT Harris for possession of marijuana when, as he exited the vehicle for it to be inspected, he dropped two bags of the controlled substance.[229] CAAF agreed that military necessity could require invasive procedures during a gate search that would not otherwise be allowed in the broader civilian community, but that was not the end of the matter.[230] It went on to say that "military necessity is only a factor, rather than a determinant, in the balancing process."[231] Rather than first determining whether military necessity required a different application of Fourth Amendment jurisprudence and then applying a reasonableness test in light of its threshold decision, CAAF explained that military necessity, whatever it was and however it should be evaluated, was just one factor in a balancing test that also was not explained.

As a result, there is at least one decision that complicates a straightforward application of the military necessity doctrine in a constitutional challenge.[232] However, this analysis has largely

226. Harris, 5 M.J. at 64.

227. Id. at 45 ("We have determined that the procedures utilized by the authorities which led to the discovery and seizure of the marihuana rendered it inadmissible.").

228. Id.

229. Id.

230. Id. at 65.

231. Id.

232. In another decision, CAAF has implied that public policy may require a different application. United States v. Obligacion, 17 U.S.C.M.A. 36, 39 been ignored by CAAF in subsequent decisions. In fact, it may arguably have been abrogated by later decisions that do not consider military necessity as one factor in a balancing test. Ultimately, a well-defined doctrine will address these uncertainties and make explicit what should no longer be implied.

2. Simple Assertion is Not Enough

A second observation is that CAAF has, on at least one occasion, required more than a simple assertion of military necessity. In United States v. Grunden, CAAF explained that simply asserting "security" or "military necessity" was not enough to infringe on the accused's right to a public trial under the Sixth Amendment.[233] The facts of Grunden are relatively straightforward. Airman First Class ("A1C") Oliver Grunden, Jr. attempted to pass national defense information to undercover agents, in violation of an Air Force Regulation.[234] During his court-martial for failing to report contact with what Grunden believed to be agents of a foreign government and for attempted espionage,[235] the military judge closed the courtroom for essentially the entire trial on the basis that the espionage charges would go into classified information.[236] Nine witnesses testified during the closed proceeding, but only one witness discussed classified matters at length.[237]

(1967) ("In the ordinary case, the accused is entitled to look upon his accusers and to have the court weigh their demeanor in testifying. Occasionally, this requirement must give way to public policy.").

233. 2 M.J. 116, 121 (C.M.A. 1977) (abrogated by United States v. Torres, 2001 WL 36264237, *7–8 (C.A.A.F. May 25, 2001) ("The simple utilization of the terms 'security' or 'military necessity' cannot be the talisman in whose presence the protections of the Sixth Amendment and its guarantee to a public trial must vanish." (emphasis added)).

234. Id. at 119.

235. Id.

236. Id. at 120 ("Thus, despite the objection of the defense counsel, and the trial judge's own assurances that he would 'bend over backwards' to protect the appellant's rights, the public was excluded from virtually the entire trial as to the espionage charges.").

237. Id. Four made passing references, and the remaining four made no references at all. Id.

CAAF's analysis began with the text of the Sixth Amendment, which guarantees the right to a public trial.[238] It recognized that a court may be closed, partially or completely, for security or other good reasons.[239] However, it further noted that such actions must be taken sparingly and only to the extent necessary.[240] CAAF's then applied these principles to the Government's simple assertion of military necessity. CAAF recognized that a threshold burden existed that the Government must meet. Thus, simple assertion was not enough.[241] It then acknowledged that recognition of the uniqueness of the military community does not erase the requirement for reason and analysis when reviewing the constitutional protections service members retained:

> This Court recognizes that the Supreme Court [has] acknowledged the uniqueness of the military society, and that it has reaffirmed that belief in recent decisions. Yet, this Court once again must state that analysis and rationale will be determinative of the propriety of given situations, and that the mere uniqueness of the military society or military neces-

---

238. Id. ("The right of an accused to a public trial is a substantial right secured by the Sixth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States." (citation omitted)).

239. Id. at 121 ("Unless otherwise limited by the directives of the Secretary of a Department, the convening authority, the military judge, or the president of a special court-martial without a military judge may, for security or other good reasons, direct that the public or certain persons thereof be excluded from a trial."). CAAF went on to say that "all spectators may be excluded from an entire trial, over the accused's objection, only to prevent the disclosure of classified information." Id.

240. Id. ("The authority to exclude should be cautiously exercised, and the right of the accused to a trial completely open to the public must be weighed against the public policy considerations justifying exclusion.").

241. Id. ("The simple utilization of the terms 'security' or 'military necessity' cannot be the talisman in whose presence the protections of the Sixth Amendment and its guarantee to a public trial must vanish.").

> sity cannot be urged as the basis for sustaining that which reason and analysis indicate is untenable.[242]

A balancing test was required to examine and analyze the need for, and scope of, any exclusion of the public.[243] Under this test, the Government must meet a heavy burden.[244] As applied to the instant case involving the right to a public trial, one of the military judge's tasks was to "determine whether the perceived need urged as grounds for the exclusion of the public is of sufficient magnitude so as to outweigh 'the danger of a miscarriage of justice which may attend judicial proceedings carried out in even partial secrecy.'"[245]

CAAF's acknowledgment of a threshold requirement was not, in and of itself, particularly noteworthy. The Court subjects closures of a courtroom challenged under the Sixth Amendment to strict scrutiny review.[246] Consequently, the party seeking to close a courtroom must assert "an overriding interest based on findings that closure is essential to preserve higher values and is narrowly tailored to serve that interest. The interest is to be articulated along with findings specific enough that a reviewing court can determine whether the closure order was properly entered."[247]

What is noteworthy is that CAAF required the Government to meet that threshold rather than address military necessity sua sponte in its decision. Though CAAF has appropriately placed the burden of persuasion on the party seeking a different rule due to

---

242. Id. at 121 n.9 (citations omitted). CAAF's use of the phrase "once again" appears to be a re-assertion of an earlier passage in the same opinion, as this phrase is not followed by a citation to an earlier decision.

243. Id. at 121 ("Unless an appropriate balancing test is employed with examination and analysis of the need for, and the scope of any suggested exclusion, the result is, as here, unsupportable.").

244. Id. at 122 ("[T]he government must demonstrate that it has met the heavy burden of justifying the imposition of restraints on this constitutional right.").

245. Id. (quoting Stamicarbon v. Am. Cyanamid Co., 506 F.2d 532, 539 (2d Cir. 1974)).

246. Waller v. Georgia, 467 U.S. 39, 44–47 (1984).

247. Id. at 45 (quoting Press-Enter. Co. v. Superior Court of Cal., 464 U.S. 501, 510 (1984)).

military necessity,[248] it has not always continued to require that party to further allege specific facts explaining what the exact necessity is and why it was important enough to justify the different rule. Thus, a more fully developed doctrine should also require more than asserting the phrase "military necessity."

3. Military Necessity Examples in Light of the Evolution in the Military Community and the Court's Constitutional Interpretation

Readers attempting to replicate this study are likely to uncover additional decisions in which CAAF found sufficient military necessity to apply a different rule that are not included in the results discussed in Part V. These include preventing statutory conflict within the UCMJ,[249] public policy,[250] and preventing the introduction of drugs onto an installation.[251] For reasons discussed below, these examples are less likely to be a successful assertion of military necessity today.

Though CAAF recently held that conflict with other UCMJ articles is a sufficient articulation of military necessity, this appears problematic. In United States v. Easton, CAAF upheld Article 44(c) of the UCMJ, declaring that double jeopardy does not attach in the military until the introduction of evidence.[252] This was at 248. Courtney v. Williams, 1 M.J. 267, 270 (C.M.A. 1976) ("[T]he burden of showing that military conditions require a different rule than that prevailing in the civilian community is upon the party arguing for a different rule." (citation omitted)).

249. United States v. Easton, 71 M.J. 168, 176 (C.A.A.F. 2012).

250. United States v. Obligacion, 17 U.S.C.M.A. 36, 39 (1967); United States v. Gladwin, 14 U.S.C.M.A. 428, 433 (1964).

251. United States v. Acosta, 11 M.J. 307, 313 (C.M.A. 1981); United States v. Middleton, 10 M.J. 123, 129 n.11 (C.M.A. 1981); United States v. Hessler, 7 M.J. 9, 10 (C.M.A. 1979); United States v. Unrue, 22 U.S.C.M.A. 466, 469 (1973).

252. Easton, 71 M.J. at 170. Interestingly, the MCM described why the military provides one oath to the venire that includes the instructions to the ultimate panel, rather than separate the two, as is done in civilian practice. This is done for administrative convenience. MANUAL FOR COURTS-MARTIAL, UNITED STATES, A21-50 (2012). In sum, it is easier to execute the oath of the venire to tell the truth in voir dire and the oath swearing in the ultimate panel at one time, rather than at the start of voir dire and then once the venire is reduced to the panel selected to hear the case.

odds with the constitutional rule that double jeopardy attaches earlier, once the military jury is empaneled and sworn.[253] CAAF upheld Article 44(c) in large part because ruling it unconstitutional would bring other articles into question and possibly require finding them unconstitutional as well.[254] Any specific critique of CAAF's reasoning in Easton is beyond the scope of this article, but it is enough to say that Congress cannot ignore the Constitution.[255] Though there is arguably recent precedent allowing for the proposition that statutory consistency is a military necessity, a fully developed doctrine should not test the principle that the Constitution will always supersede a statutory scheme.

Secondly, public policy remains far too general a term to justify an otherwise constitutional violation. At least one court has defined the phrase as concerning "what is right and just and what affects the citizens of the State collectively."[256] Black's Law Dictionary defines the phrase as "principles and standards regarded by the legislature or by the courts as being of fundamental concern to the state and the whole of society."[257] Consequently, it is just as ambiguous as "military necessity." It adds nothing to the endeavor to better understand the phrase. As such, advocates are best left to focus on more concrete examples that help narrow the definition of that phrase.[258]

Finally, preventing the introduction of drugs onto a military installation is unlikely to be a sufficient assertion of military necessity justifying infringing constitutional rights in the modern military community. In a series of prior decisions during the 1970s and early 1980s, CAAF relied on this general reason to justify searches and seizures that would otherwise violate the Fourth

253. Crist v. Bretz, 437 U.S. 28, 35 (1978).

254. Easton, 71 M.J. at 176 ("Were we to mechanically apply the holding in Crist to the military context, we would negate numerous portions of the UCMJ . . . .").

255. United States v. Graf, 35 M.J. 450, 461 (C.M.A. 1992) (quoting Rostker v. Goldberg, 453 U.S. 57, 67 (1981)).

256. Belline v. K-Mart Corp., 940 F.2d 184, 187 (7th Cir. 1991) (quoting Palmateer v. Int'l Harvestor Corp., 421 N.E.2d 876, 878–79 (Ill. 1981)).

257. Public Policy, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (10th ed. 2014).

258. This is not to say public policy arguments shouldn't be made as part of an overall argument. However, the advocate relying solely on a public policy argument is less likely to be successful.

Amendment.[259] However, more recent decisions by the Court appear to undercut this reasoning.

Two landmark Confrontation Clause decisions, Crawford v. Washington[260] and Melendez-Diaz v. Massachusetts,[261] substantially affected federal and state criminal prosecutions in drug cases; the military community was no different. CAAF subsequently began interpreting the impact of Crawford and Melendez-Diaz on military drug prosecutions in a series of cases that determined which parts of a drug test report were testimonial hearsay and thus required live testimony.[262]

None of this further analysis would be necessary if preventing the introduction of drugs onto a military installation, as articulated in prior cases, sufficed as military necessity. If articulating that necessity justified a Fourth Amendment violation, why not also a Sixth Amendment violation? This is not to say the military has no justifiable interest in preventing the introduction of drugs onto an installation. The point here is that the basis, as articulated in prior cases, may be undercut by more recent case law.

With these three observations in mind, it is now possible to turn to the three themes and six examples of military necessity that emerge from CAAF's jurisprudence.

IV. THEMES AND EXAMPLES OF MILITARY NECESSITY

We now turn to the three overarching themes and six broad examples of military necessity. To be sure, these are not specific formulations to be applied mechanically. However, though the specific articulation will likely always be case-specific,[263] each 259. See, e.g., United States v. Middleton, 10 M.J. 123, 129 n.11 (C.A.A.F. 1981); United States v. Acosta, 11 M.J. 307, 312–13 (C.M.A. 1981); United States v. Hessler, 7 M.J. 9, 10 (C.M.A. 1979); United States v. Unrue, 22 U.S.C.M.A. 466, 469 (1973).

---

260. 541 U.S. 36 (2004).

261. 557 U.S. 305 (2009).

262. See, e.g., United States v. Tearman, 72 M.J. 54 (C.A.A.F. 2013); United States v. Sweeney, 70 M.J. 296 (C.A.A.F. 2011); United States v. Cavitt, 69 M.J. 413 (C.A.A.F. 2011); United States v. Dollar, 69 M.J. 411 (C.A.A.F. 2011); United States v. Blazier, 69 M.J. 218 (C.A.A.F. 2010); United States v. Blazier, 68 M.J. 439 (C.A.A.F. 2010).

263. Note that in a facial challenge, the analysis is much more broad. In contrast to an as-applied challenge, in which the focus is on the particular case, a example provides an avenue to articulate a specific military necessity that exists within CAAF's jurisprudential history. The challenge for the party seeking a different rule, generally the Government, will be to articulate a reasonably direct and detailed nexus between the conduct at issue and one of the following six examples.[264] Each is subsequently addressed in turn, grouped by overarching theme. Every subsection begins with an articulation of the example followed by a demonstration of it in action.

A. Mission Accomplishment

1. Essential to Mission Accomplishment

CAAF has held that the infringement of a constitutional right may be justified if such action was essential to mission accomplishment. Of course, such necessity requires a reasonably direct and detailed nexus to mission accomplishment. Some examples illustrate how this nexus can be successfully articulated.

In one example that concerned statutory interpretation, the Army court-martialed Private First Class ("PFC") Elmer Robinson for willful disobedience of a lawful command, in violation of Article 90 of the UCMJ.[265] PFC Robinson served as a cook at his unit's mess.[266] Dissatisfied, he eventually accepted an offer to serve as a cook's helper at the Officers' Mess.[267] He soon became dissatisfied again.[268] After showing up late to work on October 12, 1954, he refused to obey an order to begin performing his duties.[269] statute will be upheld unless there is not a single application of the statute that is constitutional. United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 745 (1987).

---

264. To be sure, this is not a Government-focused article. Defense advocates will also benefit from tools allowing them to specifically crystallize for CAAF how the Government has failed to articulate a sufficient compelling interest.

265. United States v. Robinson, 6 U.S.C.M.A. 347, 349 (1955).

266. Id. at 349. A "mess" is a now-outdated term for the facility in which military members can eat. These facilities may now be called dining facilities or Officers' or Enlisted Clubs, or a joint club.

267. Id. at 350. Officers created a closed mess by pooling together funds to provide meals for their members. Open messes are now dining facilities or Officer or Enlisted Clubs.

268. Id.

269. Id.

PFC Robinson challenged the legality of the order on appeal on the basis that a federal statute prohibited officers from using enlisted men as servants.[270]

CAAF, however, disagreed with PFC Robinson's interpretation of the statute.[271] Its reasoning articulated a distinct and detailed nexus between the need to assign enlisted men to the Officers' Mess and the mission. Under conditions that existed in 1955, it was "absolutely essential that officers be fed either in unit messes or in officers' messes."[272] Therefore, an officers' mess whose principal purpose was "to feed officers so there will be less interruption with their official duties" that employs enlisted individuals does not offend the statute because it served an "essential military purpose."[273] CAAF noted that "[s]trained manpower conditions" required it to revisit its previous interpretation of the statute.[274] Specifically, "national conditions and the necessities of the Service [had] changed to such an extent that to follow the early interpretations would unnecessarily interfere with the building of an armed force capable of carrying out present day missions."[275] PFC Robinson served in an Officers' Mess located at Fort McNair, a location heavily used for training and education programs.[276] Consequently, the growth in personnel had outpaced similar growth in facilities.[277] Adopting PFC Robinson's interpretation "would so

---

270. Id. (citing 10 U.S.C. § 608, prohibiting the use of enlisted men in an officers' open mess).

271. Id. CAAF acknowledged that early interpretation of the statute are no longer consistent with changes in circumstances. Id. ("[I]t is doubtful that the interpretations found in the early cases offer persuasive authority for a present day construction."). Early cases interpreted the statute literally. Id. Due to changed circumstances within the military society, that would no longer do. Id. at 351. The modern approach looked to "whether the employment was a military task beneficial to the Army, or a personal service rendered to an individual officer or group of officers." Id.

272. Id. at 353.

273. Id.

274. Id. at 351.

275. Id.

276. Id.

277. Id. For example, the Army had 4,604 officers in 1912. Id. Twenty-six years later, that number grew to 13,304 just before World War II. Id. At the time of CAAF's opinion in 1955, the officer corps had exploded to 128,208 soldiers. Id.

circumscribe the military community that the preparation for, or the waging of, war would be impossible."[278] The Officers' Mess, in this case, was just as essential to the mission as guarding officers' "barracks, polic[ing] their area, dispos[ing] of their garbage, polic[ing] their latrine, and transport[ing] them from place to place."[279]

CAAF also reasoned that the open mess was "an integral part of the Army establishment, an instrumentality of the Government and necessary to the interests of the armed forces."[280] Requiring officers sent to a training base temporarily, for a specific military purpose, to leave the base in search of commercial eating options took them away from too much of their duty day.[281] From that viewpoint, it is no different than a "garrison or field ration mess" that is available to the enlisted corps.[282]

In addition to the preceding example of military necessity, a sufficient "unusual circumstance" unique to the mission may also warrant infringing upon a constitutional right in a particular case.[283] An example of this analysis can be found in United States v. Milldebrandt.[284] Burdened with substantial personal financial problems, Disbursing Clerk Second Class ("DK2") James R. Milldebrandt requested a thirty-day leave of absence to earn some additional money as a civilian employee.[285] His commander granted the request but ordered DK2 Milldebrandt to submit weekly reports on his financial condition.[286] After DK2 Milldebrandt failed to comply, his commanding officer ordered him back to his station, where he faced court-martial for failing to obey a lawful order.[287]

---

278. Id. at 352.

279. Id.

280. Id. at 353. CAAF also noted that the mess's "purpose is to provide services essential to the messing, billeting, morale and welfare of its members and all other officers who are temporarily on post." Id.

281. Id. It is important to understand this reasoning in the context of when it was decided. This was shortly after World War II ended, with all those experiences fresh in mind.

282. Id.

283. See, e.g., United States v. Milldebrandt, 8 U.S.C.M.A. 635, 638 (1958).

284. Id.

285. Id. at 636.

286. Id.

287. Id. at 636–37.

During its review, CAAF determined that a sufficient unusual circumstance, such as what occurred in this case, might subject a military member on leave to military orders:

> Undoubtedly there may be instances when complete freedom from military duties cannot be the rule, for a serviceman on leave must hold himself amenable to orders of revocation and a commander should be authorized to direct him to furnish changes of address or to report where he may be reached for recall to duty if an emergency arises.[288]

But to be sufficient, the order must be "necessary to the successful pursuit of [a] military mission."[289] It must be "required to maintain the morale, discipline, or good order of the unit or to keep the military free from disrepute."[290]

Robinson and Milldebrandt serve as examples of articulating why a challenged statute or rule is essential to mission accomplishment, thus requiring a different application. The Government may also defend a statute or rule by arguing that applying the constitutional rule would significantly impede mission accomplishment. United States v. Stuckey[291] is such an example. As in both approaches, a reasonably direct and detailed nexus is required.

2. Impedes Mission Accomplishment

The infringement of a constitutional right in a particular case may also be justified if the civilian constitutional rule would materially impede mission accomplishment.[292] An example of this nexus can be found in the general court-martial[293] of Private

288. Id. at 638.

289. Id.

290. Id.

291. 10 M.J. 347 (C.M.A. 1981).

292. See United States v. Davis, 19 U.S.C.M.A. 217, 223 (1970) (quoting Felix Larkin, member of the UCMJ drafting committee).

293. There are three types of courts-martial: summary, special, and general. At the most basic level, a summary court-martial is akin to a county court-type offenses, a special court-martial to misdemeanor offenses, and a general court-martial mostly reserved for felony offenses. The primary distinction is that maximum potential punishment available. See generally 10 U.S.C. §§ 816–

("PVT") Nathaniel Stuckey.[294] The relevant issue on appeal concerned whether the military rule allowing a search authorization[295] to be issued without requiring law enforcement to establish probable cause under an oath or affirmation violated the Fourth Amendment.[296] PVT Stuckey argued that the civilian rule "impose[d] only a trivial burden on the Armed Services."[297] A simple oath was all that was needed, and the information need not be reduced to writing.[298] In addition, the UCMJ allows service regulations to easily grant to commanders the authority to administer oaths when necessary to establish probable cause.[299]

CAAF disagreed. Requiring a per se rule presented "formidable administrative difficulties" to the military justice sys-

---

20 (2013). As the maximum potential punishments increase from a summary court-martial to a general court-martial, the legal protections increase. See, e.g., 10 U.S.C. § 832 (2013 & Supp. 2014) (requiring a formal pre-trial investigation before convening a general court-martial); § 834 (2013 & Supp. 2014) (requiring written legal advice from the chief legal advisor on an installation before convening a general court-martial); § 826 (2013) (requiring a military judge to be assigned to a general court-martial, while merely allowing one to be assigned to a special court-martial); § 838 (2013) (acknowledging that an accused has a right to legal representation in a special and general court-martial but omitting a similar right in a summary court-martial); § 866 (2013) (establishing a formal appellate process, akin to the civilian appellate structure, in certain special and general courts-martial depending on the punishment received).

294. Stuckey, 10 M.J. 347. The court convicted PVT Stuckey of unpremeditated murder, auto theft, and robbery. Id. at 348. It sentenced him to a "dishonorable discharge, confinement at hard labor for [fifty] years, total forfeitures, and reduction to the lowest enlisted grade." Id.

295. The civilian equivalent to a search authorization is the search warrant.

296. Stuckey, 10 M.J. at 347. The Fourth Amendment commands that "no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation." U.S. CONST. amend. IV. CAAF required probable cause for a search authorization to be established upon an oath or affirmation in 1980. United States v. Fimmano, 8 M.J. 197, 202 (C.M.A. 1980) (abrogated by Stuckey, 10 M.J. at 364). However, it did so prospectively. Stuckey, 10 M.J. at 348. PVT Stuckey's search occurred in 1974. Id. After determining that retroactive application of such a requirement would likely have "a significant impact on military justice and require setting aside many convictions," CAAF turned to the central holding in Fimmano requiring an oath or affirmation to establish probable cause. Id. at 349.

297. Id. at 362.

298. Id.

299. Id.

tem.[300] The system must be deployable.[301] But "the conditions in which [the armed] forces operate will vary dramatically from place to place and between large organizations and small detachments."[302] Sometimes, the information needed for probable cause would come from foreign nationals "unfamiliar with oaths" and "reluctant to speak under oath."[303] Federal magistrates that routinely relied on such oaths simply did not have to deal with the multiple language and cultural barriers faced by military commanders in deployed environments.[304] In addition, commanders who are tasked with making these decisions are not lawyers. Federal magistrates must record oral testimony received under oath in support of a search warrant.[305] Burdening a commander "at some farflung installation with such a procedure may be more onerous than for a Federal magistrate . . . [who is] a trained lawyer."[306] The 300. Id. at 364. The Army and the Air Force have since developed magistrate programs to deal with search authorizations. AR 27-10, supra note 162, at 52–58; U.S. DEP'T OF AIR FORCE, AFI 51-201, ADMINISTRATION OF MILITARY JUSTICE 28–47 (2013) [hereinafter AFI 51-201], http://static.e-publishing.af.mil/production/1/af_ja/publication/afi51-201/afi51-201.pdf.

301. Stuckey, 10 M.J. at 364 (stating that the consequences of violating the rule "will be the same wherever American armed forces are stationed"); see Victor Hansen, Changes in Modern Military Codes and the Role of the Military Commander: What Should the United States Learn from This Revolution?, 16 TUL. J. INT'L & COMP. L. 419, 425 (2008) ("Another, sometimes overlooked goal of a military justice system is that it must be deployable.").

302. Stuckey, 10 M.J. at 364.

303. Id.

304. Id.

305. Id.

306. Id. CAAF also noted additional obstacles in requiring such a per se rule considering that a commander will often already have relevant information prior to the application for a search authorization:

> Judge Cook has written that in military justice "a commander may consider information previously known to him in determining whether probable cause exists to justify a search." If this observation is correct, how can it be reconciled with the requirement that probable cause be based only on sworn testimony? If, on the other hand, the statement is inaccurate, what is the means, if any, by which relevant information already known to the commander who has been requested to issue a search warrant may be considered in making his probable cause decision? Must the commander who possesses this information, in turn, refer the request for search authority to a oath requirement simply materially impeded mission accomplishment.

B. Injury Avoidance

The military may also infringe upon a constitutional right in order to prevent grave danger to society or manifest injury to the particular armed service or the military in general. These examples are applicable to circumstances in which the armed service has prevented or required conduct in violation of the Bill of Rights. The creative advocate, however, may export this theme into other situations.

1. Grave Danger to Society

A challenged article or rule may survive a challenge if its purpose or application prevents a grave danger to society. This theme has most often appeared in cases that involve preventing an individual's freedom of action. Prior cases have specifically involved preventing the spread of an infectious disease through sexual contact.[307]

In one case, CAAF upheld the legality of a military order known as a safe sex order.[308] The Air Force court-martialed Staff Sergeant ("SSgt") Amos A. Womack for forcible sodomy and willful disobedience of a lawful order requiring him to inform sexual partners of his HIV infection for sexual acts involving himself and > higher echelon and then submit to the superior commander his own sworn recitation of the information which he possesses? Further, if official records or business records contain information relevant to a probable cause decision, will it be necessary that someone swear before the commander that the documents say what they purport to say, rather than merely submitting the records to the commander for his consideration?

---

Id. at 363 (citation omitted).

307. See, e.g., United States v. Bygrave, 46 M.J. 491, 497 (C.A.A.F. 1997); United States v. Dumford, 30 M.J. 137, 137–38 (C.M.A. 1990); United States v. Womack, 29 M.J. 88, 90 (C.M.A. 1989).

308. Womack, 29 M.J. at 90–91. This order required Staff Sergeant ("SSgt") Amos Womack to inform all present and future partners of his HIV infection, inform all medical professionals of his infection, engage in safe sex, refrain from sodomy or homosexuality, refrain from illegal drug use, and refrain from donating bodily fluids. Id. at 89.

another Airman.[309] He pleaded guilty in a general court-martial and the military judge sentenced him to a dishonorable discharge, five years confinement, forfeiture of all his pay, and demotion to the lowest enlisted rank.[310] SSgt Womack challenged the legality of the safe sex order on appeal.[311] CAAF held that "[t]he military, and society at large, have a compelling interest in having those who defend the nation remain healthy and capable of performing their duty."[312] Consequently, the order served a valid military purpose: "to preserve unit readiness and to protect and safeguard the health of Air Force members."[313]

The key to this theme is the gravity of the danger. In the example above, the danger of spreading HIV was so grave it justified infringing a member's freedom of action through a specific and definite military order.[314] The danger need not be limited to the military community. It includes the civilian population as well.[315] Thus, the more grave the articulated danger, the more likely CAAF will find it sufficient military necessity.

2. Manifest Injury to the Armed Forces

The Government may also infringe a constitutional right to avoid manifest injury to an armed service. CAAF's case law, however, leaves us without a definition of manifest injury. CAAF referenced manifest injury while interpreting Article 17 of the 309. Id. at 88–89. Airman T awoke after accepting an invitation to sleep in SSgt Womack's dorm room to SSgt Womack performing fellatio upon him. Id. at 89.

310. Id. at 89 n.1.

311. SSgt Womack argued that the order had no valid military purpose and it interfered with his "private rights and personal affairs." Id. at 90.

312. Id.

313. Id. ("[T]he written order state[d] its purpose [was] 'to safeguard the overall health of members of a military organization to insure unit readiness and the ability of the unit to accomplish its mission.'"). In addition, CAAF has held that "preventing a servicemember who has HIV from spreading it to the civilian population is a public duty of the highest order and, thus, is a valid military objective." United States v. Dumford, 30 M.J. 137, 138 n.2 (C.M.A. 1990).

314. CAAF in Womack found the order to be "specific, definite, and certain." Womack, 29 M.J. at 90.

315. See Dumford, 30 M.J. at 138 n.2.

UCMJ in 1955.[316] The article established that one armed service may court-martial a member of another armed service only pursuant to regulations prescribed by the President.[317] The MCM stated that an accused in a joint force environment[318] must be delivered to his armed force unless doing so results in a manifest injury to the armed force to which he is attached.[319] In addition, a convening authority in a joint force environment can appoint members of another service to serve on a court-martial if doing do prevents manifest injury to the convening armed service.[320] CAAF did not delve into what constitutes a manifest injury. However, it at least provided a starting point for legal scholars to flesh out and for advocates to exploit.

For the purposes of prompting the dialogue, Black's Law Dictionary defines "manifest" as "easily understood or obvious."[321] Therefore, it appears insufficient to proclaim some general injury to the service. The advocate seeking to assert military necessity on the basis of avoiding manifest injury must demonstrate a reasonable connection to an obvious and distinct injury in order to articulate a manifest injury.

C. Good Order and Discipline

CAAF's jurisprudence also demonstrates that the military community is different. It is not the civilian community. It exists for a singular purpose—to wage war—though, the rationale for this fact as a basis to limit service members' constitutional rights has been called into question.[322] That said, the military community

---

316. United States v. Hooper, 5 U.S.C.M.A. 391, 400–01 (1955).

317. Id. at 396 (quoting Article 17(a) of the UCMJ).

318. A joint force environment simply means an organization, command, or task force comprised of members of multiple military services.

319. Hooper, 5 U.S.C.M.A. at 400.

320. Id.

321. See Manifest Error, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (10th ed. 2014) (defining "manifest error" as "error that is plain and indisputable"); Manifest Injustice, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (10th ed. 2014) (defining "manifest injustice" as error that is "direct, obvious, and observable").

322. Mr. O'Connor noted that this phrase, taken from United States ex rel. Toth v. Quarles, 350 U.S. 11, 17 (1955), took the quote out of context and turned it on its head. O'Connor, supra note 79, at 229. The original purpose of the quote was to recognize that, because of this primary purpose, armies and navies are "not particularly well-suited to operate a professional system of crim-existed before there was a United States and has developed its own laws and traditions.[323] At the core of this community is good order and discipline.

Good order and discipline, however, is often quoted, yet rarely, if ever, defined. The most general of explanations, that "[n]o question can be left open as to the right to command in the officer, or the duty of obedience in the soldier,"[324] appears inadequate in many areas of the modern military. That is certainly the case for the warfighter, when discipline is put to the test under hostile fire, but it becomes less adequate an explanation for the much larger number of personnel that support the warfighter in the relative safety of large, hardened bases, or stateside garrisons.[325]

Judge advocates are not immune from this ambiguous principle. Neither is CAAF. However, though the case law is thin, two themes emerge that may assist advocates in framing the issue for CAAF in a way that leads to detailed analysis.

1. Demand for Discipline and Duty

An overriding demand for discipline and duty has been determined to be a sufficient military necessity. Military society's needs are different in some respects than its civilian counterpart. Consequently, its jurisprudence "is and has always been separated from the ordinary Federal and State judicial systems in this country."[326] For the vast majority of military legal history, the Court inal justice." Id. However, the Court used this same quote to support its declaration that this primary purpose required "a greater power to criminalize conduct than would exist in civilian society." Id.

---

323. United States v. Tempia, 16 U.S.C.M.A. 629, 633 (1967) ("Military law, like state law, is a jurisprudence which exists separate and apart from the law which governs in our federal judicial establishment." (quoting Burns v. Wilson, 346 U.S. 137, 140 (1953))).

324. Parker v. Levy, 417 U.S. 733, 744 (1974) (quoting In re Grimley, 137 U.S. 147, 153 (1890)).

325. More than forty years ago, scholars noted that the contemporary military society would be unrecognizable to the "society apart" that existed in the 19th century. See Zillman & Imwinkelried, supra note 80, at 399–401.

326. Tempia, 16 U.S.C.M.A. at 633 (citing Burns, 346 U.S. at 140).

has played no role in its development.[327] The needs in this separate society include a high demand for discipline.

Beyond agreeing with the Court that, due to these needs, "the rights of men in the armed forces must perforce be conditioned to meet certain overriding demands of discipline and duty,"[328] CAAF has provided little in the way of examples.

One such example can be found in CAAF's application of Miranda v. Arizona[329] to the military justice system. One year after the Court decided Miranda, CAAF determined that the principles enunciated there "appl[ied] to military interrogations of criminal suspects."[330] CAAF began its analysis by reaffirming that it would no longer consider the argument that service members can be deprived of their rights under the Bill of Rights simply due to their status as military members.[331] It then pivoted to assert the long held view that military society was different.[332] Consequently, "the rights of men in the armed forces must perforce be conditioned to meet certain overriding demands of discipline and duty."[333] That, however, was as far as CAAF went. It subsequently returned to its main point: "That military law exists and has devel-

327. Id. Notably, the Military Justice Act of 1983 granted the Court discretionary review of CAAF's decisions. Prior to that, the Court maintained a hands-off approach to military cases. See O'Connor, supra note 79, at 165–261.

328. Tempia, 16 U.S.C.M.A. at 633 (quoting Burns, 346 U.S. at 140).

329. 384 U.S. 436 (1966).

330. Tempia, 16 U.S.C.M.A. at 631 (citing Miranda, 384 U.S. 436). Interestingly, CAAF determined in Tempia that Miranda was a constitutional decision. Id. at 635. This was twenty-five years prior to federal court attention. See United States v. Pugh, 25 F.3d 669, 675 (8th Cir. 1994); United States v. Christopher, 956 F.2d 536, 538–39 (6th Cir. 1991). Notably, the Court's decision in United States v. Dickerson did not refer to CAAF's Tempia decision in its ultimate conclusion that Miranda constituted a constitutional decision. Dickerson v. United States, 530 U.S. 428, 444 (2000). It is noteworthy that the Court referred to the military justice system in the Opinion in Miranda. 384 U.S. at 489 ("[The UCMJ] has long provided that no suspect may be interrogated without first being warned of his right not to make a statement and that any statement he makes may be used against him."). However, it did not in this instance. Why sister federal circuit courts do not cite to broad constitutional analysis by CAAF is worth further study.

331. Tempia, 16 U.S.C.M.A. at 633.

332. Id.

333. Id. (quoting Burns, 346 U.S. at 140).

oped separately from other Federal law does not mean that persons subject thereto are denied their constitutional rights."[334]

The lack of a developed jurisprudence does not mean that demand for discipline and duty is not a viable theme of military necessity. In addition to relying on the separate society principle, CAAF has at least acknowledged, in other settings, some acceptable restrictions that can be attributed to the demand for discipline and duty.[335] The need for discipline and duty can justify requiring a service member to be inoculated against disease, even though doing so violates his religious beliefs.[336] It can also be the reason the military can violate a military trainee's right of freedom of association when going through a reception station or during initial training.[337] Finally, this theme justifies "regulat[ing] relationships between officers and enlisted personnel."[338]

The creative advocate can likely build on this list. However, to shape CAAF's analysis, the advocate will need to articulate a sound reason and direct nexus for CAAF. A conclusory statement will be insufficient. Doing so will assist CAAF in developing a body of law in this area useful for practitioners, as well as CAAF itself.[339]

2. Responsiveness to Command

CAAF has held that "[t]he armed forces depend on a command structure that at times must commit men to combat, not only hazarding their lives but ultimately involving the security of the Nation itself."[340] Therefore, an article of the UCMJ or a rule may infringe a constitutional right if applying it a different way will "directly affect the capacity of the Government to discharge its responsibilities."[341]

---

334. Id.
335. United States v. Womack, 29 M.J. 88, 91 (C.M.A. 1989).
336. See id.
337. See id.
338. Id. (citing United States v. Johanns, 20 M.J. 155 (C.M.A. 1985)).
339. Subsequent scholarly study in this area will also make a positive contribution.
340. United States v. Priest, 21 U.S.C.M.A. 564, 570 (1972).
341. Id.

This was the case in the court-martial of Journalist Seaman Apprentice ("JOSA") Roger Priest.[342] He edited, published, and distributed to service members an underground newsletter that protested United States involvement in Vietnam while on active duty.[343] This newsletter:

> [E]xpressly sought a breakdown in military discipline, called attention to methods by which those subject to military jurisdiction might safely flee from military control, heaped maledictions upon the United States, called into disrespect all military superiors and particularly those who had chosen the defense of the Country as their life's vocation, implicitly advocated assassination of the President and Vice President, and appealed to readers to take to the streets in violent revolution against the Government.[344]

JOSA Priest argued that his conduct was not directly prejudicial to good order and discipline.[345] CAAF disagreed.[346]

The majority began by declaring that "[d]isrespectful and contemptuous speech" is protected in the civilian world unless it incites and is likely to produce lawless action.[347] This was so because such conduct "does not directly affect the capacity of the Government to discharge its responsibilities."[348] The military was different. Speech that "undermine[s] the effectiveness of response to command" is not protected.[349]

---

342. Id.
343. Id. at 566.
344. Id. at 571.
345. Id. at 569. The Navy charged JOSA Priest with making statements disloyal to the United States. Id. at 566.
346. Id. at 569.
347. Id. at 570.
348. Id.
349. Id. But see Zillman & Imwinkelried*, supra* note 80, at 410 ("If there is a lesson from Vietnam for military attorneys and commanders, it would be that mindless censorship often is the policy most disruptive of military discipline and morale.").

Thus, CAAF found JOSA Priest's conduct unprotected.[350] It stated that "[t]he hazardous aspect of license in this area is that the damage done may not be recognized until the battle has begun. At that point, it may be uncorrectable or irreversible."[351] Because this newsletter had a direct impact on the response of service members to command, CAAF upheld JOSA Priest's conviction.[352]

V. A PROPOSED FRAMEWORK FOR THE MILITARY NECESSITY DOCTRINE

With the foregoing results in hand, it is now possible to discuss how a proposed framework couple be employed in the future. We begin with the burden.

A. Meeting the Burden for a Different Application of a Rule

CAAF's existing placement of the burden remains conducive to a framework for analyzing when and how to deviate from constitutional or statutory norms. The party that seeks the deviation bears the burden of persuasion.[353] As the Grunden Court declared, this will require more than a simple assertion of military necessity. The burden is a heavy one; sufficient reason and analysis must be required of the party seeking a different application of a constitutional or statutory rule. The party seeking relief must provide enough such reason and analysis to allow CAAF to determine whether the assertion of military necessity is of sufficient magnitude to outweigh the danger of a miscarriage of justice that may result from depriving an American citizen of his or her constitutional rights.

The corollary of this requirement is that CAAF must hold itself to the same standard when articulating why it found sufficient military necessity to warrant a different application. This not only reinforces the need for practitioners to be exacting in their

---

350. Priest, 21 U.S.C.M.A. at 571–72.

351. Id. at 571.

352. Id. at 572, 573.

353. Courtney v. Williams, 1 M.J. 267, 270 (C.M.A. 1976) ("[T]he burden of showing that military conditions require a different rule than that prevailing in the civilian community is upon the party arguing for a different rule." (citing Kauffman v. Sec'y of the Air Force, 415 F.2d 991 (1969))).

efforts, but also provides consistency and predictability in the law of military justice.

B. The Proposed Framework in Which to Argue Military Necessity

This proposed framework borrows from the well-known strict scrutiny standard of review. That is, a government may infringe upon certain fundamental constitutional rights if it does so in the pursuit of a compelling interest that is narrowly tailored toward accomplishing that interest.[354] It is true that not all rights protected within the Bill of Rights receive strict scrutiny review when abridged. However, the purpose of this recommendation is to provide a framework that is consistent with the Grunden Court's requirements and understandable to practitioners. Thus, the strict scrutiny approach provides a ready-made solution to determining how to analyze whether a separate military rule is tenable.

1. Similar Threshold Requirements

The requirements within strict scrutiny review are similar to the Grunden requirement. In his empirical study of strict scrutiny as applied in federal courts, Professor Adam Winkler described a compelling interest as one that describes the "'societal importance' of the government's reasons" for enacting a particular law or taking a particular action.[355] He concluded that "only the most pressing circumstances can justify the government action."[356]

This threshold requirement is similar to that required by Grunden. An assertion of military necessity must be accompanied by reason and analysis "of sufficient magnitude" to overcome the danger of a miscarriage of justice.[357] It is a correspondingly heavy burden.

---

354. See Hoffman v. United States, 767 F.2d 1431, 1435 (9th Cir. 1985) ("To withstand strict scrutiny a statute must be precisely tailored to serve a compelling state interest." (citing Plyler v. DOE, 757 U.S. 202, 216 (1982))).

355. Adam Winkler, Fatal in Theory and Strict in Fact: An Empirical Analysis of Strict Scrutiny in the Federal Courts, 59 VAND. L. REV. 793, 800 (2006) (citation omitted).

356. Id.

357. United States v. Grunden, 2 M.J. 116, 121, 122 (C.M.A. 1977).

Thinking in terms of a strict scrutiny approach requires no newly formulated test. Instead, it blends in a standard well-known to military and civilian practitioners alike. In addition, military necessity can be easily articulated if the preceding themes and examples are used, at least as a starting point.

2. Military Necessity is a Compelling Interest

Military necessity and the military mission easily fit within a most pressing circumstance of high societal importance. However, as indicated earlier, the key is to properly articulate a direct nexus between the challenged law, regulation, or action and one of the demonstrated themes and examples of military necessity currently existing within CAAF's jurisprudence. It cannot be sufficient to assert a theme. An argument should also include why the necessity exists and rely on citations to appropriate sources such as prior decisions and studies, to name just a few.

3. The Value of a Narrow Tailoring Approach

The aspect of this framework least familiar to the military practitioner is likely to be that of narrowly tailoring a deviation from traditional constitutional law interpretation. Though well-known to civilian practitioners and a potentially smaller number of military practitioners that remain engaged in constitutional law, CAAF has not historically cabined deviations to the least restrictive necessary. Rather, decisions often conclude the analysis upon finding military necessity and do not reach the additional question of whether the law, regulation, or action was the least restrictive means to accomplishing the compelling interest.

Adopting a narrowly tailored approach as part of the maturation of the military necessity doctrine is not without precedent. In Parker v. Levy, discussed earlier, CPT Levy challenged his convictions under Articles 133 and 134 of the UCMJ, on the basis that the two statutes were "void for vagueness under the Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment and overbroad in violation of the First Amendment."[358] The Court disagreed in part due to the fact that the Manual for Courts-Martial and CAAF itself have narrowed 358. Parker v. Levy, 417 U.S. 733, 752 (1974).

the application of two criminal statutes that literally prohibit a broad swath of conduct.[359]

A narrowly tailored approach is also consistent with the goal of the UCMJ of civilianizing military justice to the extent practical and corresponds to the evolving nature of the military society. Diminishing resources in an all-volunteer military requires asking those who serve to do more with less. One of the central tenets to maintaining a fighting force is a legitimate criminal justice system. Citizens who are confident that the military will only infringe on their freedoms to the minimum extent necessary to protect the Nation are more likely to sign up and stay in the armed forces.

VI. CONCLUSION

The existence of CAAF relieves the Court of the burden to supervise the relationship between the Constitution and the military community to the degree it has supervised the similarly situated inmate and student communities. CAAF has subsequently worked through the contours of this relationship in over sixty years of jurisprudence. This study has sought to advance the understanding of military necessity and when it is enough to apply a different rule in the military community than that required by the Court. Existing decisions appear to coalesce around three general themes and six more specific examples of military necessity that compel a different application of a constitutional rule or principle. However, additional study may broaden or restrict the number of examples on the path toward a more articulable and workable military necessity doctrine. Though certainly not the only available framework, the strict scrutiny styled framework proposed here offers two solutions. First, it provides the military community with a specific yet flexible framework that can be replicated throughout military courts, not to mention the benefit such guidance would have on judge advocates advising commanders on whether certain orders not directly related to military duty are lawful and enforceable un-

359. Id. at 754 ("The effect of these constructions . . . by [CAAF] and by other military authorities has been twofold: It has narrowed the very broad reach of the literal language of the articles, and at the same time has supplied considerable specificity by way of examples of the conduct which they cover.").

der the UCMJ. Second, it respects the uniqueness of the military community while staying true to the purpose of the UCMJ and the long held view that members of the military, no less than inmates or students, are entitled to the protections of the United States Constitution.

The Benefits of Arbitration: Arbitration in NCAA Student-Athlete Participation and Infractions Matters Provides for Fundamental Fairness

CHRISTIAN DENNIE*

I. THE HISTORY OF NCAA ENFORCEMENT AND INFRACTIONS 137
II. THE CURRENT STATE OF NCAA ENFORCEMENT AND THE NCAA COMMITTEE ON INFRACTIONS 139
A. NCAA Violation Structure 140
B. Committee on Infractions 142
C. NCAA Penalty Structure 143
III. THE FEDERAL ARBITRATION ACT 146
IV. ARBITRATION IN SPORTS 147
A. Major League Baseball 148
B. National Basketball Association 150
C. National Football League 152
D. National Hockey League 154
E. PGA Tour 157
F. United States Olympic Committee 159
V. A PLAN FOR NCAA ARBITRATION 162
A. Drug Test Appeals 163
B. NCAA Enforcement and Infractions 166
C. Participation Appeals 170
VI. CONCLUSION 173

Intercollegiate athletics has been shaken by scandal, waning public perception of the National Collegiate Athletic Association ("NCAA"), and its system for enforcing NCAA legislation. Currently, the NCAA uses an internal governance system to resolve all types of disputes and grievances relating to NCAA legislation.[1] This Article suggests that the NCAA act in accord with other sports organizations that allow for grievances and disputes to be heard by neutral arbitrators. This method of resolving disputes will provide student-athletes with a more balanced and fair alternative for addressing appeals in matters relating to student-athlete participation, such as positive drug screenings. By adopting arbitration as the forum to decide NCAA enforcement and infractions matters, the NCAA will be provided limited subpoena power as set forth in the Federal Arbitration Act and similar state statutes. Additionally, this Article proposes that the NCAA replace the Committee on Infractions ("COI") with a panel of trained and knowledgeable arbitrators to decide NCAA enforcement and infraction matters. Also, the NCAA would provide student-athletes with neutral ombudsman similar to what is provided by the United States Olympic Committee. The ombudsman would be permitted to provide advice to student-athletes separate and apart from the NCAA structure.

Part I of this Article provides an introduction to the NCAA and its history. Part II discusses the current state of NCAA enforcement and the NCAA Committee on Infractions and, specifically, the penalties permitted under NCAA legislation. Part III discusses the Federal Arbitration Act and review of arbitration proceedings provided by courts throughout the United States. Part IV details arbitration opportunities provided in professional sports including arbitration in Major League Baseball, National Basketball Association, National Football League, National Hockey League, PGA Tour, and United States Olympic Committee. Finally, Part V of this Article provides a plan to develop an NCAA arbitration system to resolve disputes and provides a system for student-athletes to have access to an ombudsman.

---

* Christian Dennie received his B.B.A. from Sam Houston State University and his J.D. from the University of Oklahoma College of Law. Christian is a partner at Barlow Garsek Simon, LLP in Fort Worth, Texas where he serves as an attorney and arbitrator. Additionally, he is an adjunct professor of sports law at Texas A&M School of Law and Southern Methodist University.

1. NAT'L COLLEGIATE ATHLETIC ASS'N, 2014–15 NCAA DIVISION I MANUAL § 19.3 (2014) [hereinafter 2014 NCAA MANUAL], http://www.ncaapublications.com/productdownloads/D115OCT.pdf.

I. THE HISTORY OF NCAA ENFORCEMENT AND INFRACTIONS

The first reported intercollegiate athletics contest in the United States took place in 1852 when Harvard University challenged Yale University to a rowing contest similar to those staged in England by Oxford University and Cambridge University.[2] It became evident even at the earliest American intercollegiate athletic event that a governing body would be necessary to level the playing field. To tilt the competition in its favor, Harvard University sought to gain an unfair advantage over Yale University by recruiting an athlete who was not a student.[3] Subsequently, colleges and universities across the country challenged one another to athletic contests in a variety of sports.

In 1905, the United States was in an uproar over the violence associated with intercollegiate football.[4] Football student-athletes' use of gang tackling and mass formations led to numerous injuries and deaths.[5] The public urged universities to abolish football or take steps to reform the game.[6] As a result, President Theodore Roosevelt summoned the nation's top intercollegiate athletics leaders to discuss reformation of college football.[7] One such leader, Chancellor Henry M. MacCracken of New York University, called a meeting of officials from the nation's thirteen most prominent universities to discuss reformation of the college foot-

---

2. See RONALD A. SMITH, SPORTS AND FREEDOM: THE RISE OF BIG-TIME COLLEGE ATHLETICS 168 (Peter Levine & Steven Tischler eds., 1988).

3. Rodney K. Smith, The National Collegiate Athletic Association's Death Penalty: How Educators Punish Themselves and Others, 62 IND. L.J. 985, 989 (1987).

4. See id. at 990.

5. Id. ("In 1905, there were eighteen deaths and over one hundred injuries in intercollegiate football."); see also DON YAEGER, UNDUE PROCESS: THE NCAA'S INJUSTICE FOR ALL 1–3 (1991) (explaining that the death of Harold Moore of Union College, the eighteenth fatality in college football in 1905, may have been the pressure necessary to reform college football); Christopher Klein, How Teddy Roosevelt Saved Football, HISTORY.COM (Sept. 6, 2012), http://www.history.com/news/how-teddy-roosevelt-saved-football (discussing how mass formations and gang tackling lead to numerous injuries).

6. YAEGER, supra note 5, at 3–4.

7. Smith, supra note 3, at 990.

ball playing rules.[8] Subsequently, a sixty-two member body formed the Intercollegiate Athletic Association of the United States ("IAAUS"), which would become known as the NCAA in 1910.[9] For the next ten years, the organization was merely a discussion group that developed rules applicable to intercollegiate football.[10]

As the world of intercollegiate athletics grew, the NCAA began to evolve from merely an organization that formulated football rules to creating eligibility, recruiting, and financial aid guidelines that would govern all intercollegiate sports.[11] However, the organization lacked an enforcement mechanism and struggled to implement its promulgated rules. Thus, in 1919, the NCAA created a policy whereby member institutions were encouraged not to compete against violating members.[12] It quickly became clear that such a deterrent was not feasible and also lacked strength.[13] In 1948, at the urging of the Big Ten, Pacific Coast, Southwest, and Southeastern conferences, the NCAA again attempted to develop a system to enforce its legislation by adopting the "Sanity Code," which prohibited member institutions from offering athletics-based financial aid.[14] The member institutions also created a three-member Compliance Committee to enforce the "Sanity Code," however; the "Sanity Code" was short-lived.[15] In 1951, member institutions voted to repeal the "Sanity Code" because the only punishment available was termination of NCAA membership.[16]

---

8. Id.; Formation of the NCAA: Un Unexpected Beginning, NCAA HISTORY GUIDE (Nov. 21, 2012, 9:00 AM), http://ncaahistoryguide.com/formation-ncaa-unexpected-beginning/#more-52.

9. Formation of the NCAA, supra note 8. It was the flying wedge, football's major offense in 1905, which spurred the formation of the NCAA. See Myles Brand, Address to the National Press Club (Mar. 4, 2003), http://www.npr.org/programs/npc/2003/030304.mbrand.html.

10. See ARTHUR A. FLEISHER III, ET AL., THE NATIONAL COLLEGIATE ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION: A STUDY IN CARTEL BEHAVIOR 42 (1992).

11. See id. at 42–44.

12. Id. at 42 (stating the NCAA resolution recommended that "members schedule games hereafter with those institutions only whose eligibility code is in general conformity with the principles advocated by [the NCAA]").

13. Id. at 46.

14. Id. at 47.

15. Id. at 47–48.

16. Id. at 47–49.

In 1954, the NCAA created the Committee on Infractions ("COI") to investigate and punish member institutions.[17] In 1973, the member institutions agreed to equip the committee with additional strength by providing an investigative staff that would be responsible for gathering and presenting evidence to the committee regarding alleged institutional infractions.[18] In 1984, member institutions formed the NCAA Presidents Commission that produced a multitude of changes, including increased punishment for violations.[19] The next year, the Presidents Commission revealed a plan to punish member institutions that blatantly violate NCAA rules by adopting the repeat violator bylaw, commonly known as the "death penalty."[20] The "death penalty" has been used to punish only one institution at the Division I level, Southern Methodist University, which prohibited the football team from competing in the 1987 football season.[21]

II. The Current State of NCAA Enforcement and the NCAA Committee on Infractions

In mid-2011, NCAA President Mark Emmert called a meeting of more than fifty presidents and chancellors at Division I institutions with the stated goal of restoring public trust in intercol-

---

17. Id. at 50.

18. See Jack Falla, NCAA: The Voice of College Sports 139–40 (1981).

19. See Smith, supra note 3, at 986–87.

20. Id. at 987. The NCAA repeat violator bylaw stated the institution is prohibited from > some or all outside competition in the sport involved in the latest major violation for a prescribed period as deemed appropriate by the Committee on Infractions and the prohibition of all coaching staff members in that sport from involvement directly or indirectly in any coaching activities at the institution during that period.

Nat'l Collegiate Athletics Ass'n, 2012–13 NCAA Division I Manual § 19.5.2.1.2(a) (2012) [hereinafter 2012 NCAA Manual], http://www.ncaapublications.com/productdownloads/D113.pdf.

21. See NCAA Comm. on Infractions, Southern Methodist University Infractions Report (1987), http://assets.sbnation.com/assets/388698/SMU_COI_report.pdf.

legiate athletics.[22] President Emmert created the NCAA Enforcement Working Group ("EWG") to study ways to improve intercollegiate athletics. After extensively analyzing the current model, the EWG found numerous changes needed to be made to the enforcement structure.[23] Accordingly, the EWG proposed legislation to alter the COI, as well as the violation and penalty structure, which was ultimately adopted on October 30, 2012 and effective August 1, 2013.[24]

A. NCAA Violation Structure

Historically, NCAA violations have been separated into two categories, secondary violations and major violations.[25] The NCAA defined a secondary violation as "isolated or inadvertent in nature, provides or is intended to provide only a minimal recruiting, competitive or other advantage and does not include any significant impermissible benefit (including, but not limited to, an extra benefit, recruiting inducement, preferential treatment or financial aid)."[26] Whereas, a major violation was defined as "[a]ll violations other than secondary violations" and multiple secondary violations.[27] In an effort to provide more clarity in the structure of NCAA violations, the EWG proposed, and the NCAA membership ultimately codified, legislation that provided for four levels of violations. These were dubbed Level I through Level IV violations, with Level I violations being most severe and Level IV violations being incidental infractions.[28]

Level I violations are labeled "Severe Breach of Conduct" and include violations that "provide[] a substantial or extensive recruiting, competitive or other advantage, or a substantial or ex-

---

22. NCAA WORKING GROUP ON COLLEGIATE MODEL – ENFORCEMENT, FINAL REPORT 2 (2012) [hereinafter NCAA ENFORCEMENT REPORT], http://www.ncaa.org/sites/default/files/Final_Report_EWG_072412.pdf.

23. Id. at 4–6. Specifically, the EWG proposed the following changes: (1) developing a multilevel NCAA violation structure; (2) creating an expedited procedure to dispose of NCAA infractions cases; (3) enhancing the NCAA's penalty structure; and (4) reinforcing the sense of shared responsibility for compliance among individuals, coaches, and athletics administrators. Id.

24. Id. at 29.

25. 2012 NCAA MANUAL, supra note 20, §§ 19.5.1, 19.5.2.

26. Id. § 19.02.2.1.

27. Id. §§ 19.02.2.1, 19.02.2.2.

28. NCAA ENFORCEMENT REPORT, supra note 22, at 4.

tensive impermissible benefit."[29] Level II violations are labeled "Significant Breach of Conduct" and include violations that > provide or are intended to provide more than a minimal but less than a substantial or extensive recruiting, competitive or other advantage; include more than a minimal but less than a substantial or extensive impermissible benefit; or involve conduct that may compromise the integrity of the NCAA Collegiate Model as set forth in the constitution and bylaws.[30]

---

29. 2014 NCAA MANUAL, supra note 1, § 19.1.1. Specific codified examples include: (1) lack of institutional control; (2) academic misconduct; (3) failure to cooperate in an NCAA enforcement investigation; (4) individual unethical or dishonest conduct; (5) a head coach's violation of NCAA Bylaw 11.1.1.1 resulting from an underlying Level I violation; (6) cash payments provided by a coach or athletics administrator used to secure the enrollment of a prospective student-athlete; (7) intentional violations or reckless indifference to the NCAA constitution and bylaws; and (8) collective Level II and/or Level III violations. Id. NCAA Bylaw 11.1.1.1 states:

> An institution's head coach is presumed to be responsible for the actions of institutional staff members who report, directly or indirectly, to the head coach. An institution's head coach shall promote an atmosphere of compliance within his or her program and shall monitor the activities of all institutional staff members involved with the program who report, directly or indirectly, to the coach.

Id. § 11.1.1.1.

30. Id. § 19.1.2. Specific codified examples are (1) violations that do not rise to the level of a Level I violation, but are more serious than a Level III violation; (2) failure to monitor; (3) "systemic violations that do not amount to a lack of institutional control;" (4) "multiple recruiting, financial aid, or eligibility violations that do not amount to a lack of institutional control;" (5) a head coach's violation of NCAA Bylaw 11.1.1.1 resulting from an underlying Level II violation; and (6) collective Level III violations. See, e.g., NCAA COMM. ON INFRACTIONS, THE GEORGIA INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY PUBLIC INFRACTIONS DECISION (2014), http://www.ncaa.org/sites/default/files/Ga%20Tech%20Public%20Infractions%20Decision.pdf; NCAA COMM. ON INFRACTIONS, SAINT FRANCIS UNIVERSITY PUBLIC INFRACTIONS DECISION (2014), http://www.ncaa.org/sites/default/files/StFrancisPublicInfractionsDecision.pdf; NCAA COMM. ON INFRACTIONS, UNIVERSITY OF NEW HAMPSHIRE PUBLIC INFRACTIONS DECISION (2014), http://www.ncaa.org/sites/default/files/New%20Hampshire%20Public%20Decision.pdf.

Level III violations are labeled "Breach of Conduct" and include violations that are "isolated or limited in nature; provide no more than a minimal recruiting, competitive or other advantage; and provide no more than a minimal impermissible benefit."[31] Level IV violations are labeled "Incidental Infraction[s]" and include violations that are "technical in nature and [do] not constitute a Level III violation . . . [and] will not affect eligibility for intercollegiate athletics."[32] These violations are minor in nature and have been historically adjudicated at the conference level rather than by the NCAA.[33]

B. Committee on Infractions

With the adoption of legislative reform, the NCAA membership increased the COI from ten members to twenty-four members, allowing the chair of the COI to have greater flexibility to appoint panel members to expedite processing of infractions cases.[34] The changes to the COI were designed to empanel committee members who have intimate knowledge of the operations of intercollegiate athletics programs, including former coaches and presidents.[35] However, this change permits current athletics administrators and coaches to make decisions that will, in all likelihood, affect their peers, which may result in termination of employment for coaches and administrators.[36] For this reason, some have argued that COI panel members should not be affiliated with an NCAA

---

31. 2014 NCAA MANUAL, supra note 1, § 19.1.3. Specific codified examples are (1) inadvertent violations that are isolated or limited in nature; and (2) extra-benefit, financial aid, academic eligibility and recruiting violations that do not create more than a minimal advantage. Id. § 19.1.3.

32. Id. § 19.1.4. NCAA legislation does not provide codified examples of Level IV violations; however, the NCAA maintains a list of incidental infractions that provides, among others, the following examples: (1) impermissible camp and clinic brochures; (2) failure to administer the NCAA Drug-Testing Consent Form; and (3) failure to submit a declaration of playing season. See NAT'L COLLEGIATE ATHLETICS ASS'N, LIST OF INCIDENTAL INFRACTIONS (LEVEL IV) (2015), http://www.ncaa.org/sites/default/files/Level%20IV%20Violations%20(September%204,%202015).pdf.

33. Secondary Infractions Self-Reporting, NCAA.ORG, http://www.ncaa.org/secondary-infractions-self-reporting (last visited Oct. 10, 2015).

34. See 2014 NCAA MANUAL, supra note 1, § 19.3.1.

35. Id. § 19.3.1.

36. Id. § 19.3.1.

member institution because there is an inherent lack of fairness and neutrality.[37]

The new NCAA enforcement model was calculated to increase efficiency and expedite the decision making process. With these pillars in mind, the NCAA membership adopted legislation that (1) permitted member institutions or involved individuals with the opportunity to petition COI for an accelerated hearing in Level II violation cases;[38] (2) increased the opportunity to resolve Level II cases on written submission;[39] (3) expanded the summary disposition process[40] for Level I and Level II cases to provide expanded opportunities for resolution via written submission and appearances via videoconferencing and other forms of communication;[41] and (4) allowed for expedited hearings in summary disposition cases where the parties agree on the facts but not on proposed penalties.[42]

C. NCAA Penalty Structure

The EWG sought and ultimately succeeded in substantially altering the penalty structure for NCAA infractions. In the EWG's report, the group set forth goals and guidelines as follows: (1) to provide member institutions and involved individuals with notice of the range of potential penalties; (2) to enhance consistency in applying penalties while also providing COI with discretion to alter penalties; (3) to expedite the enforcement process while not sacrificing integrity; (4) to impose penalties that require institutional responsibility for the governance of intercollegiate athletics;

---

37. See Brent Schrotenboer, Alabama Case Spotlights Emmert, Saban Friendship, USA TODAY (Oct. 15, 2013, 5:05 PM), http://www.usatoday.com/story/sports/ncaaf/2013/10/08/alabama-illegal-benefits-case-spotlights-ncaa-mark-emmert-nick-saban-friendship/2948023/. But see Maureen A. Weston, NCAA Sanctions: Assigning Blame Where it Belongs, 52 B.C. L. REV. 551, 568–70 (2011).

38. 2014 NCAA MANUAL, supra note 1, § 19.7.7.2.

39. Id. § 19.7.

40. The summary disposition process is available in Level I and Level II cases when "the institution, involved individuals and the enforcement staff may elect to use the summary disposition procedures" when the parties agree to the facts of the dispute. Id. § 19.6.1.

41. Id. § 19.6.4.5.

42. Id. § 19.6.4.5.

(5) to hold individuals in positions of power and authority accountable for failing to appropriately oversee compliance matters; (6) to impose penalties on coaches and administrators whose conduct is inconsistent with NCAA legislation; and (7) to impose penalties that will eliminate the risk-reward analysis in committing violations of NCAA legislation.[43]

NCAA legislation groups Level I and Level II penalties. Prior to prescribing penalties, the COI is required to determine "whether any factors that may affect penalties are present for a case."[44] After determining whether aggravating[45] and mitigating[46] factors exist, COI shall prescribe core penalties for Level I and Level II violations.[47] The COI may only depart from the core pen-

---

43. NCAA ENFORCEMENT REPORT, supra note 22, at 15.

44. 2014 NCAA MANUAL, supra note 1, § 19.9.2.

45. Id. COI will determine whether any aggravating factors exist, which consist of: (1) multiple Level I violations by the member institution or involved individuals; (2) a history of Level I, Level II, or major violations by the member institution, involved sports program(s), or involved individuals; (3) lack of institutional control; (4) obstructing an investigation or attempting to conceal evidence; (5) unethical conduct, compromising the integrity of the investigation, and/or failing to cooperate during the investigation and provide relevant information; (6) premeditated violations; (7) multiple Level II violations by the member institution or involved individuals; (8) an individual in an position of authority condoned, participated in or negligently disregarded a violation of NCAA legislation; (9) one or more violations of NCAA legislation that cause significant ineligibility or substantial harm to a student-athlete or prospective student-athlete; (10) a pattern of noncompliance within the involved sports program(s); (11) conduct intended for pecuniary gain; (12) intentional, willful, or blatant disregarding for the NCAA constitution and bylaws; or (13) other factors that warrant additional penalties. Id. § 19.9.3.

46. Id. § 19.9.4. COI will analyze whether mitigating factors exist to warrant a lower range of penalties, which consist of the following: (1) prompt self-detection and self-disclosure of the violation(s) of NCAA legislation; (2) prompt acknowledgment and acceptance of responsibility for the violations of NCAA legislation; (3) affirmative steps to expedite final resolution of the NCAA infractions matter; (4) an established history of self-reporting Level III or secondary violations; (5) implementation of a compliance system designed to ensure rules compliance; (6) exemplary cooperation in the investigation by the member institution or involved individuals; (7) unintentional violations of NCAA legislation that represent a deviation from otherwise compliant practices; and (8) others factors that warrant lower penalties. Id. § 19.9.4.

47. Id. §§ 19.9.5, 19.9.5.1–19.9.5.7. The core penalties include: (1) limitations on the member institution's participation in postseason play; (2) a fine, alties upon a finding of extenuating circumstances and must explain the basis for altering the core penalties in its report.[48] NCAA legislation also groups penalties for Level III and Level IV violations.[49] return of received revenue, or reduction or elimination of distributions received from the NCAA; (3) limitations on the number of financial aid packages awarded; (4) a show-cause order that restricts an involved individual's ability to take part in athletically related duties; (5) suspension of the head coach for a certain number of athletic contests; (6) recruiting restrictions such as limitations on official visits, unofficial visits, recruiting communications, and off-campus recruiting activities; and (7) a probationary period. Id. §§ 19.9.5.1–19.9.5.7.

---

48. Id. § 19.9.6. In addition to the core penalties prescribed for Level I and Level II violations, COI may prescribe the following additional penalties: (1) prohibition against competition in the sport during the regular season; (2) prohibition against coaching staff members' involvement in coaching activities; (3) prohibition against institutional staff members serving on various NCAA committees and councils; (4) requirement that the member institution relinquish NCAA voting privileges; (5) recommendation that the member institution's membership in the NCAA be suspended or terminated; (6) public reprimand and censure; (7) vacation of records; (8) prohibition against television appearances; (9) disassociation of relations with a representative of an institution's athletics interests; (10) publicizing a member institution's probation; (11) institutionally imposed suspension of a staff member; and (12) other penalties that may be appropriate. Id. § 19.9.7.

49. Id. § 19.9.8. Penalties for Level III and Level IV violations include the following: (1) termination of the recruitment of a prospective student-athlete or, for enrolled student-athletes, direction to the member institution to take steps necessary to restore the student-athletes' eligibility; (2) forfeiture or vacation of athletics contests in which an ineligible student-athlete participated; (3) prohibition of the coaching staff's involvement in off-campus recruiting for up to one year; (4) a financial penalty ranging from $500.00 to $5000.00; (5) limitations on the number of financial aid packages awarded to a maximum of twenty percent of the maximum number of awards normally permissible in that sport; (6) recertification of institutional NCAA compliance policies and procedures to conform with the NCAA constitution and bylaws; (7) institutionally imposed suspension of the head coach or staff members for one or more competitions; (8) public reprimand; and (9) requirement that a member institution or involved staff member who has been found in violation of NCAA legislation show cause why a penalty or additional penalty should not be prescribed if it does not take appropriate disciplinary action against the involved individuals. Id. § 19.9.8.

III. THE FEDERAL ARBITRATION ACT

The Federal Arbitration Act ("FAA"), passed by Congress and signed into law by President Calvin Coolidge in 1925, was designed to curb judicial opposition to arbitration agreements.[50] In pertinent part, the FAA states:

> A written provision in any maritime transaction or a contract evidencing a transaction involving commerce to settle by arbitration a controversy thereafter arising out of such contract or transaction, or the refusal to perform the whole or any part thereof, or an agreement in writing to submit to arbitration an existing controversy arising out of such a contract, transaction, or refusal, shall be valid, irrevocable, and enforceable, save upon such grounds as exist at law or in equity for the revocation of any contract.[51]

The legislative history of the FAA suggests Congress intended to affirm arbitration agreements that appeared in binding contractual agreements in order to reduce the cost and time of litigation in light of the substantial strain on the judiciary that resulted from a mountain of claims filed in the wake of the Industrial Revolution.[52] Through the passage of the FAA, Congress essentially "declared a national policy favoring arbitration and withdrew the power of the states to require a judicial forum for the resolution of claims which the contracting parties agreed to resolve by arbitration."[53]

---

50. See JON. O. SHIMABUKURO, CONG. RESEARCH SERV., RL30934, THE FEDERAL ARBITRATION ACT: BACKGROUND AND RECENT DEVELOPMENTS 2–3 (2003), http://digital.library.unt.edu/ark:/67531/metacrs3879/; see also Janet M. Grossnickle, Note, Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos. v. Dobson*: How the Federal Arbitration Act Will Keep Consumers and Corporations Out of the Courtroom*, 36 B.C. L. REV. 769, 772 (1995) ("[I]t appears that the Act was intended simply to complement state laws and make commercial arbitration agreements enforceable in federal courts.").

51. 9 U.S.C. § 2 (2012).

52. H.R. REP. NO. 96, at 1–2 (1924).

53. Southland Corp. v. Keating, 465 U.S. 1, 10 (1984).

As courts' dockets swelled, judges began to take comfort in arbitration as a form of dispute resolution.[54] The FAA, under most circumstances, "limits a court's role to that of determining whether the party seeking arbitration has raised an issue that is within the scope of the arbitration agreement."[55] Courts interpret the scope of arbitration clauses liberally and heavily favor enforcement.[56] The United States Supreme Court has gone as far as to find state statutes prohibiting arbitration are invalid.[57]

The FAA also provides provisions that allow for courts to enforce written arbitration agreements involving interstate commerce.[58] Specifically, a party seeking to enforce an arbitration agreement has the ability to stay proceedings in federal courts,[59] appoint arbitrators,[60] and judicially enforce awards.[61] Most importantly, in accordance with the FAA, arbitrators are also permitted to issue subpoenas requiring the attendance of a witness and/or the production of documents.[62]

IV. ARBITRATION IN SPORTS

Arbitration is the preferred tribunal to resolve disputes in the sports industry. Arbitration provides an expedited and confidential process using appointed arbitrators with knowledge of the sports industry and arbitration. Collective bargaining agreements

---

54. Sherrie Kaiser Goff, *Recent Development: Federal and State Securities Claims: Litigation or Arbitration?—*Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. v. Byrd, 105 S. Ct. 1238 (1985), 61 WASH. L. REV. 245, 247 (1986).

55. Id.

56. Hanes Corp. v. Millard, 531 F.2d 585, 598 (D.C. Cir. 1976) ("[I]n construing arbitration agreements, every doubt is to be resolved in favor of arbitration."); Galt v. Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co., 376 F.2d 711, 714 (7th Cir. 1967) ("[C]ourts will use the Federal Arbitration Act to enforce agreements to arbitrate.").

57. Keating, 465 U.S. at 10.

58. 9 U.S.C. § 2 (2012).

59. Id. § 3.

60. Id. § 5.

61. Id. § 9.

62. Id. § 7. Section 7 of the FAA states, "The arbitrators selected . . . may summon in writing any person to attend before them or any of them as a witness and in a proper case to bring with him or them any book, record, document, or paper which may be deemed material as evidence in the case." Id.

("CBA") and athlete handbooks commonly provide for an expedited form of dispute resolution. This part details matters subject to arbitration as provided by the CBAs for Major League Baseball, the National Basketball Association, the National Football League, the National Hockey League, the PGA Tour player handbook and anti-doping policy, and the United States Olympic Committee's constitution and bylaws.

A. Major League Baseball

Major League Baseball ("MLB") offers a multi-layered system of arbitration to adjust grievances. Baseball provides a unique system for resolving salary negotiations known as salary arbitration.[63] Salary arbitration is a form of final offer arbitration that is invoked when a player has a total of three or more years of service[64] but less than six years of service.[65] In MLB salary arbitration, the player and his team exchange a single salary figure and submit the matter for decision to the arbitration panel.[66] The arbitrator or arbitrators must select one of the salary figures presented and may not provide for an alternate salary figure.[67] The MLB CBA also offers grievance arbitration relating to disputes involving "any agreement, or any provision of any agreement" between the 63. MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL, 2012–2016 BASIC AGREEMENT, art. VI § E [hereinafter MLB CBA], http://mlb.mlb.com/pa/pdf/cba_english.pdf; see also Ed Edmonds, Labor and Employment Law Issues in Sports: A Most Interesting Part of Baseball's Monetary Structure—Salary Arbitration in its Thirty-Fifth Year, 20 MARQ. SPORTS L. REV. 1, 7–8 (2009); Eldon L. Ham & Jeffrey Malach, Hardball Free Agency–The Unintended Demise of Salary Arbitration in Major League Baseball: How the Law of Unintended Consequences Crippled the Salary Arbitration Remedy—and How to Fix It, 1 HARV. J. SPORTS & ENT. L. 63, 77 (2010).

---

64. MLB CBA, supra note 63, art. IV § E(1). A player known as a "Super 2" is eligible for salary arbitration. Id. A "Super 2" is a player with at least two years of service, but less than three years of service, and is eligible for arbitration when he has accumulated at least 86 days of service during the preceding year and ranks in the top 22% in total service in the class of players who have at least two years of service, but less than three years of service. Id. art. IV § E(1)(b).

65. Id. art. IV § E(1).

66. Id. art. IV § E(4).

67. Id. art. IV § E(13).

player's association or player and an MLB club.[68] In the event a grievance arises between the aforementioned parties, the aggrieved party may seek arbitration after attempting to resolve the dispute.[69]

As a part of MLB's Joint Drug Prevention and Treatment Program ("JDA"), players are afforded appellate rights including the opportunity to seek arbitration.[70] The deciding panel consists of a representative of the MLB Office of the Commissioner, a representative of the Major League Baseball Players Association, and a neutral, independent arbitrator.[71] The JDA states that a player "who tests positive for a Performance Enhancing Substance," or otherwise violates the Program through the use or possession of a Performance Enhancing Substance, will receive discipline of an 80 game suspension for the first violation, a 162 game suspension for the second violation, and a permanent suspension with the opportunity to seek reinstatement for the third violation.[72] A player may also be subjected to disciplinary action under Section 7(G)[73] of the JDA for "just cause" for using, possessing, selling, facilitating the sale of, distributing, or facilitating the distribution of any drug of abuse, performance enhance substance, and/or stimulant that is not otherwise referenced as a violation of another aspect in Section 7.[74] The arbitration panel is commissioned and has jurisdiction to review "[a] determination that a player has violated the [drug testing]

---

68. Id. art. XI §§ A(1)(a), D, E.

69. Id. art. XI § B.

70. MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL, MAJOR LEAGUE BASEBALL'S JOINT DRUG PREVENTION AND TREATMENT PROGRAM § 8 [hereinafter MLB JDA], http://mlb.mlb.com/pa/pdf/jda.pdf.

71. Id. § 8(A).

72. Id. § 7(A). A different duration of discipline is mandated for use of stimulants, street drugs, and conviction for use of possession of a prohibited substance, and participation in the sale or distribution of a prohibited substance. Id. § 7(B)–(F).

73. Id. § 8(D) (discussing specific procedures for appeals relating to "just cause" discipline as provided in Section 7(G)(2)).

74. Id. § 7(G); see also Major League Baseball Players Ass'n v. Office of the Comm'r of Baseball, Alex Rodriguez, Panel Decision No. 131 (Jan. 11, 2014) (Horowitz, Arb.) (holding there was just cause to suspend Alex Rodriguez for the entire 2014 season in accordance with Section 7(G) of the MLB JDA).

Program,"[75] whether the level of discipline imposed was supported by "just cause," and therapeutic use exemptions.[76]

B. National Basketball Association

The National Basketball Association ("NBA") offers multiple forms of arbitration. Disputes involving the interpretation or application of the provisions of the collective bargaining agreement or the provisions of the uniform player contract are submitted to a grievance arbitrator.[77] In accordance with the NBA CBA, a grievance may be initiated by a player, team, the NBA, or the National Basketball Players Association ("NBPA").[78] The grievance arbitrator has broad jurisdiction and authority,[79] however, they do not have authority to "add to, detract from, or alter" the provisions of the NBA CBA.[80] Similarly, grievances relating to player injuries are decided by a grievance arbitrator, along with the assistance of an independent medical expert.[81]

Any dispute involving "a fine or suspension imposed upon a player by the commissioner [of the NBA] for conduct on the

---

75. MLB JDA supra note 70, § 8(A)(1). The MLB Commissioner's Office has the burden of proof to establish that a player tested positive for a banned substance. Id. § 8(B)(1). A player does not violate the terms of the MLB JDA if he can show the presence of a banned substance was "not due to his fault or negligence." Id. § 8(B)(3).

76. Id. § 8(A)(1). The arbitration panel, however, is not permitted to reduce the discipline imposed below the stated level of the violation set forth in Section 7 of the MLB JDA. Id. § 8(A).

77. NAT'L BASKETBALL ASSOCIATION, COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENT (2011), art. XXXI § 1(a)(i) [hereinafter NBA CBA], http://nbpa.com/cba/.

78. Id. art. XXXI § 2(a).

79. See id. art. XXXI § 6(b). The grievance arbitrators have the authority to

> (i) interpret, apply, or determine compliance with the provisions of the [NBA CBA]; (ii) interpret, apply or determine compliance with the provisions of Player Contracts; (iii) determine the validity of Player Contracts; (iv) award damages . . . ; (v) award declaratory relief . . . to determine whether [an NBA] Team may properly terminate a Player Contract . . . ; and (vi) resolve disputes.

Id.

80. Id.

81. Id. art. XXXI § 8(a).

playing court" or any action taken by the commissioner relating to preserving the "integrity of, or maintenance of public confidence in, the game of basketball" is also subject to player discipline arbitration.[82] The commissioner of the NBA shall decide between a fine of $50,000 or less, a suspension of twelve (12) game or less, or both.[83] However, if the dispute is not resolved to the player's satisfaction, the NBPA may seek to review the "financial impact" of the commissioner's decision by seeking arbitration by and through the arbitrator.[84] The player discipline arbitrator does not have authority to review financial penalties imposed for "technical fouls, ejections, or the violation of other similar NBA rules" and the standard of review is de novo.[85] If the fine imposed by the commissioner is more than $50,000 and/or the suspension is more than twelve (12) games, or both, then the grievance arbitrator shall serve as the arbitrator and apply an arbitrary and capricious standard of review.[86]

The CBA also calls for system arbitration involving disputes between the NBA and NBPA.[87] The systems arbitrator is afforded authority to make "findings of fact and award appropriate relief including, without limitation, damages, injunctive relief and specific performance," but does not have authority to impose an award of punitive damages.[88] The systems arbitrator has exclusive jurisdiction to determine disputes relating to matters such as basketball-related income, salary cap, minimum team salary, escrow arrangements, rookie pay scale, player eligibility, NBA draft, free agency, option clauses, circumvention, anti-collusion, certifications, mutual reservations of rights, group licensing rights, terms of 82. Id. art. XXXI § 1(b)(ii).

---

83. Id. art. XXXI § 9(a).
84. Id. art. XXXI § 9(a)(5).
85. Id. art. XXXXI § 9(a)(5)(b).
86. Id. art. XXXI § 9(b); see also Sprewell v. Golden State Warriors, 266 F.3d 979, 984–88 (9th Cir. 2001) (holding the arbitrator did not exceed his scope of authority in determining that Sprewell should be suspended for the 1997–98 NBA season for choking and assaulting P.J. Carlesimo, the head coach of the Golden State Warriors).
87. NBA CBA, supra note 77, art. XXXII § 1.
88. Id. art. XXXII §3(b).

the CBA, expansion, and contraction.[89] The system arbitrator, however, does not have authority to "add to, detract from, or alter" the provisions of the NBA CBA or a player contract.[90]

C. National Football League

The National Football League ("NFL") also provides for multiple forms of arbitration. The NFL and the NFL Players Association ("NFLPA") agreed by and through the CBA to provide for a system arbitrator.[91] The system arbitrator has exclusive authority to determine disputes relating to the terms of the CBA and other limited and specific terms.[92] The system arbitrator shall make determinations of relief and damages including injunctive relief, fines, and specific performance.[93] A three-year statute of limitations is applied to matters initiated before the system arbitrator.[94]

The NFL CBA provides for the appointment of a non-injury grievance arbitrator.[95] A non-injury grievance,[96] as defined by Article 43 of the CBA, is any dispute involving the interpreta-

89. Id. art. XXXII § 1. See also art. VII (listing categories in which the systems arbitrator has exclusive jurisdiction).

90. Id. art. XXXII § 3(e).

91. NAT'L FOOTBALL LEAGUE, COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENT art. 15 (2011), https://nfllabor.files.wordpress.com/2010/01/collective-bargaining-agreement-2011-2020.pdf [hereinafter NFL CBA].

92. Id. art. 15, § 1. For example, the following terms must be determined by the arbitrator: (1) definitions of the CBA; (2) the NFL player contract; (3) the college draft; (4) veterans and veteran free agency; (5) franchise and transition players; (6) transition rules for the 2011 season; (7) anti-collusion; (8) certification; (9) consultation and information sharing; (10) salaries; (11) minimum salaries; (12) performance-base pool; (13) additional regular season games; (14) mutual reservation of rights; (15) duration of the CBA; (16) law and principles governing the CBA; (17) rookie compensation; (18) revenue accounting; (19) calculation of salary cap; (20) salary cap accounting rules; and (21) circumvention of salary cap. Id. art. 14 § 3, art. 15 § 1.

93. Id. art. 15 § 2(a).

94. Id. art. 15 § 2(f).

95. Id. art. 43 § 1.

96. Id.; see also White v. Nat'l Football League, 533 F. Supp. 2d 929, 933 (D. Minn. 2008) (refusing to adopt the non-injury grievance decision of the NFL's special master and holding Michael Vick was entitled to retain the roster bonus he received from the Atlanta Falcons despite pleading guilty to federal criminal charges).

tion of, application of, or compliance with any provision of the CBA, the NFL player contract, the practice squad player contract, or provisions of the NFL constitution and bylaws or NFL rules that relate to the terms and conditions of employment of an NFL player.[97] A grievance may be initiated by a player, the club, the NFL management council, or the NFLPA and must be initiated within fifty-days of the date of the occurrence.[98] Additionally, the non-injury grievance arbitrator shall have authority to determine whether a player or his agent engaged in "good faith negotiations" over compensation as well as any workers' compensation claims for teams that elect not to be covered by workers' compensation laws of its state.[99] The non-injury grievance arbitrator does not have jurisdiction or authority to "add to, subtract from, or alter in any way the provisions of [the NFL CBA]" or > to grant any remedy other than a money award, an order of reinstatement, suspension without pay, a stay of suspension pending decision, a cease and desist order, a credit or benefit award under the Bert Bell/Pete Rozelle NFL Player Retirement Plan, or an order of compliance with a specific term of [the NFL CBA] or any other applicable document, or an advisory opinion pursuant to [proposed playing rule changes].[100]

The NFL CBA also provides for the resolution of injury grievances by and through arbitration. An injury grievance, as defined by the CBA, is any complaint or claim "that, at the time a player's NFL Player Contract or Practice Squad Player Contract was terminated by a Club, the player was physically unable to perform the services required of him by that contract because of an injury incurred in the performance of his services under that contract."[101] A player, or the NFLPA on the player's behalf, must present an injury grievance to the player's team and to the NFL Management Council within twenty-five days from the date the play-

97. NFL CBA, supra note 91, art. 43 § 1.
98. Id. art. 43 § 2.
99. Id. art. 26 § 4, art. 41 § 3.
100. Id. art. 43 § 8.
101. Id. art. 44 § 1.

er's contract was known to be terminated.[102] The team will then make a determination whether to compensate the aggrieved player. If the player or the NFLPA do not agree with the decision made by the team, the player or the NFLPA may seek arbitration.[103]

All disputes relating to a fine or suspension imposed upon a player for conduct on the playing field or conduct "detrimental to the integrity of, or public confidence in, the game of professional football" may be appealed to the NFL commissioner.[104] Appeals of such discipline shall be made to "hearing officer" as appointed by the NFL commissioner after consultation with the executive director of the NFLPA.[105]

D. National Hockey League

The National Hockey League ("NHL") provides multiple forms of arbitration by and through the CBA between the National Hockey League and the NHL Players' Association ("NHLPA"). Like the MLB, the NHL also provides for salary arbitration.[106] The salary arbitrator has authority to establish the term of the player contract based on the player's or team's election of a one or two year agreement and the amount to be paid to the player.[107]

---

102. Id. art. 44 § 2.

103. Id. art. 44 § 6.

104. Id. art. 46 § 1.

105. Id. art. 46 § 2(a); see NAT'L FOOTBALL LEAGUE, POLICY AND PROGRAM ON SUBSTANCES OF ABUSE 24 (2014), https://nflpaweb.blob.core.windows.net/media/Default/PDFs/Active%20Players/Drug_SOA_Policy_9-29-14.pdf.

106. COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENT BETWEEN NATIONAL HOCKEY LEAGUE AND NATIONAL PLAYERS' ASSOCIATION art. 12 (2013) [hereinafter NHL CBA], http://www.nhl.com/nhl/en/v3/ext/CBA2012/NHL_NHLPA_2013_CBA.pdf; see also Philadelphia World Hockey Club, Inc. v. Philadelphia Hockey Club, Inc., 351 F. Supp. 462, 481 (E.D. Pa. 1972). The following players are eligible for salary arbitration: (1) an 18–20 year old player with four years of professional experience; (2) a 21 year old player with three years of professional experience; (3) a 22–23 year old player with two years of professional experience; and (4) a 24 year old or older player with one year of professional experience. NHL CBA, supra, art. 12 § 1(a).

107. NHL CBA, supra note 106, art. 12 § 9(n); see also Melanie Aubut, When Negotiations Fail: An Analysis of Salary Arbitration and Salary Cap Systems, 10 SPORTS L. J. 189, 193–96 (2003).

The NHL CBA calls for grievances to be adjusted by an "impartial arbitrator."[108] A grievance is defined as "any dispute involving the interpretation or application of, or compliance with, any provision of [the NHL CBA]."[109] Grievances may only be initiated by the NHL or the NHLPA, unlike the NBA and NFL which both allow the players to initiate grievances as well.[110] Either party may seek an expedited hearing upon a showing of good cause.[111] The impartial arbitrator's decision is the full and final disposition of any grievance; however, the impartial arbitrator is not permitted to "add to, subtract from, or alter in any way the provisions" of the CBA.[112]

Additionally, the NHL CBA provides a mechanism to adjust system grievances. A system grievance "is any dispute involving the interpretation or application of or compliance with" the player compensation cost reduction system, team payroll range system, circumvention, entry level compensation, free agency, the team payroll range system, and the player compensation cost redistribution system as set forth in the CBA.[113] A system grievance may only be initiated by the NHL or the NHLPA.[114] The "system arbitrator" shall make findings of fact and award relief including damages and specific performance.[115]

NHL players are also permitted to appeal disciplinary matters to arbitration. The NHL commissioner is authorized to issue discipline for "on-ice conduct" by weighing the following factors: violations of league playing rules, injury to an opposing player, a history of repeated violations of league playing rules, the situation of the game in which the incident occurred, and other appropriate factors.[116] A player receiving discipline from the NHL has a right to a hearing to address penalties for on-ice conduct.[117] If the player believes the penalties issued are inappropriate, the NHLPA, on

---

108. NHL CBA, supra note 106, art. 17 § 5.
109. Id. art. 17 § 1.
110. Id. art. 17 § 2(a); see supra notes 78 & 98.
111. NHL CBA, supra note 106, art. 17 § 17.
112. Id. art. 17 § 13.
113. Id. art. 48 § 1.
114. Id. art. 48 § 2(a).
115. Id. art. 48 § 5(c).
116. Id. art. 18 § 2.
117. Id. art. 18 § 4(b)(i).

the player's behalf, may file an appeal to the NHL commissioner.[118] If the NHL commissioner issues a suspension of six or more NHL games, then the NHLPA, on the player's behalf, may then file an appeal to the "Neutral Discipline Arbitrator."[119] In the event the NHL playing rules call for the automatic suspension of a player and the suspension is five games or more, the NHLPA, on the player's behalf, may file an appeal to the neutral discipline arbitrator.[120]

Players are also afforded the right to appeal "Off-Ice Conduct" to arbitration. The NHL commissioner has the authority to impose discipline on a player when the player has violated NHL rules or "has been or is guilty of conduct . . . that is detrimental to or against the welfare of the [NHL] or the game of hockey."[121] In the event the commissioner makes this determination, he may discipline the player by expelling or suspending the player, cancelling the player's contract, or imposing a fine.[122] The NHLPA, on behalf of the player, has the right to appeal any such decision to the NHL commissioner.[123] If the NHLPA and the NHL commissioner are unable to adjust the penalty imposed for off-ice conduct, the NHLPA may file an appeal to the impartial arbitrator on the player's behalf.[124] The standard of review used by the impartial arbitrator is whether the NHL commissioner's decision was "supported by substantial evidence and was not unreasonable based on the following considerations: (i) the facts and circumstances surrounding the conduct at issue; (ii) whether the penalty was proportionate to the gravity of the offense; and (iii) the legitimate interests of both the Player and the [NHL]."[125]

Like other leagues, the NHL has developed a system to test for performance enhancing substances. The NHL is permitted to test NHL players during training camp, the regular season,

118. Id. art. 18 § 12.
119. Id. art. 18 § 13(a).
120. Id. art. 18 § 17.
121. Id. art. 18–A § 2.
122. Id.
123. Id. art. 18–A § 3(d).
124. Id. art. 18–A § 4.
125. Id. art. 18–A § 4.

playoffs, the off-season, and upon reasonable cause.[126] The NHLPA, on the player's behalf, may appeal a positive drug test on an expedited basis to the impartial arbitrator.[127] The standard for review of a positive drug test is strict liability.[128]

E. PGA Tour

Unlike their contemporaries in other professional sports, PGA Tour players are not unionized and, thus, do not collectively bargain for their rights and obligations.[129] PGA Tour players are subject to sanctions for "conduct unbecoming of a professional golfer" and violations of PGA Tour Regulations.[130] Accordingly, PGA Tour players' appellate rights are limited to internal appeals made to the Chief of Operations of the PGA Tour in the case of minor penalties[131] and a written appeal to the Commissioner of the PGA Tour in the event of imposition of intermediate penalties[132] or major penalties[133] by the PGA Tour.[134] In the event the grievance

---

126. Id. art. 47 § 6. A player who tests positive for a prohibited substance shall be suspended for twenty games for the first positive test, sixty games for the second positive test, and a permanent suspension for the third positive test. Id. art. 47 § 7(a).

127. Id. art. 47 § 9.

128. Id. art. 47 § 9(e). UCI v. Outchakov (CAS 2000/A/272) (holding the UCI definition of doping is a strict liability offense, thus overturning the federation's determination would require a showing that the rider was "guiltless").

129. Charles R. Daniel II, The PGA Tour: Successful Self-Regulation or Unreasonably Restraining Trade?, 4 SPORTS L. J. 41, 41–43 (1997).

130. PGA TOUR, 2014–2015 PLAYER HANDBOOK & TOURNAMENT REGULATIONS (2014), at 146 [hereinafter PGA REGULATIONS], https://player support.pgatourhq.com/Tour/PLP/playersupportinforegistration.nsf/xsp/.ibmmo dres/domino/OpenAttachment/Tour/PLP/playersupportinforegistration.nsf/C727 DB7A7733806285257CC50066F582/pgAttachments/2014-15%20PGAT%20 Handbook%20&%20Regulations.pdf.

131. The PGA Tour defines minor penalties as "a fine of not more than $10,000." Id. at 149.

132. The PGA Tour defines intermediate penalties as "a fine of between $10,001 and $20,000 and/or suspension from play for not more than three tournaments." Id. at 150.

133. The PGA Tour defines major penalties as "a fine in excess of $20,000, suspension from tournament play for more than three tournaments and/or permanent disbarment from play in PGA Tour cosponsored or coordinated events." Id. at 150.

134. Id. at 150–51.

is not adjusted at this level, the PGA Tour players have the right to make a final appeal to the PGA Tour Appeals Committee, which consists of three non-player members of the PGA Tour's Board of Directors.[135]

The PGA Tour, however, provides greater appellate rights in matters relating to the PGA Tour's anti-doping policies, including access to arbitration conducted by the American Arbitration Association ("AAA"). Drug testing is administered and collected by the National Center for Drug Free Sport ("Drug Free Sport").[136] If a PGA Tour player is found to have violated the anti-doping policies, he is subject to disqualification, including loss of results, points, and prize money, up to permanent ineligibility, and a fine up to $500,000.[137] In such event, players are presented with the opportunity to appeal positive drug test results in accordance with the appellate provisions of the intermediate penalties or major penalties as stated in the PGA Tour Regulations for drug of abuse violations[138] and to AAA for anti-doping violations, therapeutic use exemptions, and other disputes relating to the PGA Tour anti-doping policies and procedures.[139]

A PGA Tour player desiring to appeal to AAA shall notify the Commissioner of the PGA Tour of his desire to appeal.[140] The PGA Tour, then, is required to select an arbitrator, from a list of arbitrators, who is both an AAA arbitrator located in North America and an arbitrator with appointment to the Court of Arbitration for Sport.[141] The PGA Tour player will then be provided the opportunity to select an arbitrator from a list provided by AAA. The two arbitrators selected by the Tour and the player will choose the

---

135. Id. at 151.

136. PGA TOUR, PGA TOUR ANTI-DOPING PROGRAM MANUAL 4 (2013) [hereinafter PGA TOUR DRUG TESTING POLICY], http://usga.org/uploadedFiles/2014-2015%20Anti-Doping%20Manual.pdf.

137. Id. at 15–16.

138. Id. at 12. The PGA Tour Drug Testing Policy defines drugs of abuse as "[s]ubstances which are normally associated with social abuse rather than athletic performance enhancement as identified on the PGA Tour Prohibited List." Id. at 19.

139. Id. at 12–13.

140. Id. at 13.

141. Id.

third arbitrator.[142] The anti-doping policies do not provide for the exchange of discovery other than the laboratory testing packet in the case and all documents considered by the therapeutic use exemption committee in ruling on a therapeutic use exemption.[143] The PGA Tour has the burden to establish by a balance of probability that an anti-doping violation occurred.[144] The panel shall have forty-five days from the formation of the arbitration panel to conduct the hearing and fifteen days from the close of the evidence to render a written decision.[145] Recently, the PGA Tour anti-doping policies and procedures came under scrutiny following the suspension of Vijay Singh, a longtime professional golfer.[146]

F. United States Olympic Committee

The United States Olympic Committee ("USOC") serves as the national representative of the United States to the International Olympic Committee. The USOC was federally chartered by Congress under the Amateur Sports Act of 1978 to act as the exclusive governing body of the United States participation in Olympic and Pan-American Games.[147] In 1998, the Amateur Sports Act of 1978 was amended and renamed the Ted Stevens Olympic & Amateur Sports Act ("ASA").[148] The ASA mandates that the USOC establish procedures that "provide swift resolution of conflicts and disputes involving amateur athletes, national governing bodies, and amateur sports organizations, and protect the opportunity of any

---

142. Id. at 13.

143. Id. at 14.

144. Id.

145. Id. at 14–15.

146. Singh v. PGA Tour, Inc., 42 Misc.3d 1225(A), *4–6 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. Feb. 13, 2014). Singh was suspended for ninety days after admitting to using "deer antler spray" and all of Singh's prize money was to be held in escrow. Id. at *1. In accordance with PGA procedures, Singh timely filed for arbitration. Id. at *2. While the arbitration matter was pending, the World Anti-Doping Agency ("WADA") informed the PGA Tour it determined "deer antler spray" should be removed from the list of prohibited substances. Id. Shortly thereafter, Singh filed suit against the PGA Tour for recklessly administering the PGA Tour anti-doping program, subjecting him to ridicule and humiliation, and placing his prize money in escrow without legal authority. Id. This matter is currently pending in state court in New York.

147. 36 U.S.C. § 220503(3) (2012).

148. Id. §§ 220501–220529.

amateur athlete, coach, trainer, manager, administrator, or official to participate in amateur competition."[149] Additionally, the ASA requires an amateur sports organization (i.e., USOC) to submit "any controversy" to AAA and such controversy shall be conducted in accordance with AAA's Commercial Rules.[150]

AAA has jurisdiction over disputes involving the USOC and, specifically, over a controversy involving an athlete's opportunity to participate in national and international competition representing the United States.[151] Section 220522(a)(4) of the ASA states:

> An amateur sports organization is eligible to be recognized, or to continue to be recognized, as a national governing body only if it . . . agrees to submit to binding arbitration in any controversy involving . . . the opportunity of any amateur athlete . . . to participate in amateur athletic competition, upon demand of . . . any aggrieved amateur athlete . . . conducted in accordance with the Commercial Rules of the American Arbitration Association, as modified

149. Id. § 220503(8).

150. Id. § 220503(a)(4).

151. Athletes have commonly attempted to circumvent the ASA and file suit in state and federal courts; however, courts commonly uphold the requirements of the ASA. Michels v. U.S. Olympic Comm., 741 F.2d 155, 159 (7th Cir. 1984) (Posner, J., concurring) ("[T]here can be few less suitable bodies than the federal courts for determining the eligibility, or the procedures for determining the eligibility, of athletes to participate in the Olympic Games."). The ASA also provides for national governing bodies ("NGB") to "establish procedures for determining eligibility standards for participation in competition" such as drug testing. 36 U.S.C. § 220523(a)(5). Accordingly, the USOC policies require that NGBs abide by and comply with the United States Anti-Doping Agency's ("USADA") drug testing protocols. Armstrong v. Tygart, 886 F. Supp. 2d 572, 585 (W.D. Tex. 2012). Athletes have the right to appeal doping violations to the Court of Arbitration for Sport, which is a private international arbitration tribunal based in Switzerland that provides for arbitration rulings for athletes engaged in international competition. See Michael Straubel, Enhancing the Performance of the Doping Court: How the Court of Arbitration for Sport Can Do Its Job Better, 36 LOY. U. CHI. L.J. 1203, 1212 (2005); see also COURT OF ARBITRATION FOR SPORT, PROCEDURAL RULES (Nov. 14, 2014), http://www.tas-cas.org/rules [https://web.archive.org/web/20141114201529/http:/www.tas-cas.org/rules] ("The seat of [Court of Arbitration for Sport] . . . is Lausanne, Switzerland.").

> and provided for in the corporation's constitution and bylaws . . . .[152]

Additionally, Section 220522(a)(8) of the ASA states a national governing body ("NGB") must > provide[] an equal opportunity to amateur athletes, coaches, trainers, managers, administrators, and officials to participate in amateur athletic competition, without discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, age, or national origin, and with fair notice and opportunity for a hearing to any amateur athlete, coach, trainer, manager, administrator, or official before declaring the individual ineligible to participate.[153]

Section 9.1 of the USOC Bylaws provides:

> No member of the corporation may deny or threaten to deny any amateur athlete the opportunity to participate in the Olympic Games, the Pan American Games, the Paralympic Games, a World Championship competition, or other such protected competition as defined in Section 1.3 of these Bylaws nor may any member, subsequent to such competition, censure, or otherwise penalize, (i) any such athlete who participates in such competition, or (ii) any organization that the athlete represents.[154]

---

152. 36 U.S.C. § 220522(a)(4).

153. Id. at § 220522(a)(8).

154. BYLAWS OF THE UNITED STATES OLYMPIC COMMITTEE § 9.1 (2014) [hereinafter USOC BYLAWS], http://www.teamusa.org/~/media/TeamUSA/Documents/Legal/Governance/2013%20Q4Bylaws%20Revisions%20120613.pdf. Under USOC Bylaws Section 1.3(w), "protected competition" means:

> 1) any amateur athletic competition between any athlete or athletes officially designated by the appropriate [National Governing Body] or [Paralympic Sports Organization] as representing the United States, either individually or as part of a team, and any athlete or athletes representing any foreign

USOC Bylaws Section 9.7 provides, "If the complaint [under Section 9.1] is not settled to the athlete's satisfaction the athlete may file a claim with the AAA against the respondent for final and binding arbitration."[155] Under both Sections 9.7 and 9.9 of the USOC Bylaws, the arbitration proceeding may be expedited.[156]

V. A PLAN FOR NCAA ARBITRATION

The NCAA has been chastised in the media and by the general public over the course of the last several years relating to a multitude of matters. Some have argued the NCAA lacks fundamental fairness[157] and does not provide member institutions, coaches, and student-athletes with a proper forum to address disputed matters.[158] The following discussion outlines a process that > country where (i) the terms of such competition require that the entrants be teams or individuals representing their respective nations and (ii) the athlete or group of athletes representing the United States are organized and sponsored by the appropriate NGB or PSO in accordance with a defined selection or tryout procedure that is open to all and publicly announced in advance, except for domestic amateur athletic competition, which, by its terms, requires that entrants be expressly restricted to members of a specific class or amateur athletes such as those referred to in Section 220526(a) of the Act; and 2) any domestic amateur athletic competition or event organized and conducted by an [sic] NGB or PSO in its selection procedure and publicly announced in advance as a competition or event directly qualifying each successful competitor as an athlete representing the United States in a protected competition as defined in 1) above.

---

Id. § 1.3(w).

155. Id. § 9.7.

156. Id. §§ 9.7, 9.9.

157. See, e.g., Erving v. Virginia Squires Basketball Club, 468 F.2d 1064, 1068 n.2 (2d Cir. 1972) (affirming substitution of neutral arbitrator for professional basketball commissioner under the Federal Arbitrator Act in order "to insure a fair and impartial hearing"); Morris v. N.Y. Football Giants, Inc., 575 N.Y.S.2d 1013, 1016–17 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1991) (holding that, under the circumstances, NFL Commissioner sitting as arbitrator had to be replaced by a neutral arbitrator pursuant to federal and state arbitral law).

158. See Richard G. Johnson, Submarining Due Process: How the NCAA Uses Its Restitution Rule to Deprive College Athletes of Their Right of Access to the Courts . . . Until Oliver v. NCAA, 11 FL. COASTAL L. REV. 459 (2010).

will benefit the NCAA, member institutions, coaches, and student-athletes. Under the following procedure, disputed matters will be presented to a neutral arbitrator or a panel of arbitrators with experience in disputes involving athletes and the sports industry. Drug test appeals, NCAA enforcement and infractions matters, and matters relating to student-athlete participation should be decided by arbitrators.[159] Providing for a neutral process to resolve disputed matters will restore impartiality, fairness, and trust in intercollegiate athletics.

A. Drug Test Appeals

The NCAA, along with member conferences and institutions, has drug-testing programs requiring student-athletes to be tested for street drugs and performance enhancing drugs.[160] Student-athletes are required to execute an NCAA form consenting to the NCAA drug-testing program before he or she is eligible to compete.[161] Student-athletes are subject to year-round testing, re-

---

159. Major League Baseball Players Ass'n v. Garvey, 532 U.S. 504, 509 (2001) (stating when no dishonesty of the arbitrator is alleged the arbitrator's "improvident, even silly, factfinding" does not provide a basis for a reviewing court to refuse to enforce the award) (quoting United Paperworkers Int'l Union v. Misco, Inc., 484 U.S. 29, 39 (1987)).

160. See Hill v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 865 P.2d 633, 669 (Cal. 1994) (holding the NCAA's drug testing program does not violate the State of California's right to privacy); see also O'Halloran v. Univ. of Wash., 679 F. Supp. 997, 1007 (W.D. Wash. 1988) (denying a request for temporary injunction and holding the student-athlete failed to demonstrate "an invasion of any constitutionally protected right requiring invalidation [of the NCAA] drug-testing program"); Univ. of Colo. ex rel. Regents of the Univ. of Colo. v. Derdeyn, 863 P.2d 929, 935 (Colo. 1993) (holding "in the absence of voluntary consents, [University of Colorado's] random, suspicionless urinalysis-drug-testing of student athletes violates the Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution and Article II, Section 7, of the Colorado Constitution"); Bally v. Northeastern Univ., 532 N.E.2d 49, 53–54 (Mass. 1989) (holding the student-athlete's claims that Northeastern University's drug testing program violated his civil rights and his right to privacy were unfounded).

161. 2012 NCAA MANUAL, supra note 20, § 14.1.4.1. 2012 NCAA Bylaw section 14.1.4.1 states "[e]ach academic year, a student-athlete shall sign a form . . . in which the student consents to be tested for the use of drugs prohibited by NCAA legislation." Id.; see also NAT'L COLLEGIATE ATHLETICS ASS'N, 2014–15 DRUG-TESTING PROGRAM § 3.1 (2014) [hereinafter NCAA DRUG POLICY], http://www.ncaa.org/sites/default/files/DT%20Book%202014-15.pdf;

gardless of when they will compete.[162] In accordance with the NCAA Drug-Testing Program, "Drug Free Sport" administers and manages for all NCAA student-athletes.[163]

A student-athlete who tests positive for a banned substance is subject to loss of eligibility for one full season.[164] A positive drug test may be appealed and the NCAA member institution shall appeal the test if requested to do so by the student-athlete.[165] An appeal is conducted telephonically and may be expedited if the student-athlete's next competition is imminent.[166] The body reviewing the appeal consists of "[a]t least three members" of the NCAA Drug-Education and Drug-Testing Subcommittee ("Appeals Committee").[167] The student-athlete is not restricted on the grounds for his or her appeal; however, the NCAA recognizes that

---

Stephen F. Brock, et al., Drug Testing College Athletes: NCAA Does Thy Cup Runneth Over?, 97 W. VA. L. REV. 53, 110–13 (1994) (arguing the NCAA drug test consent form "is not necessarily dispositive and should not be relied upon by the NCAA").

162. NCAA DRUG POLICY, supra note 161, § 4.3.1.

163. Id. § 2.3.

164. 2014 NCAA MANUAL, supra note 1, at § 18.4.1.5.1. 2014 NCAA Manual section 18.4.1.5.1 states "[a] student-athlete who, as a result of a drug test administered by the NCAA, tests positive . . . [for a banned substance] shall be charged with the loss of one season of competition in all sports in addition to the use of a season . . . if he or she has participated in intercollegiate competition during the same academic year." Id. ; see also NCAA DRUG POLICY, supra note 161, § 3.2; Floralynn Einesman, Drug Testing Students in California—Does It Violate the State Constitution?, 47 SAN DIEGO L. REV. 681, 696–702 (2010) (discussing Hill v. NCAA and subsequent refinements to the law on drug testing); Dante Marrazzo, Athletes and Drug Testing: Why Do We Care if Athletes Inhale?, 8 MARQ. SPORTS L.J. 75, 89–91 (1997)(proposing less restrictive penalties for athletes who fail drug tests).

165. NCAA DRUG POLICY, supra note 161, §§ 8.2.4, 8.2.4.1.

166. Id. §§ 8.2.4.3–8.2.4.4.

167. NAT'L COLLEGIATE ATHLETIC ASS'N, 2014–15 NCAA DRUG-TESTING PROGRAM APPEALS PROCESS (2014) [hereinafter NCAA APPEAL], http://www.ncaa.org/sites/default/files/DT%20Appeals%20Process%202014-15%20draft.pdf. The Appeals Committee consists of the Director of Athletics from New England College, the Faculty Athletic Representatives from Dominican College and Duquesne University, the Head Athletic Trainer from University of South Florida, the Team Physician from the University of Toledo, the Deputy Director of Athletics from John Hopkins University, the Team Physician from the University of Georgia, and the Director of Sports Medicine from Harvard University. Id.

generally procedural and knowledge challenges are the most common arguments on appeal.[168] In making a procedural challenge, the student-athlete must establish that "it is more likely than not that any substantiated problem with the collection or testing procedures materially affect[ed] a sample's integrity."[169] In making a knowledge challenge, the student-athlete must establish that he or she "was not aware [he or she] had been administered . . . a substance by another person that later is found to have contained a banned ingredient" or the student-athlete asked "specific and reasonable questions" regarding a specific substance and "did not know and could not reasonably have known or suspected . . . the information provided by staff was erroneous."[170] Additionally, a student-athlete may argue for a reduction of the penalty based on mitigating factors.[171] If the Appeals Committee finds mitigating factors exist, the Appeals Committee may reduce the penalty imposed on the student-athlete to the first fifty percent of the regular season if the season has yet to begin or the next fifty percent of the season if the student-athlete tests positive for a banned substance during the season.[172]

Student-athletes certainly do not have the protections provided to their colleagues competing in professional athletics. Without a collective bargaining agreement, the NCAA can implement policies without student-athletes having the opportunity to legitimately voice concerns. Student-athletes would benefit substantially by having a neutral arbitrator or arbitrators to consider evidence presented rather than the Appeals Committee that does not have legal training and, frankly, is likely not skilled in drug-

168. See id.

169. Id.

170. Id.

171. See id. The Appeals Committee will not consider the following as mitigating factors: (1) the type or amount of the banned substance detected; (2) the student-athlete's good character; (3) the remorse demonstrated by the student-athlete; and (4) whether the substance used enhances athletics performance; and (5) family hardship or history of family dysfunction. Id. Examples of information that lean towards a finding of mitigating factors are: (1) inadequate drug education was provided by the NCAA member institution; or (2) the circumstances by which the student-athlete ingested the banned substance were outside of his or her control. Id.

172. Id.

testing analysis and review. A neutral arbitrator would have the ability to review the evidence independent of affiliation with an institution, conference, or the NCAA. Indeed, bodies like the USOC and USADA allow for the presentation of evidence to neutral arbitrators as it relates to drug testing results. At present, the only options for the Appeals Committee are to uphold the punishment, find no violation occurred, or reduce the penalty to fifty percent of athletics contests. A neutral arbitrator would not be restricted by procedures that provide limited alternative forms of punishment. Furthermore, non-lawyers are simply not equipped to address procedural arguments and, often times, these arguments are met with skepticism by laypersons.

Accordingly, the NCAA should permit student-athletes, or member institutions on behalf of the student-athlete, to present evidence to a neutral arbitrator. The arbitrator should be afforded the opportunity to review the evidence on an expedited basis, if necessary, and determine whether punishment is necessary, and provide for reduction of punishment, if deemed appropriate. This system would allow student-athletes the opportunity to present evidence to trained experts knowledgeable in deciding complex drug-testing matters, providing a sense of fairness and objectivity.

B. NCAA Enforcement and Infractions

The NCAA enforcement process is a lightning rod for debate and discussion. The enforcement process has been the subject of scrutiny and numerous lawsuits including claims for tortious interference with a contract,[173] violations of due process,[174] defamation,[175] and violations of the Sherman Act.[176] States have also 173. Harrick v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 454 F. Supp. 2d 1255, 1259 (N.D. Ga. 2006) (stating the NCAA is not a stranger to the coaching agreement between Harrick and the University of Georgia).

174. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Tarkanian, 488 U.S. 179, 195–96, 199 (1988) (holding the NCAA is not a state actor); Cohane v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 215 F. App'x 13, 16 (2d Cir. 2007) (holding the NCAA's motion to dismiss should have been denied because Tarkanian is distinguishable). See also Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Tarkanian, 939 P.2d 1049, 1050 (Nev. 1997); Larry Stewart, Tarkanian, NCAA Settle for $2.5 Million, L.A. TIMES (Apr. 2, 1998), http://articles.latimes.com/1998/apr/02/sports/sp-35333 (explaining the settlement between Jerry Tarkanian and the NCAA).

175. Scott Enyeart, Judge in Todd McNair Suit Says NCAA 'Malicious' in Investigation of USC, SB NATION L.A. (Nov. 21, 2012 4:49 PM), attempted to adopt legislation that would provide greater due process to student-athletes by limiting the NCAA's authority during investigations.[177]

Recently, the NCAA's practices were questioned during the investigation of the University of Miami ("Miami"). The Miami investigation stemmed from accusations by former Miami booster and convicted felon, Nevin Shapiro, in which he indicated he provided thousands of dollars in impermissible benefits to Miami student-athletes.[178] During the investigation, the NCAA hired Nevin Shapiro's bankruptcy attorney to obtain information the NCAA could not access and, thus, used the attorney's ability to subpoena records to obtain missing information.[179] Subsequently, the NCAA hired a law firm to investigate this practice and, ultimately, concluded the NCAA used improper means to obtain records.[180]

The Miami investigation has not been the only source of scrutiny. In July 2014, Big 12 Conference commissioner Bob Bowlsby said "[NCAA] [e]nforcement is broken. The infractions committee hasn't had [an FBS] hearing in almost a year, and I http://losangeles.sbnation.com/2012/11/21/3677898/judge-todd-mcnair-ncaa-malicious-usc-investigation?_ga=1.78305556.1611737641.1439999234 (stating there is evidence the NCAA acted maliciously towards Todd McNair and the NCAA infractions report contained was flawed).

---

176. Justice v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 577 F. Supp. 356, 383 (D. Ariz. 1983) (holding the NCAA sanctions enforced by the NCAA were not anti-competitive, were reasonably related to the NCAA's central objectives, and were not overbroad; therefore, the NCAA's actions to sanction the University of Arizona did not constitute an unreasonable restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman Act).

177. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Miller, 10 F.3d 633, 640 (9th Cir. 1993) (holding Nevada legislation that provided for procedural changes during NCAA investigations violated the dormant commerce clause).

178. NAT'L COLLEGIATE ATHLETIC ASS'N, UNIVERSITY OF MIAMI PUBLIC INFRACTIONS REPORT 1–2 (2013) http://www.ncaa.org/sites/default/files/Miami%20Public%20Inf%20Rpt.pdf; KENNETH L. WAINSTEIN ET AL., CADWALADER, WICKERSHAM, & TAFF, LLP, REPORT ON NCAA'S ENGAGEMENT OF A SOURCES'S COUNSEL AND USE OF THE BANKRUPTCY PROCESS IN ITS UNIVERSITY OF MIAMI INVESTIGATION 2 (2013), http://www.ncaa.org/sites/default/files/NCAA%2B-%2BReport.pdf.

179. WAINSTEIN ET AL., supra note 178.

180. Id. at 2–4.

think it's not an understatement to say cheating pays presently."[181] The NCAA enforcement system has consistently been labeled slow and lacking the necessary weapons to obtain information. Some have recommended arbitration as the forum to alleviate these issues; however, the adoption of arbitration has been linked to federal legislation, which is unlikely to gain support on Capitol Hill.[182]

The better solution is to adopt arbitration as a part of the agreement between the NCAA and member institutions, conferences, coaches, and student-athletes. The NCAA's constitution, bylaws, and regulations operate as a contract between the member institutions and conferences and coaches and student-athletes are third-party beneficiaries to these agreements.[183] As a result, the NCAA can simply adopt arbitration as the system to resolve of all NCAA infraction investigations. This approach would remove the COI as the deciding body in such cases and appoint a three-member panel of neutral arbitrators. Like many other arbitration panels, the NCAA would create a body of arbitrators from which to select and could easily use an established forum, such as the AAA, to access top arbitrators with industry knowledge.

Critics of NCAA enforcement forcefully argue that implementation is ineffective because investigators do not have the authority to issue subpoenas to obtain evidence in order to substantiate claims. Under Section 7 of the FAA, arbitrators are permitted to issue subpoenas to obtain documents and/or compel the presence of a witness.[184] Similarly, state laws allow arbitrators to issue subpoenas.[185] The ability to issue a subpoena would not only pro-

181. Jake Trotter, Bob Bowlsby Sees Bleak Landscape, ESPN (July 22, 2014), http://espn.go.com/college-sports/story/_/id/11243234/bob-bowlsby-big-12-commissioner-says-cheating-pays-ncaa-enforcement-broken. Contra NCAA Enforcement Chief Fires Back, ESPN (July 24, 2014), http://espn.go.com/college-football/story/_/id/11256975/ncaa-enforcement-director-jonathan-duncan-defends-investigators.

182. Matthew Mitten & Stephen F. Ross, A Regulatory Solution to Better Promote the Educational Values and Economic Sustainability of Intercollegiate Athletics, 92 OR. L. REV. 837, 875–76 (2014).

183. Bloom v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 93 P.3d 621, 623–24 (Colo. App. 2004); see also Hall v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n*,* 985 F. Supp. 782, 796–97 (N.D. Ill. 1997).

184. 9 U.S.C. § 7 (2012).

185. UNIF. ARBITRATION ACT § 17(A) (2000), (NAT'L CONFERENCE OF COMM'RS OF UNIF. STATE LAWS), http://www.uniformlaws.org/shared/docs/

vide NCAA investigators with the information needed to corroborate a claim but would also move cases forward more expeditiously. However, subpoena power should not be taken lightly. In order to obtain a subpoena, the requesting party would be required to establish that the information sought is relevant and cannot be obtained from another source.[186] If there is a dispute regarding the relevancy of such information or allegations that such information is intrusive, the objecting party can seek to quash the subpoena and/or seek an in-camera review where documents and information can be redacted, if necessary. Similarly, a witness would also be afforded the opportunity to seek protection by arguing either that he or she cannot provide relevant testimony or that he or she the request was made for a malicious purpose, such as harassing the witness.

Creating a system of arbitration conducted by neutral parties with industry knowledge will restore the faith in NCAA enforcement by (1) granting greater access to witnesses and information; (2) the ability to rectify "prosecutorial overreaching"; and (3) providing more expedient resolution of cases. The opportunity to subpoena witnesses and documents will expedite the investigation process, which will be closely monitored by a panel of arbitrators. The goal of arbitration is to advance matters more quickly. Arbitrators are more readily available than athletics administrators and others currently sitting on the COI. Additionally, arbitrators would be permitted to address "prosecutorial overreaching" like that which allegedly occurred in the Miami case. By having a panel of arbitrators oversee the process, all those involved will be forced to respond to a higher body (i.e., the arbitration panel) and arbitration/arbitration_final_00.pdf. In 2000, the Uniform Law Commission created the Revised Uniform Arbitration Act, which has been enacted by 19 states. See UNIFORM LAW COMMISSION, Legislative Enactment Status, Arbitration Act (2000), UNIFORMLAWS.ORG, http://www.uniformlaws.org/Act.aspx?title=Arbitration%20Act%20%282000%29. Other states have existing legislation that provides for the issuance of subpoenas by an arbitrator. See, e.g., CAL. CIV. PROC. CODE §§ 1283.05, 1283.1 (2007); FLA. STAT § 682.08 (2015); IND. CODE § 34-57-2-8 (2008); TEX. CIV. PRAC. & REM. CODE ANN. § 171.051 (2011).

---

186. Josephine (Jo) R. Potuto, The NCAA Rules Adoption, Interpretation, Enforcement, and Infractions Processes: The Laws That Regulate Them and the Nature of Court Review, 12 VAND. J. ENT. & TECH. L. 257, 294 (2010).

will be forced to conform to the applicable standards as called for in NCAA legislation. Established neutral parties will restore fundamental fairness and create a more positive public perception of NCAA enforcement.

C. Participation Appeals

Student-athletes are only afforded a short period of time to compete in intercollegiate athletics. Specifically, student-athletes have five years to participate in four seasons of intercollegiate athletics competition in any one sport.[187] It is not uncommon for student-athletes to assert their demand to compete in court after the NCAA process fails to provide the relief sought.[188] As a result, student-athletes are often left believing they do not have an impartial forum to resolve their disputes.[189]

The USOC has provided a guide that delivers a process that will provide a version of due process to student-athletes. Section 9.1 of the USOC Bylaws provides American athletes with the opportunity to seek arbitration for a matter that negatively impacts participation and, specifically, prohibits the athlete's opportunity to compete.[190] Presently, if a student-athlete has a grievance or desires to supplement treatment under NCAA legislation, he or she is afforded the opportunity to file a waiver of NCAA legislation.[191] 2014 NCAA Bylaw 14.02.13 defines a waiver as "an action ex-

---

187. 2014 NCAA MANUAL, supra note 20, §§ 12.8, 12.8.1 (stating student-athletes "shall not engage in more than four seasons of intercollegiate competition" within five calendar years beginning the first semester the student-athlete triggers full-time enrollment at an institution of higher learning).

188. Matthews v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 79 F. Supp. 2d 1199, 1207–08 (E.D. Wash. 1999) (holding a penalty requiring the student-athlete to miss three football contests does not constitute irreparable harm and, thus, a preliminary injunction was not warranted); Hall v. Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n, 985 F. Supp. 782, 802 (N.D. Ill. 1997) (holding the student-athlete was not entitled to injunctive relief that would allow him to compete); Nat'l Collegiate Athletic Ass'n v. Yeo, 171 S.W.3d 863, 870 (Tex. 2005) (holding a court does not act as a "super referee" in the interpretation of NCAA legislation).

189. See generally Travis L. Miller, Home Court Advantage: Florida Joins States Mandating Due Process in NCAA Proceedings, 20 FLA. ST. U. L. REV. 871 (1993) (noting that NCAA's procedures have been criticized as unfair).

190. USOC BYLAWS, supra note 154, § 9.1.

191. 2012 NCAA MANUAL, supra note 20, § 14.02.15.

empting an individual or institution from the application of a specific regulation. A waiver requires formal approval . . . based on evidence of compliance with the specified conditions or criteria under which the waiver is authorized or extenuating circumstances . . . ."[192]

NCAA legislation provides a plethora of waiver opportunities, but requires a member institution to file a waiver on behalf of a student-athlete.[193] A student-athlete is not afforded the opportunity to file a waiver on his or her own without the support of a member institution.[194] Obviously, this is contrary to the USOC arbitration system that permits athletes to challenge the USOC or NGB.[195] This is certainly a concern if the student-athlete is considering transferring to a new institution or the member institution does not politically want to advance certain waiver requests.

The NCAA's numerous waiver opportunities should continue as the initial layer of review for student-athlete participation matters as this process often times provides relief to student-athletes. NCAA representatives, conference representatives, and representatives from member institutions sit on various waiver committees that attempt to resolve disputes involving student-athletes. In the event a waiver request relates to the student-athlete's ability to participate in intercollegiate athletics competitions and such request is denied, student-athletes should be afforded an opportunity to appeal to a neutral arbitrator or special master that presides over these matters. Additionally, if time is of the essence and/or athletic competition is imminent, student-athletes should be afforded the opportunity to present matters directly to a neutral arbitrator or special master to accelerate the time necessary for response and decision. Unlike the present legislation, student-athletes should not be required to obtain the support of a member institution to file a request to be heard by a neutral arbitrator.

The most glaring NCAA legislation that must provide for appellate opportunities for student-athletes include initial-

---

192. 2014 NCAA MANUAL, supra note 1, § 14.02.03.
193. 2012 NCAA MANUAL, supra note 20, § 14.1.7.3.2.1.
194. See id.
195. USOC BYLAWS, supra note 154, § 9.

eligibility,[196] progress towards degree,[197] transfer regulations,[198] and national letter of intent appeals.[199] A neutral arbitrator or special master with knowledge of the NCAA's system and sports industry should be appointed to hear these cases and others that relate to any restriction on student-athlete participation. Student-athletes would be afforded the opportunity to present all evidence in writing and hold a hearing telephonically. Like USOC legislation, hearings could be expedited upon request of the student-athlete.[200] This subtle change would provide student-athletes with the opportunity to present their cases to a neutral third-party not connected with the NCAA or a member institution. Again, arbitration provides for fundamental fairness in a process that has historically been heavily chastised and considered arduous.

---

196. The Initial-Eligibility Waivers Committee decides waivers relating to initial-eligibility "based on objective evidence that demonstrates circumstances in which a student's overall academic record warrants a waiver." 2012 NCAA MANUAL, supra note 20, § 14.3.1.5.

197. Student-athletes are required to meet certain NCAA requirements to maintain athletics eligibility. See id. § 14.4.3.1. If a student-athlete fails to meet such requirements, then he or she may seek a waiver of NCAA legislation by appealing to the Division I Progress-Toward-Degree Waivers Committee based on a showing of "objective evidence that demonstrates circumstances that warrant the waiver." Id. §§ 14.4.3.7, 14.4.3.9.

198. A student-athlete who transfers to a new member institution is required to complete one full academic year in residence, unless he or she can satisfies an exception to NCAA legislation. Id. § 14.5.1. If a student-athlete fails to meet an exception to NCAA legislation, then he or she may seek a waiver to the Academic Cabinet. Id. §§ 14.5.6.8.1, 14.5.6.9.

199. A student-athlete who executed a national letter of intent ("NLI") faces a substantial penalty if he or she does not abide by the requirements of the NLI. Specifically, the NLI language states "[a] student who does not attend the signing institution for at least one academic year (two semesters or three quarters) must serve one academic year in residence and will lose one season of competition in all sports upon enrollment at another NLI member institution." NAT'L LETTER OF INTENT, NLI APPEALS PROCESS (emphasis in original), http://www.nationalletter.org/documentLibrary/appealsProcessSheet100110.pdf. Student-athletes are afforded the right to a final appeal before the NLI Appeals Committee and are permitted to present their case via telephone conference call. Id.

200. USOC BYLAWS, supra note 154, §§ 9.7, 9.9.

VI. CONCLUSION

The NCAA has recently been heavily scrutinized and some believe the NCAA has lost the faith of the general public. Many of these concerns relate to a perceived lack of fundamental fairness in the process governed by the NCAA. By shifting to arbitration, the NCAA is afforded the opportunity to bring neutrality to a process that has historically been challenged ad nauseam. Any arbitration package adopted by the NCAA through enacted legislation should include the opportunity for student-athletes to appeal positive drug tests and matters affecting participation to arbitration and remove the COI from deciding infractions matters in favor of neutral arbitrators. By adopting arbitration as the forum to resolve these matters, the NCAA would be afforded the opportunity to issue subpoenas on a limited basis to better obtain evidence in NCAA infractions proceedings. Arbitration is the answer to improving the NCAA's system for adjudicating matters. Arbitration will bring fundamental fairness to the NCAA structure.

Essay

Equal Justice for Same-Sex Married Couples: Reflections by a Tennessee Lawyer Who Helped Achieve National Marriage Equality

MAUREEN TRUAX HOLLAND*

I. INTRODUCTION 175
II. BACKGROUND & UNITED STATES V. WINDSOR 178
III. MARRIAGE EQUALITY IN TENNESSEE 183
    A. Finding Plaintiffs and Filing in District Court 184
    B. The Sixth Circuit 190
    C. Supreme Court 195
        1. Preparing for the Supreme Court 197
        2. Oral Argument 199
VI. DECISION 201

I. INTRODUCTION

Listening to Justice Kennedy read his majority decision summary in Obergefell v. Hodges[1] is an experience and feeling housed in that mind-space preserved for life-time achievements and life-changing moments. It is June 26, 2015, and sitting next to me in the courtroom of the Supreme Court of the United States ("Supreme Court" or "Court") is another attorney on the case,

* A civil rights, employment lawyer who focuses on problem-solving law, known as holistic law. She served as the first Senior Judicial Law Clerk to the Hon. Jon P. McCalla from 1992–95 having previously worked as a judicial law clerk to four Vermont courts (twelve judges). She owns Holland & Associates, PC. See http://www.hollandattorney.com/.

1. 135 S. Ct. 2584 (2015).

Douglas Hallward-Driemeier.[2] I am in the first row (middle left, facing the bench) of seats reserved for Supreme Court attorneys associated with the case. Partially in front of me and slightly left is another row with seats, closest is attorney Mary Bonauto.[3] Justice Kennedy with great eloquences begins and a hush and stillness takes over the courtroom. We already know a significant decision has been made and was to be read when retired Justice John Paul Stevens[4] entered the Courtroom a few minutes before the nine justices and took a seat in the dignitary section, a row of reserved seats on the right side of the courtroom facing the lawyers and the bench.[5] Excitement mixed with trepidation fills the air, and we are held at attention as Justice Kennedy reads for the majority.[6] At

2. Hallward-Driemeier was the oralist for Question 2—"Does the Fourteenth Amendment require a state [like Tennessee] to recognize a marriage between two people of the same sex when their marriage was lawfully licensed and performed out-of-state?" See Tanco v. Haslam, 135 S. Ct. 1040 (2015) (mem.), cert. granted sub nom. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584 ("The cases are consolidated and petition for writ of certiorari . . . [are] granted limited to the following questions: 1) Does the Fourteenth Amendment require a state to license a marriage between two people of the same sex? 2) Does the Fourteenth Amendment require a state to recognize a marriage between two people of the same sex when their marriage was lawfully licensed and performed out-of-state?").

3. Bonauto was the oralist for Question 1—"Does the Fourteenth Amendment require a state [like Tennessee] to license a marriage between two people of the same sex?" See Tanco, 135 S. Ct. at 1040.

4. Justice Stevens retired on June 29, 2010. Biographies of Current Justices of the Supreme Court, SUP. CT. OF THE U.S., http://www.supremecourt.gov/about/biographies.aspx (last updated Oct. 31, 2015). Justice Stevens dissented along with Justices Blackmun, Brennan, and Marshall in Bowers v. Hardwick, a 5-4 decision holding that a Georgia statute which criminalized sodomy was constitutional and that there was no fundamental right to "engage in homosexual sodomy." 478 U.S. 186, 199 (1986). Justice Stevens was in the majority when Bowers was overruled in 2003, by another June 26 decision, Lawrence v. Texas. See Lawrence v. Texas, 539 U.S. 558 (2003). In Lawrence the U.S. Supreme Court held 6-3 that anti-sodomy laws were unconstitutional and consensual sexual conduct was a liberty interest protected by the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. Id. at 558.

5. The Supreme Court Building, SUP. CT. OF THE U.S., http://www.supremecourt.gov/about/courtbuilding.aspx (last visited Oct. 31, 2015) ("The black chairs in front of [the red] benches are for the officers of the Court and visiting dignitaries.").

6. The Justice with the most seniority (most years as a Supreme Court Justice) in the majority reads from the bench in open court.

first those present are not sure the expanse of this decision, but soon it is evident the ruling is landmark. Justice Kennedy reads with deliberate clarity and a tempo reminiscent of poetry; lawyers begin to cry—quietly, but audibly—as the fight for equality has found acceptance and protection in the Constitution.

My experiences as one of the Tennessee attorneys on this monumental case joins other personal memories in that special memory-space for life-changing events: the sight and sounds of my children when they entered my life; my first trip to Paris when I walked out of the subway station to the iconic Eiffel Tower; standing on the front steps of my first house viewing the sunset over the small lake; and hearing my wife say all five of my names during our wedding vows on a boat in Lake Champlain.[7] Thereto are professional accomplishments carefully preserved in my memory: walking across the stage to receive my law school diploma;[8] my work as Chair of the Labor & Employment Law Section of the Memphis Bar Association and President of the local chapter of the Federal Bar Association; being interviewed for numerous publications including the American Bar Association Journal[9] about practicing law in a problem-solving style known as holistic law;[10] and on a lighter note, being the focus of the center article in the Memphis Health and Fitness magazine sporting my tattoo of the scales of justice (a proud moment given my then 51 years of age).[11]

These professional events are now a distant second to what has become my life over the past two years. Now at the forefront

---

7. My full name is Maureen Adonica Snowdy Truax Holland and all five names appear on my law licenses and my U.S. Supreme Court Admission Certificate.

8. Juris Doctor, Vermont Law School, cum laude, 1989.

9. Jenny B. Davis, What I Like About My Lawyer, 89 A.B.A. J. 33, 35–36 (Jan. 2003) ("My first impression of [Holland] was that she was a very clear thinker . . . she was hearing what I was saying as well as listening. In doing that, she was able to direct my thinking along lines I hadn't considered. She showed me a different way to think about the case.").

10. Rebekah Hearn, Holland Uses Holistic Law to Solve Problems Peacefully, THE DAILY NEWS, May 8, 2008, http://www.memphisdailynews.com/editorial/Article.aspx?id=36981.

11. Weekend Warriors, Maureen Truax Holland, MEM. HEALTH AND FITNESS, Sept. 2013, at 32, http://issuu.com/memhealthandfitness/docs/hf_sept_2013-web.

of my professional accomplishments is my time working on the Supreme Court case that created opportunity and recognition for all same-sex couples married in the United States: the opportunity and constitutionally protected right for same-sex couples to marry in any of the fifty states and the requirement under the Fourteenth Amendment that each state recognize same-sex marriages for those couples previously married in other states. That case, Obergefell v. Hodges,[12] began in Tennessee as Tanco v. Haslam;[13] and that is the story I want to share.

II. BACKGROUND & UNITED STATES V. WINDSOR

> There is no difference between same- and opposite-sex couples with respect to this principle [that marriage is fundamental], yet same-sex couples are denied the constellation of benefits that the States have linked to marriage and are consigned to an instability many opposite-sex couples would find intolerable. It is demeaning to lock same-sex couples out of a central institution of the Nation's society, for they too may aspire to the transcendent purposes of marriage.[14]

On June 26, 2013, exactly two years prior to Obergefell, the United States Supreme Court issued its decision in United States v. Windsor.[15] The Court had taken two cases relating to the rights of same-sex married couples: Windsor, addressing the right to have their marriages recognized for purposes of federal benefits[16] and Hollingsworth v. Perry, addressing the right to have equal constitutional protection against state voter attacks seeking to

12. 135 S. Ct. 2584 (2015).

13. 7 F. Supp. 3d 759 (M.D. Tenn. 2014), rev'd sub nom. DeBoer v. Snyder, 772 F.3d 388 (6th Cir. 2014), rev'd sub nom. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584.

14. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. at 2590.

15. 133 S. Ct. 2675 (2013).

16. Id. By a 5-4 opinion, the Supreme Court held that the Petitioners did not have standing and did not reach the merits of the case as to whether or not Proposition 8, which amended the California Constitution and directed that the only valid marriages in California were between a man and a woman, violated of the Fourteenth Amendment equal protection clause. Id.

limit marriage to a man and a woman.[17] Finding a lack of standing in Hollingsworth, the Supreme Court never reached, and arguably sidestepped the issues of federal constitutional protections for marriage equality at the state level.[18] But with Windsor, the Court struck down the Defense of Marriage Act ("DOMA") section 3,[19] unlocking the vast majority of federal benefits for same-sex married couples.[20] Justice Kennedy, writing for the majority in Windsor, put a stop to the injurious withholding of federal benefits from same-sex married couples and their families.[21] Although voiding section 3 of DOMA, Windsor did not reach the constitutionality of section 2 of DOMA,[22] which statutorily allowed states such as Tennessee to refuse to recognize the marriages of same-sex couples performed in others states.[23] Justice Scalia, in his dissent in 17. 133 S. Ct. 2652, 2659. Hollingsworth was a challenge to Proposition 8, a California State amendment providing "[o]nly marriage between a man and a woman is valid or recognized in California." Id. (quoting CAL. CONST. art. I, § 7.5).

---

18. See id. at 2668.

19. The Defense of Marriage Act ("DOMA") provided that:

> In determining the meaning of any Act of Congress, or of any ruling, regulation, or interpretation of the various administrative bureaus and agencies of the United States, the word "marriage" means only a legal union between one man and one woman as husband and wife, and the word "spouse" refers only to a person of the opposite sex who is a husband or a wife.

Pub. L. No. 104-199, § 3(a) (1996) (codified by 1 U.S.C. § 7 (1996)) (invalidated by Windsor, 133 S. Ct. 2675).

20. The Court in Windsor recognized "over 1,000 federal laws in which marital or spousal status is addressed as a matter of federal law." Windsor, 133 S. Ct. at 2683. Shortly following Windsor, the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS") announced that legally married same-sex couples would have recognition of their marriages. Rev. Rul. 2013-17, 2013-2 C.B. 201.

21.
> DOMA [section 3] instructs all federal officials, and indeed all persons with whom same-sex couples interact, including their own children, that their marriage is less worthy than the marriages of others. The federal statue is invalid, for no legitimate purpose overcomes the purpose and effect to disparage and to injure those whom the State, by its marriage laws, sought to protect in personhood and dignity.

Windsor, 133 S. Ct. at 2696.

22. Pub. L. No. 104-199, § 2(a) (1996) (codified by 28 U.S.C. § 1738C).

23. Id.

Windsor, envisioned with tangible disapproval that state laws "excluding same-sex marriage" would be the next battleground where the "state-law shoe [would] be dropped."[24] Justice Scalia went so far as to take sections from the majority opinion and re-write them in his dissent to demonstrate the ("inevitable") likelihood that state laws denying same-sex couples their marital status would fall in the same way federal laws had.[25] His disagreement aside, the fact that state-established DOMA-equivalents would be challenged was correct. As explained in our merit brief in Tanco, "The injustices effected by Tennessee's Non-Recognition Laws are similar to those inflicted by section 3 of DOMA, which this [Supreme] Court struck down in United States v. Windsor. The same outcome is appropriate here."[26] The Obergefell Court would later agree, especially with respect to the impact on children:

> Excluding same-sex couples from marriage thus conflicts with a central premise of the right to marry. Without the recognition, stability, and predictability marriage offers, their children suffer the stig-

---

> No State, territory, or possession of the United States, or Indian tribe, shall be required to give effect to any public act, record, or judicial proceeding of any other State, territory, possession, or tribe respecting a relationship between persons of the same sex that is treated as a marriage under the laws of such other State, territory, possession, or tribe, or a right or claim arising from such relationship.

Id.

24. Windsor, 133 S. Ct. at 2705 (Scalia, J., dissenting).

25. Id. at 2709–10.

> ~~DOMA's~~ This state law's principal effect is to identify a subset of ~~state-sanctioned marriages~~ constitutionally protected sexual relationships, see Lawrence, and make them unequal. The principal purpose is to impose inequality, not for other reasons like governmental efficiency. Responsibilities, as well as rights, enhance the dignity and integrity of the person. And ~~DOMA~~ this state law contrives to deprive some couples ~~married under the laws of their State~~ enjoying constitutionally protected sexual relationships, but not other couples, of both rights and responsibilities.

Id. (alterations in original).

26. Brief for Petitioner at *17, Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584 (2015) (No. 14-562), 2015 WL 860739.

> ma of knowing their families are somehow lesser. They also suffer the significant material costs of being raised by unmarried parents, relegated through no fault of their own to a more difficult and uncertain family life. The marriage laws at issue here thus harm and humiliate the children of same-sex couples.[27]

Windsor was the latest and perhaps sturdiest legal building block of Supreme Court cases of marriage as a fundamental right, deserving of equal access and protection for same-sex couples. The Obergefell Court relied on Windsor and a series of other vital cases[28] in reaching its "analysis [that] compels the conclusion that same-sex couples may exercise the [fundamental] right to marry."[29] These legal building block cases include Loving, Zablocki, Turner, Griswold, Romer, and Lawrence. In Loving v. Virginia[30] the Supreme Court "invalidated bans on interracial unions" and held that "marriage is 'one of the vital personal rights essential to the orderly pursuit of happiness by free men.'"[31] In Zablocki v. Redhail,[32] the Court held "the right to marry was burdened by a law prohibiting fathers who were behind on child support from

---

27. Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584, 2600–01 (2015) (citing Windsor, 133 S. Ct. at 2694–95).

28. In acknowledgement of the importance of Goodridge v. Dep't of Pub. Health, 798 N.E.2d 941 (Mass. 2003), which was the first time any state highest court had ruled in favor of marriage equality for same-sex couples, the Obergefell Court quotes from the Goodridge decision:

> Choices about marriage shape an individual's destiny. As the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts has explained, because "it fulfills yearnings for security, safe haven, and connection that express our common humanity, civil marriage is an esteemed institution, and the decision whether and whom to marry is among life's momentous acts of self-definition."

Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. at 2599 (quoting Goodridge, 798 N.E.2d at 955). The author of the Goodridge opinion, Chief Justice Margaret Marshall, was in attendance at the oral argument in Obergefell, and the Obergefell oralist for question 1, Mary Bonato, argued the case for the Goodridge Plaintiffs.

29. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. at 2589.

30. 388 U.S. 1 (1967).

31. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. at 2598 (quoting Loving, 388 U.S. at 12).

32. 434 U.S. 374 (1978).

marrying."[33] In Turner v. Safley,[34] the Court found that regulations preventing prison inmates from marrying "abridged" the fundamental right to marry.[35] The Court held in Griswold v. Connecticut[36] that married couples had a Constitutional protection in the use of contraceptives.[37] Romer v. Evans[38] "invalidated" Colorado's Constitutional Amendment that stopped any political branch or subdivision in Colorado from "protecting persons against discrimination based on sexual orientation."[39] On June 26, 2003, Justice Kennedy again wrote for the majority in Lawrence v. Texas,[40] where the Court overruled its previous decision in Bowers v. Harwick,[41] and held that laws which made same-sex intimacy a crime "'demea[n] the lives of homosexual persons.'"[42]

Windsor, because of the wide-sweeping nature of the language striking down section 3 of DOMA, set in motion a rush to the Supreme Court to change history by challenging state non-recognition laws for same-sex marriages (mini-DOMAs); but which case would rise and would remain was an unanswered question. In the Sixth Circuit, a case in Michigan filed in district court in 2012 had been on hold pending the outcome of Windsor.[43] Like 33. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. at 2598 (citing Zablocki, 434 U.S. at 384).

---

34. 482 U.S 78 (1987).
35. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. at 2584 (citing Turner, 482 U.S. at 95).
36. 381 U.S. 479 (1965).
37. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. at 2589 (citing Griswold, 381 U.S. at 485). "[M]arriage is a right 'older than the Bill of Rights . . . a coming together for better or for worse, hopefully enduring, and intimate to the degree of being sacred.'" Id. at 2599 (quoting Griswold, 381 U.S. at 486).
38. 517 U.S. 620 (1996).
39. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. at 2596 (citing Romer, 517 U.S. 620).
40. 539 U.S. 558 (2003).
41. 478 U.S. 186 (1986). The Court in Bowers had upheld a Georgia law criminalizing certain same-sex intimate acts. Id. at 196.
42. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. at 2596 (quoting Lawrence, 539 U.S. at 575) (alteration in original).
43. DeBoer v. Snyder, 973 F. Supp. 2d 757, 760 (E.D. Mich. 2014), rev'd, 772 F.3d 388 (6th Cir. 2014), rev'd sub nom. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584. DeBoer initially challenged Michigan's ban on adoption; but in September 2012 the case was amended adding a challenge to same-sex marriage bans. Id. Following Windsor, the case went to trial in February and March 2014 with a decision in favor of the Plaintiffs. Id. at 775. The State of Michigan appealed to the Sixth Circuit in March 2014. See DeBoer, 772 F.3d 388, rev'd sub nom. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584.

in the Michigan case, these State or mini DOMAs[44] became the focus around the country with lawyers and plaintiffs joining force to challenge state bans. By July 2013, Tennessee began to assemble a legal team.

III. MARRIAGE EQUALITY IN TENNESSEE

In July 2013, I began a discussion about Windsor with a friend of mine, Abby Rubenfeld, a civil rights and family law attorney in Nashville. She and an attorney friend of hers, Regina Lambert in Knoxville, supported by the National Center for Lesbian Rights ("NCLR")[45] had started to form a legal team to challenge marriage equality in Tennessee. Abby had worked with NCLR in the past, especially Shannon Minter.[46] Shannon, along with his support team of attorneys at NCLR, David Codell, Chris Stoll, Amy Whelan, Asaf Orr, and Jamie Huling Delaye, would play a vital role on our team. I would then join Abby and Regina supported by NCLR, and together we would assemble a team to challenge the State of Tennessee's Constitution[47] and statutes[48] that

---

44. "State or mini DOMAs" refers to state constitutions and/or statutes limiting legally recognized marriages to those between a man and a woman, including that these laws did not allow for states to recognize same-sex marriages validly performed in another state that allowed for same-sex marriage.

45. NCLR, located in San Francisco, California, is a "national legal organization committed to advancing the civil and human rights of lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender people and their families through litigation, legislation, policy and public education." Mission & History, NAT'L CTR. FOR LESBIAN RIGHTS, http://www.nclrights.org/about-us/mission-history/ (last visited Nov. 1, 2015). Kate Kendell, Esq. is the Executive Director. NCLR Staff, Board & Councils, NAT'L CTR. FOR LESBIAN RIGHTS, http://www.nclrights.org/about-us/staff/ (last visited Nov. 1, 2015).

46. Shannon Price Minter, Esq. is the Legal Director of NCLR. NCLR Staff, Board & Councils, NAT'L CTR. FOR LESBIAN RIGHTS, http://www.nclrights.org/about-us/staff/ (last visited Nov. 1, 2015). He was also appointed in June 2015 by President Obama to the President's Commission on White House Fellowships. President Obama Announces More Key Administration Posts, THE WHITE HOUSE (June 8, 2015), https://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2015/06/08/president-obama-announces-more-key-administration-posts.

47. TENN. CONST. art. XI, § 18.

> The historical institution and legal contract solemnizing the relationship of one (1) man and one (1) woman shall be the only limited marriage to be between a man and a woman. Missing though was a Tennessee law firm[49] that could add resources and additional depth to the legal team. Soon William ("Bill") L. Harbison,[50] a Nashville attorney, along with three other members of his firm Sherrard & Roe, PLC would join our legal team and provide invaluable support. These three members are Scott Hickman, Phil Cramer, and John Farringer.

A. Finding Plaintiffs and Filing in District Court

The addition of plaintiffs to the case was more or less an organic process with potential plaintiffs contacting known LGBT advocacy groups and lawyers,[51] and members of these advocacy groups and lawyers asking friends or acquaintances. The lawyers prepared questionnaires for potential plaintiff couples, spoke with prospective clients, and began finding plaintiffs who would advance the personal side of litigation—couples married in other jurisdictions whose presence in Tennessee, and desire for recognition of their marriage, would resonate with Tennesseans and, hopefully, the Court. More than just joining a lawsuit, we were asking these potential plaintiffs to open their lives and their homes to the public > legally recognized marital contract in this state. Any policy or law or judicial interpretation, purporting to define marriage as anything other than the historical institution and legal contract between one (1) man and one (1) woman, is contrary to the public policy of this state and shall be void and unenforceable in Tennessee. If another state or foreign jurisdiction issues a license for persons to marry and if such marriage is prohibited in this state by the provisions of this section, then the marriage shall be void and unenforceable in this state.

---

Id.

48. TENN. CODE ANN. § 36-3-113 (2014 & Supp. 2015) ("Marriage between one man and one woman only legally recognized marital contract.").

49. We had an interested attorney from a medium-sized Tennessee law firm who, due to opposition from the members of the firm worried about the attitude of their clients, would not allow the attorney to participate in the case. So we looked for another.

50. Bill's father, William J. Harbison, was a Tennessee Supreme Court Special Justice, then elected Justice and Chief Justice from 1966–1990.

51. I would be remiss if I did not mention the important grassroots work of Tennessee Equality Project, www.tnequalityproject.org, and the numerous Tennessee LGBT centers and organizations, including the Memphis Gay and Lesbian Community Center, www.mglcc.org.

through court filings and press interviews. In 2013 there were a lot of unknowns—how long would it take, whether we would have to go through a full trial, and whether there would be negative reaction that might be worrisome for a family with children. Within a few weeks we had our Plaintiffs: Dr. Valeria Tanco and Dr. Sophy Jesty; Sergeant First Class Ijpe DeKoe and Thomas Kostura; Kellie Miller and Vanessa Devillez;[52] and Johno Espejo and Matthew Mansell. Each was a "married same-sex couple[] who moved to Tennessee to purse their livelihoods and make new homes for themselves and their families after they legally married in another state."[53]

Tanco v. Haslam began the Tennessee fight for marriage equality, contesting the state's non-recognition of married same-sex couples. On October 21, 2013, seven Tennessee lawyers and the NCLR filed suit after weeks of drafts, redrafts, edits, conversations, strategy meetings and the like, on behalf of several same-sex married couples to challenge the Tennessee Constitutional Provision article XI, section 18 and section 36-3-113 of the Tennessee Code Annotated, both which limited marriage and marriage recognition to marriages between "one man and one woman."[54] Although we dreamed and talked as if our case would make it to the Supreme Court, we were well aware that the reality was far less likely. Each step in the Tennessee case was careful, thought out, and collaborative. At points in time I found myself holding together my small Memphis law firm and also working what felt like a second full-time job on Tanco.[55] Each of the Tennessee Attorneys and NCLR worked tirelessly to find consensus.

---

52. By Stipulation of Dismissal, Plaintiffs Kellie Miller and Vanessa Devillez withdrew on March 10, 2014. See Stipulation of Dismissal of Plaintiffs Kellie Miller and Vanessa Devillez and Defendant Bill Gibbons at 1, Tanco v. Haslam, No. 3:13-cv-01159 (M.D. Tenn. Mar. 10, 2014), http://attorneygeneral.tn.gov/cases/tanco/tancostipulation-3-10-2014.pdf.

53. Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief at 2, Tanco v. Haslam, No. 3:13-cv-01159 (M.D. Tenn. Oct. 21, 2013), http://attorneygeneral.tn.gov/cases/tanco/tancocomplaint.pdf.

54. TENN. CONST. art. XI, § 18; TENN. CODE ANN. § 36-3-113 (2014 & Supp. 2015).

55. I could not have done this though without the ongoing support of my associate attorney and daughter Yvette G. Holland, a graduate of the University of Memphis Law School, who managed the office when I was away; and Tara Together we would think through and find that consensus at each turn and with each strategic step, including the broader concepts to the finer details, like for each and every paragraph of the Complaint. We formed a bond and quickly become a cohesive legal team dedicated to the same purpose, and we had only just begun. The Complaint for Declaratory and Injunctive Relief asserted that same-sex married couples had protected interests under the U.S. Constitution's Fourteenth Amendment due process and equal protection clauses.[56] It further set out that prohibitions against the recognition of valid out-of-state marriages of same-sex couples were in direct contravention of "Tennessee's long-standing rule that 'a marriage valid where celebrated is valid everywhere.'"[57] This was not the same legal case some states' advocates had taken on behalf of same-sex couples trying to marry. This was a same-sex marriage recognition case. Undoubtedly, recognition of the fundamental right to marry would be an essential argument and a key component, but our primary focus was in having the State of Tennessee recognize the validity of marriages for same-sex couples who had married out-of-state, as the State has traditionally provided for "common law marriages entered into in another state and valid under the law of that state, even though Tennessee law does not provide for couples to enter into common law marriages within the state."[58] Suit was filed in Federal Court—the United States District Court for the Middle District of Tennessee, in Nashville, the capital of Tennessee.

> Army Reserve Sergeant First Class Ijpe DeKoe and his partner Thomas Kostura, co-plaintiffs in the Tennessee case, fell in love. In 2011, DeKoe received orders to deploy to Afghanistan. Before leaving, he and Kostura married in New York. A week later, DeKoe began his deployment, which lasted Brown, my paralegal and a current student at the University of Memphis Law School.

56. Complaint, supra note 53.

57. Id. at 1–2 (quoting Farnham v. Farnham, 323 S.W.3d 129, 134 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2009)).

58. Id. at 8 (quoting Shelby County v. Williams, 510 S.W.2d 73,74 (Tenn. 1974); In re Estate of Glover, 882 S.W.2d 789, 789–90 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1994); Lightsey v. Lightsey, 407 S.W.2d 684, 690 (Tenn. Ct. App. 1966)).

> for almost a year. When he returned, the two settled in Tennessee, where DeKoe works full-time for the Army Reserve. Their lawful marriage is stripped from them whenever they reside in Tennessee, returning and disappearing as they travel across state lines. DeKoe, who served this Nation to preserve the freedom the Constitution protects, must endure a substantial burden.[59]

As soon as the case was filed, our journey in the press also began. Because I was the only attorney in the Western part of Tennessee, and given that one of our Plaintiff couples lived in Memphis, part of my role involved attendance at and preparation for press interviews of the local couple. My press liaison work[60] was extensive[61] as it became usual for each press interview to take approximately an hour and a half. On one of these press interviews I had the pleasure of meeting a famous civil rights photographer, Richard Copley.[62] Copley, known for his "I am a Man"[63]

---

59. Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584, 2595 (2015).

60. NCLR coordinated the press interviews for the case with the guidance of NCLR's Erik Olvera, Director of Communications, and Alberto R. Lammers, Assistant Director of Communications.

61. Ijpe Dekoe and Thom Kostura were in multiple news articles over the course of the suit. See, e.g., Bianca Phillips, Seeking Recognition, MEM. FLYER (Oct. 31, 2013), http://www.memphisflyer.com/memphis/seeking-recognition/Content?oid=3537303; David Waters, David Waters: Memphis Gay Couple Married in U.S., Not Tennessee, THE COM. APPEAL (May 13, 2014), http://www.commercialappeal.com/news/david-waters-memphis-gay-couple-married-in-us-not-tennessee-ep-457570284-328960231.html; Katie Fretland, Memphis Couple, Attorney Take Marriage Equality Case to U.S. Supreme Court, THE COM. APPEAL (Nov. 29, 2014), http://www.commercialappeal.com/news/local-news/memphis-couple-attorney-take-marriage-equality-case-to-us-supreme-court_07251752.

62. As a first-time paid "rookie photographer," Copley found himself in the midst of civil rights history taking photos at Mason Temple in Memphis, Tennessee, where the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. would rally sanitation workers in his "Mountaintop" speech. Christina Caron, MLK and Me: How a Rookie Photographer Captured History, NBC NEWS (Apr. 4, 2013 5:19 PM), http://photoblog.nbcnews.com/_news/2013/04/04/17603354-mlk-and-me-how-rookie-photographer-captured-history?lite.

sanitation strike photos in Memphis, Tennessee, in 1968, was the freelance photographer for Thom and Ijpe's NBC interview in Memphis.[64] We discussed his excitement at memorializing these momentous civil rights moments, from photos of Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. to video of Thom and Ijpe on the precipice of helping attain marriage equality. He adjusted his video camera so I could see the interview, both standing behind the camera looking at Thom and Ijpe, and looking directly and literally into the lens of history.

Knowing that the case might take a year or more to work its way to a trial, and knowing that our Plaintiffs were suffering harm each day the case was delayed, we moved the legal process into high gear by shifting focus to a Motion for Preliminary Injunction to address the "severe and irreparable constitutional and practical harms on Plaintiffs and their children,"[65] including those mentioned in Windsor, "dignity" harms that "demean[] the couple[s]" and "humiliates . . . children now being raised by same-sex couples."[66] At the time of filing, Knoxville Plaintiffs Dr. Valeria ("Val") Tanco and Dr. Sophy Jesty were expecting their first child in the Spring of 2014, and part of the request was that both parents would be legally recognized and that both parents would be able to make medical decisions for their child—a benefit denied to them at the time, as only the birth mother would have recognition as the legal parent.[67] The Motion for Preliminary Injunction spoke to many other denied benefits, including, health care and coverage, drivers' licenses recognizing married name changes, ownership of marital property, allowed inheritance for married couples without

---

63. Louis Gogans, "I Am a Man" Exhibit Brings People Back to 1968, MEM. FLYER (July 25, 2014), http://www.memphisflyer.com/CallingtheBluff/archives/2014/07/25/i-am-a-man-exhibit-brings-people-back-to-1968.

64. See Photo of NBC interview team: Ron, David, & Richard Copley, with Ijpe Dekoe, Thomas Kostura, and Maureen T. Holland. @MaureenTHolland, TWITTER (Apr. 8, 2015, 5:17 PM), https://twitter.com/maureentholland/status/585959649452630016.

65. Plaintiffs' Memorandum of Law in Support of Motion for Preliminary Injunction at 2, Tanco v. Haslam, 3:13-cv-01159 (M.D. Tenn., Nov. 19, 2013), http://attorneygeneral.tn.gov/cases/tanco/tancomemoinsupport.pdf.

66. Id. (quoting United States v. Windsor, 133 S. Ct. 2675, 2694 (2013)).

67. Id. at 8.

taxation, status as second-class citizens, and the denial of dignity, stability, and respect for their marriages.[68]

To prevail, the Plaintiffs had to meet the standard for a Preliminary Injunction[69]—and did. The Obergefell Court would later acknowledge the importance of marital benefits for same-sex couples and their families.

> Under the laws of the several States, some of marriage's protections for children and families are material. But marriage also confers more profound benefits. By giving recognition and legal structure to their parents' relationship, marriage allows children "to understand the integrity and closeness of their own family and its concord with other families in their community and in their daily lives."[70]

Judge Trauger from the Middle District of Tennessee agreed with the Plaintiffs, issuing a Preliminary Injunction on March 14, 2014, with a Memorandum decision examining each of the arguments by the parties and setting forth her analysis of the law.[71]

In granting the relief to Plaintiffs, Judge Trauger foretold a hopeful prospect:

> At some point in the future, likely with the benefit of additional precedent from circuit courts and, perhaps, the Supreme Court, the court will be asked to make a final ruling on the plaintiffs' claims. At this

---

68. See id. at 4–5.

69. The Motion for Preliminary Injunction explained in detail how Plaintiffs met each of the four factors for granting a Preliminary Injunction: "(1) whether Plaintiffs are likely to succeed on the merits, (2) whether they are likely to suffer irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief, (3) whether the balance of equities tips in their favor, and (4) whether an injunction is in the public interest." Id. (citing United Food & Commercial Workers Union, Local 1099 v. Southwest Ohio Reg'l Transit Auth., 163 F.3d 341, 348 (6th Cir. 1998)).

70. Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584, 2600 (2015) (citing Windsor, 133 S. Ct. at 2694).

71. Tanco v. Haslam, 7 F. Supp. 3d 759 (M.D. Tenn. 2014), rev'd sub nom. DeBoer v. Snyder, 772 F.3d 388 (6th Cir. 2014), rev'd sub nom. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584.

> point, all signs indicate that, in the eyes of the United States Constitution, the plaintiffs' marriages will be placed on an equal footing with those of heterosexual couples and that proscriptions against same-sex marriage will soon become a footnote in the annals of American history.[72]

Despite the State of Tennessee's objection, the marriages of these Plaintiff couples were recognized pursuant to court order from March 14, 2014, until April 25, 2014, when the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals issued a stay pending an expedited consideration on the merits.[73] For these weeks, and for the first time in Tennessee history, the Plaintiffs were married; hope glimmered in small celebrations. During these critical days, Val gave birth to a baby girl, Emilia, and Sophy and Val's names were both placed on their newborn daughter's birth certificate.[74] Mother and Mother had parental rights, but what would the Sixth Circuit decide?

B. The Sixth Circuit

As the excitement around the case grew, so did requests for attorneys to explain the process and for the Plaintiffs and their families to be more visible as the uncertainty at the Sixth Circuit loomed.[75] We hastened to get our brief filed at the Sixth Circuit, and although ours was not the first case at the Sixth Circuit, the Court of Appeals consolidated the pending cases from Ohio,[76]

---

72. Id. at 19.

73. Tanco v. Haslam, No. 14-5297, 2014 U.S. App. LEXIS 22051 (6th Cir. Apr. 25, 2014) (per curiam).

74. Emilia was born March 27 during the period where Sophy and Val's marriage was recognized by Judge Trauger's Order. See Joan Biskupic, Valeria Tanco and Sophy Jesty, Tennessee Lesbian Moms, Become a Legal First for Gay Marriage, HUFFINGTON POST (Apr. 9, 2014, 7:00 AM), http://www.huffington post.com/2014/04/09/tennessee-lesbian-moms-case_n_5116823.html.

75. See, e.g., James Grady, Legal Limbo: Inside Tennessee's Marriage Equality Lawsuit, OUT AND ABOUT NASHVILLE (May 27, 2014), https://www. outandaboutnashville.com/story/legal-limbo-inside-tennessee-s-marriage.

76. Obergefell v. Wymyslo was filed in July 2013 by two men who had married in Maryland and sought to have the state of Ohio recognize their marriage on death certificates. 962 F. Supp. 2d 968 (S.D. Ohio 2013), rev'd sub nom. DeBoer v. Snyder, 772 F.3d 388 (6th Cir. 2014), rev'd sub nom. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584. The Southern District of Ohio granted a temporary re-

Michigan,[77] Kentucky,[78] and Tennessee for oral argument on August 6, 2014.[79] On July 21, 2014, the Sixth Circuit announced that straining order to prevent Ohio from recording any death certificate in connection to the couple unless it recorded the deceased as being married at the time of death (one was suffering a terminal illness). Id. at 997–98. This case was later amended to add additional plaintiffs including a funeral director. Id. Following a ruling for Plaintiffs in December 2013, this case was appealed and consolidated by the Sixth Circuit with Henry v. Hodges, a suit brought by four couples and the adopted child of one of the couples seeking to be listed on their children's birth certificates. See DeBoer, 772 F.3d at 398–99, rev'd sub nom. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584. These cases were advocated by private lawyers, the American Civil Liberties Union ("ACLU") of Ohio, and Lambda Legal. It was consolidated with Tanco v. Haslam by the Sixth Circuit and later by the Supreme Court. Id.; see Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584; Joint Petition for a Writ of Certiorari, Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584 (No. 14-556), 2014 WL 5907570 (Ohio).

---

77. DeBoer v. Snyder was filed in January 2012 by a lesbian couple, on behalf of themselves and their three children, to challenge Michigan's ban against them jointly adopting their children, and by amendment in September 2012 to also challenge Michigan's ban against same-sex couples marrying. 973 F. Supp. 2d 757 (E.D. Mich. 2014), rev'd 772 F.3d 388 (6th Cir. 2014), rev'd sub nom. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584. DeBoer was put on hold pending the rulings in Windsor and Hollingsworth. Id. at 760. Following a trial in February and March 2014 with a ruling in favor of Plaintiffs, the case was appealed to the Sixth Circuit in March 2014 and became the lead case at the Sixth Circuit as it was the first case appealed at that level. This case was consolidated with Tanco by the Sixth Circuit and later by the Supreme Court. See DeBoer, 772 F.3d 388 (6th Cir. 2014), rev'd sub nom. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584. Advocates for the Plaintiffs included private lawyers, the ACLU of Michigan ,and Gay & Lesbian Advocates and Defenders ("GLAD"). See Petition for Writ of Certiorari, Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584 (No. 14-571), 2014 WL 6449712 (Michigan). Official DeBoer v Snyder Legal Case Website, NAT'L MARRIAGE CHALLENGE, http://nationalmarriagechallenge.com/ (last visited Nov. 1, 2015).

78. Bourke v. Beshear was filed in July 2013 by four same-sex couple who were legally married in other jurisdictions and who sought marriage recognition in Kentucky. 996 F. Supp. 2d 542 (WD. Ky. 2014). The trial court issued a summary judgment decision for plaintiffs in February 2014. See Petition for a Writ of Certiorari at *9, Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584 (No. 14-574), 2014 WL 8731960 (Kentucky). Following the decision, two same-sex couples seeking to marry intervened and the trial court entered an order granting the intervening plaintiffs summary judgment. Id. This case was appealed to the Sixth Circuit and consolidated with Tanco by the Sixth Circuit and later by the Supreme Court. See DeBoer, 772 F.3d 388 (6th Cir. 2014), rev'd sub nom. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584. Advocates included private attorneys and the ACLU of Kentucky. See Petition for a Writ of Certiorari, supra note 78.

Judges Sutton, Cook, and Daughtrey would be on the panel.[80] A public notice was issued regarding media at the oral argument.[81] We had no idea whether consolidation would mean one or multiple decisions.

On August 6, 2014, nearly all of the Plaintiffs from each of the consolidated cases and attorneys for both sides entered the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals. By Order of the Sixth Circuit we were to remain in the courtroom throughout the arguments, or be prevented from reentry. No exceptions. As was our ongoing course of action, the Tennessee attorneys came to consensus that Bill Harbison would argue for us. He had experience as an appellate attorney and an affable style of persuasion that would provide confidence and clarity to our arguments. Extra chairs lined the courtroom. Just before the panel of Judges entered, as many members of the press that could be compressed into the remaining seats were allowed into the room. Two over-flow courtrooms had been set up with live audio streaming of the oral arguments. Sitting as still as we could manage, we listened and watched the panel challenge each other through questions posed to the oralists.[82]

---

79. Steve Delchin, Sixth Circuit Gearing Up to Hear Same-Sex Marriage Appeals on August 6, 2014, SQUIRE PATTON BOGGS: SIXTH CIR. APP. BLOG (July 21, 2014), http://www.sixthcircuitappellateblog.com/news-and-analysis/sixth-circuit-gearing-up-to-hear-same-sex-marriage-appeals-on-august-6-2014/.

80. Id.

81. Id.; see also Steve Delchin, Sixth Circuit Same-Sex Marriage Appeals Generating National Interest; Media Turning to Sixth Circuit Appellate Blog for Insight and Analysis, SQUIRE PATTON BOGGS: SIXTH CIR. APP. BLOG (August 5, 2014), http://www.sixthcircuitappellateblog.com/news-and-analysis/sixth-circuit-same-sex-marriage-appeals-generating-national-interest-media-turning-to-sixth-circuit-appellate-blog-for-insight-and-analysis/.

82. See Adam Polaski, Listen: Oral Arguments at the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals, FREEDOM TO MARRY (Aug. 6, 2014 2:00 PM), http://www.freedomtomarry.org/blog/entry/listen-oral-arguments-at-the-6th-circuit-court-of-appeals (making publicly available the oral arguments given to the three-judge panel at the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit); see also Courtroom Audio, U.S. CT. OF APPEALS FOR THE SIXTH CIR., http://www.ca6.uscourts.gov/internet/court_audio/aud2.php?link=http://www.ca6.uscourts.gov/internet/court_audio/audio/08-06-2014%20-%20Wednesday/14-3057%2014%203464%20Obergefell%20and%20Henry%20v%20Himes.mp3&name=14-3057%2014%203464%20Obergefell%20and%20Henry%20v%20Himes (last visited Nov. 1, 2015).

National attention had grown exponentially. When oral argument was over, we ventured outside where the press was waiting for interviews and photos. I had the good fortune of making one of the main photos.[83] Outside the courthouse in downtown Cincinnati, on a paid advertisement flagpole located nearest one of the entryways to the courthouse, was a rainbow or gay pride flag advertising Kroger. I had noticed it the day prior when I was mapping the route from my hotel to the courthouse. It was less an omen and more a sign of the times with cities and counties like Cincinnati providing anti-LGBT discrimination ordinances, despite the opposition from the State of Ohio in recognizing or allowing same-sex marriages.[84] Such contradictions of acceptance and protections were true of Tennessee with Memphis,[85] Shelby County,[86] and Knoxville[87] having anti-LGBT discrimination ordinances or 83. See Photo, Tennessee: Tanco v. Haslam, FREEDOM TO MARRY (Aug. 6, 2014, 2:00 PM), http://www.freedomtomarry.org/blog/entry/listen-oral-arguments-at-the-6th-circuit-court-of-appeals.

84. CINCINNATI, OHIO, CODE § 914-1-D1 (1992) ("'Discriminate' shall mean to unlawfully segregate, separate or treat individuals differently based on race, gender, age, color, religion, disability status, marital status, sexual orientation or transgender status, or ethnic, national or Appalachian regional origin").

85. MEMPHIS, TENN., CODE, § 3-8-6 (2012) ("There shall be no discrimination in city employment of personnel because of religion, race, sex, creed, political affiliation, national origin, ethnicity, age, disability, sexual orientation, gender identity or other non-merit factors, nor shall there be any discrimination in the promotion or demotion of city employees because of religion, race, sex, creed, political affiliation, national origin, ethnicity, age, disability, sexual orientation, gender identity or other non-merit factors. Gender identity means the actual or perceived gender-related identity, appearance, or mannerisms, or other gender-related characteristics of an individual, with or without regard to the individual's designated sex at birth.").

86. Jerry Jones, Shelby County Passes Non-discrimination Resolution, OUT AND ABOUT NASHVILLE (June 2, 2009), http://www.outandaboutnashville.com/story/shelby-county-passes-non-discrimination#.VfNy0Z3BwXA.

87. KNOXVILLE, TENN., CODE § 15-57 (1962) ("It shall be an unlawful employment practice for the city to discriminate against a qualified individual on the basis of non-merit factors such as race, ethnic origin, color, national origin, gender, gender identity, genetic information, sexual orientation, age except as otherwise specifically provided in this part, religion, creed, or disability in admission to, access to, or operations of its programs, services, or activities. Discrimination against any qualified individual in recruitment, examination, resolutions while the State of Tennessee contested the recognition of same-sex marriages.

> Yet by virtue of their exclusion from that institution [of marriage], same-sex couples are denied the constellation of benefits that the States have linked to marriage. This harm results in more than just material burdens. Same-sex couples are consigned to an instability many opposite-sex couples would deem intolerable in their own lives.[88]

During the argument at the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals, it became apparent from the questions by Judge Sutton and Judge Cook that state's rights was the rubric they were following. Judge Daughtrey unabashedly challenged the attorneys for the states to explain how the state's justification to prevent recognition of same-sex married couples or allow their marriage stopped or interfered with the goal of the states to support what the state had called "responsible procreation" and what had become known as the "irresponsible procreation theory" whereby opposite sex couples have "unintended offspring."[89]

August 2014 melted away, September breezed by, October fell to the wayside, and still the Sixth Circuit had not issued any decision on the pending marriage equality cases. Tension, speculation, and anxiety ran high as the Supreme Court declined to accept yet another writ. Justice Ginsburg spoke at the University of Minnesota Law School and responded to a question about whether the Court would take a case on same-sex marriage by saying: appointment, training, promotion, demotion, retention, discipline, or any other employment practices because of non-merit factors shall be prohibited.").

---

88. Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584, 2601 (2015).

89. See DeBoer v. Snyder, 772 F.3d 388, 422 (6th Cir. 2014) (Daughtrey, J. dissenting) ("[T]he defendants in each of these cases . . . spent virtually their entire oral arguments professing what has come to be known as the 'irresponsible procreation' theory: that limiting marriage and its benefits to opposite-sex couples is rational, even necessary, to provide for 'unintended offspring' by channeling their biological procreators into the bonds of matrimony."), rev'd sub nom. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584; see also Joint Petition for a Writ of Certiorari, supra note 76.

> There is a case presenting the question still pending before the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. If that court should disagree with the others, there will be greater cause for the Supreme Court to take up the question. But when all of the Courts of Appeals are in agreement, there's no similarly urgent need to decide the matter at once. It remains to be seen what the Sixth Circuit will rule and when it will rule. Sooner or later, yes, the question will come to the Supreme Court.[90]

The answer arrived on November 6, 2014, when the Sixth Circuit issued its consolidated decision, reversing the rulings by the trial courts and declaring that the states were justified in denying marriage recognition to same-sex couples and in limiting marriage to a man and a woman.[91] A gauntlet was thrown. Not knowing the priorities of the Supreme Court, each Plaintiff group filed a separate writ of certiorari.[92] We filed two hours after Ohio, with Kentucky and Michigan filing third and fourth.

C. Supreme Court

For filing the writ, we wanted additional Supreme Court depth and knowledge, so one of our team members at NCLR reached out to his law school colleague Douglas Hallward-Driemeier at Ropes & Gray, LLP, in its Washington, D.C., office to join the team. Doug, along with his team, Christopher Thomas Brown, Paul Kellogg, Samira Omerovic, Joshua Goldstein, John Dey, and Emerson A. Siegle, quickly accepted our offer of invitation. He had argued fourteen cases at the Supreme Court and had extensive appellate experience. We also began the complex task of not only working on our own writ of certiorari, but also reaching 90. Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg & Robert A. Stein, The Stein Lecture: A Conversation Between Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Professor Robert A. Stein, 99 MINN. L. REV. 1, 18 (2014).

---

91. DeBoer, 772 F.3d 388.

92. Petition for Writ of Certiorari, supra note 76; Petition for Writ of Certiorari, Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584 (No. 14-562), 2014 WL 6334259 (Tennessee); Petition for Writ of Certiorari, supra note 77; Petition for Writ of Certiorari, supra note 78.

out to the other teams as we loosely began a coordinated effort to reach the Supreme Court.

By January all teams' writs of certiorari were ready for consideration at the Supreme Court Justices' weekly conferences. The Justices would meet on January 9, 2015, and possibly January 16, 2015, to make a decision as to whether to take one, some, or all of the pending cases.[93] On January 16, 2015, the Supreme Court accepted each of the writs, consolidating the cases using the Ohio name of Obergefell as they had filed their writ first.[94] Case names are like going to dinner—she who arrives first gets her name on the reservation. As set forth infra, two questions that had to be answered by the parties: (1) Does the Fourteenth Amendment require a state to license a marriage between two people of the same sex? Or, what I refer to as, "Can we get married?" and (2) Does the Fourteenth Amendment require a state to recognize a marriage between two people of the same sex when their marriage was lawfully licensed and performed out-of-state? Or, what I refer to as, "Are we still married?"

According to the Supreme Court, "approximately 10,000 petitions for a writ of certiorari [are filed] each year" and the

---

93. Lyle Denniston, Same-sex Marriage Cases Ready, Scheduled (UPDATED), SCOTUSBLOG (Dec. 23, 2014, 3:43 PM), http://www.scotusblog.com/2014/12/same-sex-marriage-cases-ready-scheduled/#more-223139.

94. See Tanco v. Haslam, SCOTUSBLOG (Jan. 16, 2015), http://www.scotusblog.com/case-files/cases/tanco-v-haslam/ ("Petition GRANTED The petitions for writs of certiorari in No. 14-556, No. 14-571, and No. 14-574 are granted. The cases are consolidated and the petitions for writs of certiorari are granted limited to the following questions: 1) Does the Fourteenth Amendment require a state to license a marriage between two people of the same sex? 2) Does the Fourteenth Amendment require a state to recognize a marriage between two people of the same sex when their marriage was lawfully licensed and performed out-of-state? A total of ninety minutes is allotted for oral argument on Question 1. A total of one hour is allotted for oral argument on Question 2. The parties are limited to filing briefs on the merits and presenting oral argument on the questions presented in their respective petitions. The briefs of petitioners are to be filed on or before 2 p.m., Friday, February 27, 2015. The briefs of respondents are to be filed on or before 2 p.m., Friday, March 27, 2015. The reply briefs are to be filed on or before 2 p.m., Friday, April 17, 2015. VIDED.").

"Court grants and hears oral argument in about 75–80."[95] That would mean that less than approximately eight percent of writs are granted. The Supreme Court took all of the Sixth Circuit cases, and we were elated.

1. Preparing for the Supreme Court

The expedited briefing schedule[96] meant our team would work late many nights to meet the deadlines. We also had many more meetings, conferences, and emails as we coordinated with the other teams through the process of writing and submitting the briefs. Many edits, tremendous work on the appendix, and continued press conferences filled my days. Not only did we have to learn a process about which many of us were less familiar, but we had to coordinate that process with legal teams and Plaintiffs whom we did not know very well. This substantially increased our time on the case as we were engaged in preparing briefs and a joint appendix with many emails, phone conferences, joint meetings, and subgroup conferences. There are perhaps few things as motivating and encouraging as a common purpose. Each of the teams and all those involved truly wanted to change the landscape and stop the destructive force of denial of marriage and denial of recognition for same-sex married couples and their families. This common purpose created a momentum and a desire to work later, harder and with an eye toward collaboration.

> Many who deem same-sex marriage to be wrong reach that conclusion based on decent and honorable religious or philosophical premises, and neither they nor their beliefs are disparaged here. But when that sincere, personal opposition becomes enacted law and public policy, the necessary consequence is to put the imprimatur of the State itself on an exclu-

---

95. Frequently Asked Questions (FAQ), SUP. CT. OF THE U.S., http://www.supremecourt.gov/faq.aspx#faqgi9 (last visited Nov. 1, 2015).

96. An expedited briefing schedule means that the parties have a shorter than usual time to file their briefs to have the briefs filed in time for oral argument. See, e.g., S. CT. R. 25; Supreme Court Procedure, SCOTUSBLOG, http://www.scotusblog.com/reference/educational-resources/supreme-court-procedure/ (last visited Nov. 1, 2015).

> sion that soon demeans or stigmatizes those whose own liberty is then denied.[97]

Choosing of oralists was an especially challenging proposition. There were approximately forty-eight lawyers all capable of arguing, but only two positions. We had hoped that the Court might consider four oralists given that there were four cases, but that was not to be an available solution. So after frequent and copious conversations a plan emerged—we would choose our oralists by an organic process of moots or practice arguments, and discussion. Although it sounds fairly simple, the process was not. In the end though, two were chosen: Doug Hallward-Driemeier and Mary Bonauto.[98] They were a perfect choice of diversity and complimentary arguing styles. They were, in the words of Shannon Minter, our "dream team."[99] Doug had argued fourteen cases before the Court, and would argue another prior to the Obergefell oral argument, making Obergefell his sweet sixteenth argument. Mary, although not having argued at the Supreme Court before had argued at the appellate level in other forums, including the landmark case of Goodridge.[100]

National press coverage was at a new level with national organizations interviewing Plaintiffs[101] and pundits predicting the

---

97. Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584, 2602 (2015).

98. Hallward-Driemeier is a partner at Ropes & Gray, LLP. Douglas Hallward-Driemeier, ROPES & GRAY, https://www.ropesgray.com/douglas hallward-driemeier/ (last visited Nov. 1, 2015). Bonauto is the Civil Rights Project Director at GLAD. Mary L. Bonauto, GAY & LESBIAN ADVOC. & DEFENDERS, https://www.glad.org/about/staff/mary-bonauto (last visited Nov. 1, 2015).

99. Ariane de Vogue, Meet the Lawyers Who Will Argue the Gay Marriage Case, CNN (Apr. 27, 2015, 4:22 PM), http://www.cnn.com/2015/04/24/politics/supreme-court-gay-marriage-lawyers/.

100. See Goodridge v. Dep't of Pub. Health, 798 N.E.2d 941 (Mass. 2003); see also supra note 28.

101. See, e.g., Samantha Masunaga, From Traffic Ticket to Supreme Court: A Gay Couple's Legal Odyssey, L.A. TIMES (Jan. 18, 2015, 9:00 AM), http://www.latimes.com/nation/la-na-same-sex-marriage-plaintiffs-20150117-story.html; Erik Oritz, Supreme Court Gay Marriage Debate Puts Ohio Man Jim Obergefell in Center, NBC NEWS (Apr. 26, 2015, 6:15 PM), http://www.nbcnews.com/politics/supreme-court/supreme-courts-gay-marriage-debate-puts-ohio-man-jim-obergefell-n347836.

outcome of the cases. Surpassing Windsor, which had ninety-six amicus briefs filed, Obergefell would have 147 by the time of oral argument, with 77 briefs in support of plaintiffs and sixty-six in support of respondents.[102] Timelines approached quickly and soon the case was briefed and ready for argument. To prepare, a series of moots were held. We held a moot for the Tennessee team in Nashville, and then we traveled to Washington, D.C., for moots at Georgetown University Law Center and Howard University School of Law.[103] Both Georgetown and Howard have moot programs where the school brings together the legal teams (one side of each argument, which for our case meant a moot for the Plaintiffs) and a panel of faculty and experienced Supreme Court oralists or "advocates." Students are allowed to attend but precautions are taken to ensure the confidentiality of the process.[104]

> Especially against a long history of disapproval of their relationships, this denial to same-sex couples of the right to marry works a grave and continuing harm. The imposition of this disability on gays and lesbians serves to disrespect and subordinate them. And the Equal Protection Clause, like the Due Process Clause, prohibits this unjustified infringement of the fundament right to marry.[105]

2. Oral Argument

The days were long leading to oral argument. On the day of the argument, I left my in-laws' condo with my wife, arriving at a hotel near the Court to meet the Attorneys and Plaintiffs. Together we took a bus to Court, found my place in line, which had

---

102. See Ruthann Robson, Guide to the Amicus Brief in Obergefell v. Hodges: The Same-Sex Marriage Cases, CONST. L. PROFESSOR BLOG (Apr. 16, 2015), http://lawprofessors.typepad.com/conlaw/2015/04/guide-to-amicus-briefs-in-obergefell-v-hodges-the-same-sex-marriage-cases.html.

103. See The Marriage Equality Supreme Court Moot, Part 1-10, HOW. U. SCH. OF L. (Apr. 22, 2015), http://www.law.howard.edu/1904.

104. See Moot Court Program, SUP. CT. INSTITUTE: GEO. U. L. CTR., https://www.law.georgetown.edu/academics/centers-institutes/supreme-court-institute/moot-court-program/index.cfm (last visited Nov. 1, 2015).

105. Obergefell v. Hodges, 135 S. Ct. 2584, 2604 (2015).

been preserved by a line-stander,[106] and slowly got through security inside the courtroom. As we had limited tickets, many of the lawyers like myself had given up their seat tickets to ensure that the Plaintiffs would all get an opportunity to sit through oral argument Question 1 or 2. Sitting to my immediate left was the attorney oralist for the Plaintiff in Lawrence, and a few seats to my right was the attorney oralist for the Plaintiff in Windsor. The courtroom was filled with lawyers, law professors, Supreme Court advocates, press, Plaintiffs, guests, and members of the public. The Marshal announced the entry of the Justices into the courtroom and soon oral argument began. While Mary and Doug fielded questions from the Justices and advocated for equality,[107] outside was a rally.[108] During the argument there would be an outburst and the man yelling "abomination" and "hell" would be carried out by at least 5 courtroom officers.[109] This outburst did not disturb the Solicitor General who paused and nearly walked away from the podium during the commotion, but decided better and began his argument. This case was the first time the U.S. Government had taken a position in favor of same-sex marriage equality.[110] The Solicitor General argued fifteen of the allocated ninety minutes dedicated to "whether the Fourteenth Amendment requires

---

106. Beginning the October Term 2015, line-standers are no longer allowed for attorneys in the bar line, "only Bar members who actually intend to attend argument will be allowed in the line for the Bar section. See Lyle Denison, No Subs For Lawyers in Court Lines, SCOTUSBLOG (Oct. 5, 2015, 3:57 PM), http://www.scotusblog.com/2015/10/no-subs-for-lawyers-in-court-lines/.

107. When recounting this day Ijpe would remark that hearing Doug share each of the Plaintiff couples' stories "chilled" him. See infra note 109.

108. My wife, Taylor Williams, older daughter Margot Chapman, son-in-law Clay Chapman, daughter Yvette Holland, and her boyfriend Trey Kirk waited outside with megaphones blaring. My best friend from high school, Kasey Wilson, was outside taking photos for a video and photo album she would create for me.

109. Bianca Phillips, Q&A with Memphis Couple in Supreme Court Same-Sex Marriage Case, MEM. FLYER (June 28, 2015, 4:43 PM), http://www.memphisflyer.com/MemphisGaydar/archives/2015/04/28/qanda-with-memphis-couple-in-supreme-court-same-sex-marriage-case.

110. Brief for the United States as Amicus Curiae Supporting Petitioners at *2, Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584 (Nos. 14-556, 14-562, 14-571, 14-574), 2015 WL 1004710.

states to license a marriage between two people of the same sex?"[111]

Leaving the Courtroom and walking down the stairs of the Supreme Court felt overwhelming and exciting at once. Photos abound of this day.[112] Now the real wait began.

VI. DECISION

We knew the Court would likely rule in June and most predictably by the end of the term. There was a lot of speculation that the decision would come out on June 29, but not being much of a gambler, I opted to arrive early, on the evening of June 25th and stay in Washington, D.C., through June 29th or 30th. By June 25, 2015, word reached us that a decision would be issued on a day other than Monday or Thursday, the days generally for announcements in June. It seemed all too coincidental that June 26 was the day Lawrence and Windsor decisions had been issued.[113] Would that hold true for this case?

> No union is more profound than marriage, for it embodies the highest ideals of love, fidelity, devotion, sacrifice, and family. In forming a marital union, two people become something greater than once they were. As some of the petitioners in these cases demonstrate, marriage embodies a love that may endure even past death. It would misunderstand these men and women to say they disrespect the idea of marriage. Their plea is that they do respect it, respect it so deeply that they seek to find its fulfillment for themselves. Their hope is not to be condemned to live in loneliness, excluded from one of civilization's oldest institutions. They ask for 111. Oral Argument at 27:58, Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584 (Nos. 14-556, 14-562, 14-571, 14-574), http://www.supremecourt.gov/oral_arguments/audio/2014/14-556-q1.

---

112. Ijpe Dekoe, Gay-Marriage Plaintiff: Our Names Are Now Part of the History of Marriage Equality, TIME MAG. (May 1, 2015), http://time.com/author/ijpe-dekoe/.

113. See cases cited supra notes 4, 15.

> equal dignity in the eyes of the law. The Constitution grants them that right.[114]

So early on the morning of June 26, 2015, I again left my in-laws' condo in Washington, D.C., with my wife and made my way into the courtroom. This time I'm sitting next to Doug. Over the sounds of lawyers crying for joy, Kennedy continues to read:[115]

> The Court, in this decision, holds same-sex couples may exercise the fundamental right to marry in all States. It follows that the Court also must hold—and it now does hold—that there is no lawful basis for a State to refuse to recognize a lawful same-sex marriage performed in another State on the ground of its same-sex character.[116]

Doug is holding my hand firmly, as one would an armchair and I place my hand over his. We won. . . . It is so ordered.[117]

114. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. at 2608.
115. Opinion Announcement, Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. 2584 (Nos. 14-556, 14-562, 14-571, 14-574), https://www.oyez.org/cases/2014/14-556.
116. Obergefell, 135 S. Ct. at 2607–08.
117. Id. at 2608.

No Safe Harbors: Examining the Shift From Voluntary Treatment Options to Criminalization of Maternal Drug Use in Tennessee

SARAH E. SMITH*

I. INTRODUCTION 203
II. BACKGROUND—NEONATAL ABSTINENCE SYNDROME & CRIMINALIZATION OF ITS CAUSE 206
A. Neonatal Abstinence Syndrome 207
B. History of Criminal and Civil Penalties for Maternal Drug Abuse 209
1. Rise of Criminalization 209
2. Modern Courts 210
III. TENNESSEE APPROACHES 214
A. Before the Safe Harbor Act 214
B. The Safe Harbor Act 216
C. Criminalizing Maternal Drug Abuse in Tennessee 218
IV. CONSTITUTIONAL ANALYSIS OF TENN. CODE ANN. SECTION 39-13-107 222
A. Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments: Cruel and Unusual Punishment 223
B. Fourth Amendment: Warrantless Searches 225
C. Void-for-Vagueness: Substantive Due Process 226
V. ADOPTING A DIFFERENT APPROACH: HEALTH IMPACT OF CRIMINAL PROSECUTION OF MATERNAL DRUG USE 229
VI. CONCLUSION...232

I. INTRODUCTION

Tennessee police arrested Mallory Loyola for assault in July 2014 based on Tennessee's recently amended assault statute for harm caused to her child based on drug use during her pregnancy.[1] Effective July 1, 2014, Tennessee Code Annotated ("T.C.A.") section 39-13-107 was amended:

> [A woman can be prosecuted] for assault under § 39-13-101 for the illegal use of a narcotic drug, as defined in § 39-17-402,[2] while pregnant, if her child is born addicted to or harmed by the narcotic drug and the addiction or harm is a result of her illegal use of a narcotic drug taken while pregnant.[3]

Days after the amendment passed, Mallory Loyola gave birth to a baby girl, and the child tested positive for methamphetamine.[4] Police subsequently arrested Mallory Loyola in Monroe County, Tennessee on assault charges.[5] Loyola pled guilty to a crime that she did not commit as the statute covers only "narcotic drug[s]," and the statutory language does not include methamphet-

---

* J.D. Candidate May 2016, The University of Memphis Cecil C. Humphreys School of Law; Managing Editor, The University of Memphis Law Review, Volume 46; B.A., History, Rhodes College, 2013. I am grateful to Kevin Brown, Professor Christina Zawisza, Phoebe Dossett, and Greg Wagner for their time, advice, and insight in assisting me in the drafting and completion of this Note.

1. See TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-13-107(c)(2) (2014); Lindsay Beyerstein, Bad Medicine in Tennessee for Pregnant and Drug-Addicted Women, ALJAZEERA AMERICA, (Sept. 30, 2014, 5:00 AM), http://america.aljazeera.com /articles/2014/9/30/tennessee-new-lawsb1391.html.

2. TENN. CODE. ANN. § 39-17-402 (2012). The definition of "narcotic" includes opiums, opiates, coca leaves, salts, and their derivatives. Id.

3. TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-13-107(c) (2014).

4. Using Meth While Pregnant: That's Assault in Tennessee, WRCBTV.COM Chattanooga (July 14, 2014, 2:36 PM), http://www.wrcbtv.com /story/26014723/using-meth-while-pregnant-thats-assault-in-tennessee (hereinafter Using Meth); see Beyerstein, supra note 1; Rosa Goldensohn & Rachael Levy, The State Where Giving Birth Can Be Criminal, THE NATION (Dec. 10, 2014), http://www.thenation.com/article/192593/state-where-giving-birth-can-be-criminal. Methamphetamine is a Schedule II drug in Tennessee and acts as a stimulant to the central nervous system. See TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-13-408(d) (2012).

5. While there may have been opiates in Loyola's system, the arrest was based on the methamphetamine use. See Using Meth, supra note 4.

amine.[6] A judge sent Loyola to drug rehabilitation as a result of a plea agreement requiring her successful completion of treatment.[7] Loyola's charges were dismissed in February 2015 when she successfully completed treatment, but the arrest and media attention remain.[8]

The Tennessee amendment to the assault statute is inconsistent with the Tennessee General Assembly's intent in the passage of the "Safe Harbor Act" in 2013.[9] The Safe Harbor Act was designed to create priority for pregnant women in treatment centers and provide protection from Juvenile Court proceedings where treatment is successfully completed.[10] The Safe Harbor Act is not punitive towards women with substance abuse problems, but rather established protections for pregnant women seeking drug treatment.[11] This Note discusses the background and implications of the law under which Loyola was charged. Tennessee's amendment to the assault statute fails to address the public health concerns of maternal drug addiction and violates three constitutional protec-

---

6. Using Meth, supra note 4. Since this arrest, the Tennessee General Assembly introduced an additional amendment to this statute that includes methamphetamine specifically in the statutory language. See S.B. 586, 109th Gen. Assemb., 1st Reg. Sess. (Tenn. 2015); H.B. 1340, 109th Gen. Assemb., 1st Reg. Sess. (Tenn. 2015). The addition of this amendment shows the original language of the statute does not cover methamphetamine. Methamphetamine is a schedule II drug and stimulant. TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-17-408 (2012). For a discussion of the initial non-inclusion of methamphetamine, see infra Section IV.C. During the publication period for this Note, that amendment failed to pass, leaving the assault statute as referenced in this Note. See Tenn. S.B. 586; Tenn. H.B. 1340.

7. Aaron Wright, Mom Charged Under Drug-Addicted Baby Law Going to Rehab, WBIR.COM (Aug. 5, 2014, 7:45 PM), http://www.wbir.com/story/news/local/mcminn-monroe/2014/08/05/woman-charged-under-drug-addicted-baby-law-to-appear-in-court/13614755/.

8. See Mom's Charge in Prenatal Drug Case Dropped After She Completes Program, WBIR.COM (Feb. 6, 2015, 7:24 PM), http://www.wbir.com/story/news/2015/02/06/moms-charge-in-newborn-drug-case-dropped-after-she-completes-program/23002693/.

9. See Safe Harbor Act of 2013, 2013 Pub. Ch. 398 (codified at TENN. CODE ANN. § 33-10-104(f) (2014)).

10. Tenn. S. Health & Welfare Comm., S. 0459, 108th Gen. Assemb., 2d Reg. Sess. (Tenn. 2013), http://wapp.capitol.tn.gov/apps/Billinfo/default.aspx?BillNumber=SB0459&ga=108.

11. Id.

tions: (1) the protection against cruel and unusual punishment, (2) the protection against warrantless searches, and (3) substantive due process. Tennessee should return to the provisions of the Safe Harbor Act and expand its effect to focus on the health, safety, and welfare of mothers living with drug addiction.

Part II of this Note reviews the history of civil and criminal punishments of maternal drug use and Neonatal Abstinence Syndrome ("NAS"), including the public health concerns that drugs pose to vulnerable children and the cycle of drug abuse. Part III looks at the history of Tennessee's response to NAS, including civil, criminal, and public health remedies. Part IV addresses constitutional violations in elements of T.C.A. section 39-13-107, including the vague statutory language, warrantless searches, and its implication of a "status" crime. Lastly, Part V discusses a public health approach to NAS and proposes the Tennessee General Assembly take no action upon the criminal statute's sunset provision on July 1, 2016.[12] This Note concludes that the solution is for Tennessee to focus on expanding and funding the Safe Harbor Act to incentivize pregnant women who are addicted to drugs to seek treatment.

II. BACKGROUND—NEONATAL ABSTINENCE SYNDROME & CRIMINALIZATION OF ITS CAUSE

Illicit drug use is problematic among pregnant women in the United States.[13] NAS is a health problem primarily capable of being solved by addressing the overall public health needs of the mother. Opiate use and abuse of prescription medications close to birth have particularly adverse health effects on newborns, includ-

---

12. 2014 Tenn. Pub. Acts Ch. 820 § 3 (codified as amended at TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-13-107 (2014)). The sunset provision establishes the effectiveness of the bill for a 2-year period, reverting back to earlier statutory text unless re-enacted by the General Assembly. See id. This option gives the General Assembly the ability to determine the effectiveness of the statute.

13. Office of Nat'l Drug Control Policy, Substance Abuse and Maternal and Child Health, THE WHITE HOUSE https://www.whitehouse.gov/ondcp/substance-abuse-maternal-child-health (last visited Oct. 21, 2015).

ing seizures and other neurological strains.[14] States take different approaches to addressing or controlling prenatal drug use, and the vast difference among state approaches shows the difficulty in addressing both the problems of the mother and the needs of the child.

A. Neonatal Abstinence Syndrome

Four and a half percent of pregnant women ages fifteen to forty-four in the United States report illicit drug use during pregnancy, including nonmedical use of prescription drugs.[15] Chronic fetal exposure to drugs or alcohol can cause permanent developmental and behavioral abnormalities "consistent with drug effect."[16] Signs of withdrawal include crying, jitteriness, fever, tremors, respiratory distress, seizures, and other symptoms typical of drug withdrawal.[17] These neonatal withdrawal signs appear in 55–94% of infants exposed to opiates during pregnancy.[18] Withdrawal symptoms are presented in infants exposed to other legal and illegal drugs, including alcohol.[19] The long-term effects of NAS are difficult to ascertain because there are only a small number of long-term studies on infants born with NAS, and other environmental factors make the results difficult to quantify.[20] While

---

14. Mark L. Hudak et al., Neonatal Drug Withdrawal, 129 PEDIATRICS e540, e545 (2012), http://pediatrics.aappublications.org/content/129/2/e540.full.pdf.

15. Id. at e540. This is most likely an underestimate because the number of women self-reporting can be much lower than those actually tested. Id. at e540–41.

16. Id. at e541.

17. Id. at e543; see also Neonatal Abstinence Syndrome, U.S. NAT'L LIBRARY OF MED., http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmedhealth/PMH0004566/ (last visited Oct. 21, 2015).

18. Hudak et al., supra note 14, at e541; see Information About Drugs, UNITED NATIONS OFFICE ON DRUGS AND CRIME, http://www.unodc.org/unodc/en/illicit-drugs/definitions/ (last visited Oct. 21, 2015) ("Opiates is the generic name given to a group which includes naturally occurring drugs derived from the opium poppy (Papaver somniferum) such as opium, morphine and codeine, semi-synthetic substances such as heroin . . . .").

19. Hudak et al., supra note 14, at e541 (noting also it is difficult to distinguish the cause of NAS symptoms in women who abuse multiple substances, which is not uncommon).

20. Id. at e550. See generally NEW SOUTH WALES MINISTRY OF HEALTH, NEONATAL ABSTINENCE SYNDROME GUIDELINES 1 (2013), http://www.health.

withdrawal symptoms in infants are present upon birth, the negative health impact of NAS appears to normalize during early infancy.[21]

NAS is a particularly prevalent problem in Tennessee.[22] Tennessee is ranked 44th for low birthweight in the United States which is linked to low income and lack of access to health care.[23] In Tennessee, there has been a sharp rise in the number of cases of NAS since the mid-2000s, largely attributable to the rise in prescription drug abuse within the state.[24] In 2000, there were only 57 reported cases of NAS.[25] In 2013, Tennessee had 855 reported cases of NAS, 27.6% of which resulted from non-prescription sub-nsw.gov.au/policies/gl/2013/pdf/GL2013_008.pdf [hereinafter NEW SOUTH WALES] ("Provided that neonatal abstinence syndrome is appropriately managed, it is not currently known to be associated with any long-term health problems."); Susan Okie, The Epidemic That Wasn't, THE NEW YORK TIMES (Jan. 26, 2009), http://www.nytimes.com/2009/01/27/health/27coca.html?pagewanted=all&_r=0 (last visited Oct. 21, 2015) (stating scientific evidence shows relatively small long-term effects of NAS on a child's health).

---

21. Hudak et al., supra note 14, at e550; see also NEW SOUTH WALES, supra note 20, at 4.

22. See Douglas Springer, Guest Column: Pregnancy, Narcotics Exact Huge Toll, THE COM. APPEAL (May 18, 2014), http://www.commercialappeal.com/news/guest-column-pregnancy-narcotics-exact-huge-toll-ep-510192033-328957531.html ("Tennessee has one of the highest rates of NAS by population of any state, a rate that has more than tripled in the past eight years into a statewide epidemic.").

23. See Tennessee Maintains 36th Ranking in Child Well-Being Report, TENN. STATE COURTS (July 21, 2015), https://tncourts.gov/news/2015/07/21/Tennessee-maintains-36th-ranking-child-well-being-report ("Low-birthweight risk factors, often linked with low income and lack of health care access, include mothers with chronic health conditions, inadequate prenatal care and overweight or low maternal weight.").

24. Neonatal Abstinence Syndrome (NAS), TENN. DEP'T OF HEALTH, http://tn.gov/health/topic/nas (last visited Oct. 22, 2015); Tony Gonzalez & Shelley DuBois, Tennessee Faces Epidemic of Drug-Dependent Babies, THE TENNESSEAN (June 13, 2014), http://www.tennessean.com/story/news/investigations/2014/06/13/drug-dependent-babies-challenge-doctors-politicians/10112813/ (showing data from 1999–2014, as well as changes in regulations in prescribing pain medication to assist in reducing drug-dependent children and access to pain medication prescriptions from multiple doctors).

25. See Gonzalez & DuBois, supra note 24 (infant drug dependency chart).

stances.[26] In 2014, there were 973 reported cases of NAS.[27] There is a comparable increase between July 1, 2013 and the end of 2014 while the law was in effect.[28] Significantly, these statistics show there was no significant drop in cases of NAS while the law has been in effect. Beyond the state interest in protecting newborns, NAS is costly to the state. The average Medicaid-eligible newborn with NAS costs over $40,000 in delivery expenses, as compared to around $7,000 for a healthy baby.[29] Drug dependency in newborns remains a prevalent problem in Tennessee.

B. History of Criminal and Civil Penalties for Maternal Drug Abuse

1. Rise of Criminalization

In the 1980s and 1990s, the use of crack cocaine during pregnancy was considered a national epidemic.[30] During this time, media coverage of the drug epidemic grew, and the criminalization of maternal substance abuse began.[31] Scientists began to study the

---

26. TENN. DEP'T OF HEALTH, DRUG DEPENDENT NEWBORNS (2013), http://tn.gov/assets/entities/health/attachments/NASsummary_Week_52.pdf (year-to-date statistics).

27. TENN. DEP'T OF HEALTH, DRUG DEPENDENT NEWBORNS (2015), https://www.tn.gov/assets/entities/health/attachments/NASsummary_Week_5314.pdf (year-to-date statistics).

28. See id.; see also Allie Spillyards, Drug Addicted Babies (Local 8 News WVLT television broadcast Nov. 28, 2012), https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=wLzcdHj48Tk.

29. MICHAEL D. WARREN, TENN. DEP'T OF HEALTH, TENNESSEE EFFORTS TO PREVENT NEONATAL ABSTINENCE SYNDROME, https://www.tn.gov/assets/entities/tccy/attachments/pres-CAD-13-NAS.pdf; see also Gonzalez & DuBois, supra note 24 ("Taxpayers bear the brunt of this cost — most of these babies and their mothers are on TennCare, the state's health insurance program for the poor.").

30. See Okie, supra note 20.

31. See Shona B. Glink, Note: The Prosecution of Maternal Fetal Abuse: Is This the Answer?, 1991 U. ILL. L. REV. 533 (1991).

> Nationwide, state prosecutors are prosecuting women for "fetal abuse" under a variety of criminal statutes. Although a few prosecutions focus on conduct other than the use of illegal drugs that cause prenatal injuries, the majority of pending cases involve women who continue to use illegal drugs during effects of substance abuse on fetus development.[32] These studies discovered the impact of NAS, showing alcohol, strenuous activity, cigarettes, and drugs could all have detrimental effect on fetuses.[33] Women using drugs during pregnancy were charged with a variety of crimes in various states during these years, including homicide and assault.[34]

2. Modern Courts

States continue to vary greatly in their response to drug use during pregnancy. As of late 2014, 18 states consider drug use during pregnancy to be child abuse.[35] Four states require drug testing when abuse is suspected.[36] In three states, prenatal drug abuse is grounds for civil commitment—or the forced enrollment in a treatment program.[37] These states' provisions are widely varying, > their second or third pregnancies, even though they already have given birth to at least one drug-dependent baby.

---

Id. at 535; see also Seema Mohapatra, Unshackling Addiction: A Public Health Approach to Drug Use During Pregnancy, 26 WIS. J.L. GENDER & SOC'Y 241, 248 (2011) (stating the first criminal indicted for child endangerment for drug use during pregnancy was in 1977).

32. Glink, supra note 31, at 541–43 (noting studies showed the most significant effect on children was from alcohol abuse during pregnancy).

33. Id.

34. Mohapatra, supra note 31, at 250–51.

35. GUTTMACHER INST., SUBSTANCE ABUSE DURING PREGNANCY (2015), http://www.guttmacher.org/statecenter/spibs/spib_SADP.pdf. These states are: Alabama, Arkansas, Colorado, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, Minnesota, Nevada, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, and Wisconsin. Id. Only six of those states also give priority to pregnant women in drug treatment programs (Oklahoma, Rhode Island, Texas, Tennessee, Utah & Wisconsin). Id.; see also Niraj Chokshi, Criminalizing Harmful Substance Abuse During Pregnancy: Is There a Problem With That?, THE WASHINGTON POST (May 1, 2014), http://www.washingtonpost.com/blogs/govbeat/wp/2014/05/01/criminalizing-harmful-substance-abuse-during-pregnancy-is-there-a-problem-with-that/.

36. GUTTMACHER INST., supra note 35. These states are Iowa, Kentucky, Minnesota, and North Dakota. Id.

37. Elisabeth Fitzpatrick, Note: Cochran v. Commonwealth: Revisiting Whether Kentucky Should Charge, Commit, or Cure Pregnant Substance Abusers, 50 U. LOUISVILLE L. REV. 551, 557 (2012); see also GUTTMACHER INST., supra note 35. Currently only Minnesota, South Dakota and Wisconsin find drug use to be grounds for civil commitment of the mother. Id.

but all three states permit involuntary civil commitment when a mother is shown to abuse certain drugs.[38] The civil commitment allows a judge to place a mother into protective custody and commit her to an inpatient alcohol or drug rehabilitation facility.[39] The widely varying criminal and civil penalties suggest there is great debate about the most successful method for preventing or treating NAS in the United States.

Several states include "fetus" in the definition of "child," which greatly impacts criminal penalties for prenatal drug use. In South Carolina, viable fetuses are considered persons and afforded privileges,[40] allowing a woman to be charged with child abuse for using drugs while pregnant.[41] In Whitner v. State, Cornelia Whitner pled guilty to criminal child abuse for ingesting crack cocaine while pregnant.[42] Whitner's petition for post-conviction relief was denied based on the inclusion of viable fetuses in the child abuse statute rather than based on the presence of NAS symptoms in her newborn.[43] Similarly, in Alabama, a woman can be charged with "chemical endangerment of a child" because the plain meaning of "child" now includes an unborn child.[44] In 2013, the Alabama Supreme Court found the applicability of the child endangerment statute to all unborn children is consistent with the definition of "child" under Alabama law.[45] In these states, penalties are based 38. Fitzpatrick, supra note 37, at 556–58; see MINN. STAT. ANN. § 253B.02(2) (West 2013); S.D. CODIFIED LAWS § 34-20A-70(2)-(3) (2013); WIS. STAT. ANN. § 48.193 (West 2012).

---

39. See Fitzpatrick, supra note 37, at 556.

40. See e.g., McKnight v. State, 661 S.E.2d 354, 365 (S.C. 2008); Whitner v. State, 492 S.E.2d 777, 780–81 (S.C. 1997); State v. Horn, 319 S.E.2d 703, 704 (S.C. 1984) (finding a fetus is a "child" in South Carolina under various criminal statutes); see also Roe v. Wade, 410 U.S. 113, 160 (1973) (placing viability between 24–28 weeks).

41. See Whitner, 492 S.E.2d at 781–84.

42. Id. at 778–79. Whitner filed for post-conviction relief based on the lack of subject matter jurisdiction as a non-existent offense. Id. at 779.

43. Id. at 781. The Court focused on the South Carolina legislature's intent to include all viable fetuses as children in criminal statutes intended to protect the child. Id. at 781.

44. Ex parte Ankrom, 152 So. 3d 397, 419, 421 (Ala. 2013); see also Ex parte Hicks, 153 So. 3d 53 (Ala. 2014).

45. Ankrom, 152 So. 3d at 419.

primarily upon the definition of a child, rather than the criminalization of a woman's prenatal actions on post-birth effects.[46]

In Wisconsin, a judge can take a pregnant woman into custody through a civil proceeding when the woman uses drugs, refuses treatment or does not made a good faith effort to seek treatment, and there is substantial risk to the child.[47] The judge can then order the woman into custody to an inpatient alcohol or drug abuse treatment center.[48] Prenatal alcohol abuse and a non-exhaustive list of drug abuses are included in the list of punishable acts in Wisconsin.[49] Additionally, a juvenile judge in Wisconsin may incarcerate a pregnant woman who is found to have used drugs during her pregnancy based on juvenile court's jurisdiction over the safety and welfare of the child.[50] The fetus is given a

---

46. See, e.g., id.; Hicks, 153 So. 3d at 59. Compare Kathleen Adams, Chemical Endangerment of a Fetus: Societal Protection of the Defenseless or Unconstitutional Invasion of Women's Rights, 65 ALA. L. REV. 1353 (2014) (arguing inclusion of fetuses in child abuse statutes is against public policy and constitutional principles), with Note & Comment: Alisha Marano, Punishing is Helping: An Analysis of the Implications of Ex Parte Akrom and How the Intervention of the Criminal Justice System is a Step in the Right Direction Toward Combating the National Drug Problem and Protecting the "Child", 35 U. LA VERNE L. REV. 113 (2013) (arguing that all states should consider fetuses in child abuse statutory protections, regardless of their stance on the definition of personhood).

47. Fitzpatrick, supra note 37 at 557–58; see Complaint at 1, Loertscher v. Van Hollen, No. 14-cv-820 (W.D. Wisc. Dec. 15, 2014) ("[The State] petitioned for, obtained, and sought enforcement of court orders against her, mandating unwanted and inappropriate medical treatment and incarceration. [The State] arrested her and jailed her while she was pregnant, and they then subjected her to solitary confinement, deprivations, and abuse while she was incarcerated."); see also Bruce Vielmetti, Pregnant Woman Challenging Wisconsin Protective Custody Law, MILWAUKEE-WIS. JOURNAL SENTINEL, (Jan. 2, 2015), http://www.jsonline.com/news/wisconsin/pregnant-woman-challenging-wisconsin-protective-custody-law-b99411705z1-287395241.html.

48. Fitzpatrick, supra note 37 at 557–58. Substance abuse during pregnancy is also grounds for civil commitment in Minnesota and South Dakota. GUTTMACHER INST., supra note 35.

49. See WIS. STAT. ANN. § 48.193 (West 2012) (including abuse of alcohol, tobacco, and controlled substance in the description of when a judge can court-order a pregnant woman into protective custody).

50. See id.; see also Vielmetti, supra note 47 ("Tamara Loertscher, 30, of Medford was jailed in Taylor County for 18 days — including three in solitary confinement — after a judge found her in contempt for refusing to move to a guardian ad litem[51] and held in protective custody, via the commitment of the pregnant woman.[52] The mother may be subjected to involuntary drug treatment.[53]

Alternatively, the Kentucky Supreme Court found criminal penalties for a woman's prenatal conduct subject women to an "indefinite number of new crimes covering the full range of a behavior—rendering the statutes void for vagueness."[54] The Kentucky Court noted the punishment for possession of drugs cannot be enhanced simply because a woman is pregnant or punished additionally for harm to a child.[55] In Cochran v. Commonwealth, the Kentucky Supreme Court recognized additional problems arising from the criminal prosecution of a pregnant drug user in a case in which a woman was charged with first-degree wanton endangerment for ingesting cocaine in utero.[56] The Court noted "punitive actions . . . discourag[es] these individuals from seeking the essential prenatal care and substance abuse treatment necessary to deliver a healthy newborn," finding Kentucky intended to treat in utero drug use as a public health concern.[57]

Most states, however, have no avenue for criminal or civil penalties for prenatal drug use.[58] The states utilizing prenatal drug residential treatment center, according to the federal civil rights lawsuit she filed in Madison.").

---

51. A guardian ad litem is a court-appointed attorney who represents the best interests of the child in court proceedings. For a discussion of the appointment of guardians ad litem for fetuses, see Mark H. Bonner & Jennifer A. Sheriff, A Child Needs a Champion: Guardian Ad Litem Representation for Prenatal Children, 19 WM. & MARY J. WOMEN & L. 511 (2013). This Note does not discuss the role of juvenile proceedings in regards to maternal substance abuse.

52. WIS. STAT. ANN. § 48.193; see also Fitzpatrick, supra note 37, at 557–58; Vielmetti, supra note 47.

53. See WIS. STAT. ANN. § 48.193; see also Vielmetti, supra note 47.

54. Cochran v. Commonwealth, 315 S.W.3d 325, 325 (Ky. 2010). The Supreme Court in Kentucky additionally based this holding on the Maternal Health Act of 1992, finding the Kentucky legislature had no intention of criminalizing prenatal drug and alcohol use. Id. at 329 (citing Maternal Health Act of 1992, 1992 Ky. Acts, ch. 442 (H.B. 192)).

55. Id. (citing Commonwealth v. Welch, 864 S.W.2d 280, 284 (Ky. 1993)).

56. Id. at 327, 329.

57. Id. at 329. See Fitzpatrick, supra note 37 for an in-depth discussion of the decision in Cochran v. Commonwealth.

58. See Fitzpatrick, supra note 37, at 558.

use statutes primarily operate in a criminal system defining a viable fetus as a child.[59] The variety of approaches in states show there is not one path to treating or addressing NAS. Some states have taken extreme approaches to address NAS, but no solution has proven entirely effective for addressing the issue.[60]

III. TENNESSEE APPROACHES

Tennessee has used a variety of methods to address NAS. Prior to 2013, the punitive measures against women for drug abuse during pregnancy focused on child abuse and neglect in civil proceedings in juvenile court.[61] Rates of NAS grew steadily throughout the 2000s,[62] prompting the Tennessee General Assembly to pass the Safe Harbor Act in 2013 to address public health concerns regarding maternal drug abuse.[63] A year later, the General Assembly addressed the issue criminally and passed an amendment to the assault statute to include maternal drug abuse during pregnancy.[64] The amendment to Tennessee's assault statute is the first of its kind in the country: it charges a mother criminally based on the harm that occurs to a child after birth.[65]

A. Before the Safe Harbor Act

Prior to the passage of the Safe Harbor Act, there was no specific mandate or provision for charging a woman with a crimi-

---

59. See e.g., McKnight v. State, 661 S.E.2d 354, 365 (S.C. 2008).

60. See GUTTMACHER INST., supra note 35.

61. See Cornelius v. State, 314 S.W.3d 902, 910–11 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2009); In re Benjamin M., 310 S.W.3d 844, 848–51 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2009); see also TENN. CODE ANN. § 37-1-102(b)(12) (2014) (defining "dependent and neglected child" for civil proceedings); Liability for Infants Born with Narcotic Drug Dependency, Tenn. Att'y Gen. Op. No. 13-01 (Feb. 1, 2013) ("[P]renatal drug use may be found to constitute abuse or severe child abuse in the civil context of juvenile court proceedings.").

62. See Neonatal Abstinence Syndrome (NAS), supra note 24.

63. Tenn. S. Health & Welfare Comm., S. 0459, 108th Gen. Assemb., 2d Reg. Sess. (Tenn. Feb. 27 2013), http://wapp.capitol.tn.gov/apps/Billinfo/default.aspx?BillNumber=SB0459&ga=108 (noting that access to prenatal care and drug rehabilitation options provides both better opportunities for a healthy delivery and gives the mother options for healthcare).

64. TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-13-107(c) (2014); see supra Part I.

65. § 39-13-107(c); GUTTMACHER INST., supra note 35.

nal offense based on drug use during pregnancy.[66] Tennessee women could be charged with a criminal offense depending on the type of harm caused to the infant, a question of fact requiring evidentiary support.[67] The Tennessee Attorney General, in an opinion regarding maternal drug use stated:

> [T]he question of whether the symptoms associated with withdrawal constitute an injury that would support the charges of assault, aggravated assault, or reckless endangerment must be determined by the trier of fact. However, a medical expert who is knowledgeable about the symptoms of withdrawal from a drug addiction could aid the trier of fact in making this determination.[68]

A court in the Middle District of Tennessee found ingestion of cocaine during pregnancy causing an unborn child serious bodily injury could not be considered a crime under the aggravated child abuse statute.[69] Drug use during pregnancy can constitute

---

66. See Criminal Liability of Mother of Child Born with Drug Addiction, Tenn. Att'y Gen. Op. No. 08-114, 1 (May 21, 2008), http://www.tn.gov/attorneygeneral/op/2008/op/op114.pdf ("The question of whether the symptoms of withdrawal alone could constitute bodily injury or serious bodily injury is a question of fact that would most likely require expert medical evidence to resolve.").

67. State v. Barnes, 954 S.W.2d 760, 765–66 (Tenn. Crim. App. 1997); see also Criminal Liability of Mother of Child Born with Drug Addiction, supra note 66, at 1.

68. Criminal Liability of Mother of Child Born with Drug Addiction, supra note 66, at 2.

69. State v. Hudson, No. M2006-01051-CCA-R9-CO, 2007 WL 1836840, at *1 (Tenn. Crim. App. June 27, 2007). In Hudson, the Court of Criminal Appeals dismissed an indictment for aggravated child abuse and neglect where the mother ingested cocaine during her pregnancy. Id.; see also Drug Tests on Pregnant Women and Infants and the Child Abuse Reporting Statute, Tenn. Att'y Gen. Op. No. 02-136, 2 (Dec. 23, 2002), http://attorneygeneral.tn.gov/op/2002/op/op136.pdf. It is important to note at this point, the Attorney General attached a hospital reporting requirement to a positive drug screen on a child. Id. However, that reporting requirement "cannot attach before the birth of the child . . . the reporting requirement attaches after the child is born when someone becomes aware the child was born with drugs in his or her system." Id. at 2–3; see, e.g. Richards v. State, No. E2004-02326-CCA-R3-PC, severe child abuse in juvenile court dependency and neglect proceedings, which are separate from criminal proceedings.[70] The Tennessee Court of Appeals has held illicit drug use during pregnancy that causes harm to a child once born can be the basis for a dependency and neglect and a child abuse proceeding in juvenile court, which has a different standard and purpose than criminal proceedings.[71]

B. The Safe Harbor Act

In 2013, the Tennessee General Assembly passed the Safe Harbor Act.[72] The Safe Harbor Act protects the rights of pregnant 2005 WL 2138244, at *2–3 (Tenn. Crim. App. Sep. 2, 2005) (reversing the denial of a petition for post-conviction relief where two women pled guilty to aggravated child abuse after using illicit drugs during pregnancy where their actions fell outside the scope of the statute).

---

70. In re Benjamin M., 310 S.W.3d 844, 849–50 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2009). The Court noted preceding criminal cases do not control in civil proceedings in juvenile court, where the court is considering only the best interest of the affected child rather than incarcerating an individual. Id. Therefore, abuse can be found in a civil proceeding for removal regardless of the criminal liability for the mother's drug use during her pregnancy. The Tennessee Supreme Court has not addressed this issue, however, there are several holdings at the Court of Appeals level indicating support of this finding. See, e.g., In re C.L., No. E2013-02035-COA-R3-PT, 2014 WL 2442970, at *1 (Tenn. Ct. App. May 28, 2014); In re B.A.C., 317 S.W.3d 718, 725–26 (Tenn. Ct. App. 2009) (finding in utero drug use as the basis of termination of parental rights).

71. In re Benjamin M., 310 S.W.3d at 850–51 ("When a child is born alive but injured, the pre-birth timing of the actions is not dispositive."). Juvenile court proceedings are not criminal proceedings. Id. at 849 ("Our criminal law is premised upon society's accepted value that it is better for several guilty people to go free than to jail one innocent person . . . . The focus of [juvenile court] proceedings is on the best interest of the affected child.").

72. See TENN. CODE ANN. § 33-10-104(f) (2015).

> (1) Notwithstanding subsection (e), a pregnant woman referred for drug abuse or drug dependence treatment at any treatment resource that receives public funding shall be a priority user of available treatment. All records and reports regarding such pregnant woman shall be kept confidential. The department of mental health and substance abuse services shall ensure that family-oriented drug abuse or drug dependence treatment is available, as appropriations allow. A treatment resource that receives public funds shall not refuse to treat a person solely because the person is pregnant as long as appropriate services are offered by the treatment resource.

women who seek drug treatment by giving them first priority in treatment facilities,[73] in addition to providing some protections from termination of her parental rights and dependency and neglect proceedings when—or if—treatment is successfully completed.[74] The Safe Harbor Act was passed in the wake of debate between lawmakers and health officials over the best method to combat NAS.[75] This debate resulted in a compromise agreement between

---

> (2)
>
> (A) If during prenatal care, the attending obstetrical provider determines no later than the end of the twentieth week of pregnancy that the patient has used prescription drugs which may place the fetus in jeopardy, and drug abuse or drug dependence treatment is indicated, the provider shall encourage counseling, drug abuse or drug dependence treatment and other assistance to the patient.
>
> (B) If the patient initiates drug abuse or drug dependence treatment based upon a clinical assessment prior to her next regularly scheduled prenatal visit and maintains compliance with both drug abuse or drug dependence treatment based on a clinical assessment as well as prenatal care throughout the remaining term of the pregnancy, then the department of children's services shall not file any petition to terminate the mother's parental rights or otherwise seek protection of the newborn solely because of the patient's use of prescription drugs for non-medical purposes during the term of her pregnancy.
>
> (C) Notwithstanding subdivision (f)(2)(B), nothing shall prevent the department of children's services from filing any petition to terminate the mother's parental rights or seek protection of the newborn should the department determine that the newborn's mother, or any other adult caring for the newborn, is unfit to properly care for such child.

Id.

73. Id. ("[A] pregnant woman referred for drug abuse or drug dependence treatment at any treatment resource that receives public funding shall be a priority user of available treatment.").

74. Id. ("[If a mother who initiates treatment and complies with a treatment program throughout pregnancy], then the department of children's services shall not file any petition to terminate the mother's parental rights or otherwise seek protection of the newborn solely because of the patient's use of prescription drugs for non-medical purposes during the term of her pregnancy."); see TENN. CODE ANN. § 36-1-113 (2014).

75. See Tony Gonzalez, Drug-Addicted Babies Bring Competing Approaches in Proposed TN Legislation, THE TENNESSEAN (Mar. 11, 2013), the Tennessee General Assembly, the Tennessee Department of Health, the Tennessee Department of Mental Health and Substance Abuse Services, the Tennessee Department of Children's Services, TennCare, and a number of other state agencies.[76] The Safe Harbor Act received national support as a model approach to NAS,[77] and the President of the Tennessee Medical Association lauded the passage of the Safe Harbor Act as a product of collaboration between health officials across the state.[78] Despite its public support, Tennessee legislators continued to debate solutions to NAS subsequent to the Safe Harbor Act's passage.

C. Criminalizing Maternal Drug Abuse in Tennessee

Tennessee had been unsuccessful in passing a specific criminal statute to combat NAS prior to 2014.[79] A year after the Safe Harbor Act's enactment, lawmakers proposed legislation to establish criminal penalties for maternal drug use.[80] The Tenneshttp://archive.tennessean.com/article/20130311/NEWS07/303110017/Drug-addicted-babies-bring-competing-approaches-proposed-TN-legislation.

---

76. Information Available to Health Care Providers and Patients about New State Laws related to Neonatal Abstinence Syndrome, TENN. ACAD. OF FAMILY PHYSICIANS (June 30, 2013), http://www.tnafp.org/documents/NAS%20 FAQ%2063014.pdf; see also The 108th General Assembly, AMERICAN ACAD. OF PEDIATRICS, TENN. CHAPTER, http://www.tnaap.org/Legislative/legislative.htm (last visited Oct. 26, 2015) (noting the Tennessee General Assembly passed the Safe Harbor Act but failed to fund the $2 million attached to the bill).

77. Springer, supra note 22. Dr. Douglas Springer is the President of the Tennessee Medical Association ("TMA"). Id. He notes the rate of NAS has tripled in the last eight years in Tennessee, and the TMA backed the Safe Harbor Act as a method for medical intervention. See id.; see also Gonzalez & DuBois, supra note 24 ("When you talk about forward-leaning states that are looking at NAS, you always hear Tennessee . . . .") (quoting Michael Botticelli, Deputy Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy).

78. Springer, supra note 22.

79. See, e.g., S.B. 2874, 107th Gen. Assemb. (Tenn. 2012).

80. TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-13-107(c) (2014).

> (1) Nothing in subsection (a) shall apply to any lawful act or lawful omission by a pregnant woman with respect to an embryo or fetus with which she is pregnant, or to any lawful medical or surgical procedure to which a pregnant woman consents, performed by a health care professional who is licensed to perform such procedure.
>
> (2) Notwithstanding subdivision (c)(1), nothing in this section shall preclude prosecution of a woman for assault under §

see General Assembly amended the general assault statute, T.C.A. section 39-13-107(c), to specifically include illegal use of a narcotic by a pregnant woman if the child is born "addicted to or harmed by" the in utero drug use.[81] This statute is the first criminal statute in the United States to make substance abuse during pregnancy a specific criminal act.[82] Initially, the Bill allowed for a felony charge of aggravated assault where serious bodily injury occurs.[83] Health care professionals tried to limit the punitive scope of the Bill by limiting the assault charge to a misdemeanor and by creating a "sunset" provision effective July 2016 to evaluate the effectiveness of the statute.[84] The "sunset" provision provides that the law is only in effect for two years.[85] At the end of that time, the General Assembly will be required to pass the Bill again.

The Bill passed both the state house and senate and set in place a standalone prosecution for assault based on drug use during pregnancy.[86] Sponsoring Senator Reginald Tate alleged during the > 39-13-101 for the illegal use of a narcotic drug, as defined in § 39-17-402, while pregnant, if her child is born addicted to or harmed by the narcotic drug and the addiction or harm is a result of her illegal use of a narcotic drug taken while pregnant.

---

> (3) It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution permitted by subdivision (c)(2) that the woman actively enrolled in an addiction recovery program before the child is born, remained in the program after delivery, and successfully completed the program, regardless of whether the child was born addicted to or harmed by the narcotic drug.

Id.

81. Id. ("[N]othing in this section shall preclude prosecution of a woman for assault . . . if her child is born addicted to or harmed by the narcotic drug . . . .").

82. GUTTMACHER INST., supra note 35.

83. Tenn. S. Judiciary Comm., S. 1391, 108th Gen. Assemb., 2d Reg. Sess. (Tenn. 2014) (testimony of Senator Reginald Tate) http://tnga.granicus.com/MediaPlayer.php?view_id=269&clip_id=9050.

84. Springer, supra note 22 ("The Tennessee Medical Association opposed the bill, and advocated successfully for two important modifications . . . . [T]he lesser simple assault charge is enough to get women into drug court and . . . their cases could potentially be resolved by judicial deferment of prosecution or placement in a pretrial diversion program.").

85. Id.

86. Bill History, S.B. 1391, 108th Gen. Assemb., http://wapp.capitol.tn.gov/apps/BillInfo/Default.aspx?BillNumber=SB1391&ga=108.

committee hearing: "[T]his bill does not go out and find anybody to charge them with a particular charge. You would have to . . . be before some court system to even be charged with under the influence of narcotics or being on drugs while you were pregnant."[87] Despite Senator Tate's assertion, T.C.A. section 39-13-107(c) creates a standalone statute for assault.[88] The statute allows prosecution of assault without an existing narcotics charge or other related charge.[89] The statute also provides that successful completion of treatment during pregnancy serves as a defense to the crime.[90] State officials consider the law a "velvet hammer," intended to provide treatment through state drug court proceedings.[91] This creates a diversion program in drug court that is available for women who successfully complete treatment.[92] Both lawmakers and state officials cite the bill as giving "protection" from prosecution for women who seek treatment.[93] But, successful completion

---

87. Tenn. S. Judiciary Comm., supra note 83.

88. TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-13-107(c) (2014).

89. Id.

90. Id.; see also Amy Weirich, Letter: New Law Helps Babies, Moms, THE COM. APPEAL (June 7, 2014), http://www.commercialappeal.com/news/letter-new-law-helps-babies-moms-ep-510115421-328941561.html.

91. Weirich, supra note 90; see Tenn. S. Judiciary Comm., supra note 83 (testimony of Barry Stavis) ("The whole intent of this bill balances deterrent [sic] with accountability and with treatment"); see also id. (testimony of Senator Mike Bell). Senator Bell expressed concern that several of the counties he represented do not currently have a Drug Court available or access to treatment options. Id.

92. In Tennessee, Drug Court provides drug addicts and alcoholics the ability to avoid incarceration by completion of a court-supervised treatment program. See Samantha Bryson, New State Law Could Scare Mothers of Babies with Neonatal Abstinence Syndrome From Treatment, THE COM. APPEAL (July 25, 2014) (quoting Shelby County Drug Court Judge Tim Dwyer) http://www.commercialappeal.com/news/crime/new-state-law-could-scare-mothers-of-babies-with-neonatal-abstinence-syndrome-from-treatment-some-ep-324362721.html. When an offender does not successfully adhere to the strict requirements of a drug treatment program, he or she will be sent back to jail for the remainder of the sentence. See Yolanda Jones & Samantha Bryson, Mother Charged with Drug Use While Pregnant Back in Jail, THE COM. APPEAL (Jan. 22, 2015), http://www.commercialappeal.com/news/local-news/mother-charged-with-drug-use-while-pregnant-back-in-jail_16552921.

93. See Weirich, supra note 90 ("[The law's] goal is not to incarcerate mothers but to empower these women to overcome their addictions. Our plan is of treatment is only a defense to the charge of assault, not a grant of immunity.[94]

In Shelby County (Memphis), Jamillah Falls was one of the first mothers arrested under the assault statute. Falls was processed through Drug Court with Judge Tim Dwyer, and was ordered to a residential rehabilitation program instead of a jail sentence of up to 11 months and 29 days.[95] Falls went through residential treatment, but then failed to meet the requirements of the program at a halfway house and returned to jail.[96] Even in Shelby County, Falls had few options to seek residential treatment prior to her arrest.[97]

Senator Mike Bell expressed concern with the defense of the completion of successful treatment, noting women in his dis-to refer such women to drug court treatment programs operating in many of Tennessee's judicial districts, including Shelby County, and provide them the opportunity to participate in the program."). Amy Weirich is the District Attorney General in Shelby County (Memphis), Tennessee. See id.

---

94. Immunity from prosecution prevents charges being filed, whereas a defense to a crime may allow a case to be later dismissed when evidence presented to a jury provides for a valid defense to the crime. For a comparison of how Tennessee treats immunity agreements versus traditional defenses, see State v. Howington, 907 S.W.2d 403, 409 (Tenn. 1995) (citing Zani v. State, 701 S.W.2d 249, 254 (Tex. Crim. App. 1985)). The burden is on the State to show a defendant breached an immunity agreement; whereas the burden of evidence of a traditional defense to a crime is on the defendant. See id.

95. Samantha Bryson, Addicted Mom Charged Under New Law Will Go to Rehab, Not Jail, THE COM. APPEAL (Aug. 6, 2014), http://www.commercialappeal.com/news/local-news/addicted-mom-charged-under-new-law-will-go-to-rehab-not-jail_32005503.

96. Jones & Bryson, supra note 92.

97. Wendi C. Thomas, Treatment Options Scarce for Pregnant Women with Addictions, THE COM. APPEAL (Aug. 7, 2014), http://www.commercialappeal.com/news/local-news/crime/treatment-options-scarce-for-pregnant-women-with-addictions_24325724. This news article notes that there are limitations on available treatment options for pregnant women in Shelby County: one does not accept pregnant women; one only takes private insurance or self-pay at $27,000 for a month; one has only room for ten women with a diagnosis of mental illness; and one that only has a detox center. Id. Shelby County is the most populous county in Tennessee. Tennessee County Selection Map, UNITED STATES CENSUS BUREAU (2010), http://quickfacts.census.gov/qfd/maps/tennessee_map.html (click on "Shelby") (showing the population of Shelby County at almost 1,000,000 per the 2010 census).

trict—among many others—do not have access to treatment facilities in close range.[98] Drug courts are not available in every county in Tennessee, and Davidson County (Nashville) is the only county with a residential drug court treatment program.[99] The same health and substance abuse professionals providing support and guidance in the passage of the Safe Harbor Act testified against the passage of the assault amendment in the hearings to House Bill 1295 and Senate Bill 1391.[100] These professionals cite concern that the criminalization of maternal substance abuse would actually deter women from seeking treatment for fear of prosecution.[101] Professionals also cited concern for women who may avoid prenatal care for fear of prosecution.[102] Representative Terri Weaver rebutted these concerns, calling drug abusing mothers "the worst of the worst . . . not those who would consider going to prenatal care [in the first place]."[103] Beyond the initial controversy of the amendment, the statute now presents broader constitutional issues.

IV. CONSTITUTIONAL ANALYSIS OF TENN. CODE ANN. SECTION 39-13-107

There are a number of potential constitutional issues[104] that arise under the language of T.C.A. section 39-13-107. First, the

98. Tenn. S. Judiciary Comm., supra note 83.

99. Id. (testimony of Nathan Ridley).

100. Id. (testimony of Kurt Hippell, Valerie Nageshiner, and Marynell Brian).

101. Id. Representatives from Children's Hospital Alliance, March of Dimes, the Department of Mental Health and Substance Abuse and the Tennessee Department of Health spoke at legislative hearings regarding concerns for access to prenatal care, determent from substance abuse treatment, and the lack of time given for the Safe Harbor Act to have a positive impact on treating mothers to impact NAS statistics. See Bryson, supra note 92.

102. Tenn. S. Judiciary Comm., supra note 83 (testimony of Kurt Hippell, Valerie Nageshiner and Marynell Brian).

103. Gonzalez & DuBois, supra note 24 (quoting Rep. Terri Lynn Weaver).

104. For a discussion of constitutional issues in the early 1990s associated with a rise in criminal prosecutions of drug-addicted mothers, see Doretta Massardo McGinnis, Comment, Prosecution of Mothers of Drug-Exposed Babies: Constitutional and Criminal Theory, 139 U. PA. L. REV. 505, 506 (1990) ("The fundamental right to bear a child will be denied to a class of women—drug addicts —based on their status as addicts and the effects that their addictive behav-statute violates the eight and fourteenth amendments' prohibition on cruel and unusual punishment by creating a "status" crime punitive to only narcotic addicts. Second, the statute potentially violates the fourth amendment's protection against search and seizure by the use of public and private hospitals' blood testing for evidence of prenatal drug use. Third, the language of the statute is unconstitutionally vague in violation of substantive due process protections.

A. Eighth and Fourteenth Amendments: Cruel and Unusual Punishment

In Robinson v. California, the Supreme Court held imprisonment for the status of narcotic addiction, an illness "contracted innocently or involuntarily," is cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the fourteenth amendment.[105] Police arrested Defendant Robinson for having needle marks on his arm under a California statute that made it illegal to have an addiction to narcotics.[106] The Supreme Court determined while a state may impose criminal sanctions for "unauthorized manufacture, prescription, sale, purchase, or possession of narcotics," a California court could not convict Robinson of the crime of drug addiction.[107] The appellate court erred in instructing a jury they could convict Robinson of a crime even if the jury disbelieved the evidence of Robinson's use of drugs within Los Angeles.[108] The Supreme Court focused on the nature of the statute because it created a "status" crime. The State of California did not require evidence of use or possession of iors are likely to have on their children. The rights of privacy and reproductive freedom currently accorded all women may be further eroded. Such restrictions may, however, be found constitutional if courts accept the view that fetal rights outweigh women's rights in the context of a pregnant woman's behavior likely to cause fetal harm."). The development of constitutional law regarding the status of pregnant women has since developed to eradicate some of the early claims. See Jill E. Habig, Comment, Defining the Protected Class: Who Qualifies for Protection Under the Pregnancy Discrimination Act?, 117 YALE L.J. 1215 (2008).

---

105. Robinson v. California, 370 U.S. 660, 667 (1962).

106. Id. at 661–63; see CAL. HEALTH & SAFETY CODE § 11721 (Deering 1953) (repealed 1972).

107. Robinson, 370 U.S. at 664–66.

108. Id.

an illegal substance within the state, but only proof of addiction.[109] The Supreme Court recognized, "[I]mprisonment for ninety days is not, in the abstract, a punishment which is either cruel or unusual. But the question cannot be considered in the abstract. Even one day in prison would be cruel and unusual punishment for the 'crime' of having a common cold."[110]

A criminal offense for maternal narcotic use may be distinguishable from the facts in Robinson, but the Court's reasoning in striking the California statute can be applied in Tennessee:

> [The California law] is not a law which even purports to provide or require medical treatment. Rather, we deal with a statute which makes the "status" of narcotic addiction a criminal offense, for which the offender may be prosecuted "at any time before he reforms." . . . It is unlikely that any State at this moment in history would attempt to make it a criminal offense for a person to be mentally ill . . . . [A] law which made a criminal offense of such a disease would doubtless be universally thought to be an infliction of cruel and unusual punishment . . . .[111]

The Court found the state had requisite power to punish a broad range of behavior associated with drug trafficking and drug use, but a crime based solely on the status of addiction was unconstitutional.[112] T.C.A. section 39-13-107 does not require proof of specific use or possession within the state by the mother in accordance with existing drug law as an element of the crime of neonatal assault.[113] Criminal charges for maternal drug use punish a wom-

---

109. Id. at 665–66; see Mohapatra, supra note 31.

110. Robinson, 370 U.S. at 667.

111. Id. at 666; see also Mohapatra, supra note 31, at 253–54 (discussing Robinson in the context of criminalizing maternal drug use).

112. Robinson, 370 U.S. at 664–65.

113. See TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-13-107(c) (2014). The elements of the offense on its face require the showing of addiction or harm to the child by illegal drug use as a separate offense from the elements of the crime of drug possession or distribution. See generally TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-17-418 (2014) (listan's status as a drug addict.[114] Tennessee must require proof of specific use for the assault statute to stand under Robinson's "status crime" limitation.

B. Fourth Amendment: Warrantless Searches

The United States Supreme Court also found that requiring mandatory blood tests for the purpose of incriminating patients violates the Fourth Amendment.[115] In Ferguson v. City of Charleston, the Supreme Court held hospitals violate a patient's constitutional rights when they obtain evidence for the purpose of incriminating patients without informing the patient.[116] In Ferguson, ten petitioners were arrested after testing positive for cocaine when hospital employees turned over their urine samples to police.[117] The hospital had a policy of testing patients receiving prenatal treatment for current drug use.[118] The positive results of these tests were turned over to state authorities to prosecute mothers for child abuse whose newborns tested positive for drugs.[119] The Court ing the elements for the criminal charge of possession of a controlled substance in Tennessee).

---

114. See Marcy Stovall, Looking for a Solution: In Re Valerie D and State Intervention in Prenatal Drug Abuse, 25 CONN. L. REV 1265, 1276–77 (1993) ("Though [a woman's] original decision to use drugs [is] presumably voluntary, the subsequent nature of the addiction limits her choice, even if she wishes to stop using drugs. Punishing prenatal drug use thus comes very close to penalizing a woman for her status as an addict, and the Supreme Court has forbidden punishment based on an individual's status as an addict.") (citation omitted).

115. Ferguson v. City of Charleston, 532 U.S. 67, 84–86 (2001).

116. Id. ("While state hospital employees, like other citizens, may have a duty to provide the police with evidence of criminal conduct that they inadvertently acquire in the course of routine treatment, when they undertake to obtain such evidence from their patients for the specific purpose of incriminating those patients, they have a special obligation to make sure that the patients are fully informed about their constitutional rights, as standards of knowing waiver require.").

117. Id. at 73.

118. Id. at 70.

119. Id. at 70–71; see supra discussion Section II.B.2 for analysis of South Carolina's child abuse statute, distinguished from Tennessee's based on its inclusion of a viable fetus in the definition of a child. This definition of child allows the prosecution for child abuse for drug use in the third trimester rather than a separate crime against a fetus.

found the policy was designed specifically to provide admissible evidence in a criminal prosecution without a search warrant.[120]

In Ferguson, the Court recognized the importance of access to diagnostic and prenatal care without fear of warrantless searches for criminal prosecutions.[121] The Court's prohibition of warrantless searches is analogous to charges brought under T.C.A. section 39-13-107 based upon positive drug screens handed over to law enforcement while in the hospital to give birth. Urine or blood screens taken in the regular course of treatment in a hospital delivery turned over to police for purposes of prosecution are unconstitutional warrantless searches in violation of the Fourth Amendment.[122]

C. Void-for-Vagueness: Substantive Due Process

A statute violates an individual's substantive due process rights if it fails to "provide a person of ordinary intelligence fair notice of what [activity] is prohibited, or is so standardless that it authorizes or encourages seriously discriminatory enforcement."[123] The void-for-vagueness doctrine arises under substantive due process rights, predominately to reign in police discretion.[124]

In Cochran v. Commonwealth, the Kentucky Supreme Court found criminal child abuse statutes could not apply to maternal drug abuse because women would be subject to an indefinite 120. Ferguson, 532 U.S. at 86.

---

121. Id. at 84. ("Given the primary purpose of the Charleston program, which was to use the threat of arrest and prosecution in order to force women into treatment, and given the extensive involvement of law enforcement officials at every stage of the policy, this case simply does not fit within the closely guarded category of 'special needs.'").

122. See id. at 86; see also Sandi J. Toll, Note, For My Doctor's Eyes Only: Ferguson v. City of Charleston, 33 LOY. U. CHI. L.J. 267 (2001) (analyzing the implications of Ferguson in the context of fetal abuse protections). "[T]he Ferguson decision affirms that the special needs exception may only be applied when the government's interest in conducting the search is divorced from any law enforcement purpose." Id. at 319.

123. United States v. Williams, 553 U.S. 285, 304 (2008); see also Grayned v. City of Rockford, 408 U.S. 104, 108 (1972) ("[A]n enactment is void for vagueness if its prohibitions are not clearly defined.").

124. See Kim Forde-Mazrui, Ruling Out the Rule of Law, 60 VAND. L. REV. 1497, 1500–01 (2007).

number of new crimes covering a broad range of behavior.[125] In Cochran, the defendant gave birth to a child who tested positive for cocaine, and police arrested her for wanton child endangerment.[126] The Kentucky Supreme Court determined the application of a criminal abuse statute to prenatal conduct:

> [This application] could have an unlimited scope and create an indefinite number of new "crimes" . . . a "slippery slope" whereby the law could be construed as covering the full range of a pregnant woman's behavior - a plainly unconstitutional result that would, among other things, render the statutes void for vagueness.[127]

The Court focused on the void-for-vagueness doctrine, finding the statute "transgress[ed] reasonably identifiable limits."[128]

T.C.A. section 39-13-107(c) is unconstitutionally vague in two ways: (1) the element of harm and (2) the requirement of "narcotic" use. The statute requires proof that a child is born "addicted to or harmed by" narcotic use.[129] The parameters for "addicted to" or "harmed by" are unconstitutionally vague because neither "harm" nor "addiction" are defined in the Tennessee Code. There are a variety of factors that may affect the health of a fetus, and it is impossible to isolate specific harm to a delivered infant due to prenatal use of a particular drug.[130] Under the current statute, the prosecution retains the discretion to determine when there is a level of "harm" or "addiction" sufficient to justify an arrest for assault.

In addition to the undefined terms, the language of T.C.A. section 39-13-107(c) includes specific reference to illegal use of 125. Cochran v. Commonwealth, 315 S.W.3d 325, 328 (Ky. 2010) (citing Commonwealth v. Welch, 864 S.W.2d 280, 283 (Ky. 1993).

---

126. Id. at 327.

127. Id. (citing Welch, 864 S.W.2d at 283).

128. Welch, 864 S.W.2d at 283.

129. TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-13-107(c) (2014).

130. See Hudak, supra note 14, at e542 (Table 2); see also Okie, supra note 20 ("[F]actors like poor parenting, poverty and stresses like exposure to violence were far more likely to damage a child's intellectual and emotional development . . . .").

only "narcotic" drugs. The definition of a "narcotic" is cross-referenced to the definition of narcotic as used in other criminal drug-related statutes.[131] Narcotic drugs as defined in Tennessee include: opiums, salts, poppy, coca leaves and their derivatives.[132] By defining narcotic, the statutory language does not include the abuse of prescribed drugs, but is limited to only "illegal drug use."[133] Prescription drug abuse is one of the larger causes of NAS.[134] It is impossible to distinguish the cause of NAS symptoms between drug classifications and illegal or legal drug abuse.[135] Additionally, several women have been arrested under

---

131. TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-17-402(17) (2012).

132. Id.

133. See id. The statutory language limits the behavior of the mother to "illegal drug use" leading to harm or addiction to a "narcotic drug." TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-13-107(c). There was failed legislation in both the Tennessee State House and Senate in early 2015 to specifically include methamphetamine in the statutory language. See S.B. 586, 109th Gen. Assemb., 1st Reg. Sess. (Tenn. 2015); H.B. 1340, 109th Gen. Assemb., 1st Reg. Sess. (Tenn. 2015) (allowing prosecution for assault if "harm is a result of [a mother's] illegal use of a narcotic drug or methamphetamine, taken while pregnant."). In addition, an equal protection argument has been made in the past that application of maternal drug abuse statutes to certain classes of drugs violates the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment based on protected racial classes. See U.S. CONST. amend. XIV, § 1; Krista Stone-Manista, Comment, Protecting Pregnant Women: A Guide to Successfully Challenging Criminal Child Abuse Prosecutions of Pregnant Drug Addicts, 99 J. CRIM. L. & CRIMINOLOGY 823 (2009); see also Dorothy E. Roberts, Punishing Drug Addicts Who Have Babies: Women of Color, Equality, and the Right of Privacy, 104 HARV. L. REV. 1419 (1991). Roberts analyzes the development of the early prosecutions of maternal fetus abuse, comparing the prosecution of mothers of "crack babies" and encouraging abortions in African American women with forced sterilization of black women. See id. at 1450–56 for an early discussion of the implications of the equal protection clause in light of maternal fetal abuse prosecutions.

134. Hudak et al., supra note 14, at e541.

135. Hudak et al., supra note 14, at e542 ("Pregnant women who abuse methamphetamine are at increased risk of pre-term birth, placental abruption, fetal distress, and intrauterine growth restrictions at rates similar to those for pregnant women who use cocaine. . . . [O]nly 4% of infants exposed to methamphetamine were treated for drug withdrawal, but it was not possible to exclude concomitant abuse of other drugs as contributory in all cases."); see also id. at e542 (Table 2).

the statute for using methamphetamine during their pregnancy.[136] The vague application of the law as written violates due process as provided in the Fourteenth Amendment.

V. ADOPTING A DIFFERENT APPROACH: HEALTH IMPACT OF CRIMINAL PROSECUTION OF MATERNAL DRUG USE

The appropriate viewpoint to approach maternal drug abuse is to take a public health perspective. The 2009 National Survey on Drug Use and Health reports on the usage of illicit drugs, heavy alcohol use, and tobacco use during pregnancy.[137] Binge or heavy drinking in the first trimester is reported by 11.9% of pregnant women; recent tobacco use by 15.3%.[138] Studies show illicit drug use is no more harmful to a fetus than either tobacco or alcohol use during pregnancy.[139] There has not been a change in the rate of maternal drug use nationally since the rise of child abuse statutes punishing women for drug use during pregnancy, indicating these statutes are ineffective.[140] However, fear of criminal retribution discourages women from seeking prenatal care, undermining both the health of the mother and the health of the fetus.[141]

Criminalizing drug use during pregnancy is more likely to prevent women from seeking proper prenatal care or seek treat-

136. Hudak, supra note 14, at e541 ("[C]hronic use of narcotic prescriptions . . . among pregnant women cared for at a single clinic increased fivefold from 1998 to 2008, and 5.6% of infants delivered to these women manifested signs of neonatal withdrawal."); see Using Meth, supra note 4; Goldensohn & Levy, supra note 4.

137. See Hudak, supra note 14, at e540.

138. Hudak, supra note 14, at e540.

139. Mohapatra, supra note 31, at 244 (noting women are not prosecuted for alcohol or tobacco use during pregnancy and "an illicit drug-abusing mother . . . is easily vilified by the public and prosecutors as giving birth to a 'crack baby,' or more recently a 'meth baby.'"); Hudak, supra note 14, at e542 (showing signs of neonatal abstinence syndrome resulting from alcohol use).

140. Mohapatra, supra note 31, at 244 (citation omitted). It is too soon since the passage of this statute in Tennessee to determine its effects on in utero drug use.

141. See Legal Interventions During Pregnancy, Report of American Medical Association Board of Trustees, 264 JAMA 2663, 2670 (1990).

ment.[142] The possibility of punishment for maternal drug use discourages women from seeking drug treatment options.[143] After criminal prosecutions of maternal drug use began in South Carolina, there was an 80% reduction in admissions of pregnant women in drug treatment programs.[144] Women who do not seek appropriate prenatal care have higher rates of infant mortality.[145] By lessening the focus on criminal prosecutions, women in Tennessee would have more incentive to seek treatment and less fear for retribution despite seeking treatment options

Drug rehabilitation facilities are also rarely accessible to many Tennessee women.[146] Senator Mike Bell voted against the amendment to T.C.A. section 39-13-107 because he believed there were not sufficient clinics accessible to pregnant women to make treatment a viable option for his constituents in Bradley, McMinn, Meigs, Monroe and Polk Counties.[147] Health organizations noted the need for funding for clinics when the Safe Harbor Act passed in 2013 to remedy this accessibility.[148]

A public health approach increasing funding for drug treatment facilities who accept pregnant women, as well as resource centers for prenatal care, would encourage both drug treatment options and prenatal care. Creating a statutory environment where women are encouraged to seek treatment promotes the health of the mother and the child both during the pregnancy and

---

142. Id. ("Pregnant women will be likely to avoid seeking prenatal or other medical care for fear that their physician's knowledge of substance abuse or other potentially harmful behavior could result in a jail sentence rather than proper medical treatment.").

143. Fitzpatrick, supra note 37, at 566–68 (citing Martha A. Jessup et al., Extrinsic Barriers to Substance Abuse Treatment Among Pregnant Drug Dependent Women, 33 J. DRUG ISSUES 285 (2003)). Fitzpatrick discusses the fear of loss of custody, arrest, or prosecution prevented women from seeking treatment options, and rather to flee from care. Id.

144. Mohapatra, supra note 31, at 254.

145. See id. at 568.

146. See Gonzalez & DuBois, supra note 24.

147. See Tenn. S. Judiciary Comm., S. 1391, 108th Gen. Assemb., 2d Reg. Sess. (Tenn. 2014) (statement of Senator Mike Bell), http://wapp.capitol.tn.gov/apps/videocalendars/VideoCalendarOrders.aspx?CalendarID=1336&GA=108.

148. See The 108th General Assembly, AMERICAN ACAD. OF PEDIATRICS, TENN. CHAPTER, http://www.tnaap.org/Legislative/legislative.htm (last visited Oct. 27, 2015).

afterward.[149] The Safe Harbor Act provided protection from arrest or removal proceedings where that treatment is successful.[150]

The Tennessee General Assembly should allow the assault amendment to sunset to protect the constitutional rights of pregnant women in Tennessee. The vague language of T.C.A. section 39-13-107(c) and its potential application as a "status" crime render it constitutionally void.[151] The amendment creates a status crime, requiring no proof or parameter for evidence of specific drug use.[152] By adopting a public health approach, the Tennessee General Assembly can both address the grave problems of NAS and avoid violating individual rights. To protect individual rights and lessen the impact of NAS on Tennessee children, the Tennessee General Assembly should expand the availability of treatment to pregnant women.

The Tennessee General Assembly should abandon the assault amendment and focus on expanding the Safe Harbor Act. Prioritizing pregnant women in drug rehabilitation facilities is the first step in a public health approach to addressing NAS. In 2013, Tennessee was a leading state in addressing drug abuse from a health perspective through the passage of the Safe Harbor Act, which guaranteed pregnant women's priority in treatment facilities.[153] Treatment is a long-term solution, and women should be incentivized with treatment rather than punished or forced into treatment. Women-specific substance abuse centers may be necessary to ensure proper prenatal care is available and to specifically 149. See Tony Gonzalez, Drug Czar Slams Criminalizing Moms as Haslam Mulls Veto, THE TENNESSEAN (April 28, 2014, 6:45 PM) (statement of Michael Botticelli, Director of the White House Office of National Drug Control Policy), http://www.tennessean.com/story/news/politics/2014/04/28/drug-czar-slams-criminalizing-moms-haslam-mulls-veto/8435967/ ("What's important is that we create environments where we're really diminishing the stigma and the barriers, particularly for pregnant women, who often have a lot of shame and guilt about their substance abuse disorders. . . . We know that it's usually a much more effective treatment and less costly to our taxpayers if we make sure that we're treating folks.").

---

150. See TENN. CODE ANN. § 33-10-104(f) (2013).

151. See discussion supra Section IV.A; see also Cochran v. Commonwealth, 315 S.W.3d 325, 328 (Ky. 2010) ("[A]pplication of the criminal abuse statutes to prenatal conduct would render the statutes void for vagueness . . . .").

152. See Robinson v. California, 370 U.S. 660, 763 (1962).

153. TENN. CODE ANN. § 33-10-104(f).

monitor the dangers of detoxing from a drug addiction while pregnant.[154] A different approach to addressing NAS involves taking a public health perspective and using mental health professionals to establish standards for state provision of funding necessary to better access to treatment options.[155] By returning to the provisions of the Safe Harbor Act, the state would guarantee priority of access to drug treatment programs for pregnant women.

VI. CONCLUSION

The startling rates of NAS in Tennessee dictate a state interest in providing a remedy to protect the interest of both the mother and the child. The Tennessee General Assembly first enacted the Safe Harbor Act and later amended the assault statute in order to provide a remedy.[156] These remedies both attempt to protect children afflicted with NAS while taking different approaches, but T.C.A. section 39-13-107(c) violates individual rights protected by the United States Constitution. Criminalizing maternal drug use without requiring specific proof of conduct renders this crime a "status" crime inflicting cruel and unusual punishment in violation of the Eighth Amendment. The statute is void-for-vagueness where "harm" is not defined by the Tennessee code and the statute includes only one category of illegal drug use.[157] The state interest in criminalizing maternal drug use does not outweigh the potential constitutional violations. Because a public health approach encompasses both the interests of the child and mother, Tennessee

---

154. Mohapatra, supra note 31, at 267–69. Mohapatra also addresses the difficulty for many women to seek residential treatment where those treatment options offer no childcare for women who may have existing children.

155. For an approach to maternal drug use utilizing a public health perspective, see Cochran, 315 S.W.3d at 329 ("[T]he General Assembly finds it is necessary to treat the problem of alcohol and drug use during pregnancy solely as a public health problem by seeking expanded access to prenatal care and to alcohol and substance abuse education and treatment programs." (quoting The Maternal Health Act of 1992, 1992 Ky. Acts, ch. 442 (H.B. 192))); see generally Mohapatra, supra note 31 (advocating for a public health approach to in utero drug use).

156. See supra Sections III.B-C.

157. TENN. CODE ANN. § 39-13-107(c) (2014); see Cochran, 315 S.W.3d at 328.

should retain the Safe Harbor Act and provide funding to facilities providing treatment for pregnant drug addicts.

Warheads on Foreheads: The Applicability of the 9/11 AUMF to the Threat of ISIL

GREGORY A. WAGNER*

I. INTRODUCTION 235
II. HISTORICAL BACKGROUND 241
A. War Powers Resolution 242
1. Enactment of the War Powers Resolution 242
2. Requirements of the War Powers Resolution 243
3. Enforcement of the War Powers Resolution................245
B. Justice Jackson's Concurrence in the Steel Seizure case 246
III. THE 9/11 AUMF...248
A. History of the 9/11 AUMF 249
B. Scope and Limitations of the 9/11 AUMF 251
C. Issues with Applying the 9/11 AUMF to ISIL....................253
D. Why Has Congress Not Authorized the Use of Military Force Against ISIL? 256
IV. AN ARGUMENT AND PROPOSAL FOR A NEW AUMF 262
A. Purpose of the ISIL AUMF 263
B. Scope and Limitations of the ISIL AUMF 264
C. Reports to Congress 267
D. Sunset Provision...268
V. CONCLUSION..269

I. INTRODUCTION

At the beginning of 2014, a terrorist organization known as the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria ("ISIL")[1] began taking control

* J.D. Candidate, 2016, The University of Memphis Cecil C. Humphreys School of Law; Editor-in-Chief, The University of Memphis Law Review, Volume 46; Captain, United States Marine Corps attending law school as part of the Excess Leave (Law) Program. All opinions and views expressed here are those of the author alone and should not be attributed to the United States Ma-of large swaths of land in Iraq and Syria, including major Iraqi cities such as Fallujah and Mosul.[2] The rapid loss of control in the area was particularly embarrassing for the United States, as it had recently withdrawn troops from Iraq after nearly a decade in the country.[3] Heavy fighting between the Iraqi Security Forces and ISIL left Iraq ravaged, with over 33,000 civilian casualties in 2014.[4] In May 2014, the Department of State officially designated ISIL as a terrorist organization, signifying the United States Govrine Corps, the Department of Defense, or the United States Government. I would like to thank Major General Albert C. Harvey, USMCR (ret.), Professor David Romantz, Kevin T. Brown, and Jake Strawn for their invaluable insight and assistance with this Note.

---

1. Other aliases listed are: "the Islamic State of Iraq and al-Sham (ISIS), the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS), ad-Dawla al-Islamiyya fi al-'Iraq wa-sh-Sham, Daesh, Dawla al Islamiya, and Al-Furqan Establishment for Media Production." Terrorist Designations of Groups Operating in Syria, U.S. DEP'T OF STATE (May 14, 2014), http://www.state.gov/r/pa/prs/ps/2014/05/22 6067.htm. Subsequent to this press release by the Department of State, ISIL changed its own name to the "Islamic State." Adam Withnall, Iraq Crisis: Isis Declares its Territories a New Islamic State With 'Restoration of Caliphate' in Middle East, THE INDEP. (June 30, 2014), http://www.independent.co.uk/news/world/middle-east/isis-declares-new-islamic-state-in-middle-east-with-abu-bakr-albaghdadi-as-emir-removing-iraq-and-syria-from-its-name-9571374.html. This Note will use the original moniker designated by the U.S. Department of State.

2. Analyzing the ISIS Timeline: The Rise of the Islamic State (ISIL/ISIS), NTREPID, http://www.ntrepidcorp.com/timestream/isis/ (last visited Oct. 7, 2015).

3. See Press Release, Office of the Press Sec'y, Remarks by the President at the United States Military Academy Commencement Ceremony, THE WHITE HOUSE (May 28, 2014, 10:22 AM), http://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2014/05/28/remarks-president-united-states-military-academy-commencement-ceremony ("We have removed our troops from Iraq."). The announcement of full troop withdrawal was less than three weeks before sending 275 service members back to Iraq. Press Release, Office of the Press Sec'y, Text of a Letter From the President to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President Pro Tempore of the Senate, THE WHITE HOUSE (June 16, 2014), http://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2014/06/16/text-letter-presi dent-speaker-house-representatives-and-president-pro-te (stating that 275 military personnel were being sent to Iraq for "support and security").

4. HUMAN RIGHTS OFFICE, UNITED NATIONS ASSISTANCE MISSION FOR IRAQ, REPORT ON THE PROTECTION OF CIVILIANS IN ARMED CONFLICT IN IRAQ: 11 SEPTEMBER – 10 DECEMBER 2014, at i (2014), http://www.ohchr.org/Documents/Countries/IQ/UNAMI_OHCHR_POC_Report_11Sep-10Dec2014_EN.pdf.

ernment's first official acknowledgement of ISIL and the severity of the situation.[5] On August 8, 2014, President Barack Obama ordered the first of many airstrikes targeting ISIL in Iraq, an action known as "Operation Inherent Resolve,"[6] the first active hostility the United States took against the newly designated terrorist group.[7] Prior to beginning the airstrikes, President Obama did not seek any type of congressional authorization. In support of his engagement of the United States in armed conflict against ISIL, President Obama cited legal authority pursuant to constitutional and statutory authority as the Commander in Chief.[8] While the White House was not initially specific as to the particular statutory justification for the strikes on ISIL, it eventually stated the statuto-

---

5. See Terrorist Designations of Groups Operating in Syria, U.S. DEP'T OF STATE (May 14, 2014), http://www.state.gov/r/pa/prs/ps/2014/05/226067.htm (designating the primary name and label for the "Foreign Terrorist Organization").

6. Iraq and Syria Operations Against ISIL Designated as Operation Inherent Resolve, U.S. CENT. COMMAND (Oct. 15, 2014), http://www.centcom.mil/en/news/articles/iraq-and-syria-ops-against-isil-designated-as-operation-inherent-resolve (officially naming the military operation against ISIL as "Operation INHERENT RESOLVE").

7. Press Release, Office of the Press Sec'y, Letter from the President—War Powers Resolution Regarding Iraq, THE WHITE HOUSE (Aug. 8, 2014), http://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2014/08/08/letter-president-war-powers-resolution-regarding-iraq [hereinafter August Press Release].

8. Press Release, Office of the Press Sec'y, Letter from the President—War Powers Resolution Regarding Iraq, THE WHITE HOUSE (Sept. 23, 2014) http://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2014/09/23/letter-president-war-powers-resolution-regarding-iraq [hereinafter September Press Release]. There is a school of thought that, under the Commander in Chief and/or Vesting Clauses of the Constitution, no restriction can be placed on the President's ability to make and carry out war. See U.S. CONST. art. II, § 1, cl. 1 ("The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America."); U.S. CONST. art. II, § 2, cl. 1 ("The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States . . . ."). These arguments are outside of the scope of this Note, but this Note takes the approach that this reading of the Constitution would make Congress' constitutional right to declare war meaningless, and therefore, the President must have congressional approval prior to entering armed conflict. Despite other positions on the President's inherent constitutional powers, it is undisputed that a Congressional authorization to use military force increases the power and legitimacy of a military operation. See infra Section II.B.

ry authority was under both the 9/11 and 2002 Authorizations to Use Military Force ("AUMF").[9]

The 9/11 AUMF was enacted in response to the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks on the United States.[10] It authorizes military action against "those nations, organizations, or persons" who "planned, authorized, committed, or aided the terrorist attacks that occurred on September 11, 2001, or harbored such organizations."[11] While the 9/11 AUMF can perhaps be stretched into authorizing the strikes against ISIL based on a tenuous link to the 9/11 attacks, this was likely not the intent of Congress when it passed the 9/11 AUMF. Congress intended to pursue those who were responsible for the September 11, 2001 attacks and prevent them from attacking U.S. soil again.[12] Fourteen years later, this authorization should not be cited for authorization to enter into a new, large-scale conflict against a group that is not directly linked to the September 11, 2001 attacks. Although the actions of ISIL

---

9. September Press Release, supra note 8. The 2002 AUMF authorized use of military force "against the continuing threat posed by Iraq" and was used as the legal justification to invade Iraq in 2003. Authorization for Use of Military Force Against Iraq Resolution of 2002, Pub. L. No. 107-234, 116 Stat. 1498. The application of the 2002 AUMF is outside the scope of this Note, but it largely revolves around Iraq as a state actor and the possession of "weapons of mass destruction." Id.; see also Zeke J. Miller, White House: Iraq War Vote Obama Opposed Could Be Used for ISIS Strikes, TIME (Sept. 13, 2014), http://time.com/3362683/obama-isis-iraq-syria-war-aumf/ ("[T]he 2002 law would provide additional legal underpinning to strikes in Iraq—and even Syria—as scholars question the applicability of the 2001 authorization to ISIS . . . ."). Months before the initial strikes against ISIL, the National Security Advisor, Susan E. Rice, wrote to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, stating, "[T]he [2002] Iraq AUMF is no longer used for any U.S. government activities and the Administration fully supports its repeal." Letter from Susan E. Rice, Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs, to the Honorable John A. Boehner, Speaker of the House of Representatives, U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES (Jul. 25, 2014), http://armedservices.house.gov/index.cfm/files/serve?File_id=D6A70EF0-E7ED-4A8B-B39B-9774CE10B7D3 [hereinafter Letter from Susan E. Rice].

10. See infra Part III.

11. Authorization for Use of Military Force, Pub. L. No. 107-40, 115 Stat. 224 (2001).

12. See infra note 65 and accompanying text.

are atrocious,[13] the Constitution mandates positive actions on behalf of Congress and the nation deserves a debate and clear authorizations to engage in armed conflict.[14] Allowing the President to enter a large-scale armed conflict without the consent of Congress is dangerous, because it avoids the checks and balances prescribed by the Constitution.

In addition to the constitutional problems raised by the pursuit of this operation without actual authorization, it is important to formally authorize the fight against ISIL because of the anticipated duration and costs of the operation. In human costs, as of July 28, 2015, eight United States service members have been killed in support of Operation Inherent Resolve.[15] In financial costs, as of November 3, 2015, the operation has cost the United States at least $4.75 billion and is expected to continue to cost between $2.4 and 3.8 billion per year.[16] Operation Inherent Resolve is expected to last for several years.[17] As of September 2015, there have been

---

13. See, e.g., Stephanie Nebehay, Islamic State Commanders Liable for Mass War Crimes: U.N., REUTERS (Nov. 14, 2014), http://www.reuters.com /article/2014/11/14/us-mideast-crisis-un-warcrimes-idUSKCN0IY1CV20141114?feedType=RSS&feedName=worldNews.

14. See infra Section II.A.

15. HANNAH FISCHER, CONG. RESEARCH SERV., RS22452, A GUIDE TO U.S. MILITARY CASUALTY STATISTICS: OPERATION FREEDOM'S SENTINEL, OPERATION INHERENT RESOLVE, OPERATION NEW DAWN, OPERATION IRAQI FREEDOM, AND OPERATION ENDURING FREEDOM 1 (2015), http://fas.org/sgp/crs/natsec/RS22452.pdf (detailing the number of casualties reported by the Department of Defense for named operations); DoD Identifies Army Casualty, U.S. DEP'T OF DEF. (Oct. 23, 2015), http://www.defense.gov/News/News-Releases/News-Release-View/Article/625690/dod-identifies-army-casualty (stating that Army Special Operations Master Sergeant Joshua L. Wheeler was killed by small-arms fire in Iraq).

16. Operation Inherent Resolve: Targeted Operations Against ISIL Terrorists, U.S. DEP'T OF DEF., http://www.defense.gov/home/features/2014/0814 _iraq/ (last visited Nov. 3, 2015); Bendery, infra note 106; Todd Harrison, John Stillion, Eric Lindsey & Jacob Kohn, Estimating the Cost of Operations against ISIL, CENTER FOR STRATEGIC AND BUDGETARY ASSESSMENTS (Sept. 29, 2014), http://www.csbaonline.org/publications/2014/09/estimating-the-cost-of-operations-against-isil/.

17. Opening Statement Before the S. Comm. on Foreign Relations, 113th Cong. (Dec. 9, 2014) (statement of Hon. John F. Kerry, Secretary of State), http://www.foreign.senate.gov/imo/media/doc/Secretary%20Kerry%20-%20Testimony.pdf ("It will be years, not months, before [ISIL] is defeated.").

over 23,000 military flights over Iraq and Syria, with over 24,000 munitions deployed.[18] This is not a small-scale contingency operation, but one that has already had a large impact on the United States and the rest of the world.

Congress should repeal the 9/11 AUMF and pass a new AUMF to authorize the President to engage the U.S. military into this conflict. The President should not be allowed to use the 9/11 AUMF as a justification to enter into a new long-term conflict without congressional action. Likewise, and probably more importantly, Congress should not shirk its responsibilities and sit idly by as the President takes unilateral military action without the proper authorization. This is setting a dangerous precedent for the unilateral commitment of the armed forces and is acceding constitutional powers to the executive branch that are explicitly reserved for the Congress.

This Note advocates for a new AUMF that allows for the targeting of ISIL because the use of outdated and contentious legal authority to engage in major combat operations unrelated to the September 11, 2001 attacks is inappropriate and skirts the checks and balances required by the Constitution. Part II of this Note delves into a historical background of presidential powers in the context of national security. It discusses a brief history of the War Powers Resolution[19] and its importance in the legality of current armed conflict. It also briefly reviews and analyzes Justice Jackson's concurrence in Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer (Steel Seizure),[20] and the state of the President's power in conjunction with Congress as the conflict with ISIL evolved. Part III ana-

---

18. Combined Forces Air Component Commander 2010–2015 Airpower Statistics, U.S. DEP'T OF DEF. (May 31, 2015), http://www.defense.gov/Portals/1/features/2014/0814_iraq/docs/September_30_2015.pdf (showing the number of flights flown and weapons deployed in support of Operation Inherent Resolve). For an interesting graphic that displays an interactive map with a timeline that shows the increase in frequency and location of coalition airstrikes against ISIL targets for the first few months of the operation, see How the Air Campaign Against ISIS Grew, N.Y. TIMES, http://www.nytimes.com/interactive/2014/12/31/world/middleeast/isis-airstrikes-map.html (last visited Oct. 7, 2015).

19. 50 U.S.C. §§ 1541–1548 (2013).

20. 343 U.S. 579, 634–55 (1952) (Jackson, J., concurring).

lyzes the 9/11 AUMF,[21] including its text, legislative history, and application to armed conflict with ISIL. This part highlights some of the major issues with applying antiquated legal authority to a new and significant threat and will suggest why Congress did not take more action to either approve or disapprove of the President's unilateral actions. Part IV outlines specific proposals for a new AUMF, including requirements for target identification, constraints, and a revision of both the 9/11 AUMF and 2002 AUMF. This part provides recommendations that will be useful to the legislature in drafting a new AUMF with regard to ISIL but will likewise be useful as a reference to any future AUMF.

II. HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

The United States Constitution explicitly gives Congress—and solely Congress—the ability to declare war.[22] The President of the United States is instrumental in the conduct of war as the Commander in Chief of the armed forces,[23] but does not have the unilateral ability to commit the military into armed conflict except under exigent circumstances.[24] Even under exigent circumstances, the President has limited authority to conduct war and must meet strict statutory guidelines set forth by Congress.[25] The Founding

21. Authorization for Use of Military Force, Pub. L. No. 107-40, 115 Stat. 224 (2001).

22. U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 11 (stating that Congress shall have power "[t]o declare War"). There is some debate as to what exactly the power "[t]o declare War" means. See Michael D. Ramsey, Textualism and War Powers, 69 U. CHI. L. REV. 1543 (2002). Congress also has the ability to control war through their appropriations power, known as "the power of the purse." See generally WILLIAM C. BANKS & PETER RAVEN-HANSEN, NATIONAL SECURITY LAW AND THE POWER OF THE PURSE (1994) (discussing when and how Congress can control the actions of the Executive through the funding, or non-funding, of any National Security matter).

23. U.S. CONST. art II, § 2, cl. 1 ("The President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States . . . ."). Contra John C. Yoo, The Continuation of Politics by Other Means: The Original Understanding of War Powers, 84 CALIF. L. REV. 167, 252–56 (1996) (arguing that a broad reading of the Commander in Chief clause would give the President all powers not solely conferred to Congress).

24. War Powers Resolution of 1973, 50 U.S.C. §§ 1541–1548; see infra Section II.A.

25. See 50 U.S.C. §§ 1541–1548; see also infra Section II.A.

Fathers were very deliberate about the division of these powers because they realized the imperative need for the checks and balances provided by this structure to promote debate and prevent tyranny.[26]

A. War Powers Resolution

The intricacies of the War Powers Resolution are outside the scope of this Note, but a brief discussion is necessary for a general understanding of the necessity of AUMFs.[27] The War Powers Resolution requires the President to have congressional authorization to conduct armed conflict, and AUMFs are the statutory means by which Congress makes this authorization.[28]

1. Enactment of the War Powers Resolution

The War Powers Resolution has been controversial since its inception. It was enacted in 1973, despite President Nixon's veto,[29] in order to specifically frame via statute the instances when the President can introduce the United States military into armed conflict without prior approval by Congress.[30] In his veto, President Nixon stated that the War Powers Resolution was "clearly

---

26. See Yoo, supra note 23, at 174 (explaining that while presidential initiative in war could have been encouraged by the Framers of the Constitution, Congress possesses the "ultimate check on executive actions").

27. For a more detailed account of the War Powers Resolution, see David J. Barron & Martin S. Lederman, The Commander in Chief at the Lowest Ebb—Framing the Problem, Doctrine, and Original Understanding, 121 HARV. L. REV. 689 (2008) and Bradley Larschan, The War Powers Resolution: Conflicting Constitutional Powers, the War Powers and U.S. Foreign Policy, 16 DENV. J. INT'L L. & POL'Y 33 (1987).

28. See JENNIFER K. ELSEA & MATTHEW C. WEED, CONG. RESEARCH SERV., RL31133, DECLARATIONS OF WAR AND AUTHORIZATIONS FOR THE USE OF MILITARY FORCE: HISTORICAL BACKGROUND AND LEGAL IMPLICATIONS 5 (2014), https://www.fas.org/sgp/crs/natsec/RL31133.pdf.

29. Id. at 26. For one perspective as to how Congress was able to override the President's veto, see Michael A. Newton, Inadvertent Implications of the War Powers Resolution, 45 CASE W. RES. J. INT'L L. 173, 179–80 (2012).

30. See 50 U.S.C. § 1541(c). Presidential authority to introduce the armed forces into hostilities is limited to "(1) a declaration of war, (2) specific statutory authorization, or (3) a national emergency created by attack upon the United States, its territories or possessions, or its armed forces." Id.

unconstitutional" and "undermin[ed] our foreign policy."[31] Every one of President Nixon's successors also found the War Powers Resolution to be unconstitutional.[32] This is because some, including President Nixon, argue that the President has the unilateral ability to engage in military conflict without the prior authorization of Congress based on the Commander-in-Chief clause in the U.S. Constitution.[33] The Commander in Chief clause states that "[t]he President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States."[34] A broad reading of this clause could lead one to conclude that the President has the unilateral ability to commit military forces into armed conflict. This conclusion is outside of the scope of this Note, and while the War Powers Resolution remains controversial, it is still the law today.[35]

2. Requirements of the War Powers Resolution

The War Powers Resolution sets several restrictions and requirements on the executive branch to maintain a check on the President's powers. Arguably the most important restriction set by the War Powers Resolution is the automatic termination of use of the armed forces within sixty days of their introduction into hostilities unless there is specific congressional approval.[36] This allows

---

31. Richard Nixon: Veto of the War Powers Resolution, AM. PRESIDENCY PROJECT, http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=4021 (last visited Oct. 11, 2014). In his letter addressed to the House of Representatives, President Nixon was "deeply disturbed by the practical consequences of [the] resolution," and he predicted far-reaching consequences to the United States' foreign policy. Id.

32. RICHARD F. GRIMMETT, CONG. RESEARCH SERV., R41199, THE WAR POWERS RESOLUTION: AFTER THIRTY-SIX YEARS 6 (2010), https://www.fas.org/sgp/crs/natsec/R41199.pdf.

33. Id. at 6–7.

34. U.S. CONST. art. II, § 2, cl. 1.

35. See Newton, supra note 29, at 173; Robert F. Turner, The War Powers Resolution at 40: Still an Unconstitutional, Unnecessary, and Unwise Fraud that Contributed Directly to the 9/11 Attacks, 45 CASE W. RES. J. INT'L L. 109 (2012); see also September Press Release, supra note 8.

36. See 50 U.S.C. § 1544(b) (2013).

> Within sixty calendar days after a report is submitted . . . the President shall terminate any use of United States Armed Forces with respect to which such report was submitted (or required to be submitted), unless the Congress (1) has declared war or has enacted a specific authorization for such use of the President the limited ability to introduce forces in exigent circumstances in defense of the nation without congressional approval,[37] but if the President has not obtained congressional approval after sixty days, this use of the armed forces is automatically terminated.[38] If Congress does not specifically approve of the operation, the President is required to end hostilities within thirty days of the automatic termination.[39] Overall, the President can engage troops in armed conflict for ninety days before the conflict is declared in violation of the War Powers Resolution.[40]

Regarding armed conflict with ISIL, the United States entered into hostilities by the use of airstrikes that were conducted beginning on August 8, 2014.[41] The ninety-day mark, by which the President was required to end hostilities and withdraw troops without specific congressional approval, was November 6, 2014.[42] The passage of this deadline raised the question of whether President Obama's use of Armed Forces was legal because there was no specific congressional authorization given for armed conflict with ISIL.[43] If there was no legitimate congressional authorization, then the President violated the War Powers Resolution and avoided the system of checks and balances on which the government rests.

> United States Armed Forces, (2) has extended by law such sixty-day period, or (3) is physically unable to meet as a result of an armed attack upon the United States.

Id. (emphasis added). Other requirements include regular consultation with Congress and periodic reports when Armed Forces are committed into hostilities. Id. at §§ 1542–1543.

37. Id. § 1541(c).

38. Id. § 1544(b). The War Powers Resolution created procedures that expedited the process for Congress to declare war or authorize the use of military force in order to allow compliance with the sixty-day requirements. ELSEA & WEED, supra note 28, at 77–80.

39. 50 U.S.C. § 1544(b).

40. Id.; see also THE CONSTITUTION PROJECT, DECIDING TO USE FORCE ABROAD: WAR POWERS IN A SYSTEM OF CHECKS AND BALANCES 33–34 (2005), http://www.constitutionproject.org/pdf/War_Powers_Deciding_To_Use_Force_Abroad1.pdf (arguing that the ninety-day time limit gives both the President and Congress a "free pass" to enter into armed conflict).

41. August Press Release, supra note 7.

42. See Sen. Rand Paul, Obama's ISIS War is Illegal, DAILY BEAST (Nov. 10, 2014, 5:45 AM), http://www.thedailybeast.com/articles/2014/11/10/obama-s-isis-war-is-illegal.html.

43. Id.

3. Enforcement of the War Powers Resolution

As previously mentioned, the War Powers Resolution has always been controversial, and several Presidents have been challenged regarding their alleged violations of the War Powers Resolution.[44] Some Presidents have claimed the inherent constitutional power to introduce military forces into armed conflict and subsequently exercised their claimed authority.[45] While speaking at the Texas State Republican Convention in Dallas, Texas, President George H. W. Bush defiantly stated, "I didn't have to get permission from some old goat in the United States Congress to kick Saddam Hussein out of Kuwait."[46] On several occasions, individual citizens, and even Congresspersons, have taken these national security issues to the courts to question the unilateral authority of the Commander in Chief and enforce the War Powers Resolution. However, courts have avoided the issue and considered it non-justiciable for three reasons: political question,[47] lack of standing,[48] and ripeness.[49] This lack of remedy available through Article III courts highlights the necessity for Congress to take a stand on the President's actions and demand the constitutionally required

44. See infra notes 47–49 and accompanying text.

45. See supra notes 31–35 and accompanying text.

46. George Bush: Remarks at the Texas State Republican Convention in Dallas, Texas, AM. PRESIDENCY PROJECT, http://www.presidency.ucsb.edu/ws/?pid=21125 (last visited Oct. 10, 2015). President George H. W. Bush also told his then-Deputy National Security Advisor Robert Gates, "'[i]f I don't get the votes' in Congress for war . . . 'I'm going to do it anyway. And if I get impeached, then so be it.'" Jon Meacham, The Hidden Hard-line Side of George H. W. Bush, POLITICO (Nov. 12, 2015), http://www.politico.com/magazine/story/2015/11/jon-meacham-book-george-h-w-bush-213347.

47. See El-Shifa Pharm. Indus. Co. v. United States, 607 F.3d 836, 842 (D.C. Cir. 2010) ("[Courts] have consistently held . . . that courts are not a forum for reconsidering the wisdom of discretionary decisions made by the political branches in the realm of foreign policy or national security.").

48. See Campbell v. Clinton, 203 F.3d 19, 23–24 (D.C. Cir. 2000) (holding that the thirty-one Congressmen who filed suit seeking a declaration that the President's use of military forces was illegal had no standing).

49. See Dellums v. Bush, 752 F. Supp. 1141, 1143 n. 1, 1151 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (holding that the fifty-four Congressmen who sued regarding the legality of the unilateral introduction of forces constituted a minority of Congress, and thus, the issue was not ripe because Congress as a whole had not spoken on the issue).

checks and balances because there is no other way to check the President's powers. When determining whether the President has the actual authority to take military action in a national security situation, or whether Congress has already granted that authority, courts look to a tripartite scheme. This scheme categorizes the President's power into one of three levels based upon differing levels of congressional support.

B. Justice Jackson's Concurrence in the Steel Seizure case

In his concurring opinion in Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. v. Sawyer (Steel Seizure), Justice Robert Jackson set up a three-level tiered hierarchy assessment to determine how much power the President has in any given national security issue.[50] Although it was just a concurrence, Justice Jackson's concurring opinion has been subsequently cited by the Court on multiple occasions and treated as if it were law.[51] Justice Jackson's opinion is now the standard scheme by which national security issues are judged.[52]

The first tier of executive power rests upon full support from Congress and gives the President the most power possible because "it includes all that [the President] possesses in his own right plus all that Congress can delegate."[53] The second tier is achieved "[w]hen the President acts in absence of either a congres-

50. 343 U.S. 579, 634–55 (1952) (Jackson, J., concurring).

51. Medellin v. Texas, 552 U.S. 491, 494 (2008) ("Justice Jackson's familiar tripartite scheme provides the accepted framework for evaluating executive action in [the area of national security law]."); Dames & Moore v. Regan, 453 U.S. 654, 661 (1981). Justice Jackson's analysis "brings together as much combination of analysis and common sense as there is" in the area of national security law. Id. Reportedly, in the fifty cases to use Justice Jackson's framework, every case in this category was found to be constitutional. See Edward T. Swaine, The Political Economy of Youngstown, 83 S. CAL. L. REV. 263, 311 (2010). Interestingly, Chief Justice Rehnquist, who authored the opinion in Dames & Moore v. Regan, was Justice Jackson's law clerk at the time the Steel Seizure opinion was written. WILLIAM H. REHNQUIST, THE SUPREME COURT 169 (new ed. 2001).

52. See Adam J. White, Justice Jackson's Draft Opinions in the Steel Seizure Cases, 69 ALB. L. REV. 1107, 1107 (2006) ("As the nation debates the Constitution's limits on executive action in the global war on terror, Justice Jackson's opinion has grown ubiquitous in legal discourse.").

53. Steel Seizure, 343 U.S. at 635.

sional grant or denial of authority[.]"[54] In this case, the President "can only rely upon his own independent powers, but there is a zone of twilight in which he and Congress may have concurrent authority, or in which its distribution is uncertain."[55] The main difference between the first and second tiers is that, in the second tier, if the President acts outside his existing scope of authority, the President may or may not be acting legally. Finally, in the third tier, Congress expressly or impliedly disapproves the presidential action, and claims of presidential power "must be scrutinized with caution, for what is at stake is the equilibrium established by our constitutional system."[56] In this tier, the President is at his weakest as far as legal authority; he may only rely on his inherent constitutional authority because Congress could simply amend or repeal any current statute on which he relies upon.

In a public address to the nation about a month after authorizing strikes against ISIL, President Obama stated that he "believe[s] we are strongest as a nation when the President and Congress work together."[57] This belief is consistent with the first tier of support, where Congress has explicitly authorized action. In the case of ISIL, the President is in the second tier because there has been no explicit and specific authorization of his use of force by Congress. In the event that Congress does pass a new AUMF, the President will be in the first tier, in his most powerful position. In the event that Congress does not pass an additional AUMF and speaks against further action against ISIL, the President will be in the third tier and will be very limited in his ability to legally continue military action against ISIL. In the meantime, the pursuit of armed conflict against ISIL is on shaky legal ground due to a lack of action on the part of Congress and the President's reliance on the 9/11 AUMF.

54. Id. at 637.

55. Id.

56. Id. at 638.

57. Press Release, Office of the Press Sec'y, Statement by the President on ISIL, THE WHITE HOUSE (Sept. 10, 2014), http://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2014/09/10/statement-president-isil-1.

III. THE 9/11 AUMF

The 9/11 AUMF[58] is presumably the authorization used by the Obama administration as its justification to authorize the armed conflict against ISIL.[59] It is difficult to determine exactly whether the 9/11 AUMF authorizes the strikes against ISIL because of the ambiguity written into the statute and its scant legislative history.[60]

This statute gives the President the sole unharnessed power to determine who to attack, what to attack, and how to attack, as long as there is some tenable link to the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks.[61] Per the language itself, the President alone has this authority; Congress has no authority to check the massive amount of power given to the President by Congress in the 9/11 AUMF.[62] Because this AUMF is exclusively tied to the September 11, 2001 attacks, its application to subsequent terrorist groups has become increasingly tenuous. The specific requirement of those responsible for the September 11, 2001 attacks also makes the 9/11 AUMF difficult to discern because relationships between terrorists and their organizations are generally not well documented. What qualifies as having "aided the terrorist attacks that occurred on Sep-

58. Authorization for Use of Military Force, Pub. L. No. 107-40, 115 Stat. 224 (2001).

59. September Press Release, supra note 8 (mentioning both the 9/11 and 2002 AUMFs as justification). However, the draft AUMF that President Obama sent to Congress on February 11, 2015, recommends repealing the 2002 AUMF, implying that it is not being used and is not necessary. See Joint Resolution, THE WHITE HOUSE (Feb. 11, 2015) [hereinafter Obama Proposed Resolution], http://www.whitehouse.gov/sites/default/files/docs/aumf_02112015.pdf; Press Release, Office of the Press Sec'y, Letter from the President—Authorization for the Use of United States Armed Forces in Connection with the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant, THE WHITE HOUSE (Feb. 11, 2015), http://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2015/02/11/letter-president-authorization-use-united-states-armed-forces-connection [hereinafter 2015 Press Release]; see also infra note 130.

60. For a detailed analysis highlighting some of the ambiguities and problems with determining who and what exactly is authorized as a target under the 9/11 AUMF, see Graham Cronogue, Note, A New AUMF: Defining Combatants in the War on Terror, 22 DUKE J. COMP. & INT'L L. 377, 379–86 (2012).

61. See Authorization for Use of Military Force, 115 Stat. 224.

62. See generally id. (stating that the President has the power to determine who to target under the authorization of the 9/11 AUMF).

tember 11, 2001"[63] or of having "harbored such organizations or persons"[64] is a matter of interpretation and can be modified to fit the purposes of the administration.

A. History of the 9/11 AUMF

On September 11, 2001, terrorists hijacked four commercial airplanes and crashed two into the World Trade Center buildings, one into the Pentagon, and the fourth into a field in Pennsylvania, killing nearly 3,000 civilians.[65] The very next day, President George W. Bush asserted that the United States would use "all of our resources to conquer this enemy" who carried out these "acts of war."[66] On the same day the President spoke, the leaders of the House and Senate met and agreed to bypass the formal legislative review process to expedite legislation in response to the terrorist attacks.[67] On September 14, merely two days later, the Senate passed the joint resolution with a vote of 98-0 and the House passed it with a vote of 420-1.[68] Due to the expedited nature and sense of urgency for enacting this legislation, the legislative history is relatively scant compared to the amount of power it purports to grant the President. President Bush signed the joint resolution, short titled "Authorization for Use of Military Force," ("9/11 AUMF") on September 18, 2001, just seven days after the attack.[69] The 9/11 AUMF states:

> That the President is authorized to use all necessary and appropriate force against those nations, organizations, or persons he determines planned, authorized, committed, or aided the terrorist attacks that occurred on September 11, 2001, or harbored such

63. Id.

64. Id.

65. RICHARD F. GRIMMETT, CONG. RESEARCH SERV., RS22357, AUTHORIZATION FOR USE OF MILITARY FORCE IN RESPONSE TO THE 9/11 ATTACKS (P.L. 107-40): LEGISLATIVE HISTORY 1 (2007), https://www.fas.org/sgp/crs/natsec/RS22357.pdf.

66. Id. (citation omitted).

67. See id. at 2. For more details on the congressional procedures used in conjunction with declarations of war or Authorizations for Use of Military Force, see ELSEA & WEED, supra note 28, at 77–80.

68. GRIMMETT, supra note 65, at 3.

69. Id.

> organizations or persons, in order to prevent any future acts of international terrorism against the United States by such nations, organizations or persons.[70]

This grant of power is extremely broad, with very few restrictions.[71] Per the statutory language, the only restriction is that targets of the 9/11 AUMF must be linked to the terrorist attacks that occurred on September 11, 2001.[72] The 9/11 AUMF has been used globally to target terrorists since its enactment, and is the primary legal authorization for the U.S. military operations in Afghanistan.[73]

The White House initially proposed language for an AUMF on September 12, 2001, but Congress rejected the language as overreaching.[74] The White House's proposal would have granted

70. Authorization for Use of Military Force, Pub. L. No. 107-40, 115 Stat. 224 (2001).

71. See discussion infra Section III.B.

72. There has been some litigation as to the scope of the 9/11 AUMF, but all of that litigation has revolved around the authority to detain enemy combatants, which is outside the scope of this Note. See generally Boumediene v. Bush, 553 U.S. 723, 732 (2008) (holding that the 9/11 AUMF does not prevent a detainee's right to habeas corpus); Hamdan v. Rumsfeld, 548 U.S. 557, 559 (2006) (holding that the 9/11 AUMF does not override Congress' specific authorization of military commissions); Hamdi v. Rumsfeld, 542 U.S. 507, 518 (2004) (plurality opinion) (holding that the United States has the authority under the 9/11 AUMF to detain individuals who fought against the United States as vaguely identified in the AUMF's language, but failing to define the scope of the AUMF).

73. See MATTHEW C. WEED, CONG. RESEARCH SERV., R43760, A NEW AUTHORIZATION FOR USE OF MILITARY FORCE AGAINST THE ISLAMIC STATE: ISSUES AND CURRENT PROPOSALS IN BRIEF 13 (2015), https://www.fas.org/sgp/crs/natsec/R43760.pdf.

74. See GRIMMETT, supra note 65, at 3–4; David Abramowitz, The President, the Congress, and Use of Force: Legal and Political Considerations in Authorizing Use of Force Against International Terrorism, 43 HARV. INT'L L.J. 71, 73 (2002). When signing the bill, President Bush stated that "[o]ur whole Nation is unalterably committed to a direct, forceful, and comprehensive response to these terrorist attacks and the scourge of terrorism directed against the United States and its interests." Press Release, Office of the Press Sec'y, President Signs Authorization for Use of Military Force Bill, THE WHITE HOUSE the President even more power, including the power "to deter and pre-empt any future acts of terrorism or aggression against the United States."[75] By not allowing the White House's suggested language, Congress restricted its authorization of force to only those organizations that were involved in the September 11, 2001 attacks and their associated forces.[76] At the time, necessity dictated quick legislation. Congress acted swiftly in order to authorize the use of military force in order to show the world that the United States would not allow these types of attacks. While this hasty legislation was necessary at the time of enactment, the lack of deliberations and consideration have led to an over grant of unchecked power to the President.

B. Scope and Limitations of the 9/11 AUMF

As a result of the quickly enacted legislation, several key components to an AUMF were left out of the 9/11 AUMF. Importantly, the 9/11 AUMF does not have a sunset provision,[77] or any actual target constraints other than a required link to the September 11, 2001 attacks. Under the Obama Administration's interpretation and application of the 9/11 AUMF, the tenuous link to the September 11, 2001 attacks could allow the 9/11 AUMF to be applied indefinitely.[78] There is also no requirement that any indi-(Sept. 18, 2001), http://georgewbush-whitehouse.archives.gov/news/releases/2001/09/20010918-10.html.

---

75. Abramowitz, supra note 74; see also GRIMMETT, supra note 65, at 2–3 (stating that the proposed language "would have granted the President open-ended authority to act against all terrorism and terrorists or potential aggressors against the United States anywhere" and not merely "the authority to act against the terrorists involved in the September 11, 2001 attacks, and those nations, organizations and persons who had aided or harbored the terrorists.").

76. See Authorization for Use of Military Force, Pub. L. No. 107-40, 115 Stat. 224 (2001).

77. A "sunset law" can be inserted into a law so the law expires at a specified time or interval, unless it is renewed. Sunset Law, BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY (10th ed. 2014).

78. Contra Beau D. Barnes, Reauthorizing the "War on Terror": The Legal and Policy Implications of the AUMF's Coming Obsolescence, 211 MIL. L. REV. 57, 71 (2012) ("[I]t is nearly impossible for the AUMF to last forever."); Cronogue, supra note 60, at 385 ("[T]he AUMF should not last any longer than it takes to destroy, imprison, or force the surrender of all 'nations, organizations or persons' who have a sufficient tie to 9/11.").

viduals targeted under the 9/11 AUMF have any connection to the September 11, 2001 attacks; they only need to belong to an organization that once had a connection to the attacks.[79] This means the President can theoretically use the 9/11 AUMF forever and allows the President to skirt constitutional requirements and avoid the integrated system of checks and balances.

The only member of Congress—out of 519 members—who voted against the 9/11 AUMF did so because she was concerned that it authorized military force as "a blank check . . . anywhere, in any country . . . and without time limit."[80] This fear has come to fruition; President Obama is stretching the 9/11 AUMF to justify his actions against ISIL. The only member of Congress to raise the issue of the duration of the authorization during deliberations was then-Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, then-Senator Joe Biden, who explicitly rejected a time limit for the authorization.[81] This open-ended authorization, combined with ambiguous statutory language and the unilateral determination by the President as to who can be targeted by the authorization, is a recipe for unharnessed power to engage in armed conflict.

The geographical scope of the 9/11 AUMF is another open-ended authorization because it is not limited within the text of the statute itself.[82] The statutory language does not specifically limit the application of the 9/11 AUMF to locations abroad; that limitation may only be inferred through the statute's reference to the

---

79. There are already ISIL fighters who were not even born near September 11, 2001. Harriet Alexander, 'Our Youngest Martyr Yet'—Isil Boasts About Death of 10-Year-Old, TELEGRAPH (Oct. 09, 2014, 5:09 PM), http://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/worldnews/islamic-state/11151906/Our-youngest-martyr-yet-Isil-boasts-about-death-of-10-year-old.html (reporting that ISIL is proud of a child soldier who was killed in action); HUMAN RIGHTS OFFICE, UNITED NATIONS ASSISTANCE MISSION FOR IRAQ, supra note 4, at 17–18 (reporting that children as young as fourteen are undergoing military training by ISIL).

80. Barbara Lee, Why I Opposed the Resolution to Authorize Force, S.F. GATE (Sept. 23, 2001, 4:00 AM), http://www.sfgate.com/opinion/article/Why-I-opposed-the-resolution-to-authorize-force-2876893.php; see GRIMMETT, supra note 65, at 3.

81. 147 CONG. REC. S9422–23 (daily ed. Sept. 14, 2001).

82. See Authorization for Use of Military Force, Pub. L. No. 107-40, 115 Stat. 224 (2001).

War Powers Resolution, which only applies abroad.[83] Several members of Congress noted during deliberations that the application of the 9/11 AUMF was limited to use of force abroad.[84] Without the specific geographic limitation in the statute, because the President is not following other aspects of the War Powers Resolution, he may not be restricted from using the 9/11 AUMF domestically. While this may be a stretch, it is likely that the public will never know if the 9/11 AUMF is ever used domestically due to national security restrictions.

C. Issues with Applying the 9/11 AUMF to ISIL

In May 2013, in a speech to the National Defense University, President Obama stated that he wanted to repeal the very same AUMF that his administration had been citing for authority to pursue armed conflict with ISIL.[85] Since that speech, President Obama and his senior staff have changed their interpretation of the 83. Abramowitz, supra note 74, at 75 ("While inserting [the word 'abroad'] was suggested during staff discussions, it was arguably unnecessary in light of the references in section 2(b) of the joint resolution to the War Powers Resolution . . . which generally deals with introducing U.S. forces abroad."). However, the preamble to the 9/11 AUMF does mention self-defense "both at home and abroad." Authorization for Use of Military Force, 115 Stat. 224.

---

84. See, e.g., 147 CONG. REC. S9423 (daily ed. Sept. 14, 2001) (statement of Sen. Joseph R. Biden, Jr.) ("[I]t should go without saying, however, that the resolution is directed only at using force abroad to combat acts of international terrorism"); 147 CONG. REC. H5639 (daily ed. Sept. 14, 2001) (statement of Rep. Tom Lantos) ("[The 9/11 AUMF] empowers the President to bring to bear the full force of American power abroad.") (emphasis added).

85. Press Release, Office of the Press Sec'y, Fact Sheet: The President's May 23 Speech on Counterterrorism, THE WHITE HOUSE (May 23, 2013), http://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2013/05/23/fact-sheet-president-s-may-23-speech-counterterrorism [hereinafter The President's Speech on Counterterrorism]. The irony of citing an authorization that the President had called for a repeal on as a legal justification was not lost. See Press Release, Office of the Press Sec'y, Press Briefing by Press Secretary Josh Earnest, THE WHITE HOUSE (Sept. 11, 2014), http://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2014/09/11/press-briefing-press-secretary-josh-earnest-9112014 [hereinafter Press Briefing]. A question posed to the Press Secretary was, "And if I could just ask finally whether you see any irony in using as your legal justification for these airstrikes an authorization for military force that the President himself has called for repeal of." Id.

9/11 AUMF on multiple occasions.[86] These changes in interpretation further question the legitimacy of the use of the 9/11 AUMF and our nation's ability to prosecute war and support our service members.[87] While the background for the changes in the President's interpretation are not clear, the increased scope of authority interpreted from the same 9/11 AUMF indicates an attempt to stretch the AUMF's authority in order to keep operations, like the one against ISIL, legal.

Under the Presidential Policy Guidance that President Obama signed on May 22, 2013, in order to use lethal force in counterterrorism operations abroad, there must be a sufficient legal basis.[88] For the legal authority of the 9/11 AUMF to apply against ISIL, the President must establish a connection between ISIL and forces that "aided the terrorist attacks that occurred on September 11, 2001" to keep in line with the statute's authorization.[89] This application begs the question of how closely linked an individual or organization has to be to the September 11, 2001 attacks to be targeted under the scope of the 9/11 AUMF. Unfortunately, the statutory language and legislative history of the 9/11 AUMF do not provide the answer to what is considered an associated force. The relationship of ISIL to al Qaeda[90] is not official or extremely clear.

---

86. See William S. Castle, The Argument for a New and Flexible Authorization for the Use of Military Force, 38 HARV. J. L. & PUB. POL'Y 509, 523–31 (2015).

87. Id. at 523.

88. THE WHITE HOUSE, U.S. POLICY STANDARDS AND PROCEDURES FOR THE USE OF FORCE IN COUNTERTERRORISM OPERATIONS OUTSIDE THE UNITED STATES AND AREAS OF ACTIVE HOSTILITIES (May 22, 2013), http://www.whitehouse.gov/sites/default/files/uploads/2013.05.23_fact_sheet_on_ppg.pdf; The President's Speech on Counterterrorism, supra note 85.

89. Authorization for Use of Military Force, Pub. L. No. 107-40, 115 Stat. 224 (2001). For an argument that strongly opposes any suggested legitimate link between al Qaeda and ISIL, see Ryan Goodman & Shalev Roisman, Assessing the Claim that ISIL is a Successor to Al Qaeda—Part 1 (Organizational Structure), JUST SECURITY (Oct. 1, 2014 9:04 AM), http://justsecurity.org/15801/assessing-isil-successor-al-qaeda-2001-aumf-part-1-organizational-structure.

90. Al Qaeda was quickly determined to be responsible for the attacks on September 11, 2001. See Michael J. Morell, 11 September 2001: With the President, STUD. IN INTELLIGENCE, Sept. 2006, at 23, 30, http://www.foia.cia.gov/sites/default/files/DOC_0001407035.pdf (reporting that the President's CIA

ISIL at least had some connections previously with al Qaeda, and officials with the Obama Administration have stated that the 9/11 AUMF applies to ISIL based on that relationship.[91] However, the relationship between the organizations seems to have ended with al Qaeda shunning the actions of ISIL,[92] but the authorization is not clear as to the effect of that split. Al Qaeda's General Command stated that "ISIS 'is not a branch of the al-Qaeda group . . . does not have an organizational relationship with it and [al-Qaeda] is not the group responsible for their actions.'"[93] The Obama Administration explains that the split of al Qaeda and ISIL has no effect on its ability to target ISIL because a previous long relationship existed between the two organizations, there are continued ties between the organizations' fighters, and there are similar tactics and goals amongst the organizations.[94] However, the link between these organizations is not clear, and will likely never be clear because by their very natures as terrorist organizations, they are secretive. It would not be difficult to exaggerate a link between the organizations if that relationship would assist one's purposes.[95] briefer briefed the President aboard Air Force One within hours of the attacks that al Qaeda and Osama bin Laden were likely responsible for the attacks), Press Release, Office of the Press Sec'y, Address to a Joint Session of Congress and the American People, THE WHITE HOUSE (Sept. 20, 2001 9:00 PM), http://georgewbush-whitehouse.archives.gov/news/releases/2001/09/20010920-8.html (statement of President George W. Bush).

---

91. Miller, supra note 9. For a detailed timeline on the origins of ISIL, see NTREPID, supra note 2.

92. Liz Sly, Al-Qaeda Disavows Any Ties With Radical Islamist ISIS Group in Syria, Iraq, WASH. POST (Feb. 3, 2014), http://www.washingtonpost.com/world/middle_east/al-qaeda-disavows-any-ties-with-radical-islamist-isis-group-in-syria-iraq/2014/02/03/2c9afc3a-8cef-11e3-98ab-fe5228217bd1_story.html.

93. Id. (alterations in original).

94. Press Briefing, supra note 85. However, not everyone believes that the Obama Administration is being straightforward regarding the link between al Qaeda and other terrorist groups. Khorasan is also a newly designated terrorist group in Iraq that has alleged links to al Qaeda as well. See infra note 95.

95. See generally Anna Mulrine, Is Khorasan a Real Threat—or a Way to Avoid a Vote on US Military Action?, CHRISTIAN SCI. MONITOR (Sept. 29, 2014), http://www.csmonitor.com/USA/Military/2014/0929/Is-Khorasan-a-real-threat-or-a-way-to-avoid-a-vote-on-US-military-action-video?cmpid=TW (suggesting that the Obama Administration may have created a tenuous link between a newly designated terrorist group and al Qaeda as well as exaggerated the im-

This highlights the difficulty of relying on a broadly written and ambiguous statute to justify a large-scale armed conflict.[96]

Even if the link to al Qaeda could be established, the United States should not wish to enter into a long-term armed conflict based on shaky ties to al Qaeda. The deployment of our armed forces into conflict should be done after serious debate and not merely based on the unilateral decisions of the executive branch. If Congress does in fact approve of and support the President's actions, Congress should have enacted legislation to keep in line of their constitutional responsibilities.

D. Why Has Congress Not Authorized the Use of Military Force Against ISIL?

The United States Constitution explicitly entrusts the power to declare war solely in the Congress.[97] Historically, the President asks Congress to declare war or authorize the deployment of the military prior to introducing the military into armed conflict.[98] Congressman John Boehner, while the Speaker of the House of Representatives, stated that Congress will vote on a new AUMF when the President asks for one, but the President did not do so prior to the sixty days required by War Powers Resolution.[99] The President has asserted the authority to conduct the strikes against ISIL, but has also "welcome[d] congressional support for this efminence of action against the group in order to continue airstrikes without enacting legislation).

---

96. See Jack Goldsmith, The Legal Consequences of Islamic State + Al Qaeda Cooperation, and Implications for AUMF Reform, LAWFARE (Nov. 14, 2014, 10:20 AM), http://www.lawfareblog.com/2014/11/the-legal-consequences-of-islamic-state-al-qaeda-cooperation-and-implications-for-aumf-reform/.

97. U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 11 ("[The Congress shall have power] To declare War . . . .").

98. ELSEA & WEED, supra note 28, at 1, 5 (stating that prior to all eleven declarations of war and most of the AUMFs, the President formally requested the authorization from Congress).

99. Jack Goldsmith, History Suggests that Congress Will Only Authorize Force Against the Islamic State if the President Proposes and Pushes for an Authorization (or Screws Up Unilateral Force Badly), LAWFARE (Oct. 7, 2014, 8:30 AM), http://www.lawfareblog.com/2014/10/history-suggests-that-congress-will-only-authorize-force-against-the-islamic-state-if-the-president-proposes-and-pushes-for-an-authorization-or-screws-up-unilateral-force-badly/; Paul, supra note 42.

fort in order to show the world that Americans are united in confronting this danger."[100] Some in Congress also believe that the President has the ability to target ISIL based on the 9/11 AUMF, but others do not.[101] This highlights the need for rigorous debate on both sides of this argument to ensure that our military operations remain both legal and supported by the citizens of the United States through their elected representation.

Critics have argued that Congress should have taken initiative in drafting and authorizing a new AUMF, and by not doing so, abdicated one of its most sacred responsibilities.[102] By not addressing this issue as a Congress, Congress is arguably implicitly authorizing the President to conduct these airstrikes under the authority of the 9/11 AUMF. Implicit authorization for armed conflict is not sufficient. While Congress as a whole did not take action to authorize the airstrikes within the first sixty days, several members of Congress did take action and there were at least seven proposed "ISIL AUMFs" in some form of legislation within the first sixty days after beginning airstrikes.[103] Each of these bills

---

100. Statement by the President on ISIL, supra note 57.

101. Jake Miller, John Boehner "Happy" to Have Congress Vote on Anti-ISIS Mission, CBS NEWS (Sept. 28, 2014, 5:53 PM), http://www.cbsnews.com/news/john-boehner-happy-to-have-congress-vote-on-anti-isis-mission; Paul, supra note 42.

102. Jeremy Diamond, McCain: ISIS' Rise Like 'Watching a Train Wreck,' CNN (Sept. 29, 2014, 12:21 PM), http://newday.blogs.cnn.com/2014/09/29/mccain-isis-rise-like-watching-a-train-wreck (reporting that the chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee "criticized the President for his 'political failure'" and calling the President to lead a strategy to root out ISIL); Oliver Knox, How to Force Congress to Vote on Obama's War Against the Islamic State, YAHOO NEWS (Oct. 03, 2014, 4:58 AM), http://news.yahoo.com/a-call-to-congress-to-vote-on-obama-s-is-war-205104044.html?soc_src=mediacontentsharebuttons (interviewing retired Rep. Tom Campbell, who sued President Clinton regarding airstrikes in Serbia, Rep. Campbell states that refusing to take a stand on support for military action against ISIL "is Congress running way [sic] from its responsibility"); Diedre Walsh, Boehner Might Bring Congress Back for Syria Debate After All, CNN (Sept. 30, 2014, 8:57 AM), http://www.cnn.com/2014/09/29/politics/john-boehner-mixed-messages/ (quoting House Democratic Leader Nancy Pelosi) ("Since when do we sit around waiting, using the excuse he didn't ask? No, if you want to have an authorization that has any constraints on the President, you don't wait for him to write it.").

103. H.R.J. Res. 128, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the House, Sept. 19, 2014, by Rep. John Larsen); S.J. Res. 44, 113th Cong. (2014) (as installed in committee with minimal consideration until after the 113th Congress concluded its term.[104]

Only one piece of legislation made it through the committee process before the end of the congressional term. It was a proposed AUMF drafted by Senator Robert Menendez, the Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee for the 113th Congress.[105] The bill was seen largely as a political gesture, as it was introduced immediately before the end of the congressional term where it would have been unlikely to have any effect because of the impending break in between sessions.[106] Senator Bob Corker, at the time the ranking member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, stated that the bill was "going nowhere."[107] Senator Corker, who took over as the Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee for the 114th Congress, has also stated that he will not support Senator Menendez's proposed AUMF because of a lack of support and input from the Obama Administration.[108] Senator Corker stated that the executive branch needs to set guidetroduced to the Senate, Sept. 17, 2014, by Sen. Tim Kaine); H.R.J. Res. 125, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the House, Sept. 16, 2014, by Rep. Adam Schiff); H.R. 5415, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the House, Sept. 8, 2014, by Rep. Frank Wolf); S.J. Res. 42, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the Senate on Sept. 8, 2014, by Sen. Bill Nelson); S.J. Res. 43, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the Senate, Sept. 8, 2014, by Sen. James Inhofe); H.R.J. Res. 123, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the House, Sept. 8, 2014, by Rep. Darrell Issa).

---

104. See WEED, supra note 73, at 4.

105. S.J. Res. 47, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the Senate, Dec. 13, 2014, by Sen. Robert Menendez); Senate Foreign Relations Committee Passes Authorization for Use of Military Force Against ISIL, U.S. SENATE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN REL. (Dec. 11, 2014), http://www.foreign.senate.gov/press/chair/release/senate-foreign-relations-committee-passes-authorization-for-use-of-military-force-against-isil. Senator Menendez's bill had no subsequent action after introduction to the Senate. S.J. Res. 47, 113th Cong. (2014).

106. Jennifer Bendery, Senate Committee Votes to Authorize War Against Islamic State, HUFFINGTON POST (Dec. 11, 2014, 2:14 PM), http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2014/12/11/war-authorization-islamic-state-isil_n_6308114.html.

107. Corker Statement on Committee Consideration of Authorization for the Use of Military Force Against ISIS, U.S. SENATE COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN REL. (Dec. 11, 2014), http://www.foreign.senate.gov/press/ranking/release/corker-statement-on-committee-consideration-of-authorization-for-the-use-of-military-force-against-isis.

108. Bendery, supra note 106.

lines and strategy for success of the mission before Congress acts.[109]

It is also speculated that Congress shirked its responsibilities to authorize the use of military force for political reasons.[110] The midterm elections for Congress occurred on November 4, 2014,[111] merely two days before the President was required to cease military operations targeting ISIL[112] pursuant to the War Powers Resolution's automatic expiration.[113] It has been suggested that Congress was hesitant to engage in a debate over a hot topic immediately prior to the election.[114] Congress was not in session immediately prior to the election in order to campaign, but Congress could have convened for a vote if necessary.[115]

The day after the 2014 congressional midterm elections, President Obama publically stated that he would ask Congress for a new AUMF for use against ISIL.[116] President Obama wants a new AUMF for ISIL because "[t]he world needs to know we are united behind this effort, and the men and women of our military deserve our clear and unified support."[117] However, Speaker Boehner stated that he would not ask Congress to vote on action against ISIL until the new Congress was seated in the new term.[118]

---

109. See id.

110. Walsh, supra note 102 (quoting Senator John McCain). Senator McCain characterized delaying the debate on an authorization for military action against ISIL as "an act of cowardice on the part of Congress . . . [t]hey didn't want to vote before the election." Id.

111. See Steven Collinson, Republicans Seize Senate, Gaining Full Control of Congress, CNN (Nov. 5, 2014, 10:43 AM), http://www.cnn.com/2014/11/04/politics/election-day-story/index.html.

112. Paul, supra note 42 (stating that the ninety day mark to automatically cease military operations was November 6, 2014).

113. 50 U.S.C. § 1544(b) (2013).

114. See supra note 110.

115. Miller, supra note 101.

116. Press Release, Office of the Press Sec'y, Remarks by the President in a Press Conference, THE WHITE HOUSE (Nov. 5, 2014), http://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2014/11/05/remarks-president-press-conference.

117. Id.

118. Carl Hulse, Today in Politics: Boehner Says New Congress Should Debate Military Action, N.Y. TIMES (Sept. 25, 2014, 7:06 AM), http://www.nytimes.com/politics/first-draft/2014/09/25/?entry=685&_r=0 (quoting then-Speaker Boehner) ("I would suggest to you that early next year, assum-

Speaker Boehner stated that a lame duck Congress was the wrong entity to enact such an important piece of legislation and preferred to take action once the new Congress was seated.[119]

The next major address by the White House regarding an ISIL AUMF was at the 2015 State of the Union. During the President's State of the Union address on January 20, 2015, President Obama either acknowledged the requirement for an ISIL AUMF, or perhaps had a Freudian slip.[120] In the transcript of the State of the Union address, President Obama briefly calls on the Congress to create a new ISIL AUMF and then moves on to a new subject.[121] As the President delivered the speech, however, he added the line "[w]e need that authority," when discussing the requested ISIL AUMF.[122] While this went largely unnoticed, it may have been a sign that the President believes the ISIL AUMF is necessary, and not merely an act of good faith by the President to let Congress get on board with President Obama's plan as he has suggested.

Following up on his State of the Union address, on February 11, 2015, President Obama sent a draft ISIL AUMF to Congress.[123] In this draft ISIL AUMF, the President proposed a three-year sunset provision, the authority for limited ground operations, and a reporting requirement to Congress.[124] However, there was no provision for a repeal of the 9/11 AUMF, which the President specifically noted in his transmittal letter.[125] Instead, the President stated that his newly proposed ISIL AUMF could serve as "model" for how the President and Congress can "work together to tailor ing that we continue in this effort, there may be that discussion and there may be that request [for an AUMF] from the president[.]").

---

119. Id.

120. Retroactively Authorizing War, N.Y. TIMES (Jan. 31, 2015), http://www.nytimes.com/2015/02/01/opinion/sunday/retroactively-authorizing-war.html; see President Barack Obama, State of the Union Address (Jan. 20, 2015), http://www.whitehouse.gov/sotu (at 36:58).

121. State of the Union 2015: Full Transcript, CNN (Jan. 20, 2015, 9:08 PM), http://www.cnn.com/2015/01/20/politics/state-of-the-union-2015-transcript-full-text/.

122. Retroactively Authorizing War, supra note 120 (quoting State of the Union Address, supra note 120).

123. 2015 Press Release, supra note 59.

124. Obama Proposed Resolution, supra note 59.

125. 2015 Press Release, supra note 59.

the authorities granted by the [9/11] AUMF."[126] Further, the President stated that he "remain[s] committed to working with the Congress and the American people to refine, and ultimately repeal, the [9/11] AUMF."[127] It is clear that this is not a priority for the Obama Administration since it took so long to put forth a bill and there has been little action on its behalf to prod Congress to do Congress' job. This was a wise move by the Obama Administration, however, because it shows the American people that it has done its duty to propose legislation and that Congress failed to follow up. Additionally, President Obama does not have any real incentive to give up his unharnessed power that he claims from the 9/11 AUMF. It is the responsibility of Congress to maintain its constitutional powers and define the scope of legislation. If Congress is not going to do so, the President is smart to maintain the current status quo.

Despite calls for the President to act and propose a new ISIL AUMF, Congress has done nothing with the President's proposal.[128] Perhaps it is because Congress realizes the futility of passing a new AUMF while leaving the 9/11 AUMF in place.[129] There is no reason to pass a new AUMF for ISIL and leave the 9/11 AUMF in place. If the President wanted to exceed the ISIL AUMF's mandates, he could merely fall back on the 9/11 AUMF at any time. There are also politically charged speculations that potential presidential contenders in 2016 do not want to commit to a position on ISIL before the primaries.[130] Potential presidential

---

126. Id.

127. Id.

128. Karen DeYoung, Debate Over War Authorization in Congress Fades with Little Result, WASH. POST (Apr. 30, 2015), https://www.washingtonpost.com/world/national-security/debate-over-war-authorization-in-congress-fades-with-little-result/2015/04/30/ee4b961a-ef62-11e4-8abc-d6aa3bad79dd_story.html.

129. Benjamin Wittes, The Consequences of Congressional Inaction on the AUMF, LAWFARE BLOG (Apr. 8, 2015, 9:56 AM), http://www.lawfareblog.com/consequences-congressional-inaction-aumf ("In effect, President Obama told Congress to go through the motions of passing a resolution if it wished but to do so understanding that its actions wouldn't matter.").

130. Peter Beinart, Why Won't the GOP Declare War on ISIS?, THE ATLANTIC (May 28, 2015), http://www.theatlantic.com/politics/archive/2015/05/congress-aumf-isis-war/394268.

contenders do not want to engage in heated debates over national security regarding their hopeful future powers.

IV. AN ARGUMENT AND PROPOSAL FOR A NEW AUMF

A new AUMF specifically authorizing military action against ISIL ("ISIL AUMF") should be enacted by Congress. A new ISIL AUMF must balance flexibility for the President with reasonable constraints on his ability to conduct an endless war. Several of the requirements and constraints that should be included have already been listed in the various proposed AUMFs in Congress,[131] but none include all of the provisions that should be included in the final ISIL AUMF. Below is a non-exclusive list of clauses and considerations that should be included in the new ISIL AUMF in order to avoid the same problems as previous authorizations.

In addition to enacting a new ISIL AUMF, Congress should repeal the 9/11 AUMF. If the 9/11 AUMF is not repealed, it will render the ISIL AUMF meaningless because the President will still be able to unilaterally determine that a group or individual has some nexus to the September 11, 2001 attacks and use that as the authorization for a military attack if the ISIL AUMF did not work for a particular target. The 9/11 AUMF could serve as a backup for any questionable targets not supported by the ISIL AUMF, so there would never be any new restraint on the President's powers. Since the purpose of the 9/11 AUMF—to enable military operations against those responsible for the September 11, 2001 attacks—has largely been accomplished, its repeal would not be counter to congressional intent.[132]

---

131. For a detailed list of the requirements and constraints in the AUMFs proposed by the 113th Congress, see WEED, supra note 73, at 10–17. See also S.J. Res. 47, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the Senate, Dec. 13, 2014, by Sen. Robert Menendez).

132. Press Release, Office of the Press Sec'y, Statement by the President on the End of the Combat Mission in Afghanistan, THE WHITE HOUSE (Dec. 28, 2014), http://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2014/12/28/statement-presid ent-end-combat-mission-afghanistan. President Obama declared that the combat mission in Afghanistan is over and claiming successes of "devastating the core al Qaeda leadership, delivering justice to Osama bin Laden, disrupting terrorist plots and saving countless American lives." Id.; see also Barnes, supra note 78,

The repeal of the 9/11 AUMF should occur via a sunset provision that requires the executive branch to cease any operations that are currently authorized under the 9/11 AUMF. If there are still any ongoing operations using the 9/11 AUMF as authorization, the executive branch should seek independent authorization for it, and if it has merit, should receive authorization without a problem. If the sunset provision occurs before President Obama leaves office, this will ensure that the new administration starts with a clean slate and without the unnecessary authorizations[133] still on the table.

A. Purpose of the ISIL AUMF

The purpose section is one of the most important sections of an AUMF because it defines the intent of the authorization itself and will serve as guidance to any further questions and interpretations that need to be made based off of the AUMF. The purpose should revolve around the defense of the national security of the United States and its allies, but should not get too specific so that it maintains some flexibility. The purpose needs to be more straightforward than the 9/11 AUMF so as to not be abused in the future.

The ISIL AUMF should include a strong recommendation that the actions taken by the United States be in conjunction with those of a broader coalition of governments.[134] This will ensure that the United States is not the only nation that is invested in the security and stability of the region. Although the United States should not rest its national security on the actions of a coalition, it is very important to have buy-in on this operation from our allies—particularly those within the region.[135] at 71 (stating it is "nearly impossible" for the 9/11 AUMF to lack a temporal limit because of its nexus to the September 11, 2001 attacks).

---

133. While this Note did not cover the 2002 AUMF, the ISIL AUMF must also contain a clause immediately repealing the 2002 AUMF. See, e.g., Letter from Susan E. Rice, supra note 9 ("[T]he [2002] Iraq AUMF is no longer used for any U.S. government activities and the Administration fully supports its repeal.").

134. This was similarly proposed in three of the draft ISIL AUMF proposals. WEED, supra note 73, at 7.

135. ABCA ARMIES PROGRAM, COALITION OPERATIONS HANDBOOK IX (4th ed. 2008), http://usacac.army.mil/cac2/AIWFC/COIN/repository/COH.pdf ("Another reason nations conduct coalition operations is that rarely can one nation go it alone either politically or militarily. . . . This blending of capabilities

In addition to the actual purpose of the authorization, the AUMF should declare consistency with the War Powers Resolution to show recognition of Congress' authority to declare war. It is included in all eight of the ISIL AUMFs proposed by the 113th Congress.[136] This can be done in a boilerplate fashion, but it goes to show that the President acknowledges Congress' power in this area.

B. Scope and Limitations of the ISIL AUMF

It is very important for Congress to specify whom it is authorizing the executive to target through the ISIL AUMF because an open-ended authorization will result in another 9/11 AUMF. The best way to ensure that the President is upholding Congress' intent of the authorization is to be specific in the language of the statute. The ISIL AUMF should list "ISIL" as the main target for the AUMF. While an authorization listing ISIL will solve the immediate problem, the authorization becomes more difficult if/when ISIL splinters off into subsequent organizations. When the coalition against ISIL is inevitably successful in dismantling and dispersing ISIL, the remainder of the organization will likely create different organizations with similar goals. The ISIL AUMF should also state that "subsequent organizations" to ISIL may be targeted as well, however, there should be a procedure in place to quickly authorize force on each of these subsequent organizations.

The determination of "subsequent organizations" or "associated forces" is difficult because terrorist organizations operate under a shroud of secrecy. The 9/11 AUMF has oversight problems because it gives the President the sole ability to determine and political legitimacy makes possible certain operations that a single nation could not or would not conduct unilaterally.").

---

136. S.J. Res. 47, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the Senate, Dec. 13, 2014, by Sen. Robert Menendez); H.R.J. Res. 128, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the House, Sept. 19, 2014, by Rep. John Larsen); S.J. Res. 44, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the Senate, Sept. 17, 2014, by Sen. Tim Kaine); H.R.J. Res. 125, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the House, Sept. 16, 2014, by Rep. Adam Schiff); H.R. 5415, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the House, Sept. 8, 2014, by Rep. Frank Wolf); S.J. Res. 42, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the Senate on Sept. 8, 2014, by Sen. Bill Nelson); S.J. Res. 43, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the Senate, Sept. 8, 2014, by Sen. James Inhofe); H.R.J. Res. 123, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the House, Sept. 8, 2014, by Rep. Darrell Issa).

whom he can target under the authorization.[137] This leaves Congress in the dark about who is being targeted and gives the President a blank slate to target whomever he can loosely tie to the September 11, 2001 attacks. Congress has no real ability to control whom the President targets because there is not a requirement in the 9/11 AUMF for the President to consult Congress before he targets groups or individuals under the authorization.[138] Congress' only recourse subsequent to military actions under the 9/11 AUMF is to alter the authorization or impeach the President. To avoid this problem in the ISIL AUMF, Congress should put in a requirement that any subsequent forces to be targeted under authorization of the ISIL AUMF must be approved by Congress. This procedure could be expedited in a particular committee so there is minimal loss of efficiency.[139] The committee would develop specific, non-public,[140] standards for target approval, and the executive branch would need to meet the criteria to be approved.[141]

It is in the best interest of the United States to eradicate ISIL and associated forces from the effected region, which means it is worth the full commitment of the United States Armed Forces. This means that Congress should not restrict the type of forces that could be employed by military commanders to accomplish their mission. When politicians decide that armed conflict is the answer, it should be up to military commanders to fight the fight. Several of the proposed ISIL AUMFs limit the deployment of 137. See Authorization for Use of Military Force, Pub. L. No. 107-40, 115 Stat. 224 (2001) ("[T]he President is authorized to use all necessary and appropriate force against those . . . he determines planned, authorized, committed, or aided the terrorist attacks . . . .") (emphasis added).

---

138. Id.

139. It is not unusual to expedite issues of importance to Congress. The War Powers Resolution created an exception that expedited procedures for Congress to declare war or authorize the use of military force. ELSEA & WEED, supra note 28, at 77–80.

140. It is important that there are specific standards, but it is equally important that the standards are not made public. If the standards are made public, terrorist organizations around the world will know what to do and not to do to be safe under the AUMF's targeting scheme.

141. One example of a standard that could be implemented is that the individual or group to be targeted must have a similar purpose as ISIL, as best determined by intelligence officials, and agreed upon by the coalition at the time.

ground combat forces.[142] Some of the proposed AUMFs make distinction between "in a combat role" and "direct combat operations,"[143] but this distinction is not realistic and inhibits military progress. These limitations would allow ground troops to deploy in limited advisor and targeting roles, but not in an effort to engage the enemy. The result of a limited ground combat authorization would likely be that the rules of engagement would be overly restrictive and put ground troops in unnecessary danger.[144] Including these limitations in an AUMF is in an effort to prevent the United States from getting engaged in another large-scale conflict with a high number of casualties. However, this significantly inhibits military commanders and potential progress.[145] Allowing a small amount of ground forces in key areas can set up our coalition partners to engage in the bulk of ground combat.[146]

The President initially stated that he would not use ground troops against ISIL, but some of his senior military commanders

142. H.R.J. Res. 128, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the House, Sept. 19, 2014, by Rep. John Larsen); S.J. Res. 44, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the Senate, Sept. 17, 2014, by Sen. Tim Kaine); H.R.J. Res. 125, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the House, Sept. 16, 2014, by Rep. Adam Schiff); S.J. Res. 42, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the Senate on Sept. 8, 2014, by Sen. Bill Nelson).

143. WEED, supra note 73, at 13.

144. See, e.g., Missy Ryan & Erin Cunningham, U.S. Advisers in Iraq Stay Out of Combat but See Fighting Edging Closer, WASH. POST (Jan. 1, 2015), http://www.washingtonpost.com/world/national-security/us-advisers-in-iraq-stay-out-of-combat-but-see-fight-edge-nearer/2015/01/01/6da57c3a-9038-11e4-ba53-a477d66580ed_story.html (reporting that U.S. service members stationed in Iraq in advisory roles have been subject to repeated artillery and rocket fire on the bases where they live).

145. See Jordain Carney, McKeon: AUMF That Bans Ground Troops 'DOA', NAT'L J. (Nov. 13, 2014), http://www.nationaljournal.com/defense/mckeon-aumf-that-bans-u-s-ground-troops-doa-20141113.

146. Paul Szoldra, Legendary Marine General James Mattis: To Fight ISIS, 'Boots On The Ground' Needs to Be an Option, BUS. INSIDER (Sept. 18, 2014, 11:36 AM), http://www.businessinsider.com/mattis-testimony-isis-2014-9. Additionally, the United States should not provide comfort to ISIL by informing them that they will not encounter any U.S. ground forces. Id. (quoting General James Mattis) ("Whichever strategy is chosen, we should be reticent in telling our adversaries in advance . . . which of our capabilities we will not employ. . . . [W]e may not wish to reassure our enemies in advance that they will not see American 'boots on the ground' . . . .").

appear to have a different opinion on the issue.[147] In the President's draft ISIL AUMF, he proposes limiting ground troops from "enduring offensive ground combat operations."[148] The list of examples in which the President wishes to employ ground troops are "rescue operations," "the use of special operations forces to take military action against ISIL leadership," and "intelligence collection and sharing, missions to enable kinetic strikes, or the provision of operational planning and other forms of advice and assistance to partner forces."[149] The scope of operations limitations in the President's draft ISIL AUMF is a way to keep the United States from getting into another major ground conflict. It is a good middle-ground solution to the use or limitation of ground forces, because it provides for their use in important situations, but limits their over-use.

In addition to the lack of restrictions on ground troops, no geographical limitation should be placed on the ISIL AUMF other than to explicitly state that these actions must be carried out "abroad." Two of the proposed ISIL AUMFs have listed geographical limitations of Iraq and Syria.[150] Placing geographical limitations puts ISIL on notice of safe havens and allows the enemy to operate and control border regions and use the border as a defense. It is not possible to predict where ISIL will go when confronted with superior force, so the best option is to leave the President's and military's options open.

C. Reports to Congress

Due to the continuously shifting nature of military operations, Congress should be kept up to date by means of regular re-

147. See Helene Cooper, David D. Kirkpatrick and Rick Gladstone, Top U.S. General Says He's Open to Using Ground Troops to Retake Mosul, N.Y. TIMES (Nov. 13, 2014), http://www.nytimes.com/2014/11/14/us/top-us-general-says-hes-open-to-using-ground-troops-in-iraq.html?ref=world&_r=0; Statement by the President on ISIL, supra note 57 ("[The fight against ISIL] will not involve American combat troops fighting on foreign soil."). The Department of Defense has subsequently admitted to employing ground troops in both Iraq and Syria. Department of Defense Background Briefing on Enhancing Counter-ISIL Operations, U.S. DEP'T OF DEF. (Oct. 30, 2015) (noting that special operations forces are "continuing raids and joint operations in both Iraq and Syria").

148. Obama Proposed Resolution, supra note 59, at 2.

149. 2015 Press Release, supra note 59.

150. See Obama Proposed Resolution, supra note 59.

ports on the progress and actions taken by the executive branch. These reports should come every sixty days throughout the duration of the authorization. The reports should include, at a minimum, the requirements required by Congressman Issa's proposed ISIL AUMF: "status of all actions taken;" "description of all proposed actions;" "status of engagement of allies of the United States and international coalitions in combating" ISIL; and "estimated budgetary effects of actions proposed."[151] The description of all proposed actions is a way for Congress to understand the executive branch's strategy going forward in the region. In addition to these requirements, the executive branch should also be required to submit a report identifying any other ISIL associated forces or other groups that the executive branch wishes to engage under the authorization of the ISIL AUMF. These requirements will ensure that Congress has a thorough understanding of what is taking place with regards to military action in the region and are in accordance with the constitutional division of powers in the United States.

D. Sunset Provision

Lastly, the ISIL AUMF should contain a sunset provision that ends the authorization three years from the date of enactment, unless reauthorized by Congress. A sunset provision gives the President, diplomats, and the military enough time to make an honest assessment and effort at achieving the purpose of the authorization without committing to a long-term conflict. If it becomes clear that the purpose of the AUMF cannot be met within the three-year authorization, Congress can reauthorize it as necessary. The purpose behind this limited amount of time is so that the United States does not get entrenched in another long-term conflict, such as Iraq and Afghanistan. The 9/11 AUMF lacks a sunset provision and has been stretched into a de-facto long-term authorization to fight global terrorism. A sunset provision sends the signal to regional allies in the Middle East that the United States intends to conclusively limit its presence in the region.

---

151. H.R.J. Res. 123, 113th Cong. (2014) (as introduced to the House, Sept. 8, 2014, by Rep. Darrell Issa).

V. CONCLUSION

Congress is solely responsible for authorizing and declaring war[152] and should execute its constitutional responsibilities. Congress should not be allowed to shirk its responsibility based on political considerations while the members of the United States Armed Forces are held in limbo as the military situation in the region deteriorates. It is important for the country, particularly its armed forces, to know where the government stands on any particular armed conflict.[153] By Congress allowing the President to use an outdated authorization, Congress conceded some of its own constitutional responsibilities and did subsequent Congress' a disservice, as future administrations will use this as precedent. A new ISIL AUMF should include a specific scope and limitations provision as well as a sunset provision. A specific ISIL AUMF should be a high priority for both Congress and the President and should be vigorously debated to ensure the mistakes made in previous authorizations are not repeated.

---

152. U.S. CONST. art. I, § 8, cl. 11. (stating Congress shall have the power "[t]o declare War").

153. See generally John T. Bennett, Hagel: 'I Don't Know' When White House Will Seek AUMF for Islamic State, DEFENSENEWS (Nov. 13, 2014, 7:32 PM), http://www.defensenews.com/article/20141113/CONGRESSWATCH/311130033/Hagel-Don-t-Know-When-White-House-Will-Seek-AUMF-Islamic-State (stating that the Secretary of Defense for the first few months of the ISIL strikes, Secretary Chuck Hagel, does not know when the President is going to seek a new AUMF).

THE UNIVERSITY OF MEMPHIS LAW REVIEW

VOLUME 43 | 2012–2013 | BOOKS 1–4

JANE MARIE LEWIS
Editor-in-Chief

NATALIE F. MALONE
Managing Editor

JOSHUA BAKER
Senior Notes Editor

ELIZABETH ROGERS
Senior Articles Editor

JESSICA BRADLEY
Symposium Editor

GLEN KYLE
Business Editor

BRIGID WELSH
Research Editor

ARTICLES EDITORS

ANDREW FRANCISCO
JAKE KASSER
N. CHASE TEEPLES
KATE MARA

NOTES EDITORS

KIRKLAND BIBLE
ANDREW DROKE
DREW DAVIS
WHITNEY GOODE
WILLIAM TERRELL
MATTHEW DOWTY
JASON PERRYMAN

SENIOR STAFF

FRANKLIN AMMONS
LINDSEY GILL
MCCLURE PARHAM
RYAN SMITH
MORGAN BERNARD
JAMES HICKS
GAVIN SMITH
BRETT STAUFFER
JESSICA CHANDLER
ZACHARY JONES
JEFF SMITH
HENRY TALBOT

STAFF

NAYA BEDINI
D. ALEX BURKHALTER III
MICHELE GWINN
ALEX JENNINGS
ABIGAIL MABRY
HOLLY PALMER
BENJAMIN SEAMON
JAMES STONE
CHRISTOPHER TUTOR
CAMERON WATSON
HANNAH BLEAVINS
KYLE CUMMINS
EVERETT L. HIXSON III
KATHARINE JONES
ADAM NELSON
W. MCDONALD PLOSSER
RYAN SPICKARD
BRANDON STOUT
JENNIFER VALLOR
PENINA WENDER
RYAN BURGETT
CHARLES W. GILBREATH II
SAMUEL IVY
MAX KLEIN
SANDRA NEWCOMBE
EMMA REDDEN
KENDALL STIVERS
MATT THOMAS
SAMANTHA WARD
BRANDON WHITE

FACULTY ADVISOR

ANDREW J. MCCLURG

INTERIM DEAN

WILLIAM P. KRATZKE

THE UNIVERSITY OF MEMPHIS LAW REVIEW

VOLUME 42 | 2011–2012 | BOOKS 1–4

CARL EPPLER
Editor-in-Chief

BILL O'CONNOR
Business Editor

JONATHAN LINDSEY
Managing Editor

ISAAC KIMES
Symposium Editor

MANDY FLOYD
Senior Articles Editor

LEIGHANN NESS
Articles Editor

ELIZABETH MCCLELLAN
Articles Editor

MATT KERNODLE
Articles Editor

RUSSELL HAYES
Research Editor

LORI HOLYFIELD
Senior Notes Editor

SAMANTHA BENNETT
Notes Editor

SALLY JOYNER
Notes Editor

ATINA RIZK
Notes Editor

ANNA BENSON
Notes Editor

ERIC MONTIERTH
Notes Editor

ANNA RUDMAN SANTOS
Notes Editor

TYLER PARKS
Notes Editor

SENIOR STAFF

MADELINE BERTASI
TIFFANY DAVIDSON
JESSIE FLANDERS
CHRIS FRULLA
RYAN HAGENBROK
CHEYNE HARRIS
EMILY LONG
JAMES MUSICE
WILL RAINES
CHARLIE SCHAEFFER
NEELY THOMAS
GWEN VU

STAFF

FRANKLIN AMMONS
JOSHUA BAKER
MORGAN BERNARD
KIRKLAND BIBLE
JESSICA BRADLEY
JESSICA CHANDLER
DREW DAVIS
MATTHEW DOWTY
ANDREW DROKE
ANDREW FRANCISCO
LINDSEY GILL
WHITNEY GOODE
JAMES HICKS
ZACHARY JONES
JAKE KASSER
GLEN KYLE
JANE MARIE LEWIS
NATALIE MALONE
KATE MARA
MCCLURE PARHAM
JASON PERRYMAN
ELIZABETH ROGERS
GAVIN SMITH
JEFFREY SMITH
RYAN SMITH
BRETT STAUFFER
HENRY TALBOT
CHASE TEEPLES
WILLIAM TERRELL
BRIGID WELSH

FACULTY ADVISOR

ANDREW J. MCCLURG

DEAN

KEVIN H. SMITH

THE UNIVERSITY OF MEMPHIS LAW REVIEW

VOLUME 41 | 2010–2011 | BOOKS 1–4

D. ERIC SETTERLUND
Editor-in-Chief

LAURA DEAKINS
Business Editor

KASEY WEILAND
Managing Editor

STEPHANIE BADA
Symposium Editor

DIANA COMES
Senior Articles Editor

BEN ALEXANDER
Articles Editor

MEREDITH STEWART
Articles Editor

MARSHALL DIGMON
Articles Editor

NICHOLAS CHRISTIANSEN
Research Editor

SARAH SPITZER
Senior Notes Editor

TRACY BRADSHAW
Notes Editor

MATTHEW CRIGGER
Notes Editor

NIC VESCOVO
Notes Editor

DOUG BROCK
Notes Editor

BRANDON REEDY
Notes Editor

LINDSEY WATSON
Notes Editor

COURTNEY SPEARS
Notes Editor

SENIOR STAFF

AARON CHAPLIN
BEN CROWE
TOMAS DUCK
HILLARY HILL
CARA HOWE
JACOB HUBBULL
CARSON HUNTER
JAMIE KIDD
DANIELLE MCCOLLUM
ERIC MCENERNEY
JASON MCCUISTION
ANDREW PATE
DARRELL PHILLIPS

STAFF

SAMANTHA BENNETT
ANNA BENSON
MADELINE BERTASI
TIFFANY DAVIDSON
CARL EPPLER
JESSIE FLANDERS
AMANDA FLOYD
CHRIS FRULLA
RYAN HAGENBROK
CHEYNE HARRIS
RUSSELL HAYES
LORI HOLYFIELD
SALLY JOYNER
MATTHEW KERNODLE
ISAAC KIMES
JONATHAN LINDSEY
EMILY LONG
ELIZABETH MCCLELLAN
ERIC MONTIERTH
JAMES MUSICE
LEIGHANN NESS
BILL O'CONNOR
TYLER PARKS
WILL RAINES
ATINA RIZK
ANNA RUDMAN SANTOS
CHARLIE SCHAEFFER
NEELY THOMAS
GWEN VU

FACULTY ADVISOR

ANDREW J. MCCLURG

DEAN

KEVIN H. SMITH

THE UNIVERSITY OF MEMPHIS LAW REVIEW

VOLUME 40 | 2009–2010 | BOOKS 1–4

BLAKE NEILL
Editor-in-Chief

DAVID WEATHERMAN
Business Editor

DEREK CARSON
Managing Editor

CHELSEA BROWN
Symposium Editor

FRANKIE SPERO
Senior Articles Editor

MARK ERSKINE
Articles Editor

MATTHEW GABRIEL
Articles Editor

ANNA VERGOS BLAIR
Articles Editor

SHEA BARKER
Senior Notes Editor

CALLIE CALDWELL
Notes Editor

MEHRNAZ JALALI
Notes Editor

ANGELA LAWSON
Notes Editor

ERNO LINDNER
Notes Editor

DYLAN SPADUZZI
Notes Editor

JASON YASINSKY
Notes Editor

SENIOR STAFF

DRU CARPENTER
ADAM DENOBRIGA
MELISA T. HAYES
KENNETH HICKMAN
DAVID HOUBRE
KELLY NANNEY
SALLY REDDY
MONICA REJAEI
JONATHAN STOKES
PABLO VARELA
BRIDGET WARNER
AMANDA WATERS
SHANNON WILEY

STAFF

BEN ALEXANDER
STEPHANIE BADA
TRACY BRADSHAW
DOUG BROCK
AARON CHAPLIN
NICHOLAS CHRISTIANSEN
DIANA COMES
MATTHEW CRIGGER
BEN CROWE
LAURA DEAKINS
JAMES DIGMON
TOMAS DUCK
HILLARY HILL
CARA HOWE
JACOB HUBBELL
CARSON HUNTER
JAMIE KIDD
DANIELLE MCCOLLUM
ERIC MCENERNEY
JASON MCCUISTION
ANDREW PATE
DARRELL PHILLIPS
LINDSEY RAE
BRANDON REEDY
D. ERIC SETTERLUND
COURTNEY SPEARS
SARAH SPITZER
MEREDITH STEWART
NICHOLAS VESCOVO
KASEY WEILAND

FACULTY ADVISOR

ANDREW J. MCCLURG

DEAN

KEVIN H. SMITH

THE UNIVERSITY OF MEMPHIS LAW REVIEW

Volume 39 | 2008–2009 | Books 1–4

Shannon Hoffert
Editor-in-Chief

Justin Chu
Business Editor

Jessica F. Salonus
Managing Editor

Jera Bradshaw
Symposium Editor

Bill Roach, Jr.
Senior Articles Editor

Joanna Williams
Articles Editor

Gena Lutz
Articles Editor

Jonathan Nelson
Senior Notes Editor

Cory Brown
Notes Editor

Gabrielle Lewis
Notes Editor

Mary Wagner
Notes Editor

Niki Huber
Notes Editor

Shannon Phillips
Notes Editor

Brie Wallace
Notes Editor

Julia Stowers
Notes Editor

Senior Staff

Joseph B. Baker
Clay Billingsley
David Brackstone
Kelly Flinn
J. David Jeans
Michael Joiner
Julia Kavanagh
Katherine Kizer
Jennifer Longo
Megan McCune
Michael McLaren
Melody Oliver
Robert Stevens
John A. Stevenson
Richard Townley

Staff

Shea Barker
Rebekah Bradley
Chelsea Brown
Dru Carpenter
Derek Carson
Callie Crawford
Adam DeNobriga
Mark Erskine
Matthew Gabriel
Melisa T. Hayes
Kenneth Hickman
David Houbre
Mehrnaz Jalali
Angela Lawson
Erno Lindner
Kelly Nanney
Blake Neill
Sally Reddy
Monica Rejaei
Dylan Spaduzzi
Frankie Spero
Jonathan Stokes
Joseph Underwood
Pablo Varela
Anna Vergos Blair
Bridget Warner
Amanda Waters
David Weatherman
Shannon Wiley
Jason Yasinsky

Faculty Advisors

William P. Kratzke
Steven J. Mulroy

Dean

Kevin H. Smith

THE UNIVERSITY OF MEMPHIS LAW REVIEW

VOLUME 38 | 2007–2008 | BOOKS 1–4

SAYERA J. IQBAL QASIM
Editor-in-Chief

ANDREA MCKINNON
Business Editor

MARY MARGARET GOSSETT
Managing Editor

S. ANTHONY SILVA
Symposium Editor

JOHN M. HAIRE
Senior Articles Editor

LINDSEY GREER
Articles Editor

JESSICA WOOD
Articles Editor

KRISTIN DUNAVANT
Senior Notes Editor

NICOLE BERMEL
Notes Editor

CHRISTEN CASTLEBERRY
Notes Editor

M. JASON MARTIN
Notes Editor

RYAN WILSON
Notes Editor

ASSOCIATE EDITORS

JENNIFER BELLOTT
HAILEY DAVID
MICHAEL FLYNN
RUSSELL FOX
ANDREW GARDELLA
MICHAEL GOODIN
CRAIG HODGE
JEAN HOLBERT
KEVIN HUDSON
ADAM JOHNSON
ANDREW MCREE
TIFFANY TAYLOR
JOSH WALLIS
CHRISTY WASHINGTON
BRITTAN WEBB
JENNY WILLIAMS
JOSH WOODS

STAFF

JOSEPH B. BAKER
CLAY BILLINGSLEY
DAVID BRACKSTONE
JERA BRADSHAW
CORY BROWN
JUSTIN CHU
KELLY FLINN
SHANNON HOFFERT
NIKI HUBER
J. DAVID JEANS
MICHAEL JOINER
JULIA KAVANAGH
KATHERINE KIZER
GABRIELLE LEWIS
JENNIFER LONGO
GENNA LUTZ
MEGAN MCCUNE
MICHAEL MCLAREN
JONATHAN NELSON
MELODY OLIVER
SHANNON PHILLIPS
WILLIAM A. ROACH, JR.
JESSICA F. SALONUS
ROBERT STEVENS
JOHN A. STEVENSON
JULIA STOWERS
RICHARD TOWNLEY
MARY WAGNER
BRIE WALLACE
JOANNA WILLIAMS

FACULTY ADVISORS

WILLIAM P. KRATZKE
STEVEN J. MULROY

DEAN

JAMES R. SMOOT

THE UNIVERSITY OF MEMPHIS LAW REVIEW

VOLUME 37 | 2006–2007 | BOOKS 1–4

BRYCE W. ASHBY
Editor-in-Chief

JOHN M. ZUCK
Business Editor

JENNIFER A. JACKSON
Managing Editor

LAURA S. MARTIN
Symposium Editor

JESSICA S. BANTI
Senior Articles Editor

MELISSA A. TRACY
Articles Editor

NOLAN M. JOHNSON
Articles Editor

BRANDI N. REAVES
Senior Notes and Comments Editor

D. AARON LOVE
Notes and Comments Editor

ASHLEY HENDRIX
Notes and Comments Editor

WILLIAM ROBERTS
Notes and Comments Editor

EMILY TEAGUE
Notes and Comments Editor

ASSOCIATE EDITORS

TAYLOR BERGER
TETYANA BRYAN
OSCAR CARR
ANDREA CLARK
MARGARET COOPER
PATRICIA EVERITT
MARCI HARRIS
ANDRE MATHIS
BRANDON MEREDITH
C. SHAWN O'DONNELL
DANIEL RADER
JASON RIDENOUR
WILLIAM SCOTT
NATHAN SHELBY
AMY STOKES
EMILY VANN
CHRISTOPHER WEBB

STAFF

JENNIFER BELLOTT
NICOLE BERMEL
CHRISTEN CASTLEBERRY
HAILEY DAVID
KRISTIN DUNAVANT
MICHAEL FLYNN
RUSSELL FOX
ANDREW GARDELLA
MEG GOSSETT
MICHAEL GOODIN
LINDSEY GREER
JOHN HAIRE
CRAIG HODGE
JEAN HOLBERT
KEVIN HUDSON
ADAM JOHNSON
JASON MARTIN
ANDREA MCKINNON
ANDREW MCREE
SAYERA QASIM
S. ANTHONY SILVA
TIFFANY TAYLOR
JOSH WALLIS
CHRISTY WASHINGTON
BRITTAN WEBB
JENNY WILLIAMS
RYAN WILSON
JESSICA WOOD
JOSH WOODS

FACULTY ADVISORS

WILLIAM P. KRATZKE
KEVIN H. SMITH

DEAN

JAMES R. SMOOT

THE UNIVERSITY OF MEMPHIS LAW REVIEW

VOLUME 36 | 2005–2006 | BOOKS 1–4

PAULA PROCTOR DANIEL
Editor-in-Chief

J. LELAND MURPHREE
Business Editor

CURTIS H. GOETSCH
Managing Editor

THOMAS W. NESBITT
Symposium Editor

VIRGINIA L. H. NESBITT
Articles Editor

JOHN O. ALEXANDER IV
Articles Editor

JUSTIN E. MITCHELL
Articles Editor

AMY C. WORRELL
Senior Notes and Comments Editor

RACHAEL HUTCHINGS
Notes and Comments Editor

LAURA OWINGS
Notes and Comments Editor

CASEY SHANNON
Notes and Comments Editor

MARIJA SOKOLOV
Notes and Comments Editor

ASSOCIATE EDITORS

MEGAN E. ARTHUR
JAMES P. BALFOUR
JACK BREWER
PAUL G. BUCHMANN
CARRIE E. EAKER
CHARLES L. HOLLIDAY
ABIGAIL S. JONES
BROOKS E. KOSTAKIS
JESSICA MAY
BRANDT MCMILLAN
MARY PARKS
RACHEL SHARP
GEORGE V. STEFFENS IV
ANNE-MARIE SVOLTO
JEREMY SYKES
AMELIA K. THOMPSON
WILLIAM J. WYATT

STAFF

BRYCE ASHBY
JESSICA BANTI
TAYLOR BERGER
TETYANA BRYAN
OSCAR CARR
ANDREA CLARK
MELISSA CLIETT
MARGARET COOPER
PATRICIA EVERITT
MARCI HARRIS
LARA HENDRIX
JENNIFER JACKSON
NOLAN JOHNSON
AARON LOVE
LAURA MARTIN
ANDRE MATHIS
BRANDON MEREDITH
C. SHAWN O'DONNELL
DANIEL RADER
BRANDI REAVES
JASON RIDENOUR
WILLIAM ROBERTS
WILLIAM SCOTT
NATHAN SHELBY
AMY STOKES
EMILY TEAGUE
EMILY VANN
CHRISTOPHER WEBB
BETSY WEINTRAUB
JOHN ZUCK

FACULTY ADVISORS

WILLIAM P. KRATZKE
KEVIN H. SMITH

DEAN

JAMES R. SMOOT

THE UNIVERSITY OF MEMPHIS LAW REVIEW

VOLUME 35 | 2004–2005 | BOOKS 1–4

J. AMMON SMARTT
Editor-in-Chief

CAMPBELL C .STEELE
Business Editor

GEORGE W. SINGLETON
Managing Editor

JENNIFER C. PARKER
Symposium Editor

THOMAS E. CLARY III
Articles Editor

RICHARD EVERETT COLLINS
Articles Editor

DAVID D. AYLIFFE
Senior Notes and Comments Editor

ALBERT M. CHOLLET
Notes and Comments Editor

BETHANY M. GILLILAND
Notes and Comments Editor

JONATHAN W. DOOLAN
Notes and Comments Editor

J. DANIEL HUFFINES
Notes and Comments Editor

SENIOR STAFF

JODI BLACK
JAMES ANDREW FARMER
NICOLE FREELAND GIBSON
GARLAND D. GODDARD
THOMAS GREER
WILLIAM A. HALL
JOSHUA HILLIS
ROBERT C. HUMPHREYS
R. BRITTON KELLY
DEENA L. KNOPF
BRENT A. MORRIS
JOHN B. ROSENQUEST IV
CHAD MICHAEL ROSS
CARRIE WILSON SMITH
TYLER D. SMITH
TRICIA THOR
THORNELL WILLIAMS, JR.
CHRISTOPHER A. WILSON
TRICIA MARIE YORK

ASSOCIATE STAFF

JOHN O. ALEXANDER IV
MEGAN E. ARTHUR
JAMES P. BALFOUR
JACK BREWER
PAUL G. BUCHMANN
PAULA PROCTOR DANIEL
CARRIE E. EAKER
CURTIS GOETSCH
CHARLES L. HOLLIDAY
RACHAEL HUTCHINGS
ABIGAIL S. JONES
BROKKS E. KOSTAKIS
JESSICA MAY
BRANDT MCMILLAN
JUSTIN E. MITCHELL
J. LELAND MURPHREE
THOMAS W. NESBITT
VIRGINIA L. H. NESBITT
LAURA M. OWINGS
MARY PARKS
KRISTEN A. ROWAN
CASEY SHANNON
RACHEL D. SHARP
MARIJA SOKOLOV
GEORGE V. STEFFENS IV
ANNE-MARIE SVOLTO
JEREMY SYKES
A. KENDRICK THOMPSON
AMY C. WORRELL
WILLIAM J. WYATT

FACULTY ADVISORS

WILLIAM P. KRATZKE
KEVIN H. SMITH

DEAN

JAMES R. SMOOT

THE UNIVERSITY OF MEMPHIS LAW REVIEW

VOLUME 34 | 2003–2004 | NUMBERS 1–4

GREGORY J. PEASE
Editor-in-Chief

JUSTIN N. JOY
Articles Editor

SHARON K. KOLB
Managing Editor

BRIAN S. SHELTON
Articles Editor

SETH M. MCNAMEE
Notes Editor

BENJAMIN T. REESE
Research Editor

LYNN W. THOMPSON
Notes Editor

JONATHAN L. BOBBITT
Comments Editor

JOHN ERIC BUTLER
Comments Editor

SENIOR STAFF

LACEY ADAIR
CARA BAER
SCOTT G. BAKER
JOSHUA B. BISHOP
BETTY CAMPBELL
JENNIFER H. CASE
L. CLAYTON CULPEPPER
MARTIN DUNN
REAGAN F. GOINS
LESLEY GUNTHER
MISTY LAY HARRIS
BRENT A. HEILIG
A. BROOKS IRVINE
DANIEL E. KING
WHITNEY LAWSON
CHARLES MITCHELL
MASON W. WILSON

ASSOCIATE STAFF

DAVID D. AYLIFFE
JOANNE L. BLACK
ALBERT L. CHOLLET III
THOMAS E. CLARY III
RICHARD EVERETT COLLINS
JONATHAN W. DOOLAN
JAMES ANDREW FARMER
NICOLE F. GIBSON
BETHANY M. GILLILAND
GARLAND D. GODDARD
THOMAS R. GREER
WILLIAM A. HALL
JOSHUA A. HILLIS
J. DANIEL HUFFINES
ROBERT C. HUMPHREYS
R. BRITTON KELLY
DEENA L. KNOPF
BRENT A. MORRIS
JENNIFER C. PARKER
JOHN BUTLER ROSENQUEST IV
CHAN MICHAEL ROSS
GEORGE W. SINGLETON
J. AMMON SMARTT
CARRIE WILSON SMITH
TYLER D. SMITH
CAMPBELL C. STEELE
TRICIA THOR
THORNELL WILLIAMS, JR.
CHRISTOPHER A. WILSON
TRICIA MARIE YORK

FACULTY ADVISOR

RALPH C. BRASHIER

INTERIM DEAN

RODNEY K. SMITH

THE UNIVERSITY OF MEMPHIS LAW REVIEW

National Headquarters for the National Conference of Law Reviews

VOLUME 33 | 2002–2003 | NUMBERS 1–4

JAY E. EBELHAR
Editor-in-Chief

ANGELA D. CLANTON
Articles Editor

DAVID G. MCDOWELL
Managing Editor

CARRIE ANN ROHRSCHEIB
Articles Editor

MICHELLE R. CHAPMAN
Notes Editor

SEAN H. MUIZERS
Research Editor

KENNETH SOUTHERLIN, JR.
Notes Editor

CLINT H. SCOTT
Comments Editor

JAMES V. THOMPSON
NCLR Chairperson

BRADLEY H. SMITH
Comments Editor

SENIOR STAFF

JENNIFER R. ALLEN
SCOTT DOUGLAS BLOUNT
R. ALEX BOALS
EMILY A. FARROW
WILLIAM THOMAS FIALA
GWYN R. FISHER
DON L. HEARN, JR.
KASSIE MINGLE HESS
JEFF MCGOFF
TIMOTHY MCINTIRE
JASON NOWLIN
LISA A. OVERALL
ASHBY F. RICHBOURG
JULIE A. RUBIO
MELISSA G. STEWART
KATHRYN M. WALL
KYLE M. WIGGINS
M. ANDREW WOHLFARTH
JON ASHLEY YORK

ASSOCIATE STAFF

LACEY L. ADAIR
CARA BAER
SCOTT G. BAKER
JOSHUA B. BISHOP
JONATHAN L. BOBBITT
JOHN ERIC BUTLER
BETTY CAMPBELL
JENNIFER H. CASE
L. CLAYTON CULPEPPER
MARTIN DUNN
REAGAN F. GOINS
LESLEY GUNTHER
MISTY LAY HARRIS
BRENT A. HEILIG
A. BROOKS IRVINE JUSTIN JOY
DANIEL E. KING
SHARON KOLB
WHITNEY L. LAWSON
DAVID M. MCELYEA
SETH M. MCNAMEE
CHARLES MITCHELL
JODY E. OKRZESIK
GREGORY J. PEASE
BENJAMIN T. REESE
BRIAN S. SHELTON
LYNN W. THOMPSON
MASON W. WILSON

FACULTY ADVISORS

RALPH C. BRASHIER
LARS G. GUSTAFSSON

DEAN

DONALD J. POLDEN

THE UNIVERSITY OF MEMPHIS LAW REVIEW

National Headquarters for the National Conference of Law Reviews

VOLUME 32 | 2001–2002 | NUMBERS 1–4

JEFFREY K. FLEISHMANN
Editor-in-Chief

ELISSA M. MULROONEY
Articles Editor

SAMUEL F. PHILLIPS
Managing Editor

DEBRA A. WILES
Articles Editor

JOSEPH BEAN
Notes Editor

JONI G. SMITH
Research Editor

DALLAS SCOTT III
Notes Editor

ALICIA COX
Comments Editor

ZACHARY M. MOORE
NCLR Chairperson

ARTHUR M. FOWLER III
Comments Editor

SENIOR STAFF

DAVID C. BODETTE
WM. LEE GRIBBLE II
TOMEKA R. HART
AUDREY A. HEADRICK
YOLANDA R. KIGHT
BRYAN B. MARTIN
JEFF MATUKEWICZ
ANGELA DE SANCTIS MYERS
PHILIP M. MIZE
PAUL W. MOSER
TRACY OVERSTREET
JOHN PEEBLES
BRENT SILER
TODD A. SNOW
JENNIFER TOOMBS
AMY ESCUE UEKMAN
SHAUNA FULLER VEACH
J. ANDREW WILEY

ASSOCIATE STAFF

JENNIFER R. ALLEN
STEVEN E. BARLOW
SCOTT DOUGLAS BLOUNT
R. ALEX BOALS
MICHELLE R. CHAPMAN
ANGELA D. CLANTON
JAY A. EBELHAR
ASHLEE B. ELLIS
EMILY A. FARROW
WILLIAM THOMAS FIALA
GWYN R. FISHER
DON. L. HEARN, JR.
KASSIE MINGLE HESS
NORRIS A. KESSLER III
DAVID G. MCDOWELL
JEFF MCGOFF
TIMOTHY MCINTIRE
SEAN H. MUIZERS
JASON NOWLIN
LISA A. OVERALL
ASHBY F. RICHBOURG
CARRIE ANN ROHRSCHEIB
JULIE A. RUBIO
CLINT H. SCOTT
BRADLEY H. SMITH
KENNETH SOUTHERLIN, JR.
MELISSA G. STEWART
JAMES V. THOMPSON
KATHRYN M. WALL
KYLE M. WIGGINS
M. ANDREW WOHLFARTH
JON ASHLEY YORK

FACULTY ADVISORS

RALPH C. BRASHIER
LARS G. GUSTAFSSON

DEAN

DONALD J. POLDEN

THE UNIVERSITY OF MEMPHIS LAW REVIEW

National Headquarters for the National Conference of Law Reviews

VOLUME 31 | 2000–2001 | NUMBERS 1–4

AARON R. PARKER
Editor-in-Chief

A. KENT GIESELMANN, JR.
Managing Editor

TODD L. FULKS
Notes Editor

SARA E. BARNETT
Articles Editor

J. BRANDON MCWHERTER
Notes Editor

JAMES BENJAMIN EARTHMAN
Comments Editor

BARRY J. MCWHIRTER
Articles Editor

LAUREL L. CLEEK
Research Editor

COURTNEY E. NUTTALL
Comments Editor

DAVID P. TIEMAN
NCLR Chairman

SENIOR STAFF

MICHAEL G. BYERS
MIRIAM L. CLEMONS WILL COCHRAN
SHERRI R. COLLINS
MICHAEL D. DODD
JOEL K. GERBER
W. BRADLEY GILMER
MARY R. HACKETT
PAMELA A. HAUN
TYLER C. HUSKEY
MICHAEL KREIS
ANDREW E. LOOPE
JULIE YARBOROUGH MCLAUGHLIN
JENNIFER LYN MILLER
LANCE K. OLIVER
SCOTT OSTROW
BRADLEY J. OWENS
BRANDY S. PARRISH
SHELBY L. SHEFFIELD
SELINA C. WILLIAMS
JACOB C. ZWEIG

ASSOCIATE STAFF

JOSEPH BEAN
DAVID BODETTE
ALICIA COX
JEFFREY K. FLEISHMANN
ARTHUR M. FOWLER III
WM. LEE GRIBBLE II
TOMEKA R. HART
AUDREY A. HEADRICK
YOLANDA R. KIGHT
MURIEL M. MALONE
BRYAN B. MARTIN
JEFF MATUKEWICZ
ANEGLA DESANCTIS MYERS
PHILIP M. MIZE
ZACHARY M. MOORE
PAUL W. MOSER
ELISSA M. MULROONEY
TRACY OVERSTREET
SHANNON PADGETT
JOHN PEEBLES
SAMUEL F. PHILLIPS
DALLAS SCOTT III
BRENT SILER
JONI G. SMITH
TODD A. SNOW
JENNIFER TOOMBS
AMY ESCUE UEKMAN
SHANNA FULLER VEACH
DEBRA A. WILES
J. ANDREW WILEY

FACULTY ADVISORS

RALPH C. BRASHIER
LARS G. GUSTAFSSON

DEAN

DONALD J. POLDEN

American Bar Association: Joint Task Force on Reversing the School-to-Prison Pipeline

SARAH E. REDFIELD & JASON P. NANCE

I. OVERVIEW OF THE SCHOOL-TO-PRISON PIPELINE PROBLEM.......12
A. Introduction 12
1. The Context..15
a. The Meaning of Disproportionality 16
b. Differences in relationships and expectations relate to the exercise of discretion, and both can be damning 22
c. Bad or worse behavior is not the explanation for disproportionality 27
d. Exclusion and detention do not achieve better outcomes for students 31
e. Nor are the schools safer 36
B. The Manifestations 40
1. Disproportionality manifests itself all along the pipeline where students of color are poorly served.....................40
a. Students of color are disproportionately lower achievers and unable to read at basic or above......40
b. Students of color suffer disproportionately because of lower expectations and lack of engagement......44
c. Students of color are disproportionately retained in grade or excluded because of high stakes testing ...44
d. Students of color are disproportionately subject to more frequent and harsher punishment...................47
e. Students of color are disproportionately referred to law enforcement or subject to school-related arrest 51
f. Students of color are disproportionately placed in alternative schools..52
g. Students of color disproportionately drop out of school and fail to graduate from high school..........53

h. Students of color disproportionately feel threatened at school and suffer consequences as victims 58

2. For students with disabilities, disproportionality manifests itself all along the pipeline in areas similar to those outlined in the preceding section on students of color 60

a. Students with disabilities are disproportionately students of color, especially in discretionary categories and these categories compound 60

b. Students with disabilities are disproportionately less likely to be academically proficient 64

c. Students with disabilities are disproportionately disciplined 65

d. Students with disabilities are disproportionately retained in grade but still dropping and out failing to graduate 67

e. Students with disabilities are disproportionately likely to spend time out of the regular classroom, to be secluded, restrained or placed in alternative schools 67

f. Students with disabilities are disproportionately referred to law enforcement or subject to school-related arrest and incarceration 69

g. Students with disabilities are disproportionately bullied and victimized 71

3. Similar disproportionalities and difficulties impact LGBTQ and GNC young people..................................71

a. LGBTQ youth suffer in a disproportionately difficult school climate 72

b. LGBTQ and GNC youth are disciplined more severely in school and juvenile justice 73

4. These same disproportionalities experienced in school plague the juvenile justice system 73

a. Youth of color are disproportionately arrested 77

b. Youth of color are disproportionately referred, detained (longer), charged, and held 80

c. Youth with disabilities show the same disproportionalities and experiences in juvenile justice as well 83

d. LGBTQ youth are also disproportionately represented in juvenile settings 86
II. SOCIETAL CONSEQUENCES FOR IMPRISONING YOUTH 87
III. CAUSES OF THE SCHOOL-TO-PRISON PIPELINE 93
A. Criminalization of School Discipline 94
B. The Increased Presence of Law Enforcement Officers in Schools 97
C. The Role of Implicit Bias and Related Unconscious Associations/Decisions 107
1. Acknowledging that prior intervention has not proven sufficient 114
2. Summary of implicit bias research and its implications for the school-to-prison pipeline 117
3. Summary of group dynamics research and its implications for the school-to-prison pipeline............120
4. Summary of micromessaging research and its implications for the school-to-prison pipeline............125
5. Putting Implicit together to understand the pipeline...126
6. New Response to the School-to-Prison Pipeline: A Focus on Implicit...132
IV. OVERVIEW OF TOWN HALL MEETINGS 135
A. Background Information Provided for 2014-15 Town Halls 135
B. Chicago Town Hall Meeting – February 7, 2014 136
C. Boston Town Hall Meeting – August 8, 2014..................139
D. Houston Town Hall Meeting – February 6, 2015...........141
E. Washington, D.C. Town Hall Meeting— February 26, 2015 144
F. Arizona State University Town Hall Meeting – March 27, 2015...145
G. New Orleans Town Hall Meeting – April 14, 2015 148
H. Honolulu Town Hall Meeting – April 18, 2015 149
I. Miami Town Hall Meeting – May 14, 2015......................151
J. Chicago Roundtable Discussion – July 31, 2015.............152
APPENDIX A. SELECTED CURRENT LEGISLATIVE INITIATIVES 153
APPENDIX B. RECOMMENDED PROGRAMS 167
APPENDIX C. ADDITIONAL PROGRAMMATIC RESOURCES 180

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The ABA's Joint Task Force on Reversing the School-to-Prison Pipeline gratefully acknowledges and thanks Rachel Patrick, with gratitude for her work on this and so many other projects to improve the lives of our young people.

This report would not have been possible without the enthusiastic and excellent help in reviewing the draft from the team at the University of Memphis Law Review, Gregory A. Wagner, Sarah Smith, and Carl Benjamin Lewis. We also much appreciated the work of Professor Nance's research assistants.

This report was originally published at https://www.americanbar.org/content/dam/aba/administrative/diversity_pipeline/stp_preliminary_report_final.authcheckdam.pdf. Due to the participation of The University of Memphis Law Review, the authors' desire for as broad exposure as possible, and the imminence of the issue both locally and nationally, the report is being reprinted here with light editing.

NOTICE

This draft report is subject to further review and modification by the Joint Task Force. The content of this report has not been presented in its entirety to, or approved by, the American Bar Association House of Delegates or the Board of Governors, and therefore should not be construed as representing ABA policy, unless adopted pursuant to the bylaws of the Association.

PRELIMINARY REPORT AND RECOMMENDATIONS

January 28, 2016

PREFACE

In 2014, the American Bar Association (ABA) Coalition on Racial and Ethnic Justice (COREJ) turned its attention to the continuing failures in the education system where certain groups of students—for example, students of color, with disabilities, or LGBTQ—are disproportionately over- or incorrectly categorized in special education, are disciplined more harshly, including referral to law enforcement for minimal misbehavior, achieve at lower levels, and eventually drop or are pushed out of school, often into juvenile justice facilities and prisons—a pattern now commonly referred to as the School-to-Prison Pipeline (StPP). While this problem certainly is not new, it presented a convergence of several laws, policies, and practices where the legal community's intervention is critical.

Joined by the ABA Pipeline Council and Criminal Justice Section, and supported by its sister ABA entities, COREJ sponsored a series of eight Town Halls across the country to investigate the issues surrounding this pipeline. The focus of these Town Halls was to: 1) explore the issues as they presented themselves for various groups and various locales; 2) gather testimony on solutions that showed success, with particular focus on interventions where the legal community could be most effective in interrupting and reversing the StPP; and 3) draw attention to the role implicit bias plays in creating and maintaining this pipeline. This report is a result of those convenings. Also a result was the formation of a Joint Task Force among the three convening entities to provide an organizational structure to address Reversing the School-to-Prison Pipeline (RStPP)

To analyze the complexities surrounding the school-to-prison pipeline and identify potential solutions to reverse these negative trends, the Joint RStPP Task Force:

1. Organized and conducted eight Town Hall meetings in various parts of the United States, during which several area experts and community members voiced concerns, discussed the problems, and proposed solutions.
2. Analyzed and cumulated national data from the U.S. Department of Education's Civil Rights Data Collection and other available local data to gauge the magnitude and scope of the problems.
3. Served as a clearinghouse for information and reports relevant to the RStPP effort and disseminated that information.
4. Examined national and state laws and local school districts' policies and practices that have combined to push an increasing number of students out of school and into the justice system.
5. Analyzed laws that several states have enacted to reverse the school-to-prison pipeline.

6. Evaluated evidence-based policies and practices that various schools have implemented to reverse the school-to-prison pipeline.
7. Organized and conducted a roundtable discussion to focus exclusively on mapping out solutions to reverse these negative trends by identifying model programs and successful strategies.
8. Planned for two additional Town Halls focused on LGBTQ (San Diego) and entry points to the pipeline and juvenile justice (Memphis).
9. Drafted this preliminary report and prepared recommendations for consideration by the larger ABA.

FOUNDING TASK FORCE MEMBERS

Dawn Sturdevant Baum, Senior Attorney Department of the Interior, Indian Education Team Leader, Division of Indian Affairs, Office of the Solicitor (Jointly Appointed)
April Frazier-Camara, Special Assistant, Juvenile Defense Unit at Shelby County Public Defender (CJS appointee)
Miguel Pozo, Lowenstein Sandler LLP, immediate past President HNBA (COREJ appointee)*
Sarah E. Redfield, Professor of Law Emerita, UNH (COREJ appointee)
Matthew F. Redle, County and Prosecuting Attorney, Sheridan County, Wyoming (CJS appointee) Wesley Sunu, Attorney, Sentry Insurance (Pipeline Council appointee)
Artika R. Tyner, Assistant Professor (Public Policy/Leadership), University of Saint Thomas, College of Education, Leadership & Counseling (Pipeline Council appointee)
* Replaced by Salvador A. Dominguez, Assistant U.S. Attorney, Columbus, OH
 Replaced by Diana Sen, Northeast Region Director at Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs (OFCCP)

ADVISORY COMMITTEE MEMBERS

Advisory Committee members will be drawn from relevant disciplines and organizations.

ABA ENTITY FOUNDING SUPPORT

Center for Children and the Law
Commission on Youth at Risk
Section of Litigation Children's Rights Litigation Committee Commission on Disability Rights Commission on Hispanic Legal Rights & Responsibilities

TASK FORCE REPORTER

Jason P. Nance, Associate Professor of Law, Associate Director of Education Law and Policy, University of Florida Levin College of Law

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY OF FINDINGS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

The school-to-prison pipeline—the metaphor encompassing the various issues in our education system that result in students leaving school and becoming involved in the criminal justice system—is one of our nation's most formidable challenges. It arises from low expectations and engagement, poor or lacking school relationships, low academic achievement, incorrect referral or categorization in special education, and overly harsh discipline, including suspension, expulsion, referral to law enforcement, arrest, and treatment in the juvenile justice system.

The Joint Task Force on Reversing the School-to-Prison Pipeline has addressed itself to issues of that pipeline by cumulating and analyzing the national and regional data as well as federal, state, and local law and policy. In 2014–2015, the Joint Task Force conducted eight Town Hall meetings to serve as a clearinghouse for information and reports relevant to the RStPP effort and a forum for understanding and evaluating evidence-based policies and practices that various schools and other institutions have implemented to reverse the school-to-prison pipeline. The Task Force has also conducted expert and roundtable discussions to map solutions to reverse these negative trends by identifying model programs and successful strategies.

While many have known about the problems associated with the school-to-prison pipeline for years, recent data from the U.S. Department of Education's Civil Rights Data Collection now elucidate their magnitude and that magnitude is unacceptably large and out of proportion to the population of our young people. This disproportionality manifests itself all along the educational pipeline from preschool to juvenile justice and even to adult prison for students of color, for students with disabilities, for LGBTQ students, and for other groups in particular settings. These students are poorly served at every juncture.

Students of color are disproportionately:

- lower achievers and unable to read at basic or above
- damaged by lower expectations and lack of engagement
- retained in grade or excluded because of high stakes testing
- subject to more frequent and harsher punishment
- placed in alternative disciplinary schools or settings
- referred to law enforcement or subject to school-related arrest
- pushed or dropping out of school
- failing to graduate from high school
- feel threatened at school and suffer consequences as victims

For students with disabilities, disproportionality manifests itself in similar ways, and race and ethnicity, gender, and disability compound. Students with disabilities (or those who are labeled as disabled by the school) are disproportionately:

- students of color, especially in discretionary categories under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA)
- less likely to be academically proficient
- disciplined, and more harshly so
- retained in grade, but still dropping out or failing to graduate
- more likely to be placed in alternative disciplinary schools or settings or otherwise
- more likely to spend time out of the regular classroom, to be secluded or restrained
- referred to law enforcement or subject to school-related arrest and incarceration

Students who are LGBTQ face similar disproportional negative treatment and are more likely victimized and blamed as victims, and, again, the negatives compound.

These same differences plague the juvenile justice system where youth of color, youth with disabilities, and LGBTQ youth are typically disproportionately arrested, referred, detained (longer), charged, and found delinquent (or transferred to adult court). They are disproportionately confined instead of being placed on probation or into a diversion program. And all along the way, these young people caught in the school-to-prison pipeline are less likely to have access to meaningful education to allow them to graduate from high school and prepare for higher education and work opportunities.

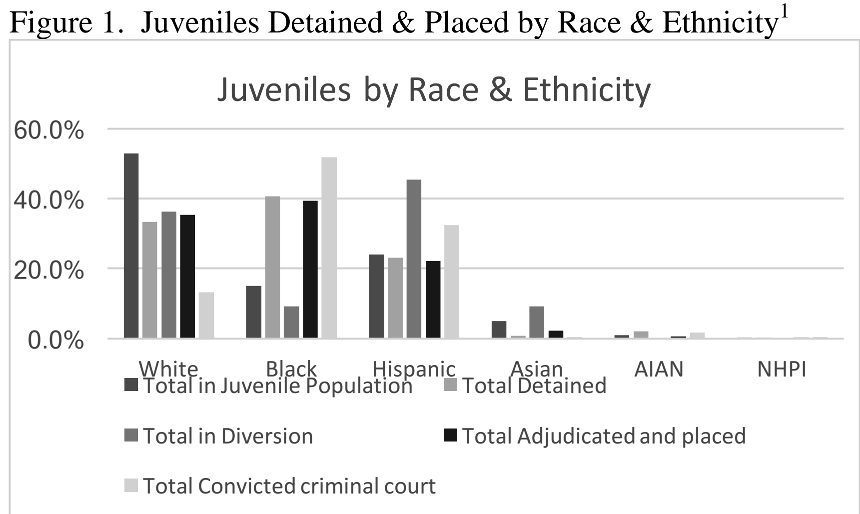
Figure 1. Juveniles Detained & Placed by Race & Ethnicity[1]



These negative disproportionalities might be understood if removals from school were in fact making schools safer or if confinement in juvenile detention or other facilities led to improved outcomes. This does not appear to be the case in practice or in theory. Nor can the disproportionate treatment of certain students and their overrepresentation in the negatives of our education and juvenile justice systems be explained away because certain groups are more likely to be engaged in bad or delinquent behavior.

The causes of the school-to-prison pipeline are many, complex, and interrelated. These include criminalization of school discipline and the increased presence of law enforcement officers in schools. Throughout these causes runs evidence of implicitly biased discretionary decisions, which, unintentionally, bring about these results.

1. Easy Access to the Census of Juveniles in Residential Placement: 1997-2013, OFF. OF JUV. JUST. AND DELINQ. PREVENTION [hereinafter JJDP, Easy Access], http://www.ojjdp.gov/ojstatbb/ezacjrp/asp/selection.asp (select “Race”; “Most Serious Offense General”; “12 or younger”; click “Show Table”) (last visited Jan. 25, 2016).

RECOMMENDATIONS

The school-to-prison pipeline is a complex problem with no easy or simple solutions. At their core, solutions should focus on ways to (a) improve academic achievement and increase the likelihood that students will remain in school, graduate, and prepare to become positive, contributing members of our society; (b) decrease the number of suspensions, expulsions, and referrals to law enforcement; and (c) decrease disparities along racial and other lines relating to discipline and academic achievement. While completely dismantling the school-to-prison pipeline is a task that our entire nation must take on, there are affirmative steps that the American Bar Association is well positioned to take to reverse these negative trends.

Based on its national investigation, including the information gathered at the national Town Hall meetings and roundtable discussions and the extensive review of the current research, the Task Force recommends that the ABA take steps to:

ABA AND PARTNERS: CONVENINGS AND TRAINING

1. Adopt ABA policy and specific resolutions as appropriate to implement these recommendations.
2. Join with other partners to continue additional Town Halls discussing solutions and offering training on implementation.
3. Support legal representation for students at the point of exclusion from school, including development of model best practice training modules for lawyers and law students for representation for students facing suspension or expulsion.
4. Support ongoing convenings where educators, School Resource Officers, law enforcement, and juvenile justice decision makers join together to develop strategies to reverse the School-to-Prison-Pipeline.
5. Develop training modules for training of SROs and police dealing with youth on appropriate strategies for LGBTQ students and students with disabilities.

6. Develop training modules on Implicit Bias and De-Biasing for decision makers along the StPP including teachers and administrators, school resource officers, police, juvenile judges and others dealing with juveniles, to reduce disproportionalities.
7. Encourage its members to continue engagement in youth mentoring initiatives.
8. Support related legislative and policy initiatives.

LEGISLATION AND POLICY

9. Remove zero-tolerance policies from schools.
10. Support legislation eliminating criminalizing student misbehavior that does not endanger others.
11. Support legislation eliminating the use of suspensions, expulsions, and referrals to law enforcement for lower-level offenses
12. Support demonstrated alternative strategies to address student misbehavior, including Restorative Justice.
13. Provide model policy and support school policy and agreements that clarify the distinction between educator discipline and law enforcement discipline.
14. Provide appropriate training for School Resource Officers.
15. Identify funding and provide safe harbor for participants in evaluative research on implicit bias and de-biasing training.
16. Provide for continued and more detailed data reporting relating to school discipline and juvenile detention and disproportionality.

I. OVERVIEW OF THE SCHOOL-TO-PRISON PIPELINE PROBLEM[2]

A. Introduction

> A sheriff's deputy summoned to handle four-year old elementary student with ADHD, admittedly having a temper tantrum, handcuffs the boy. When his mother arrives at the school she learns that he has already been taken to the sheriff's office where handcuffs have been replaced with shackles. The mother says that her son "deserves to go to school and feel safe and know that he'll come back home to his mommy. He won't be carted off like a criminal."[3]

But it seems that this child and far too many more of our young people will indeed be carted off like a criminal.

The school-to-prison pipeline—the metaphor encompassing the various issues in our education system that result in students leaving school and becoming involved in the criminal justice system—is one of our nation's most formidable challenges.[4] It arises

---

2. Some of this report is taken from the following sources: Jason P. Nance, Dismantling the School-to-Prison Pipeline: Tools for Change, 48 ARIZ. ST. L. J. 313 (2016); Jason P. Nance, Schools, Police, and the School-to-Prison Pipeline, 93 WASH. U. L. REV. 919 (2016) [hereinafter Schools, Police].

3. Hawes Spencer, Child Handcuffed and School Policies Questioned, NPR RADIO (Dec. 9, 2014), http://wvtf.org/post/child-handcuffed-and-school-policies-questioned#stream/0; see also Melinda D. Anderson, When Schooling Meets Policing, THE ATLANTIC (Sept. 21, 2015) http://www.theatlantic.com/education/archive/2015/09/when-schooling-meets-policing/406348/ (cumulating similar incidents of police involvement with schools); Tunette Powell, My Son Has Been Suspended Five Times. He's 3., WASH. POST: POSTEVERYTHING (July 24, 2014), https://www.washingtonpost.com/posteverything/wp/2014/07/24/my-son-has-been-suspended-five-times-hes-3/.

4. See Hawker v. Sandy City Corp., 774 F.3d 1243, 1245–46 (10th Cir. 2014) (Lucero, J., concurring) (quoting Jason P. Nance, School Surveillance and the Fourth Amendment, 2014 WIS. L. REV. 79, 83 (2014)); U.S. DEP'T OF JUST. & U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC., DEAR COLLEAGUE LETTER ON THE NONDISCRIMINATORY ADMINISTRATION OF SCHOOL DISCIPLINE 4–5 (2014) [hereinafter DEAR COLLEAGUE LETTER], http://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/letters/colleague-201401-title-vi.pdf. Professor Monique Morris defines this from low expectations, low academic achievement, incorrect referral or categorization in special education, and overly harsh discipline, including suspension, expulsion, referral to law enforcement, arrest, and treatment in the juvenile justice system.

While many have known about the problems associated with the school-to-prison pipeline for years, recent data from the U.S. Department of Education's Civil Rights Data Collection ("CRDC") now elucidate their magnitude. According to the CRDC, during the 2011–2012 school year, schools referred approximately 260,000 students to law enforcement, and approximately 92,000 students were arrested on school property during the school day or at a school-sponsored event.[5] Local data provide additional, sobering evidence of this problem,[6] especially in light of the substantial evidence that many of these referrals to law enforcement were for minor offenses.[7] The number of student sus-school to prison pipeline as "the school-based policies, practices, conditions, and prevailing consciousness that facilitate criminalization within educational environments and the processes by which this criminalization results in the incarceration of youth and young adults," a definition that adds emphasis to the "prevailing consciousness" that facilitates these results. Monique W. Morris, Searching for Black Girls in the School-to-Prison Pipeline, NAT'L COUNCIL ON CRIME & DELINQ. (Mar. 18, 2013), http://www.nccdglobal.org/blog/searching-for-black-girls-in-the-school-to-prison-pipeline.

---

5. See U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFF. FOR C.R., CIVIL RIGHTS DATA COLLECTION, DATA SNAPSHOT: SCHOOL DISCIPLINE 6 (2014) http://ocrdata.ed.gov/Downloads/CRDC-School-Discipline-Snapshot.pdf [hereinafter U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFF. FOR CIVIL RIGHTS].

6. See sources cited supra note 2 (documenting data that school-based arrests have increased in several states and in several school districts throughout the country).

7. See, e.g., FLA. STATE CONF. NAACP, ADVANCEMENT PROJECT & NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE AND EDUC. FUND, INC., ARRESTING DEVELOPMENT: ADDRESSING THE SCHOOL DISCIPLINE CRISIS IN FLORIDA 6 (2006) [hereinafter ARRESTING DEVELOPMENT], http://b.3cdn.net/advancement/e36d17097615e7c612bbm6vub0w.pdf (stating that during the 2004–05 school year, there were 26,990 school-based referrals to the Florida Department of Juvenile Justice, and seventy-six percent of those referrals were for "disorderly conduct, trespassing, or assault and/or battery, which is usually nothing more than a schoolyard fight."); ACTION FOR CHILDREN N.C., FROM PUSH OUT TO LOCK UP: NORTH CAROLINA'S ACCELERATED SCHOOL-TO-PRISON PIPELINE 9 (2013), http://www.ncchild.org/wp-content/uploads/2014/05/2013_STPP-FINAL.pdf. ("Students were most commonly referred to the juvenile justice system for low-pensions and expulsions have also dramatically increased in recent years.[8] According to the CRDC, approximately 3.5 million students were suspended at least one time during the 2011–2012 school year, and approximately 130,000 were expelled from school during that same time period.[9] As with referrals to law enforcement and school-based arrests, data also indicate that the majority of these suspensions and expulsions resulted from only trivial infractions of school rules or offenses, not from offenses that endangered the physical well-being of other students.[10] Numbers are similar for those detained in the juvenile justice system.[11] level offenses[.]"); JUSTICE POLICY INST., EDUCATION UNDER ARREST: THE CASE AGAINST POLICE IN SCHOOLS 15 (2011) [hereinafter EDUCATION UNDER ARREST], http://www.justicepolicy.org/uploads/justicepolicy/documents/ educationunderarrest_fullreport.pdf (observing that during the 2007–08 school year in Birmingham, Alabama, ninety-six percent of students referred to juvenile court were for misdemeanors that included disorderly conduct and affray).

---

8. For example, the number of students in secondary schools suspended or expelled increased "from one in thirteen in 1972–73 to one in nine in 2009–10." See JACOB KANG-BROWN ET AL., VERA INST. OF JUST., A GENERATION LATER: WHAT WE'VE LEARNED ABOUT ZERO TOLERANCE IN SCHOOLS 2 (2013), http://www.vera.org/sites/default/files/resources/downloads/zero-tolerance-in-schools-policy-brief.pdf.

9. See U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFF. FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, supra note 5.

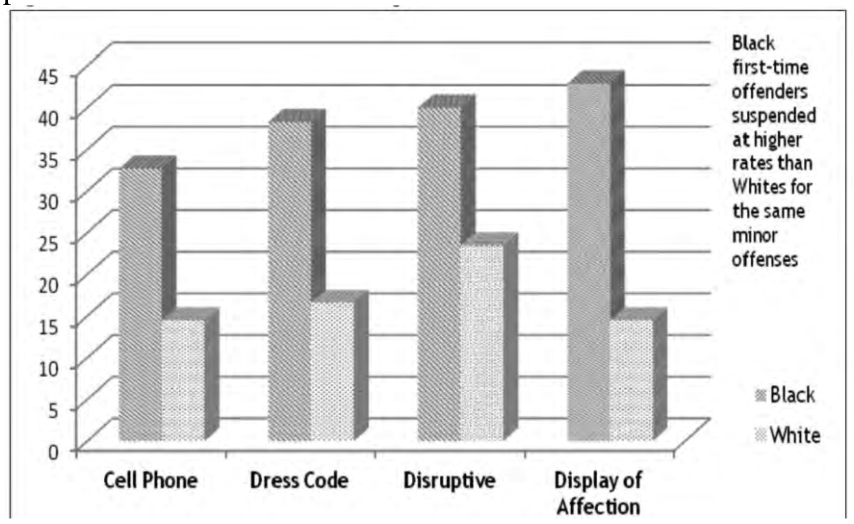
10. See TONY FABELO ET AL., BREAKING SCHOOLS' RULES: A STATEWIDE STUDY OF HOW SCHOOL DISCIPLINE RELATES TO STUDENTS' SUCCESS AND JUVENILE JUSTICE INVOLVEMENT 37 (2011), https://csgjusticecenter.org/wp-content/uploads/2012/08/Breaking_Schools_Rules_Report_Final.pdf, (reporting that 97 percent of suspensions and expulsions in Texas resulted from offenses that did not require suspension or expulsion under law); Daniel J. Losen, Sound Discipline Policy for Successful Schools: How Redressing Racial Disparities Can Make a Positive Impact for All, in DISRUPTING THE SCHOOL-TO-PRISON PIPELINE 45, 54–55 (Sofía Bahena et al. eds., 2012) (explaining that the vast majority of suspensions and expulsions are for minor offenses); see also AM. BAR ASS'N, CRIMINAL JUSTICE (REPORT NO. 103B) 2 (2001), http://www.americanbar.org/content/dam/aba/directories/policy/2001_my_103b.authcheckdam.pdf (explaining that students have been suspended or expelled for shooting a paperclip with a rubber band or bringing a manicure kit to school); Am. Psychol. Ass'n Zero Tolerance Task Force, Are Zero Tolerance Policies Effective in Schools? An Evidentiary Review and Recommendations, 63 AM. PSYCH. 852, 852 (2008) (explaining that a ten-year-old girl was expelled because her mother put a small knife in her lunchbox to cut up an apple); id. (describing that a student was expelled for talking on a cell phone to his mother

Figure 2. Discipline Disproportionality Minor Offense NC Example[12]



1. The Context

This report discusses data and issues that cause and maintain the school-to-prison pipeline. Some general aspects of the issue offer a frame for the particular, and go a long way toward explaining the way young people enter and remain in the pipeline. These overarching topics are reviewed here to provide context and who was on deployment as a solder to Iraq and with whom he had not spoken to for thirty days). Id.

---

11. See generally Criminal Justice Reform, Part II: Hearing Before the H. Comm. on Oversight & Gov't Reform, 114th Cong. (2015) (statement of Liz Ryan, Youth First! Initiative), https://oversight.house.gov/wp-content/uploads/2015/07/Ryan-YouthFirst-Statement-7-15-Criminal-Justice-II-COMPLETE.pdf (summarizing the data); Press Release, Office of the Press Sec'y, Presidential Proclamation—National Youth Justice Awareness Month, 2015, The White House (Sept. 30, 2015), https://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2015/09/30/presidential-proclamation-national-youth-justice-awareness-month-2015.

12. DANIEL J. LOSEN & JONATHAN GILLESPIE, OPPORTUNITIES SUSPENDED: THE DISPARATE IMPACT OF DISCIPLINARY EXCLUSION FROM SCHOOL 33 fig. 10 (2012), http://civilrightsproject.ucla.edu/resources/projects/center-for-civil-rights-remedies/school-to-prison-folder/federal-reports/upcoming-ccrr-research/losen-gillespie-opportunity-suspended-2012.pdf (data from Public Record request).

developed further in later sections. Concepts discussed include the meaning of disproportionality; differences in relationships and expectations as they relate to the exercise of discretion. Also of particular significance is the research that debunks two common misperceptions and demonstrates instead that the disproportionalities along the school-to-prison pipeline are not simply attributable to bad (worse) behavior of certain groups and that excluding students from their regular school setting and/or detaining them in juvenile or other facilities does not necessarily contribute to either a safer or better environment or to more successful outcomes for those students.

Figure 3. U.S. Population by Race & Ethnicity[13]

Population

0.3%
6%
1.3%
17%
13%
63%

White
Black or African American
American Indian and Alaska Native
Asian
Native Hawaiian and Other Pacific Islander Hispanic

a. The Meaning of Disproportionality

Disproportionality refers to the difference between a group's representation in the population at large and its over or under representation in specific areas.[14] African-American students offer an illustration, which is expanded with additional data throughout the report.

13. Population Distribution by Race/Ethnicity, KAISER FAMILY FOUNDATION, http://kff.org/other/state-indicator/distribution-by-raceethnicity/?curentTimeframe=0&sortModel=%7B%22colId%22:%22Location%22,%22sort%22:%22asc%22%7D (last visited Oct. 22, 2016).

14. See id.; see also Figure 4. The Meaning of Disproportionality & Figure 5. U.S. Juvenile Population by Race & Ethnicity.

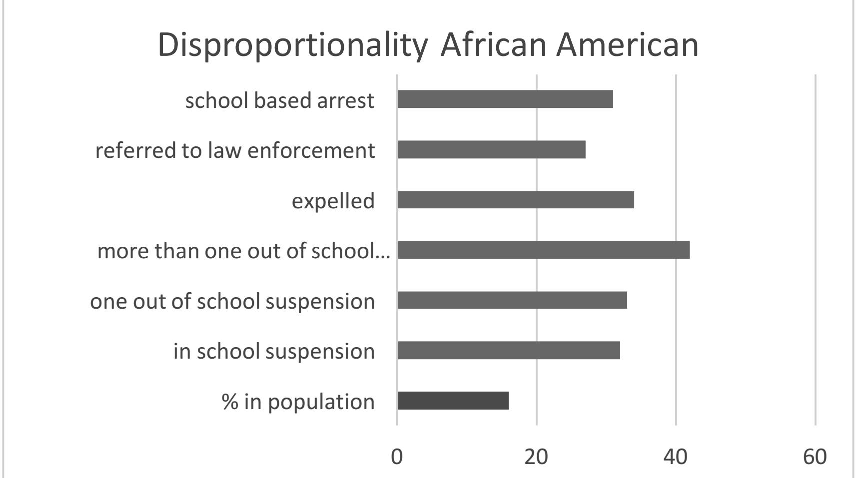
Figure 4. Disproportionality Illustrated



African-American students comprised only sixteen percent of the student population during the 2011–2012 school year, but they represented thirty-two percent of students who received an in-school suspension; thirty-three percent of students who received one out-of-school suspension; forty-two percent of students who received more than one out-of-school suspension; and thirty-four percent of students who were expelled.[15] During that same time frame, African-American students represented twenty-seven percent of the students who were referred to law enforcement and thirty-one percent of students who were subject to a school-based arrest.[16] In addition, although African-American children represent-

15. See U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFF. FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, supra note 5, at 1–2; LOSEN & GILLESPIE, supra note 12, at 6 (finding that one out of every six Black students enrolled in K–12 public schools has been suspended at least once, but only one out of twenty White students has been suspended).

16. U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFF. FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, supra note 5, at 6. The CRDC data is corroborated by substantial additional localized data. See Russell J. Skiba, Mariella I. Arredondo & Natasha T. Williams, More than a Metaphor: The Contribution of Exclusionary Discipline to a School-to-Prison Pipeline, 47 EQUITY & EXCELLENCE IN EDUC. 546, 550 (2014); MATTHEW P. STEINBERG, ELAINE ALLENSWORTH & DAVID W. JOHNSON, STUDENT AND TEACHER SAFETY IN CHICAGO PUBLIC SCHOOLS: THE ROLES OF COMMUNITY CONTEXT AND ed eighteen percent of preschool enrollment, they represented forty-eight percent of the preschool children who received more than one out-of-school suspension.[17]

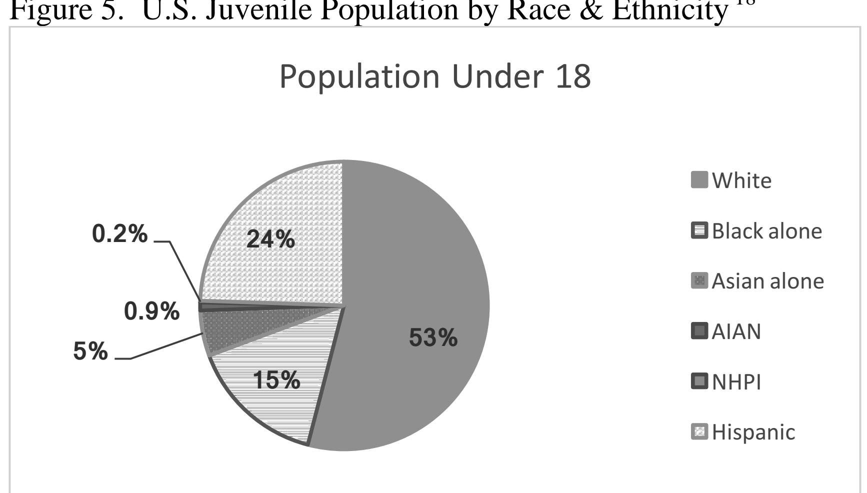
Figure 5. U.S. Juvenile Population by Race & Ethnicity [18]



While disproportionality is most often discussed in terms of Black boys,[19] the problem is not limited to this group. Operative

---

SCHOOL SOCIAL ORGANIZATION 46 (2011) (maintaining that low-performing students are less likely to be engaged in school and more likely to be frustrated and misbehave); see also Matthew P. Steinberg, Elaine Allensworth & David W. Johnson, What Conditions Support Safety in Urban Schools? The Influence of School Organizational Practices on Student and Teacher Reports of Safety in Chicago, in CLOSING THE SCHOOL DISCIPLINE GAP: EQUITABLE REMEDIES FOR EXCESSIVE EXCLUSION 118, 125 (Daniel J. Losen ed., 2015) (explaining that low-achieving students are less likely to be engaged and more likely to act out).

17. U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFF. FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, supra note 5, at 1.

18. Families and Living Arrangements, U.S. CENSUS BUREAU tbl.C3, https://www.census.gov/hhes/families/data/cps2012C.html (last visited Jan. 14, 2016); see also WILLIAM O'HARE, THE CHANGING CHILD POPULATION OF THE UNITED STATES: ANALYSIS OF DATA FROM THE 2010 CENSUS (2011), http://files.eric.ed.gov/fulltext/ED527048.pdf.

19. See, e.g., FOUNDATION CENTER, TRANSFORMING PERCEPTION: BLACK MEN AND BOYS, http://www.issuelab.org/resource/transformingperception_black_men_and_boys; Oscar Barbarin & Gisele M. Crawford, Acknowledging and Reducing Stigmatization of African American Boys, 61 YOUNG CHILD. 79 (2006); Ronald F. Ferguson, Teachers' Perceptions and Expectations and the Black-White Test Score Gap, 38 URB. EDUC. 460 (2003).

variations and disproportionalities exist within each broad category and across geographical areas.[20] While other groups may not have been studied as deeply,[21] the disproportionalities and concerns are real. For example, disproportionality is evident in differential treatment by gender where African-American girls are more often and more severely disciplined than other girls,[22] most often, for "subjectively defined behaviors, or behaviors considered inappropriate by educators."[23] This is true further along the pipeline as

---

20. See, e.g., LOSEN & GILLESPIE, supra note 12, at 18–22 (reviewing disproportionality in discipline/special education by state). See generally OFF. FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, U.S. Dep't of Educ., Resolution Letter, Christian County (KY) Public Schools (Feb. 28, 2014), http://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/docs/investigations/03115002-a.html (finding a violation of Title VI based on different treatment against African-American students who were disciplined more frequently and harshly than White students whose behavior was similar and whose disciplinary histories were similar or worse).

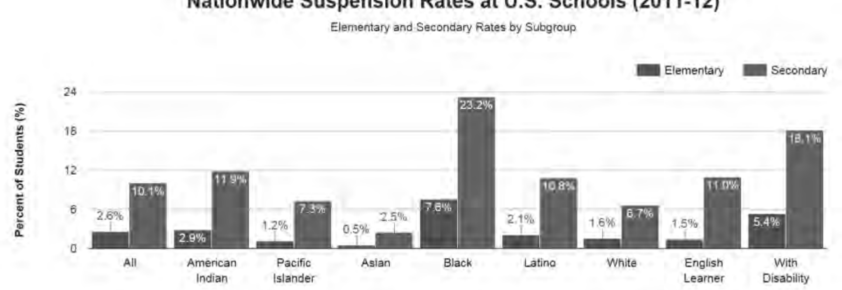
21. KIMBERLÉ WILLIAMS CRENSHAW ET AL., BLACK GIRLS MATTER: PUSHED OUT, OVERPOLICED, AND UNDERPROTECTED 7 (2015), http://static1.squarespace.com/static/53f20d90e4b0b80451158d8c/t/54dcc1ece4b001c03e323448/1423753708557/AAPF_BlackGirlsMatterReport.pdf ("[M]uch of the existing research literature excludes girls from the analysis, leading many stakeholders to infer that girls of color are not also at risk."); DANIEL LOSEN ET AL., ARE WE CLOSING THE SCHOOL DISCIPLINE GAP? 30 (2015) [hereinafter ARE WE CLOSING], http://civilrightsproject.ucla.edu/resources/projects/center-for-civil-rights-remedies/school-to-prison-folder/federal-reports/are-we-closing-the-school-discipline-gap/AreWeClosingTheSchoolDisciplineGap_FINAL221.pdf ("Given the high rates and extraordinarily large gaps revealed by the intersection of race and gender, we join the call for more research into the discipline gap at these intersections, as they raise questions about the possible influence of race-specific gender bias and stereotypes.").

22. Jamilia J. Blake et al., Unmasking the Inequitable Discipline Experiences of Urban Black Girls: Implications for Urban Educational Stakeholders, 43 URB. REV. 90, 90 (2011) ("Black girls are overrepresented in exclusionary discipline practices and Black girls reason for discipline referrals differs significantly from White and Hispanic girls."); Francine T. Sherman, Justice for Girls: Are We Making Progress?, 59 UCLA L. REV. 1584, 1617 (2012) (finding Black girls to be the fastest growing group of girls referred to juvenile courts and in detention); CRENSHAW ET AL., supra note 21, at 7 ("[P]unitive disciplinary policies also negatively impact Black girls and other girls of color."); Morris, supra note 4, (calling for more attention to Black girls).

23. Amy S. Murphy, Melanie A. Acosta & Brianna L. Kennedy-Lewis, "I'm Not Running Around with My Pants Sagging, so How Am I Not Acting Like a Lady?": Intersections of Race and Gender in the Experiences of Female Mid-

well where the data shows that the proportion of female youth arrested and entering the juvenile justice system for law violations has increased from 1980–2010 across the spectrum of crimes from less to most serious.[24] There are also group differences when the data is reviewed by age.[25]

Figure 6. At Least One Out of School Suspension Elementary & Secondary by Group[26]



Also significant in considering the data is the tendency of negatives of groups to compound where a student is part of more than one group, e.g., students of color who are also students with disabilities or LGBTQ students.[27] dle School Troublemakers, 45 URB. REV. 586, 586, 594, 596 (2013) (reporting on the connection to achievement, noting that the "girls each shared their desires to be academically successful, yet often feel stymied.").

---

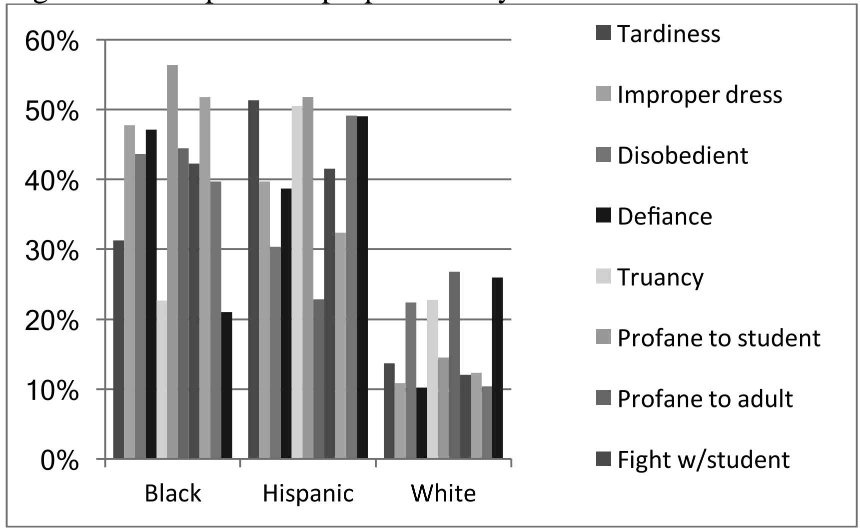
24. NAT'L CTR. FOR JUV. JUST., NAT'L COUNCIL OF JUV. & FAM. COURT JUDGES, JUVENILE OFFENDERS AND VICTIMS: 2014 NATIONAL REPORT 121 (Melissa Sickmund & Charles Puzzanchera, eds., 2014) [hereinafter OJJDP 2014 NATIONAL REPORT], http://www.ojjdp.gov/ojstatbb/nr2014/downloads/NR2014.pdf.

25. See infra Figure 6. At Least One out of School Suspension Elementary & Secondary by Group; see also Claudia Rowe, Race Dramatically Skews Discipline, Even in Elementary School, SEATTLE TIMES, June 23, 2015, http://www.seattletimes.com/education-lab/race-dramatically-skews-discipline-even-in-elementary-school/ (providing comparative data for Seattle elementary schools).

26. U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFF. FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, supra note 5, at 2; Nationwide Suspension Rates at U.S. Schools (2011-12), UCLA CTR. FOR CIVIL RIGHTS REMEDIES, http://www.schooldisciplinedata.org/ccrr/index.php (last visited Jan. 12, 2016).

27. DANIEL LOSEN, DAMON HEWITT & IVORY TOLDSON, ELIMINATING EXCESSIVE AND UNFAIR EXCLUSIONARY DISCIPLINE IN SCHOOLS POLICY RECOMMENDATIONS FOR REDUCING DISPARITIES 4 (2014), http://www.indiana.edu/~atlantic/wpcontent/uploads/2014/04/Disparity_Policy_031214.pdf; see also NAT'L DISABILITIES RIGHTS NETWORK, ORPHANAGES, TRAINING SCHOOLS, REFORM SCHOOLS AND NOW THIS? RECOMMENDATIONS TO PREVENT THE DISPROPORTIONATE PLACEMENT AND INADEQUATE TREATMENT OF CHILDREN WITH DISABILITIES IN THE JUVENILE JUSTICE SYSTEM 12 (2015), http://www.ndrn.org/images/Documents/Issues/Juvenile_Justice/NDRN_-_Juvenile_Justice_Report.pdf (discussing the disproportionate incarceration rate of children with different racial or ethnic backgrounds as well as with disabilities); U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFF. FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, supra note 5, at 3–7 (demonstrating the disproportionate punishment of these various groups); Brianne Dávila, Critical Race Theory, Disability Microaggressions and Latina/o Student Experiences in Special Education, 18 RACE ETHNICITY & EDUC. 443, 453–54 (2015) ("Disability does not simply replace race in these instances, but represents a complex interplay of race and disability in the lives of Latina/o students in special education."); Janel A. George, Stereotype and School Pushout: Race, Gender, and Discipline Disparities, 68 ARK. L. REV. 101, 104 (2015) (commenting on race and gender combined); Sherman, supra note 22, at 1617 (citing Jyoti Nanda, Blind Discretion: Girls of Color & Delinquency in the Juvenile Justice System, 59 UCLA L. REV. 1502 (2012) ("[D]espite the rapid growth in the number of black girls in the juvenile justice system, the intersection of race and gender in juvenile justice is almost never considered."); cf. Valerie Purdie-Vaughns & Richard P. Eibach, Intersectional Invisibility: The Distinct Advantages and Disadvantages of Multiple Subordinate-Group Identities, 59 SEX ROLES 377, 378–80 (2008) (discussing the disadvantages of multiple and single group identities).

Figure 7. Discipline Disproportionality Girls[28]



---

28. See Blake et al., supra note 22, at 96–104 (using compiled data and illustration sources).

b. Differences in relationships and expectations relate to the exercise of discretion, and both can be damning

Relationships are one of the most significant factors in student learning; where those relationships are lacking or based on low expectations, learning will be damaged.[29] Differences in expectations and engagement influence teaching and learning;[30] they influence the quality of instruction[31] and the feedback students receive.[32] The so-called Pygmalion effect—a self-fulfilling prophecy or expectation effect where when teachers expect good performance they get it and vice versa—has long been known in educa-

29. See generally JOHN HATTIE, VISIBLE LEARNING: A SYNTHESIS OF OVER 800 META-ANALYSES RELATING TO ACHIEVEMENT 921–32 (2009) (discussing factors in achievement and highlighting relationships and expectations).

30. SARAH E. REDFIELD, DIVERSITY REALIZED: PUTTING THE WALK WITH THE TALK FOR DIVERSITY IN THE PIPELINE TO THE LEGAL PROFESSION ch.4 (2009) [hereinafter REDFIELD, DIVERSITY] (summarizing issues of engagement in the context of the so-called new 3Rs: rigor, relevance, relationship); Sheri A. Castro Atwater, Waking Up to Difference: Teachers, Color-Blindness, and the Effects on Students of Color, 35 J. INSTRUCTIONAL PSYCHOL. 246, 246, 252 (2008) (discussing significance of understanding the difference "between a 'race should not matter' philosophy and a 'race does not matter' philosophy"); Monica Biernat & Amanda K. Sesko, Communicating About Others: Motivations and Consequences of Race-Based Impressions, 49 J. EXPERIMENTAL SOC. PSYCHOL. 138 (2013) (discussing White tendency to use different "within-category judgment standards"). See generally BARUTI K. KAFELE, CLOSING THE ATTITUDE GAP (2013) (discussing the importance of knowing and believing in one's students).

31. Drew S. Jacoby-Senghor et al., A Lesson in Bias: The Relationship Between Implicit Racial Bias and Performance in Pedagogical Contexts, 63 J. EXPERIMENTAL SOC. PSYCHOL. 50, 53 (2016) (describing how implicit bias impacts instructor anxiety, lesson quality, and student performance).

32. Alyssa Croft & Toni Schmader, The Feedback Withholding Bias: Minority Students Do Not Receive Critical Feedback from Evaluators Concerned About Appearing Racist, 48 J. EXPERIMENTAL SOC. PSYCHOL. 1139, 1142–44 (2012) (discussing feedback withholding bias, feedback inflation, and their potential impact on students); John Hattie & Helen Timperley, The Power of Feedback, 77 REV. EDUC. RES. 81, 81 (2007) (noting that feedback is one of the most powerful influences on student learning and achievement); Feedback in Schools by John Hattie, VISIBLE LEARNING, http://visible-learning.org/2013/10/john-hattie-article-about-feedback-in-schools/ ("The culture of the student can influence the feedback effects: Feedback is not only differentially given but also differentially received.") (last visited Oct. 22, 2016).

tion.[33] Such self-fulfilling expectations, together with related depletion,[34] can be a primary cause for racial disparities relating to academic achievement and subsequent pipeline events.[35]

---

33. ROBERT L. GREEN, EXPECT THE MOST—PROVIDE THE BEST, 6–8, 29–39 (2014) (reviewing importance of expectations and offering case studies); ROBERT ROSENTHAL & LENORE JACOBSON, PYGMALION IN THE CLASSROOM (1968); Rosa Hernández Sheets, From Remedial to Gifted: Effects of Culturally Centered Pedagogy, 34 THEORY INTO PRAC. 186 (1995) (reporting that Spanish-speaking students who failed second-year Spanish, who are later labeled Advanced and encouraged by their teacher, go on to pass the Advanced Placement Spanish exam); cf. Kathleen Cotton, Expectations and Student Outcomes, SCH. IMPROVEMENT RES. SERIES (1989), http://educationnorthwest.org/sites/default/files/expectations-and-student-outcomes.pdf ("The most important finding from this research is that TEACHER EXPECTATIONS CAN AND DO AFFECT STUDENTS' ACHIEVEMENT AND ATTITUDES.").

34. Jennifer A. Richeson et al., African Americans' Racial Attitudes and the Depletion of Executive Function After Interracial Interactions, 23 SOC. COGNITION 336 (2005); Jennifer A. Richeson & J. Nicole Shelton, Negotiating Interracial Interactions: Costs, Consequences, & Possibilities, 16 CURRENT DIRECTIONS PSYCHOL. SCI. 316, 316 (2007) ("[I]ndividuals often exit interracial interactions feeling drained both cognitively and emotionally."); infra note 407.

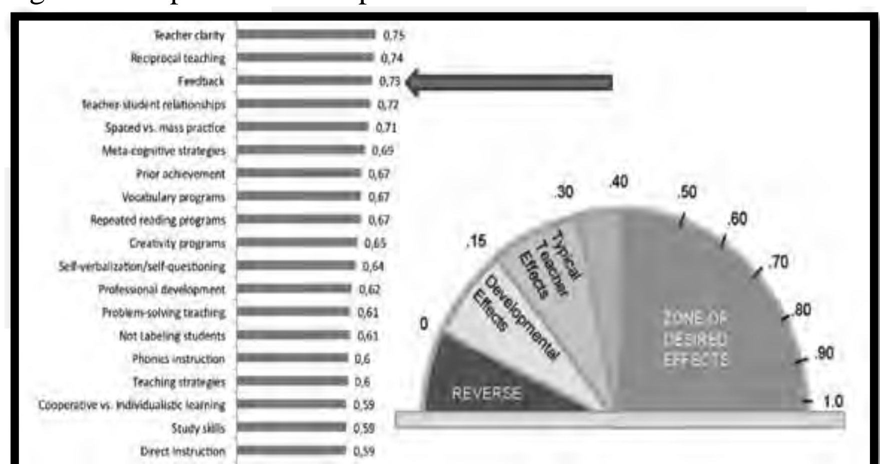
35. See generally Jamilia J. Blake et al., Challenging Middle-Class Notions of Femininity: The Causes of Black Females' Disproportionate Suspension Rates, in CLOSING THE SCHOOL DISCIPLINE GAP, supra note 16, at 76 (citation omitted) ("Although a number of factors are believed to contribute to disproportionate disciplinary practices, racial/ethnic bias has been implicated more frequently."); Pamela Fenning & Jennifer Rose, Overrepresentation of African American Students in Exclusionary Discipline: The Role of School Policy, 42 URB. EDUC. 536, 537 (2007) (explaining that students of color are targeted by teachers out of fear and anxiety of losing control of the classroom); Kent McIntosh et al., Education not Incarceration: A Conceptual Model for Reducing Racial and Ethnic Disproportionality in School Discipline, 5 J. APPLIED RES. ON CHILD. no. 2, 2014, at 3 (stating that conscious or unconscious bias is an important factor in the discipline gap).

Figure 8. Importance of Expectation[36]



Where labeling of young people is virtually omnipresent—Limited English Proficiency, emotionally disturbed, intellectually disabled, troubled, trouble-maker, noncompliant, insubordinate, delinquent, from a bad family—decisions and actions flow from these labels and expectations they engender among both educators and students.[37] A recent study of school personnel found that less than one-third of teachers believe that schools should expect all students to meet high academic standards; and most do not believe that at risk students would respond to these high expectations and work harder.[38] As a study of teachers and administrators on this

36. Rodney Lee, Equity and Diversity Educ. Dep't, Clark Cty., Las Vegas, NV, Presentation, Effect Size (on file with authors) (compiling information from HATTIE, supra note 29); see also Hattie Ranking: Influences And Effect Sizes Related To Student Achievement, VISIBLE LEARNING, http://visible-learning.org/hattie-ranking-influences-effect-sizes-learning-achievement/ (demonstrating the most and least effective influences upon students) (last visited Oct. 22, 2016).

37. See, e.g., HATTIE, supra note 29, at 2840 ("Smith (1980) found that when labeling information on pupil ability is given to teachers, they reliably rate student ability, achievement, and behavior according to the information provided.").

38. JOHN M. BRIDGELAND ET AL., ON THE FRONT LINES OF SCHOOLS: PERSPECTIVES OF TEACHERS AND PRINCIPALS ON THE HIGH SCHOOL DROPOUT PROBLEM 2 (2009), http://www.civicenterprises.net/MediaLibrary/Docs/ED%20-%20on%20the%20front%20lines%20of%20schools.pdf.

particular point found strong and high-level expectations often remain least present where they are most needed, leading one education expert to observe: "The biggest resistance to improving high schools is a deep-seated belief that many of our students cannot learn much. We've created a system that allows them to validate that . . . ."[39] Researchers have empirically demonstrated that teachers with negative attitudes towards ethnic minorities viewed those students as less intelligent and less capable of obtaining promising post-career prospects; and student achievement differences between ethnic minority students and other students were larger in classrooms with prejudiced teachers than with teachers who held less prejudicial attitudes.[40]

In such a system, the exercise of discretion is critical.[41] Discretionary decisions place students in tracks or locations where

---

39. Kathleen Vail, Remaking High Schools, AM. SCH. BOARD J., Nov. 2004,http://www.wacharterschools.org/news/natlnews/2004-11_ASBJHighSchool.htm.

40. See Linda van den Bergh et al., The Implicit Prejudiced Attitudes of Teachers: Relations to Teacher Expectations and the Ethnic Achievement Gap, 47 AM. EDUC. RES. J. 497, 518 (2010); Clark McKown & Rhona S. Weinstein, Teacher Expectations, Classroom Context, and the Achievement Gap, 46 J. SCH. PSYCHOL. 235, 256 (2008) (demonstrating empirically that teachers with high prejudicial attitudes towards minority students experienced higher gaps in student achievement along racial lines than teachers with lower biases); Harriet R. Tenenbaum & Martin D. Ruck, Are Teachers' Expectations Different for Racial Minority than for European American Students? A Meta-Analysis, 99 J. EDUC. PSYCHOL. 253, 271 (2007) (observing that teachers have higher expectations for White students than for minority students, and that teacher expectancies may lead to differences in academic performances); see also infra notes 426–430 and accompanying text; CHERYL STAATS, KIRWIN INST. FOR THE STUDY OF RACE AND ETHNICITY, STATE OF THE SCIENCE: IMPLICIT BIAS REVIEW 30–34 (2013) http://www.issuelab.org/resource/state_of_the_science_implicit_bias_review_2013.

41. See, e.g., Catherine Kramarczuk Voulgarides & Natalie Zwerger, Identifying the Root Causes of Disproportionality, METROPOLITAN CTR. FOR RES. ON EQUITY & TRANSFORMATION SCHS., https://steinhardt.nyu.edu/scmsAdmin/media/users/ll81/Identifying_the_Root_Causes_of_Disproportionality.pdf ("Teachers may hold [lower] implicit, preconceived notions about particular racial and ethnic groups of students that they may subconsciously apply to students."); see also George, supra note 27, at 102, 105, 110 ("Whether educators admit it or not, they—like everyone else—are vulnerable to harboring bias, and when the opportunity to exercise discretion in decision making arises, those identified as "low-performing students" go to low level, unchallenging classes.[42] Discretionary decisions place students disproportionately in certain special education categories.[43] This foreshadows, or perhaps reflects, the related finding that many students "expressed sadness that they were not challenged more and that the classes and teachers were not inspiring."[44] Estimates place the impact of such negative teacher perceptions at "almost 3 times as great for African Americans as for whites," larger for poor and female students, and "cumulative across disadvantages or stigmas."[45]

Discretionary decisions also determine if a parent is called or a student is sent to the office or referred to law enforcement.[46] These decisions are often made without basis in fact; as the researchers reviewing school discipline in Texas put it:

> Instead, the determining factor is how teachers and administrators interpret and apply these codes of conduct. What behaviors, for example, amount to "classroom disruption"? Should a student immediately be removed from the classroom for any sign of it usually plays out against African American students, including African American girls.").

---

42. John M. Bridgeland et al., THE SILENT EPIDEMIC: PERSPECTIVES OF HIGH SCHOOL DROPOUTS 5 (2006) http://www.gatesfoundation.org/united-states/Documents/TheSilentEpidemic3-06FINAL.pdf [hereinafter THE SILENT EPIDEMIC] ("Studies show that the expectations that teachers have for their students has an effect both on student performance and whether they drop out of school.").

43. See infra p. 29. Students with disabilities are disproportionately students of color, especially in discretionary categories and these categories compound.

44. THE SILENT EPIDEMIC, supra note 42, at 5. However, it is not clear how much of this response is a defense mechanism, covering for work or performance levels not achieved by students.

45. Ferguson, supra note 19, at 460, 472, 474–75.

46. See further discussion infra pp. 53–54. Students of color are disproportionately referred to law enforcement or subject to school-related arrest. Students with disabilities are disproportionately referred to law enforcement or subject to school-related arrest and incarceration. See generally JENNI OWEN ET AL., INSTEAD OF SUSPENSION: ALTERNATIVE STRATEGIES FOR EFFECTIVE SCHOOL DISCIPLINE (2015), https://law.duke.edu/childedlaw/schooldiscipline/downloads/instead_of_suspension.pdf (discussing other options).

> it, and, if so, which of the various possible consequences listed in the code of conduct should be imposed? How school administrators interpret these codes, and their responses to violations, varies enormously.[47]

And discretion shows in the results. In the Texas discipline data, African-American and Hispanic children have been found to be "slightly" more likely to be sent to the office and "substantially" more likely to be suspended or expelled.[48] Even when sent to the office, there are differences in the kind of triggering behavior—for African-American students, the more subjective "disrespect, excessive noise, threatening behavior, and loitering" and White students, the more objective "smoking, vandalism, leaving without permission, and using obscene language."[49] Harsher treatment also occurs for relatively minor "offenses," again, disproportionately so: "suspensions frequently occur in the absence of any physical violence or blatant verbal abuse . . . . [R]emoving a student from class is a highly contextualized decision based on subtle race and gender relations . . . ."[50] Discretionary decisions will also determine if a student is arrested, detained, or diverted.[51]

c. Bad or worse behavior is not the explanation for disproportionality

Disproportionate treatment of students and their overrepresentation in the negatives of our education and juvenile justice systems cannot be explained away because certain groups are more

---

47. FABELO ET AL., supra note 10, at 17 (citation omitted).

48. John M. Wallace, Jr. et al., Racial, Ethnic, and Gender Differences in School Discipline Among U.S. High School Students: 1991-2005, 47 NEGRO EDUC. REV. 59, 54–55 tbls.2 & 3 (2008).

49. Daniel J. Losen, National Education Policy Center, Discipline Policies, Successful Schools, and Racial Justice 7 (2011), http://www.greatlakescenter.org/docs/Policy_Briefs/Losen_Discipline_PB.pdf; Russell J. Skiba et al., The Color of Discipline: Sources of Racial and Gender Disproportionality in School Punishment, 34 URB. REV. 317, 332 (2002).

50. Frances Vavrus & KimMarie Cole, "I Didn't Do Nothin'": The Discursive Construction of School Suspension, 34 URB. REV. 87, 87 (2002).

51. See infra note 243 and accompanying text.

likely to be engaged in bad or delinquent behavior.[52] According to the U.S. Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights, discipline and other disparities are based on race and cannot be explained by more frequent or serious misbehavior by minority students.[53] As the Department recently stated, quite emphatically and unambiguously, "in our investigations we have found cases where African-American students were disciplined more harshly and more frequently because of their race than similarly situated white students. In short, racial discrimination in school discipline is a real problem."[54]

Substantial empirical research corroborates the U.S. Department of Education's conclusion.[55] School discipline records

---

52. See, e.g., JUV. DET. ALTS. INITIATIVE, THE ANNIE E. CASEY FOUND., DETENTION REFORM: AN EFFECTIVE APPROACH TO REDUCE RACIAL AND ETHNIC DISPARITIES IN JUVENILE JUSTICE fig.1 (2009), http://www.aecf.org/m/resourcedoc/aecf-DetentionReform3ReduceRacialDisparities-2009.pdf [hereinafter JDAI].

53. See DEAR COLLEAGUE LETTER, supra note 4.

54. Id. (emphasis added).

55. See, e.g., Catherine P. Bradshaw et al., Multilevel Exploration of Factors Contributing to the Overrepresentation of Black Students in Office Disciplinary Referrals, 102 J. EDUC. PSYCHOL. 508, 508 (2010) (finding that after controlling for teacher ratings of students' behavior problems, African-American students were more likely than White students to be referred to the office for disciplinary reasons); LOSEN, supra note 49, at 6–7; Sean Kelly, A Crisis of Authority in Predominantly Black Schools?, 112 TCHRS. C. REC. 1247, 1261–62 (2010) (examining data from teacher surveys and finding that when controlling for factors such as low achievement and poverty, that African-American students were no more disruptive than other students); Anna C. McFadden et al., A Study of Race and Gender Bias in the Punishment of Handicapped School Children, 15 EDUC. & TREATMENT CHILD. 140, 144 (1992) (finding that African-American male disabled students were punished more severely than other students for the same offenses); Russell J. Skiba et al., Where Should We Intervene? Contributions of Behavior, Student, and School Characteristics to Out-of-School Suspension, in CLOSING THE SCHOOL DISCIPLINE GAP, supra note 16, at 132–34, 134 (finding that race was a strong predictor of out-of-school suspensions); Michael Rocque & Raymond Paternoster, Understanding the Antecedents of the "School-to-Jail" Link: The Relationship Between Race and School Discipline, 101 J. CRIM. L. & CRIMINOLOGY 633, 653–54 (2011) (finding that African-American students are significantly more likely than Whites to be disciplined even after taking into account other salient factors such as grades, attitudes, gender, special education or language programs, and their conduct in school as perceived by teachers); Russell J. Skiba et al., Race Is Not and students' self-reports also show that the concerning differences and disproportionality are not simply attributable to the stigmatized group behaving "badly" relative to their peers or to socioeconomic factors.[56] The Discipline Disparity Collaborative reports:

> The crux of the matter then, is whether African American students engage in more seriously disruptive behavior that could justify different rates and severity of consequences. A number of different methods have been used to test the idea that differential punishment is due to different rates of misbehavior. Regardless of the method, such studies have provided little to no evidence that African American students in the same school or district are engaging in more seriously disruptive behavior that could warrant higher rates of exclusion or punishment.[57]

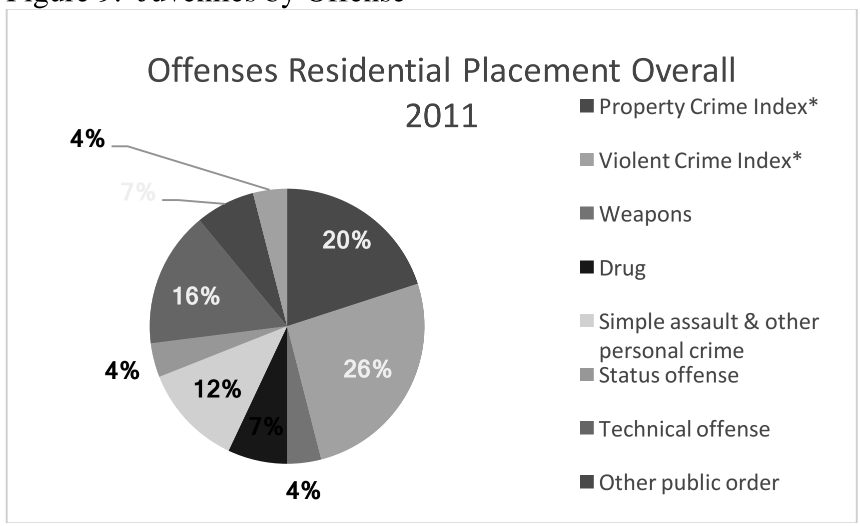
Neutral: A National Investigation of African American and Latino Disproportionality in School Discipline, 40 SCH. PSYCHOL. REV. 85, 95–101 (2011) (finding significant disparities for minorities with respect to school discipline after examining an extensive national sample).

56. See, e.g., Anne Gregory & Aisha R. Thompson, African American High School Students and Variability in Behavior across Classrooms, 38 J. COMMUNITY PSYCHOL. 386 (2010); Anne Gregory et al., The Achievement Gap and the Discipline Gap: Two Sides of the Same Coin?, 39 EDUC. RESEARCHER 59 (2010); John D. McCarthy & Dean R. Hoge, The Social Construction of School Punishment: Racial Disadvantage Out of Universalistic Process, 65 SOC. FORCES 1101, 1101 (1987); Russell J. Skiba et al., supra note 49; Wallace, Jr. et al., supra note 48, at 54–55 tbls.2 & 3; Gary G. Wehlage & Robert Rutter, Dropping Out: How Much Do Schools Contribute to the Problem?, WIS. CTR. FOR EDUC. RES., 374 (1986) http://files.eric.ed.gov/fulltext/ED275799.pdf (last visited Oct. 22, 2016).

57. RUSSELL J. SKIBA & NATASHA T. WILLIAMS, SUPPLEMENTARY PAPER I: ARE BLACK KIDS WORSE? MYTHS AND FACTS ABOUT RACIAL DIFFERENCES IN BEHAVIOR 3 (2014) (citations omitted), http://www.indiana.edu/~atlantic/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/African-American-Differential-Behavior_031214.pdf. This report continues, "Actual tests, however, have not supported the hypothesis of differential behavior. Regardless of whether the outcome variables are office disciplinary referrals at the school level, major offenses (e.g., weapons or substance use and possession) at the state level, or self-report data from national studies, controls for the extent or type of disruptive behavior have led to small and often nonsignificant changes in measured disproportionality. The fact that

In the juvenile justice system, studies are similar. Here, in what the Annie B. Casey Foundation labels as a "tragic irony," many of the young people detained are held for status offenses such as running away, truancy, incorrigibility, and technical violations such as violations of probation, parole, or valid court orders—not for violent crimes.[58]

Figure 9. Juveniles by Offense[59]



"Property Crime Index" includes crimes such as burglary, theft, auto theft, and arson. "Violent Crime Index" includes crimes such as criminal homicide, violent sexual assault, robbery, and aggravated assault. "Technical offenses" include probation, parole, and race remains a significant predictor of discipline after controlling for a range of disciplinary infractions strongly suggests that factors related to student behavior are not sufficient to account for racial/ethnic disparities in discipline." Id. at 4 (citations omitted).

58. RICHARD A. MENDEL, THE ANNIE E. CASEY FOUND., NO PLACE FOR KIDS: THE CASE FOR REDUCING JUVENILE INCARCERATION 13 (2011), http://www.aecf.org/m/resourcedoc/aecf-NoPlaceForKidsFullReport-2011.pdf; see also JJDP, Easy Access, supra note 1 (select "Age" as Row Variable and "Most serious Offense Detail" as Column Variable; then follow "Show Table") (comparing age of offender to type of offense).

59. JJDP, Easy Access, supra note 1 (select "Placement Status General" as Row Variable and "Most serious Offense Detail" as Column Variable; then follow "Show Table").

valid court order violations. "Status offenses" include running away, truancy, and incorrigibility.

Whatever the offense, racial and ethnic data remain disturbing, but, as with school data explained above, the data cannot support the view that this is because these young people are more criminal. Recognizing that "[s]ome have argued that this overrepresentation of youth of color in the justice system is simply a result of those youths committing more crimes than White youth," The National Council on Crime and Delinquency summarizes that "a true analysis is much more complicated" and does not support this conclusion.[60]

d. Exclusion and detention do not achieve better outcomes for students

As some of the leading researchers in the field have concluded, "High suspension rates do not improve learning conditions."[61] It perhaps goes without saying that time spent learning is among the strongest predictors of achievement.[62] Results of being out of school directly disadvantage the students and the impact is likely circular and cumulative.[63]

---

60. NAT'L COUNCIL ON CRIME AND DELINQUENCY, AND JUSTICE FOR SOME 1 (2007), http://www.nccdglobal.org/sites/default/files/publication_pdf/justice-for-some.pdf. But see Michael J. Leiber & Jennifer H. Peck, Race in Juvenile Justice and Sentencing Policy: An Overview of Research and Policy Recommendations, 31 LAW & INEQ. 331, 341 (2013) (finding some validity to the "differential offending perspective").

61. ARE WE CLOSING, supra note 21, at 9; see also Amy P. Meek, Note, School Discipline "As Part of the Teaching Process": Alternative and Compensatory Education Required by the State's Interest in Keeping Children in School, 28 YALE L. & POL'Y REV. 155, 158 (citation omitted) (2009) ("Researchers have shown, however, that high suspension rates do not improve school climates . . . .").

62. ALAN GINSBURG, PHYLLIS JORDAN AND HEDY CHANG, ABSENCES ADD UP: HOW SCHOOL ATTENDANCE INFLUENCES STUDENT SUCCESS 1, 3 (2014), http://www.attendanceworks.org/wordpress/wp-content/uploads/2014/09/Absenses-Add-Up_September-3rd-2014.pdf ("The association between poor attendance and lower NAEP scores is robust and holds for every state and for each of the 21 urban districts regardless of size, region or composition of the student population.").

63. Id. at 2. These harms are also consonant with the growing research on the impact on children of adverse childhood experiences ("ACE") of child-

Student underachievement often leads to student misbehavior in the classroom. Empirical studies confirm that it is common for low-performing students to misbehave out of frustration or embarrassment when they are unable to learn the academic material and meet grade-level expectations.[64] For example, research shows that when students are retained in grade, this does not improve their subsequent academic achievement.[65] As many educators well understand, when students begin to comprehend that the educational process is not working for them—that they will not be admitted to college, have access to a good-paying job, or enjoy a promising career—they have fewer incentives to obey school rules and take school seriously,[66] leading to disciplinary exclusion, often for trivial violations of school rules.[67] hood abuse and neglect (including educational neglect). See generally Injury Prevention & Control: Division of Violence Protection, CENTERS FOR DISEASE AND CONTROL AND PREVENTION, https://www.cdc.gov/violenceprevention/acestudy/about.html (last visited Oct. 23, 2016) (detailing the increased risk of poor outcomes as a result of ACE).

---

64. See STEINBERG, ALLENWORTH & JOHNSON, STUDENT AND TEACHER SAFETY IN CHICAGO PUBLIC SCHOOLS, supra note 16, at 46 (observing that low-performing students are less likely to be engaged in school and more likely to be frustrated and misbehave); Steinberg, Allenworth & Johnson, What Conditions Support Safety in Urban Schools?, supra note 16, at 125 (maintaining that low-performing students are less likely to be engaged and more likely to act out).

65. HATTIE, supra note 29, at 2301–06 (summarizing research regarding negative effects of retention in grade on achievement and behavior).

66. STEINBERG, ALLENWORTH & JOHNSON, STUDENT AND TEACHER SAFETY IN CHICAGO PUBLIC SCHOOLS, supra note 16, at 27–31, 46 (finding that students' academic skills are highly correlated with overall safety at the school); PAUL WILLIS, LEARNING TO LABOR 72 (1977) (explaining that "teachers' authority becomes increasingly the random one of the prison guard, not the necessary one of the pedagogue" when students think that the knowledge, skills, and credentials acquired in school are irrelevant); Pedro A. Noguera, Schools, Prisons, and Social Implications of Punishment: Rethinking Disciplinary Practices, 42 THEORY INTO PRAC. 341, 342 (2003).

67. See AM. BAR ASS'N, supra note 10, at 2; ACTION FOR CHILDREN N.C., supra note 7, at 9–10 ("Students were most commonly referred to the juvenile justice system for low-level offenses . . . ."); EDUCATION UNDER ARREST, supra note 7, at 14–15 (reporting that in 2007–08, ninety-six percent of school-based referrals in Birmingham, Alabama, were for misdemeanors); FABELO ET AL., supra note 10, at 37 (reporting that ninety-seven percent of suspensions and expulsions in Texas resulted from offenses that did not require suspension or expulsion under law); FLA. DEP'T OF JUVENILE JUSTICE, OFFICE

And student misbehavior and discipline often lead to student underachievement,[68] in "a downward spiral of academic failure, disengagement from school, and antisocial behaviors."[69] As leading researchers put it,

> If we ignore the discipline gap, we will be unable to close the achievement gap. Of the 3.5 million students who were suspended in 2011-12, 1.55 million were suspended at least twice. Given that the average suspension is conservatively put at 3.5 days, we estimate that U.S. public school children lost nearly 18 million days of instruction in just one school year because of exclusionary discipline.[70]

FOR PROGRAM ACCOUNTABILITY, DELINQUENCY IN FLORIDA'S SCHOOLS 8 (2011), https://www.prisonlegalnews.org/media/publications/fl_dept_of_ juvenile_justice_study_on_delinquency_in_fl_schools_2004-2011.pdf (observing that "disorderly conduct" was the second most common school-related delinquency referral in Florida schools from 2005–2011); ARRESTING DEVELOPMENT, supra note 7, at 6 (reporting that during the 2004–05 school year in Florida, seventy-six percent of school-based referrals to law enforcement were for misdemeanor offenses such as disorderly conduct); S.C. DEP'T OF JUVENILE JUSTICE, 2012–2013 ANNUAL STATISTICAL REPORT 5 (2013), http://www.state.sc.us/djj/pdfs/2012-13%20Annual%20Statistical%20Report .pdf (stating that the third most frequent offense associated with referrals to family court in 2012–2013 was "disturbing schools").

68. Elizabeth Glennie et al., Addition by Subtraction: The Relation Between Dropout Rates and School-Level Academic Achievement, 114 TCHRS. C. REC. 1, 2 (2012), http://www.tcrecord.org/Content.asp?ContentID=16529 ("[I]mprovements in school-level academic performance will lead to improvements (i.e., decreases) in school-level dropout rates. . . . [and] more evidence of a negative side of the quest for improved academic performance. When dropout rates increase, the performance composites in subsequent years increase."); Tary J. Tobin & Claudia G. Vincent, Univ. of Or., Presentation, Culturally Competent School-Wide Positive Behavior Support: From Theory to Evaluation Data, 7th International Conference on Positive Behavior Support, St. Louis, Mo. (Mar. 26, 2010).

69. REBECCA STAVENJORD, EXCLUSIONARY DISCIPLINE IN MULTNOMAH COUNTY SCHOOLS: HOW SUSPENSIONS AND EXPULSIONS IMPACT STUDENTS OF COLOR 9 (2012), http://allhandsraised.org/content/uploads/2012/10/ exclusionary_discipline_1-3-12.pdf.

70. ARE WE CLOSING, supra note 21, at 4 (emphasis omitted).

Several empirical studies support these conclusions. Analyzing longitudinal data from Florida, scholars Robert Balfanz, Vaughan Byrnes, and Joanna Hornig Fox found that the odds of a student dropping out of school increased from sixteen percent to thirty-two percent the first time that a student was suspended in the ninth grade and increased each additional time that student was suspended.[71] Further, when controlling for other factors such as student demographics, attendance, and course performance, they found that each suspension decreased the odds that a student would graduate from high school by twenty percent and decreased the odds of a student attending a postsecondary institution by twelve percent.[72] Similarly, analyzing longitudinal data from Texas, scholar Miner P. Marchbanks III and his colleagues discovered that when a student received some type of exclusionary discipline, including an in-school suspension, out-of-school suspension, expulsion, a disciplinary alternative placement, or a juvenile justice placement, that student was 23.5 percent more likely to drop out of school after accounting for other salient factors; Marchbanks claimed that even this was a conservative measure,[73] and that "[w]hen a student was suspended or expelled, his or her likelihood of being involved in the juvenile justice system the subsequent year increased significantly."[74] And once students so disciplined

---

71. See, e.g., Robert Balfanz et al., Sent Home and Put Off Track, in CLOSING THE SCHOOL DISCIPLINE GAP, supra note 16, at 22 (finding that in a longitudinal study of 181,897 Florida students, after controlling for student demographics and other indicators that a student is not on track to graduating, that each suspension decreases the odds that a student will graduate by twenty percent); ARE WE CLOSING, supra note 21, at 4 (discussing the negative impact of suspensions on academic performance).

72. Balfanz et al., supra note 71, at 22.

73. See Miner P. Marchbanks III et al., The Economic Effects of Exclusionary Discipline on Grade Retention and High School Dropout, in CLOSING THE SCHOOL DISCIPLINE GAP, supra note 16, at 64.

74. FABELO ET AL., supra note 10, at xi–xii; see also Patrick S. Metze, Plugging the School-to-Prison Pipeline by Addressing Cultural Racism in Public Education Discipline, 16 U.C. DAVIS J. JUV. L. & POL'Y 203, 228–29 (2012). It appears to be a little known fact that when Trayvon Martin was shot by George Zimmerman, he was staying at his father's house because he had been suspended from school. Janel George, Senior Education Policy Counsel, NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc., Presentation at the School-to-Prison Pipeline San Diego Town Hall (Feb. 5, 2016).

they are significantly more likely to find themselves moving further along the pipeline toward prison. Once involved with the juvenile justice system, concerning results continue.[75] At the prison end of the pipeline, educational opportunity is severely limited in most states.[76]

Nor do schools with high levels of exclusionary discipline attain a higher level of academic achievement for the school as a whole: "Perhaps more important, recent research indicates a negative relationship between the use of school suspension and expulsion and school-wide academic achievement, even when controlling for demographics such as socioeconomic status."[77] What is more, "when harsh exclusionary policies are discontinued in schools, referrals to juvenile correctional facilities also decrease."[78]

Once in the juvenile justice system and prison part of the pipeline, the results are the same. Detention/incarceration does not accomplish one of its primary objectives, which is to deter criminal behavior. Evidence of improved outcomes from detention is similar in terms of reasons for arrest and detention, and the results are similarly unimpressive. As the Annie B. Casey report summarized: "The vast majority of studies find that incarceration is no more effective than probation or alternative sanctions in reducing the criminality of adjudicated youth, and a number of well-

---

75. Anne M. Hobbs et al., Assessing Youth Early in the Juvenile Justice System, 3 J. OF JUV. JUST. 80, 81–90 (2013) ("Research confirms that the practice of detaining juveniles for relatively low-level offenses is both ineffective and detrimental . . . . Early Assessment . . . appears to reduce recidivism.").

76. COUNCIL OF STATE GOV'TS JUSTICE CTR., LOCKED OUT: IMPROVING EDUCATIONAL OUTCOMES FOR INCARCERATED YOUTH 3 (2015) https://csgjusticecenter.org/wp-content/uploads/2015/11/LOCKED_OUT_Improving_Educational_and_Vocational_Outcomes_for_Incarcerated_Youth.pdf [hereinafter LOCKED OUT]; see also NAT'L EVALUATION AND TECH. ASSISTANCE CTR. FOR THE EDUC. OF CHILDREN AND YOUTH WHO ARE NEGLECTED, DELINQUENT, OR AT-RISK, FACT SHEET: JUVENILE JUSTICE EDUCATION (2011), http://www.neglected-delinquent.org/sites/default/files/NDFactSheet.pdf (discussing the state of the education system in juvenile justice centers).

77. Am. Psychol. Ass'n Zero Tolerance Task Force, supra note 10, at 854.

78. ROBERT L. LISTENBEE, JR. ET AL., REPORT OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL'S NATIONAL TASK FORCE ON CHILDREN EXPOSED TO VIOLENCE 184 (2012) http://www.justice.gov/defendingchildhood/cev-rpt-full.pdf.

designed studies suggest that correctional placements actually exacerbate criminality."[79] In a comprehensive meta-analysis examining 7,304 juveniles across twenty-nine studies over a thirty-five year period, scholars Anthony Petrosino, Carolyn Turpin-Petrosino, and Sarah Guckenburg found that juvenile justice processing did not effectively deter delinquency; instead, it actually increased delinquency and future involvement in the justice system.[80] In short, the research overwhelmingly demonstrates that the "official processing of a juvenile law violation may be the least effective means of rehabilitating juvenile offenders."[81]

e. Nor are the schools safer[82]

The negative disproportionalities might be understood if indeed removals from school were in fact making schools safer, or, if indeed, confinement in juvenile detention or other facilities led to improved outcomes. This does not appear to be the case in prac-

---

79. MENDEL, supra note 58, at 9–12 ("[T]he overall body of recidivism evidence indicates plainly that confinement in youth corrections facilities doesn't work well as a strategy to steer delinquent youth away from crime. . . . Follow-up studies have long shown that youth released from juvenile correctional facilities seldom succeed in school."); see also ANTOINETTE DAVIS ET AL., SUPERVISION STRATEGIES FOR JUSTICE-INVOLVED YOUTH 1–2 (2014), http://nccdglobal.org/sites/default/files/publication_pdf/supervision-strategies.pdf.

80. ANTHONY PETROSINO ET AL., FORMAL SYSTEM PROCESSING OF JUVENILES: EFFECTS ON DELINQUENCY 6−18 (2013) http://permanent.access.gpo.gov/gpo59099/cops-p265-pub.pdf; see also Anna Aizer & Joseph J. Doyle, Jr., Juvenile Incarceration, Human Capital, and Future Crime: Evidence from Randomly Assigned Judges, 130 Q. J. ECON. 759 (2015) (demonstrating empirically that juvenile incarceration lowers the probability that a juvenile will complete high school and increases the probability of adult incarceration); PEW CHARITABLE TRS., RE-EXAMINING JUVENILE INCARCERATION (2015), http://www.americanbar.org/content/dam/aba/ uncategorized/criminal_justice/2015_Reexamining_Juvenile_Incarceration.authcheck dam.pdf.

81. Hobbs et al., supra note 75, at 81 (emphasis added); see supra Figure 9. Juvenile by Offense.

82. See Jason P. Nance, Students, Security, and Race, 63 EMORY L.J. 1, 21 (2013) (reviewing relevant research that punitive measures "negatively affect the learning environment").

tice or in theory.[83] As researchers Dan Losen and Russell Skiba summarize, "[T]here is no evidence that frequent reliance on removing misbehaving students improves school safety or student behavior."[84]

In school situations, many removals are for behaviors that do not invoke real safety concerns;[85] the vast majority of suspensions—95% of the 3.3 million children suspended from school each year—are for nonviolent offenses such as violating the dress code or "disruptive" behavior.[86]

---

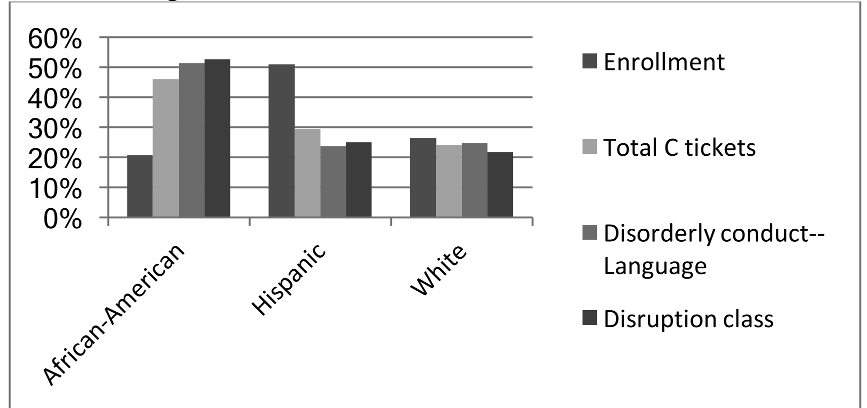
83. See RICHARD A. MENDEL, JUVENILE DETENTION ALTERNATIVES INITIATIVE PROGRESS REPORT 17 (2014), http://www.aecf.org/m/resourcedoc/aecf-2014JDAIProgressReport-2014.pdf; Nance, supra note 82, at 25 ("Strict Security Measures Applied Disproportionately to Minority Students Are Particularly Harmful."). See generally PEDRO A. NOGUERA, THE TROUBLE WITH BLACK BOYS 121–23 (2008) (describing removing "bad apples" as not successful in improving classroom).

84. DANIEL J. LOSEN & RUSSELL SKIBA, SUSPENDED EDUCATION: URBAN MIDDLE SCHOOLS IN CRISIS 2 (2010), http://www.splcenter.org/sites/default/files/downloads/publication/Suspended_Education.pdf (citation omitted).

85. See Russell Skiba & M. Karega Rausch, School Disciplinary Systems: Alternatives to Suspension and Expulsion, in CHILDREN'S NEEDS III: DEVELOPMENT, PREVENTION, AND INTERVENTION 87, 89 (George G. Baer & Kathleen M. Minke eds., 2006), http://www.indiana.edu/~equity/docs/Alternatives_to_Expulsion.pdf; Skiba, Arredondo & Williams, supra note 16, at 550; e.g., ROBIN L. DAHLBERG, ARRESTED FUTURES: THE CRIMINALIZATION OF SCHOOL DISCIPLINE IN MASSACHUSETTS'S THREE LARGEST SCHOOL DISTRICTS 34 (2012), https://www.aclu.org/files/assets/maarrest_reportweb.pdf; FABELO ET AL., supra note 10, at 13; ARTHUR BURKE & VICKI NISHIOKA, SUSPENSION AND EXPULSION PATTERNS IN SIX OREGON SCHOOL DISTRICTS 1 (2014) [hereinafter "OREGON"], http://files.eric.ed.gov/fulltext/ED544799.pdf.

86. ROBERT L. LISTENBEE, JR. ET AL., supra note 78, at 183–84; COMM. ON ASSESSING JUVENILE JUSTICE REFORM, REFORMING JUVENILE JUSTICE: A DEVELOPMENTAL APPROACH 23 (Richard J. Bonnie et al. eds., 2013), http://www.nap.edu/download.php?record_id=14685# [hereinafter REFORMING JUVENILE JUSTICE].

Figure 10. Discipline disproportionality Illustrated, Bryant ISD, Texas Example[87]



"C tickets" are given in Texas by School Resource Officers for discipline infractions. The total here includes the subsets of disorderly and disruptive.

As researcher Daniel Losen summarizes: "Contrary to popular belief, most suspensions are not for guns, drugs or violence . . . . Accordingly, the high rates of disciplinary removal from school currently seen in American schools cannot reasonably be attributed to the necessary responses to unlawful or dangerous misbehavior."[88]

Many removals stem from the application of the zero tolerance concept.[89] The concept of zero tolerance, which calls for au-

---

87. Letter from NAACP Legal Def. & Educ. Fund & Nat'l Ctr. for Youth Law, to Dallas Office for Civil Rights, U.S. Dep't of Educ. (Feb. 20, 2013), http://youthlaw.org/wp-content/uploads/2014/11/Bryan_ISD_OCR_Complaint_FINAL.pdf (citing data obtained by Texas Appleseed through Open Record Requests); see also supra Figure 6. At Least One Out of School Suspension Elementary & Secondary by Group.

88. Daniel J. Losen, supra note 49, at 8; see also ARE WE CLOSING, supra note 21, at 10–11.

89. See, e.g., Ratner v. Loudoun Cty. Pub. Schs., 16 Fed. App'x 140, 141–42 (4th Cir. 2001) (per curiam) (upholding the suspension of a 13-year-old student who took a knife away from a fellow student because the student told him that she was going to commit suicide even though all agreed that Ratner posed no threat, in fact the opposite). See generally Lenore Skenazy, Here Are 10 Outrageous 'Zero Tolerance' Follies of 2014, HIT & RUN BLOG (Dec. 29, tomatic discipline in every case of the specified behavior, was spawned by the requirements of the Gun Free School Zone Act in 1994[90] and grew to include other behaviors.[91] A zero tolerance approach limited discretion, though research eventually revealed that discretion continued and the approach was not especially effective.[92] The American Psychological Association ("APA") Zero Tolerance Task Force concluded that these policies do not bring about improved school safety. On the contrary, "data on a number of indicators of school climate have shown the opposite effect, that is, that schools with higher rates of school suspension and expulsion appear to have less satisfactory ratings of school climate, to have less satisfactory school governance . . . ."[93] 2014, 9:30 AM), https://reason.com/blog/2014/12/29/the-top-10-zero-tolerance-follies-of-201#.ozntkut:gd1T.

90. Gun-Free Schools Act of 1994, 20 U.S.C. §§ 8921–23, repealed by No Child Left Behind Act of 2001, Pub. L. No. 107-110, tit. X, § 1011(5)(C), 115 Stat. 1986.

91. See generally ASHLEY NELLIS, RETURN TO JUSTICE: RETHINKING OUR APPROACH TO JUVENILES IN THE SYSTEM 95 (2015) (reviewing history and discussing of examples as applied beyond weapons).

92. Thalia González, Restoring Justice: Community Organizing to Transform School Discipline Policies, 15 U.C. DAVIS J. JUV. L. & POL'Y 1, 9–10 (2011); KANG-BROWN ET AL., supra note 8, at 4; LOSEN & SKIBA, supra note 84, at 9; Am. Psychol. Ass'n Zero Tolerance Task Force, supra note 10, at 856–57; AM. BAR ASS'N JUVENILE JUSTICE COMM'N, supra note 10, at 4–6; see also Ending the School-to-Prison Pipeline: Hearing Before the Subcomm. on the Constitution, Civil Rights and Human Rights of the S. Comm. on the Judiciary, 112th Cong. 156–62 (2013) (statement of Laurel G. Bellows, President, American Bar Association); Nat'l Inst. of Justice, School-Based Bullying Prevention Programs, CRIMESOLUTIONS.GOV, https://www.crimesolutions.gov/PracticeDetails.aspx?ID=20&utm_source=eblast-govdelivery&utm_medium=eblast&utm_campaign=pract20-school-based-bullying (last visited Jan. 11, 2016) (discussing failure of these policies regarding bullying). See generally Russell J. Skiba & Daniel J. Losen, From Reaction to Prevention: Turning the Page on School Discipline, AM. EDUCATOR, Winter 2015–2016, http://www.aft.org/ae/winter2015-2016/skiba_losen#sthash.PoX9AxdK.dpuf (providing overview of development and waning of this approach).

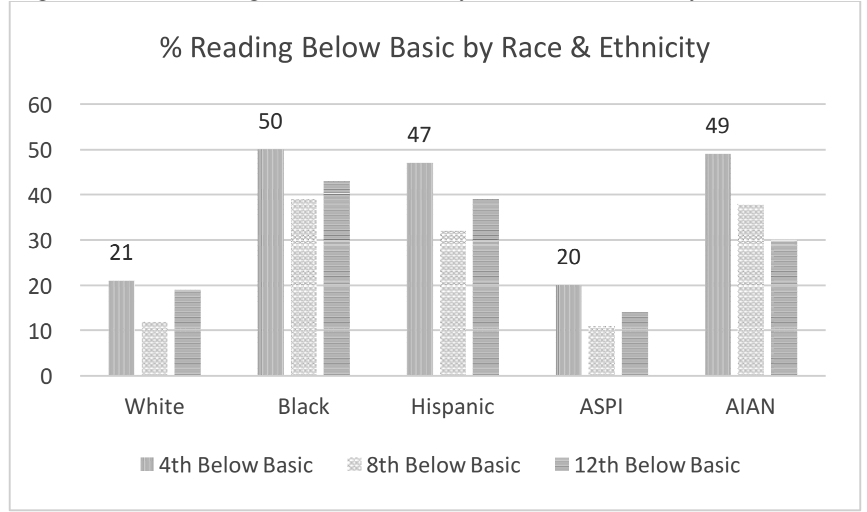
93. Am. Psychol. Ass'n Zero Tolerance Task Force, supra note 10, at 854.

B. The Manifestations

1. Disproportionality manifests itself all along the pipeline where students of color are poorly served[94]

a. Students of color are disproportionately lower achievers and unable to read at basic or above

Figure 11. Reading Below Basic by Race & Ethnicity[95]



The overall achievement gap between African-American, Hispanic, and American Indian Alaskan Native (AIAN) students and their White and Asian peers has been a subject of concern since at least 1966 when the U.S. Department of Health Education and Welfare commissioned the Equality of Educational Opportunity Study (Coleman Report).[96]

94. Scholar Margaret Burchinal and her colleagues have described the "substantial gap in educational achievement between Black and White children [a]s one of the most pernicious problems facing American society." Margaret Burchinal et al., Examining the Black-White Achievement Gap Among Low-Income Children Using the NICHD Study of Early Child Care and Youth Development, 82 CHILD DEV. 1404, 1404 (2011). See generally CATHERINE Y. KIM ET AL., THE SCHOOL-TO-PRISON PIPELINE: STRUCTURING LEGAL REFORM 1 (2010) (explaining that conditions increasing the probability that a student will be involved in the criminal justice system are broad and might include depriving students of needed resources to enhance their educational opportunities).

95. NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATISTICS, U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC., DIGEST OF EDUCATION STATISTICS 2013, at 233 tbl.221.20 (2013), http://nces.ed.gov/pubs2015/2015011.pdf.

Because reading is one of the most critical skills for every student and citizen and relates to many other academic and societal skills, one's ability to read offers a clear example of a primary academic concern.[97] Differences in reading skills begin early and endure.[98] At kindergarten, African-American and Hispanic children are significantly less likely to know their letters or recognize beginning and ending sounds than their White and Asian peers.[99] For example, 50% of Hispanic children recognize the letters of the alphabet when they enter kindergarten compared to 57% of African-American, 71% of White, and 80% of Asian American children.[100]

At the end of the third grade, most gaps identified in preschoolers persist.[101] Significantly, a student who is not "a modest-

---

96. See Equality of Educational Opportunity Study, INTER-UNIVERSITY CONSORTIUM FOR POL. & SOC. RES., http://www.icpsr.umich.edu/icpsrweb/ICPSR/ studies/06389 (last visited Oct. 29, 2016).

97. See generally REDFIELD, DIVERSITY, supra note 30, at ch. 3 (reviewing reading, writing, history, and civics). Several demographic groups are disproportionately represented in this bottom tier, including those who did not graduate from high school, those who did not speak English before starting school, Hispanic & Black adults, and those with multiple disabilities. Nat'l Ctr. for Educ. Stat., National Assessment of Adult Literacy ("NAAL"), http://nces.ed.gov/naal/kf_demographics.asp (last visited Oct. 29, 2016).

98. Burchinal et al., supra note 94, at 1401 ("[R]acial disparities in school achievement increase by about one tenth of a standard deviation during each year of school."); Nancy E. Dowd, What Men?: The Essentialist Error of the "End of Men", 93 B.U. L. REV. 1205, 1217 (2013) (observing that the racial achievement gap widens as children grow because minority schools have fewer resources).

99. JERRY WEST, KRISTIN DENTON & ELVIRA GERMINO-HAUSKEN, U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC., AMERICA'S KINDERGARTNERS 16, 22 tbl.6 (2000), http://nces.ed.gov/pubs2000/2000070.pdf.

100. PAUL E. BARTON & RICHARD J. COLEY, EDUC. TESTING SERV., WINDOWS ON ACHIEVEMENT AND INEQUALITY 9–11 (2008), http://www.ets.org/Media/Research/pdf/PICWINDOWS.pdf (reviewing achievement gap from child development to global comparisons); JAY MACLEOD, AIN'T NO MAKIN' IT: ASPIRATIONS & ATTAINMENT IN A LOW-INCOME NEIGHBORHOOD 13–16, 100 (3d ed. 2009) (discussing differences/impact).

101. See AMY RATHBUN, JERRY WEST & ELVIRA GERMINO-HAUSKEN, U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC., FROM KINDERGARTEN THROUGH THIRD GRADE:

ly skilled reader by the end of third grade is quite unlikely to graduate from high school."[102] The percentage of American Indian students reading below grade level at fourth grade is 53%; for African-American students, 51%; for Hispanic students, 49%; for White students, 22%; and for Asian Pacific Islanders (ASPI), 20%.[103] African-American and Latino 17-year-olds, on average, read at the same level as White 13-year-olds.[104] By twelfth grade, there is an almost 30-point difference in scale scores on the National Assessment of Education Progress (NAEP).[105]

These differences remain evident notwithstanding decades of varied strategies and interventions.[106] Summarizing the data on this intractable problem, leading literacy researchers conclude:

> Nationally reported data point to four conclusions: (1) There are differences in the emerging literacy knowledge and performance of young children entering kindergarten from various racial/ethnic and socioeconomic backgrounds; (2) the gap is greater for children who enter school with a combination of multiple risk factor (e.g., . . . whether the primary language spoken in the home is not English); (3) by

---

CHILDREN'S BEGINNING SCHOOL EXPERIENCE 16 fig.5 (2004), http://nces.ed.gov/pubs2004/2004007.pdf.

102. NAT'L RESEARCH COUNCIL, PREVENTING READING DIFFICULTIES IN YOUNG CHILDREN 21 (Catherine E. Snow, M. Susan Burns & Peg Griffin eds., 1998); THE TRUST FOR EARLY EDUCATION, A POLICY PRIMER: QUALITY PRE-KINDERGARTEN 14 (2004).

103. NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATISTICS, U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC., READING 2011: NATIONAL ASSESSMENT OF EDUCATIONAL PROGRESS AT GRADES 4 AND 8, 15 fig.8 (2011), http://nces.ed.gov/nationsreportcard/pdf/main2011/2012457.pdf.

104. THOMAS D. SNYDER & SALLY A. DILLOW, U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC., DIGEST OF EDUCATION STATISTICS 2011, at 193 tbl.125 (2012), http://nces.ed.gov/pubs2012/2012001.pdf.

105. MARIANA HAYNES, ALLIANCE FOR EXCELLENT EDUC., CONFRONTING THE CRISIS: FEDERAL INVESTMENTS IN STATE BIRTH-THROUGH-GRADE-TWELVE LITERACY EDUCATION 4 (2012), http://www.all4ed.org/files/ConfrontingTheCrisis.pdf.

106. See SCHOTT FOUND. FOR PUB. EDUC., THE URGENCY OF NOW: THE SCHOTT 50 STATE REPORT ON PUBLIC EDUCATION AND BLACK MALES 43–48 (2012), http://blackboysreport.org/bbreport2012.pdf.

> grade 4, there is a significant discrepancy between the reading comprehension proficiency of European American, non-Hispanic students and their African American and Hispanic peers, and this discrepancy continues through grade 12; and (4) these gaps have been stable for more than a decade.[107]

Other subject areas show similar discrepancies.[108] This is hardly surprising considering that these same students have fewer engaging educational experiences,[109] fewer experienced highly qualified teachers,[110] less access to rigorous and high level course-work, and experience lower expectations from their teachers.[111]

---

107. HANDBOOK OF RESEARCH ON LITERACY AND DIVERSITY 1 (Lesley Mandel Morrow, Robert Rueda & Diane Lapp, eds., 2009).

108. REDFIELD, DIVERSITY, supra note 30, at ch. 3 (2009) (summarizing gaps all along the educational pipeline).

109. See, e.g., THE SILENT EPIDEMIC, supra note 42, at 3–4; see also REDFIELD, DIVERSITY, supra note 30, at 82–85 (reviewing the research).

110. U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFFICE FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, THE TRANSFORMED CIVIL RIGHTS DATA COLLECTION (CRDC) (2012), http://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/docs/crdc-2012-data-summary.pdf. Students with more teachers with at least five years' experience show more academic gains, but these are the very teachers that are lacking in high minority schools. THE EDUC. TRUST, THEIR FAIR SHARE: HOW TEXAS-SIZED GAPS IN TEACHER QUALITY SHORTCHANGE LOW-INCOME AND MINORITY STUDENTS 2 (2008), http://edtrust.org/wp-content/uploads/2013/10/TXTheirFairShare.pdf; SUSAN AUD ET AL., U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC., STATUS AND TRENDS IN THE EDUCATION OF RACIAL AND ETHNIC GROUPS 48 (2010), http://www.air.org/sites/default/files/downloads/report/AIR-NCESracial_stats__trends1_0.pdf (showing disparity in qualification in relationship to school population); ALLIANCE FOR EXCELLENT EDUC., IMPROVING THE DISTRIBUTION OF TEACHERS IN LOW-PERFORMING HIGH SCHOOLS 1 (2008), http://www.issuelab.org/resource/improving_the_distribution_of_teachers_in_low_performing_high_schools ("There are different ways of measuring teacher quality at the high school level . . ., but no matter what measurement is used, students in poorer high schools which primarily serve students of color are generally taught by lower-quality teachers. Teachers in these schools routinely lack experience, qualifications, and effectiveness . . . ." (internal citation omitted)).

111. See generally Higher Education: Gaps in Access and Persistence Study, NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATISTICS, http://nces.ed.gov/pubs2012/2012046/chapter6.asp (last visited Oct. 30, 2016) (reviewing rigorous courses particularly math); JEANNIE OAKES, RAND CORP., MULTIPLYING INEQUALITIES: THE EFFECTS OF RACE, SOCIAL CLASS, AND

b. Students of color suffer disproportionately because of lower expectations and lack of engagement[112]

Engagement of a young person with his/her teachers or school or other adults is critical,[113] but many adults in these systems are not engaged. As discussed in the context section, many school officials and teachers who work with minority students living in poor neighborhoods have a stronger tendency to adopt a lower level of expectations for their students.[114] There is troubling empirical evidence suggesting that some teachers and school officials believe that some students, particularly African-American males, are "bound for jail" and "unsalvageable."[115]

c. Students of color are disproportionately retained in grade or excluded because of high stakes testing

In early years and beyond, minority students are disproportionately held back. For American Indian-Alaskan Native students, 7% are held back in kindergarten, for Native Hawaiian Pacific Islander students, 8%, as compared to African-American students at 5%, White and Hispanic students at 4%, and Asian stu-

---

TRACKING ON OPPORTUNITIES TO LEARN MATHEMATICS AND SCIENCE (1990), http://www.rand.org/pubs/reports/2006/R3928.pdf; NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATISTICS, U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC., THE NATION'S REPORT CARD 28 (2007), https://nces.ed.gov/nationsreportcard/pdf/studies/2007467.pdf (also showing curricular disparities); UNIV. OF CAL. UNDERGRADUATE WORK TEAM OF THE STUDY GROUP ON UNIV. DIVERSITY, RECOMMENDATIONS AND OBSERVATIONS 19 fig.6 (2007), http://ucop.edu/student-affairs/_files/07-diversity_report.pdf (California data).

112. See supra 29–35 and accompanying text; STEINBERG, ALLENWORTH & JOHNSON, STUDENT AND TEACHER SAFETY IN CHICAGO PUBLIC SCHOOLS, supra note 16, at 46 (maintaining that low-performing students are less likely to be engaged in school and more likely to be frustrated and misbehave); Steinberg, Allensworth, & Johnson, What Conditions Support Safety in Urban Schools, supra note 16, at 125 (explaining that low-achieving students are less likely to be engaged and more likely to act out).

113. DAHLBERG, supra note 85, at 34 ("[T]he most critical factor in creating safe, orderly schools [is] not the presence of police, but the engagement of school administrators.").

114. REDFIELD, DIVERSITY, supra note 30, at 38–48, 70–74.

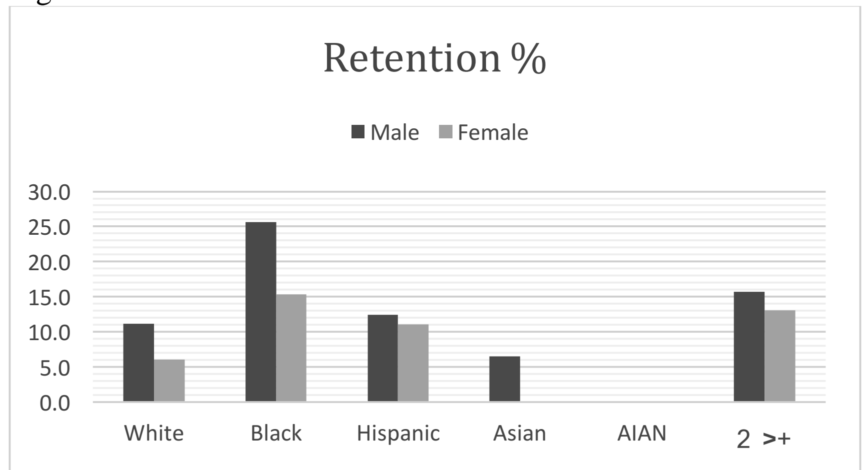
115. Paul J. Hirschfield, Preparing for Prison? The Criminalization of School Discipline in the USA, 12 THEORETICAL CRIMINOLOGY 79, 92 (2008).

dents at 2%.[116] Similar patterns continue into later grades; for example, in sixth grade, American Indian-Alaskan Natives are still held back at twice the rate of Whites and African-American students at three times that rate; and twelve percent of African-American students are retained in ninth grade, which is nearly double the rate of all students retained.[117]

Figure 12. Retention rates [118]



High stakes testing exacerbates these concerns. Students are disproportionately impacted by high school exit exams.[119] Fur-

116. U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFFICE FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, CIVIL RIGHTS DATA COLLECTION, DATA SNAPSHOT: EARLY CHILDHOOD EDUCATION 5 (2014), https://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/docs/crdc-early-learning-snapshot.pdf; see infra Figure 12.

117. OFFICE FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, CIVIL RIGHTS DATA COLLECTION, CIVIL RIGHTS DATA COLLECTION, 2009-10 NATIONAL AND STATE ESTIMATIONS, http://ocrdata.ed.gov/StateNationalEstimations/Projections_2009_10 (follow "National total" hyperlink) (last visited Oct. 11, 2016); Catherine E. Lhamon, Five New Facts from the Civil Rights Data Collection, HOMEROOM: THE OFFICIAL BLOG OF THE U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. (Mar. 21, 2014), http://blog.ed.gov/2014/03/five-new-facts-from-the-civil-rights-data-collection/. As discussed previously, retention is not a successful intervention strategy. HATTIE, supra note 29.

118. AUD ET AL., supra note 110, at 92 tbl.17a.

119. See ADVANCEMENT PROJECT, TEST, PUNISH, AND PUSH OUT: HOW "ZERO TOLERANCE" AND HIGH-STAKES TESTING FUNNEL YOUTH INTO THE SCHOOL-TO-PRISON PIPELINE 25, 27–28 (2010), http://b.3cdn.net/advancement/ther, federal and state education accountability laws also may create a perverse incentive to push low-performing students out of school.[120] Federal and state accountability laws require students to regularly test students and impose consequences on schools that fail to meet certain standards.[121] Many fear that school officials sometimes suspend, expel, or refer low-performing students to the juvenile justice system to avoid having their low scores count against their schools.[122] d05cb2181a4545db07_r2im6caqe.pdf (discussing dehumanizing effects of testing).

---

120. Rachel F. Moran, Sorting and Reforming: High-Stakes Testing in the Public Schools, 34 AKRON L. REV. 107, 115 (2000) (maintaining that in a high-stakes testing context, low-performing students "are in danger of being pushed out" of schools).

121. For example, the now-defunct No Child Left Behind Act required schools that received federal funds to administer various academic assessments to students at different stages during grades three through twelve and imposed sanctions on schools whose students failed to meet certain standards. See Testing: Frequently Asked Questions, U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC., http://www2.ed.gov/nclb/accountability/ayp/testing-faq.html (last modified Nov. 17, 2004); Torin Monahan & Rodolfo D. Torres, Introduction, in SCHOOLS UNDER SURVEILLANCE: CULTURES OF CONTROL IN PUBLIC EDUCATION 5 (Torin Monahan & Rodolfo D. Torres eds., 2009). The Every Student Succeeds Act, Pub. L. 114-95, which replaced the No Child Left Behind Act on December 10, 2015, also requires states receiving federal funds to implement student academic assessments in their public schools. See Every Student Succeeds Act, 114 Pub. L. No. 114-95, § 1111(b)(2), 129 Stat. 1802, 1825–29 (2015). However, one of the hallmarks of the Every Student Succeeds Act is that it prohibits the federal government from determining the weight of those assessments for accountability purposes. See id. at sec. 1111(e)(1)(B)(iii); see also SENATE COMMITTEE ON HEALTH, EDUCATION, LABOR AND PENSIONS, THE EVERY CHILD ACHIEVES ACT OF 2015, at 1, http://www.help.senate.gov/imo/media/The_Every_Child_Achieves_Act_of_2015--summary.pdf (last visited Oct. 13, 2016).

122. See, e.g., FED. ADVISORY COMM. ON JUVENILE JUSTICE, ANNUAL REPORT 2010 10 (2010); NAACP LEGAL DEF. & EDUC. FUND, DISMANTLING THE SCHOOL-TO-PRISON PIPELINE 5 (2005), http://www.naacpldf.org/files/publications/Dismantling_the_School_to_Prison_Pipeline.pdf; Linda Darling-Hammond, Race, Inequality and Educational Accountability: The Irony of 'No Child Left Behind', 10 RACE ETHNICITY & EDUC. 245, 252–55 (2007); Deborah Gordon Klehr, Addressing the Unintended Consequences of No Child Left Behind and Zero Tolerance: Better Strategies for Safe Schools and Successful Students, 16 GEO. J. ON POVERTY L. & POL'Y 585, 602–03 (2010); Michael P. Krezmien et al., Juvenile Court Referrals and the Public Schools: Nature and

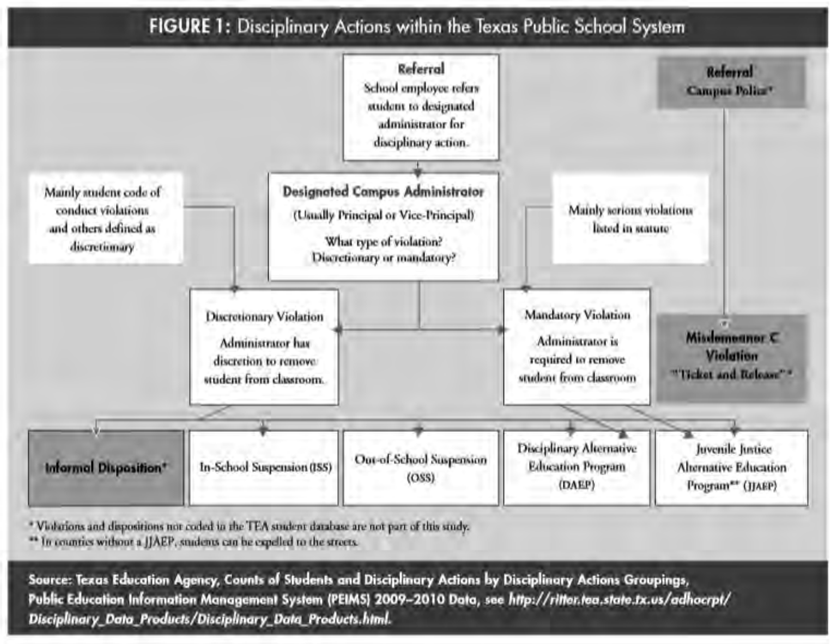
d. Students of color are disproportionately subject to more frequent and harsher punishment

School discipline runs a continuum from in-class interventions, in-school suspensions, out-of-school suspensions, placement in disciplinary alternative education programs, to expulsions and on to the juvenile justice system and beyond.[123]

Figure 13. Discipline Approaches (TX)[124]



Extent of the Practice in Five States, 26 J. CONTEMP. CRIM. JUST. 273, 274 (2010); James E. Ryan, The Perverse Incentives of the No Child Left Behind Act, 79 N.Y.U. L. REV. 932, 969–70 (2004); ADVANCEMENT PROJECT, supra note 119, at 28–33.

123. See ERICA TERRAZAS, TEXAS APPLESEED, WHEN MY CHILD IS DISCIPLINED AT SCHOOL: A GUIDE FOR FAMILIES 3–4 (2009), http://www.texascjc.org/sites/default/files/uploads/TX%20Appleseed%20-%20Guide%20for%20Families,%20When%20My%20Child%20is%20Disciplined%20at%20School%20(Jan%202009).pdf. See generally Wallace, Jr. et al., supra note 48, at 47.

124. FABELO ET AL., supra note 10, at 19.

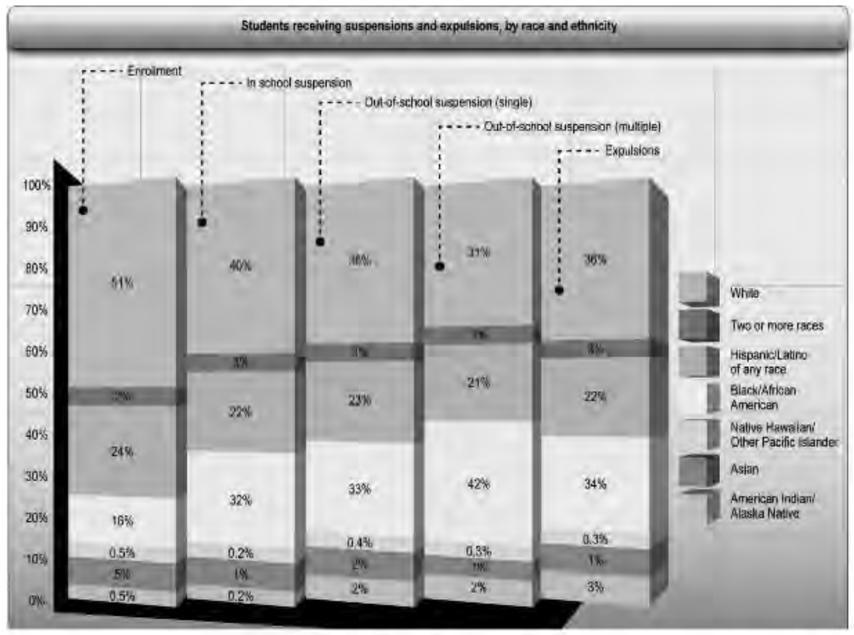
The CRDC shows that African-American and American Indian-Alaskan Natives students are most disproportionately disciplined.

Figure 14. CRDC Discipline, by Race & Ethnicity: Suspension/Expulsion[125]



NOTE: Detail may not sum to 100% due to rounding. Totals: Enrollment is 49 million students, in-school suspension is 3.5 million students, single out-of-school suspension is 1.9 million students, multiple out-of-school suspension is 1.55 million students, and expulsion is 130,000 students. Data reported in this figure represents 99% of responding schools.
SOURCE: U.S. Department of Education, Office for Civil Rights, Civil Rights Data Collection, 2011-12.

American Indian-Alaskan Natives were only 0.5% of the student population but accounted for 3% of expulsions, 2% of multiple out of school suspensions, 2% of single out of school suspensions, and 0.2% of in school suspensions. African-American students, who represented 16% of the student population in the CRDC data, are a much higher percentage of students suspended or expelled: 34% expelled, 42% subjected to multiple out of school suspensions, 33% to single out of school suspensions, and 32% to in school suspensions. In comparison, White students in the CRDC data showed a similar range between 31–40% of students suspended or expelled, but from 51% base.[126] Similarly, African-American children are 18% of the preschool population, and they represent 48% of preschool children suspended (out of school) more than once; White students, who are 43% of the preschool population, are only 26% of the children so disciplined.[127] All other reported groups show preschool suspensions very close to their proportion of the population.

125. U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFFICE FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, supra note 5, at 2.

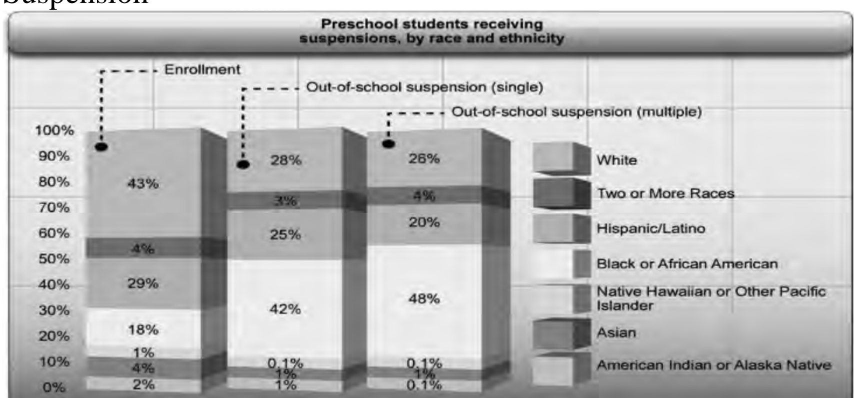
Figure 15. CRDC Discipline, by Race & Ethnicity: Preschool Suspension[128]



This kind of disproportionality is especially evident for offenses that are not serious and that call for subjective judgment.[129] Among students who were seriously disciplined—that is suspended for more than five days, removed from school with no services, or placed in disciplinary alternative education settings—only about 1% of the cases involved firearms or explosives.[130] By compari-

126. U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFFICE FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, supra note 5, at 2.

127. Lhamon, supra note 117; Trymaine Lee, Preschool to Prison: No Child too Young for Zero-Tolerance, MSNBC (Mar. 21, 2014, 12:53 PM), http://www.msnbc.com/msnbc/preschool-prison-no-child-too-young; see also TEXAS APPLESEED, SUSPENDED CHILDHOOD: AN ANALYSIS OF EXCLUSIONARY DISCIPLINE OF TEXAS' PRE-K AND ELEMENTARY SCHOOL STUDENTS (2015), https://slate.adobe.com/a/6dvQB/ [hereinafter SUSPENDED CHILDHOOD] (concluding similarly for Texas' youngest students, where African-Americans are 13% of the school population but account for 42% of the students suspended).

128. U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFFICE FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, supra note 5, at 7 (showing percent of all suspensions this grade).

129. See supra notes 24, 48–50 and accompanying text.

130. NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATISTICS, supra note 95, at 337 tbl.233.10.

son, insubordination accounted for 42.5% of the serious discipline cases.[131] For discipline with less serious consequences—particularly out of school suspension—the most common offenses also included insubordination together with disruption and physical or verbal aggression.[132]

Multnomah County, Oregon, data further illustrates this problem. With a population of 28,115 White students and 23,950 students of color, data show that in the categories that mostly involve discretion in identifying facts or interpretation of behavior, students of color (46% of population) accounted for 61% of the discipline incidents and White students (54% of population), 37%.[133] The relative rate of discipline incidents was 3.3 for African-American students, 1.88 for Latino, 2.13 for Native American, and 0.46 for Asian (with White equaling 1).[134] In this study, one of the most common bases for discipline for both groups was fighting at about the same proportion of discipline incidents for each group.[135] In another example, in the Breaking Schools' Rules study of disciplinary practice in Texas, researchers observed that almost 60% of the public school students studied were either suspended or expelled at least once from grade 7 to 12.[136] Controlling for other variables, researchers concluded that African-American students were 31% more likely to be disciplined for in school discretionary categories than their "otherwise identical" White and Hispanic peers.[137]

131. NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATISTICS, supra note 95, at 337 tbl.233.10.
132. OREGON, supra note 85, at 8–9.
133. Id. at 21, 22, 24.
134. See OREGON, supra note 85 at Appendix C.
135. Id. at 19.
136. FABELO ET AL., supra note 10, at ix.
137. Id. at 45.

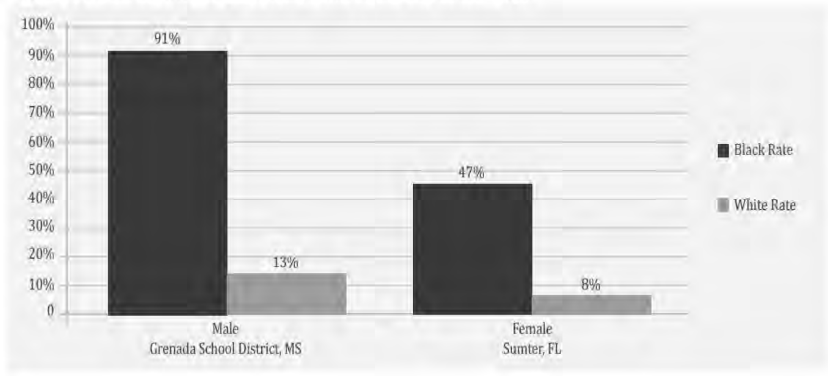
Figure 16. Suspension Disproportionality by Race & Gender MS & FL examples.[138]



This kind of disproportionality is most commonly discussed for boys but is also evident among certain groups of girls. As the CRDC reported, "While boys receive more than two out of three suspensions, black girls are suspended at higher rates (12%) than girls of any other race or ethnicity and most boys; American Indian and Native-Alaskan girls (7%) are suspended at higher rates than White boys (6%) or girls (2%)."[139]

e. Students of color are disproportionately referred to law enforcement or subject to school-related arrest

The CRDC also shows that African-American students (who are 16% of population reported in the CRDC sample) are 27% of students referred to law enforcement and 31% of students subject to school-related arrest. American Indian-Alaskan Native (AIAN) numbers are also out of proportion. Although AIAN students amount to 1% of the student population, they are 3% of students referred to law enforcement and 2% of students subject to school-related arrest. For White students, only 41% are referred to

138. ARE WE CLOSING, supra note 21, at 30.

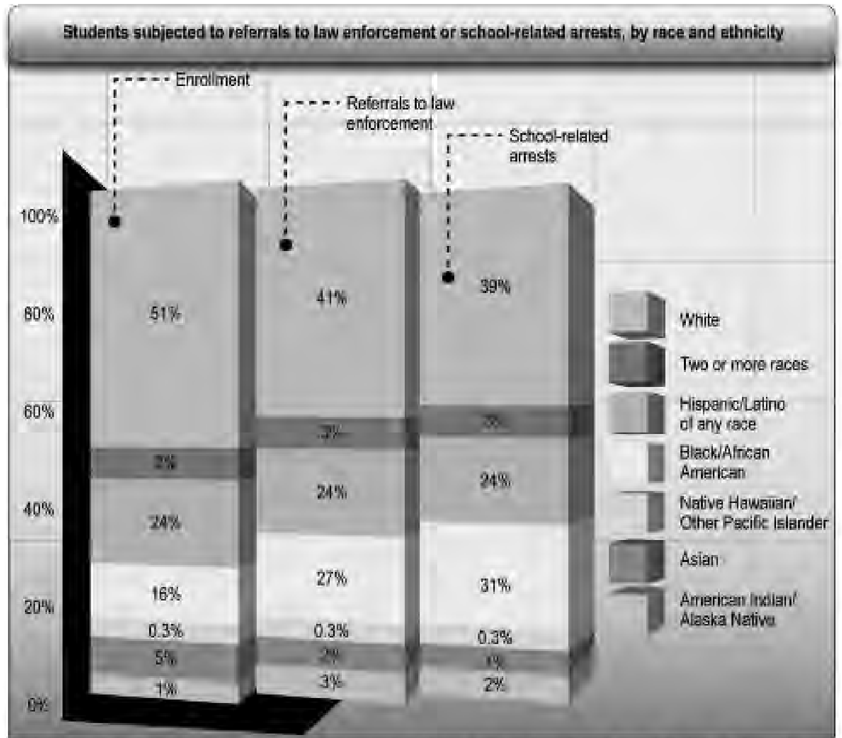
139. U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFF. FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, supra note 5, at 1. Research also shows that suspensions are particularly high for girls with darker skin tones. Id.

law enforcement and 39% subject to school related arrest, both lower than their part of the population.[140]

Figure 17. CRDC Discipline, by Race & Ethnicity: Referral to Law Enforcement[141]



NOTE: Detail may not sum to 100% due to rounding. Totals are 49 million students for overall enrollment, 260,000 students referred to law enforcement, and 92,000 students subject to school-related arrests. Data on referrals to law enforcement represents 98% of schools and data on school related arrests represents 94% of schools in the CRDC universe.

SOURCE: U.S. Department of Education, Office for Civil Rights, Civil Rights Data Collection, 2011–12.

f. Students of color are disproportionately placed in alternative schools

Originally conceived as a setting that could provide optimum environments for students not doing well academically or behaviorally in regular school settings, these schools now primarily serve students labeled as "disruptive or dangerous."[142] While alternative schools may be seen as an alternative to exclusion, they are both increasingly used and in demand and increasingly seen as punitive. In a study of Jefferson County, Kentucky, public schools, researchers found that "total cumulative proportion of students that experienced placement in a disciplinary school between 3rd and 12th grade is 9%, or nearly 1 in 10 students."[143] They also found that racial gaps were pronounced as 13% of all African-American students in the cohort experienced placement compared to 4% of the White students.[144]

140. U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFF. FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, supra note 5, at 6.
141. Id. at 6.

g. Students of color disproportionately drop out of school and fail to graduate from high school

Graduation rates and comparative graduation rates have improved—indeed they are widely reported to have reached 80% in 2014[145]—but differences remain.[146] It is still the case that minority students as a group continue to lag behind.[147] Comparative

---

142. Judi Vanderhaar et al., Reconsidering the Alternatives: The Relationship Between Suspension, Disciplinary Alternative School Placement, Subsequent Juvenile Detention, and the Salience of Race, 5 J. APPLIED RES. ON CHILD.: INFORMING POL'Y FOR CHILD. RISK 1, 1–3 (2014). See generally NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATISTICS, U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC., ALTERNATIVE SCHOOLS AND PROGRAMS FOR PUBLIC SCHOOL STUDENTS AT RISK OF EDUCATIONAL FAILURE: 2007–08, at 8 tbl.4 (2010), http://nces.ed.gov/pubs2010/2010026.pdf.

143. Vanderhaar et al., supra note 142, at 10.

144. Id.

145. US High School Graduation Rate Hits All-Time High, Per Report, NPR (Apr. 29, 2014), http://www.npr.org/2014/04/29/307968835/us-high-school-graduation-rate-hits-all-time-high-per-report.

146. See infra Figure 18.

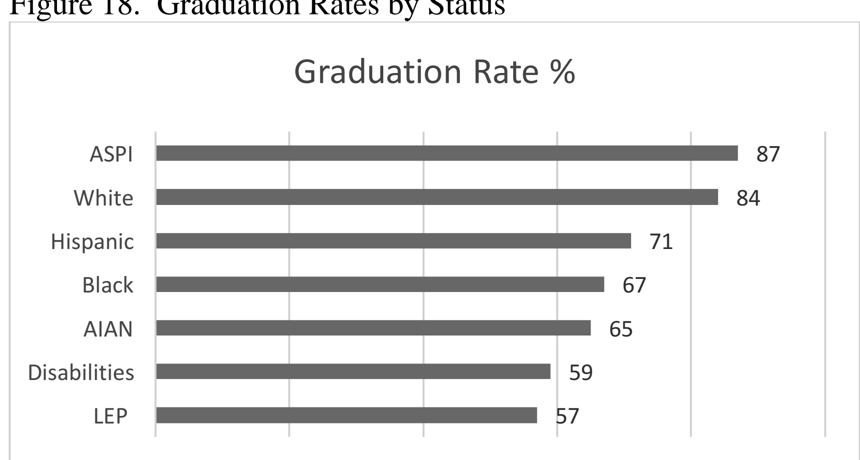
147. Lalita Clozel, National High School Graduation Rate Exceeds 80% for the First Time, L.A. TIMES (Apr. 28, 2014, 12:29 PM), http://www.latimes.com/nation/nationnow/la-na-nn-national-graduation-rate-record-20140428-story.html; see also, e.g., Marchbanks III et al., supra note 73, at 59; THE URGENCY OF NOW, supra note 106, at 7–9 (summarizing that "at the current pace of progress for both, it would take nearly 50 years for Black males to secure the same high school graduation rates as their White male peers. . . . Educationally this represents the point at which Black males can secure a high school diploma on par with their White male peers; economically it represents the point at which they will be equally equipped to secure post-secondary educagraduation rates are 62% for African-American students, 51% for American Indian-Alaskan Native students, and 68% for Hispanic students; as compared to about 80% for White and 81% for Asian students.[148]

Figure 18. Graduation Rates by Status[149]



Like the graduation rate, the status dropout rate[150] (young people who are out of school without achieving a high school level tional and labor opportunities available as a result of possessing a high school diploma.").

---

148. NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATISTICS, U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC., STATUS AND TRENDS IN THE EDUCATION OF RACIAL AND ETHNIC GROUPS 99 tbl.18.1b. (2010), http://nces.ed.gov/pubs2010/2010015.pdf; see also GARY ORFIELD ET AL., LOSING OUR FUTURE: HOW MINORITY YOUTH ARE BEING LEFT BEHIND BY THE GRADUATION RATE CRISIS (2004), http://www.urban.org/sites/default/files/alfresco/publication-pdfs/410936-Losing-Our-Future.pdf.

149. MARIE C. STETSER & ROBERT STILLWELL, NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATISTICS, U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC., PUBLIC HIGH SCHOOL FOUR-YEAR ON-TIME GRADUATION RATES AND EVENT DROPOUT RATES: SCHOOL YEARS 2010-11 AND 2011-12, at 7 tbl.1 (2014), http://nces.ed.gov/pubs2014/2014391.pdf.

150. Dropout includes students who are pushed out, pulled out, or fall out. JONATHAN JACOB DOLL, ZOHREH ESLAMI & LYNNE WALTERS, UNDERSTANDING WHY STUDENTS DROP OUT OF HIGH SCHOOL, ACCORDING TO THEIR OWN REPORTS (2013), http://sgo.sagepub.com/content/3/4/2158244013503834; see also HILARY BURDGE, ZAMI T. HYEMINGWAY & ADELA C. LICONA, GAY-STRAIGHT ALLIANCE NETWORK, GENDER NONCONFORMING YOUTH: DISCIPLINE DISPARITIES, SCHOOL PUSH-OUT, AND THE SCHOOL-TO-PRISON PIPELINE 8 (2014), http://b.3cdn.net/advancement/of educational attainment) is improving—now reported to be at 9.3% overall, though this still represents about five thousand students a day, over a million a year.[151] But like the graduation rate, despite general improvement, the dropout rate remains high for some groups, disproportionately so,[152] particularly for American Indian-Alaskan Native and Pacific Islanders: Asian, 3.0%; White, 6.1%; Hawaiian/Pacific Islander, 7.6%; African-American, 11.5%; Hispanic, 19.9%; American Indian-Alaskan Native, 5.3%.[153] e2df7ec74f895dd5bb_86m6vosva.pdf (defining pushout as "a student being marginalized in school and/or driven out of school prior to graduation. It differs from the term 'drop-out' in that it acknowledges the multiple school-based conditions and forces at play in marginalizing students in the classroom and in school as well as pressuring students to leave school prematurely. Students who are pushed out of school stop going to school altogether, enroll in an alternative or disciplinary school, or enroll in a GED program").

---

151. Economic Impacts, ALLIANCE FOR EXCELLENT EDUC., http://all4ed.org/issues/economic-impacts/ (last visited Oct. 31, 2016).

152. See NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATISTICS, supra note 148, at 95 tbl.18.1b.

153. Status Dropout Rates, NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATISTICS fig.2, http://nces.ed.gov/programs/coe/indicator_coj.asp (last updated May 2016); NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATISTICS, supra note 95, at 217 tbl.219.70; see also Tobin & Vincent, supra note 68 (discussing Latino/a rates).

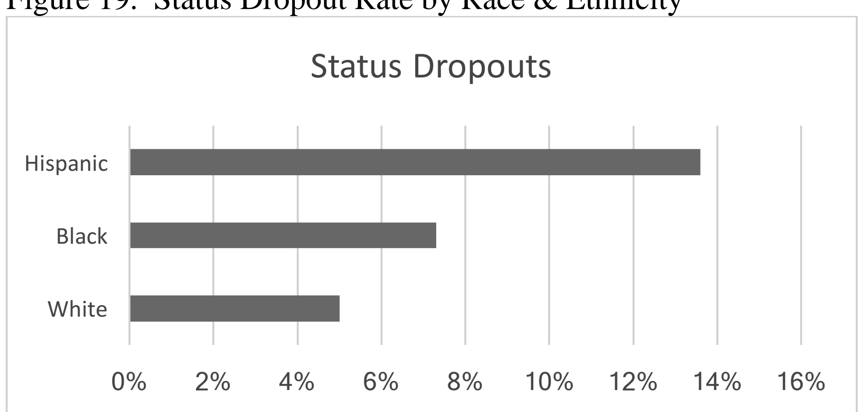
Figure 19. Status Dropout Rate by Race & Ethnicity[154]



Some researchers suggest that these rates are understated "by as much as 12.5 percent for young White men and by as much as 40 percent for young black men" because conventional sources for the data do not include incarcerated populations, so much so that when inmates are included the data on educational attainment suggests that "black men have experienced no improvement in high school completion rates since the early 1990s."[155]

Excluding a student from school also increases the likelihood that a student very soon will become involved in the juvenile justice system. The American Academy of Pediatrics Committee on School Health observed that when students are not monitored

---

154. Digest of Education Statistics, NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATS. tbl.128, http://nces.ed.gov/programs/digest/d12/tables/dt12_128.asp (last visited Oct. 30, 2016).

> Status' dropouts are 16- to 24-year-olds who are not enrolled in school and who have not completed a high school program, regardless of when they left school. People who have received GED credentials are counted as high school completers. All data except for 1960 are based on October counts. Data are based on sample surveys of the civilian noninstitutionalized population, which excludes persons in prisons, persons in the military, and other persons not living in households. Race categories exclude persons of Hispanic ethnicity except where otherwise noted.

Id.

155. Stephanie Ewert et al., The Degree of Disadvantage: Incarceration and Inequality in Education, 651 ANNALS AM. ACAD. POL. & SOC. SCI. 24, 39 (2014).

by trained professionals and are at home without parental supervision, they are far more likely to commit crimes, such as becoming involved in a physical altercation or carrying a weapon.[156] In their longitudinal study of Texas students, scholar Tony Fabelo and his colleagues found that when a school suspended or expelled a student for a discretionary offense, that student was approximately 2.85 times more likely to have contact with the juvenile justice system during the next academic year.[157] With each subsequent exclusionary punishment the student received, the odds of involvement with the juvenile justice system further increased.[158] Tracey Shollenberger's national longitudinal survey of youth also confirms that students are more likely to be arrested and incarcerated when they are suspended, and those odds increase as students receive more suspensions.[159]

This data directly relates to later life data. Dropouts are far more likely to be institutionalized in prisons and health care facilities, 45.9% compared to 8.8% in total for all racial categories.[160] More specifically, "schooling significantly reduces the probability of incarceration,"[161] more so for African-Americans than Whites, so much so that some researchers have found that different levels

---

156. Am. Acad. of Pediatrics Comm. on Sch. Health, Out-of-School Suspension and Expulsion, 112 PEDIATRICS 1206, 1207 (2003).

157. See FABELO ET AL., supra note 10, at 70.

158. Id.

159. Tracy L. Shollenberger, Racial Disparities in School Suspension and Subsequent Outcomes: Evidence from the National Longitudinal Survey of Youth, in CLOSING THE SCHOOL DISCIPLINE GAP, supra note 16, at 31, 37.

160. AUD ET AL., supra note 110, at 100 tbl.18.1c.; THE SILENT EPIDEMIC, supra note 42, at i (explaining that not graduating from high school leads to many social ills such as future involvement in the criminal justice system, unemployment, bad health, and poverty); OJJDP 2014 NATIONAL REPORT, supra note 24, at 15 (reporting that in 2009, 40% of all institutionalized individuals had dropped out of school). Status dropout rates are highest for institutionalized youth, with Hispanic highest among males and Hispanic and AIAN highest among females. OJJDP 2014 NATIONAL REPORT, supra note 24, at 15.

161. Enrico Moretti, Crime and the Costs of Criminal Justice, in THE PRICE WE PAY: ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL CONSEQUENCES OF INADEQUATE EDUCATION 142, 146 (Clive R. Belfield & Henry M. Levin eds., The Brookings Institute 2007).

of "educational attainment between black and white men explain 23% of the black-white gap in male incarceration rates."[162]

h. Students of color disproportionately feel threatened at school and suffer consequences as victims

Hispanic, African-American, American Indian-Alaskan Native, and Native Hawaiian Pacific Islander (NHPI) students are more likely to report feeling threatened or being injured by weapons, more likely to perceive gang activity at school, and more likely to have been in a physical fight at school.[163] Hispanic, American Indian-Alaskan Native, and NHPI students are significantly more likely to report drug availability at school,[164] and Hispanic students are most likely to report avoiding certain areas of school because they fear being attacked or harmed.[165] African-American students report being among students who are victims of nonfatal crime at school more often than any other group.[166] In comparison, White students are more likely to report having access to a loaded gun.[167]

---

162. Lance Lochner & Enrico Moretti, The Effect of Education on Crime: Evidence from Prison Inmates, Arrests, and Self-Reports 1 (2003), http://eml.berkeley.edu/~moretti/lm46.pdf (last visited Jan. 08, 2016).

163. SIMONE ROBERTS ET AL., NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATISTICS, INDICATORS OF SCHOOL CRIME AND SAFETY: 2012, at 19 fig.4.2, 37 figs.8.1 & 8.2, 57 figs.13.1 & 13.2 (2012), http://www.bjs.gov/content/pub/pdf/iscs12.pdf.

164. Id. at 39 figs.9.2.

165. Id. at 78 fig.18.2; see also Tobin & Vincent, supra note 68 (reporting that Latino/a students experience depression and anxiety disproportionately).

166. SIMONE ROBERTS ET AL., supra note 163, at 101 tbl.2.2.

167. Id.

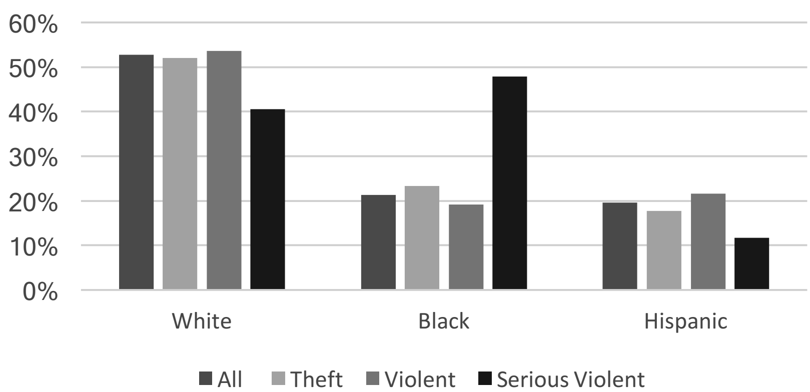
Figure 20. Victimization by Race & Ethnicity[168]



As victims, these students suffer additional consequences. As the Bureau of Justice Statistics summarizes:

> Our nation's schools should be safe havens for teaching and learning free of crime and violence. Any instance of crime or violence at school not only affects the individuals involved but also may disrupt the educational process and affect bystanders, the school itself, and the surrounding community. For both students and teachers, victimization at school can have lasting effects. In addition to experiencing loneliness, depression, and adjustment difficulties, victimized children are more prone to truancy, poor academic performance, dropping out of school, and violent behaviors. For teachers, incidents of victimization may lead to professional disenchantment and even departure from the profession altogether.[169]

168. Id. at 154 tbl.14.4.
169. *Id.*at 2 (citations omitted).

2. For students with disabilities, disproportionality manifests itself all along the pipeline in areas similar to those outlined in the preceding section on students of color

a. Students with disabilities are disproportionately students of color, especially in discretionary categories and these categories compound

Especially in discretionary categories, students with disabilities are disproportionately students of color.[170] In 2011–12, about 13% of the school population received services under the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA), Part B, special education;[171] this is almost 6.5 million students of whom 3.6 million of were White and Asian and 2.8 million students of color. As with regular education, some groups in the special education population differ from their representation in the juvenile population. In its annual report to Congress on IDEA, the Department of Education reported as to overall identification that differences existed based on race and ethnicity with the risk index being largest for American Indian-Alaskan Native students, followed by African-American and then Hispanic students. The 2011–12 data shows that, while American Indian-Alaskan Native students are 0.9% of the juvenile population, they are 1.4% of the special education population; Pacific Islanders are 0.2% of the juvenile population and 0.3% special education; African-American students, 15% of the juvenile population and 18.7% special education; all other groups have a smaller percentage in special education than in the juvenile population as a whole.[172]

---

170. See generally, e.g., BETH HARRY & JANETTE KLINGNER, WHY ARE SO MANY MINORITY STUDENTS IN SPECIAL EDUCATION? 76–79 (2005); Russell J. Skiba et al., Achieving Equity in Special Education: History, Status, and Current Challenges, REDORBIT (April 2, 2008), http://www.redorbit.com/news/education/1322341/achieving_equity_in_special_education_history_status_and_current_challenges; Beth Harry et al., Of Rocks and Soft Places: Using Qualitative Methods to Investigate Disproportionality, in RACIAL INEQUITY IN SPECIAL EDUCATION 84-85 (Daniel J. Losen & Gary Orfield eds., 2002).

171. See generally 20 U.S.C.A. § 1401 (West 2016).

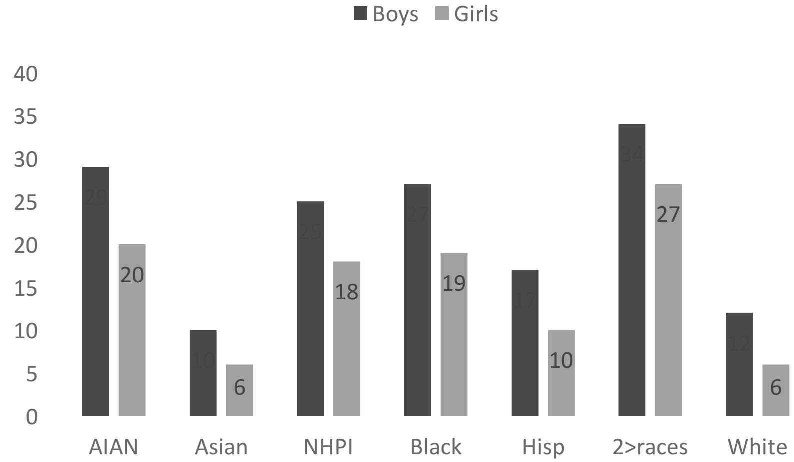
172. Compiled numbers from 2011–12 data and census numbers cited previously; NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATISTICS, supra note 95, at 107 tbl.204.50.

Figure 21. CRDC Students with Disabilities (IDEA) out of school suspensions by race/ethnicity and gender[173]



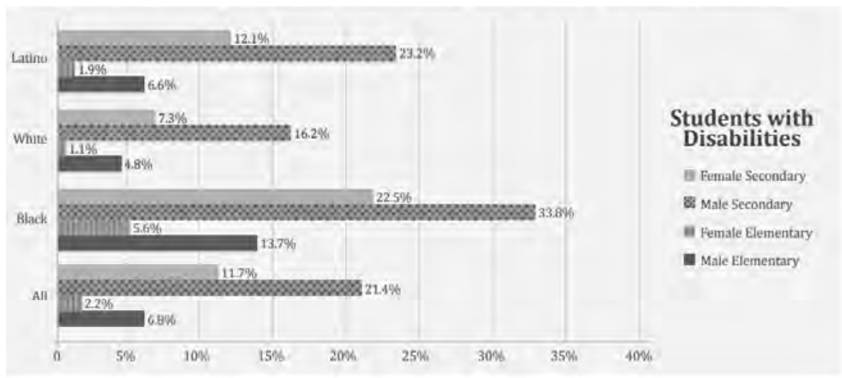
Some young people who are in more than one group are particularly negatively impacted. As the National Disabilities Rights Network puts it:

> Applying these three lenses together—race, gender and disability—yields a more disturbing image than any one of the categories alone. The group that consistently had the highest rate of suspension is African-American male students with disabilities. In some of the largest districts in the U.S., suspension rates for this group reached more than 70% of their enrollment.[174]

173. U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFF. FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, supra note 5, at 4.

174. NAT'L DISABILITIES RIGHTS NETWORK, supra note 27, at 16 (citations omitted); see U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFF. FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, supra note 5, at 3–7; Kalman R. Hettleman, The Road to Nowhere: The Illusion and Broken Promises of Special Education in the Baltimore City and Other Public School Systems, 17 ABELL REPORT 1, 30 (2004); Purdie-Vaughns & Eibach, supra note 27, at 380.

Figure 22. Special Education Discipline Disproportionality Disaggregated by Race and Ethnicity, Gender, Grade[175]



Disproportionality also appears within certain categories within special education. Among high incidence disability categorizations, three in particular have been highlighted as showing disproportionate representation—Intellectual Disability (formerly mental retardation), Specific Learning Disability, and Emotional Disturbance. These are discretionary categories;[176] they are "soft" identifications[177] which depend on judgment, not just medical or biological testing.[178] Unlike, for example, hearing impairment

175. ARE WE CLOSING, supra note 21, at 6.

176. See COMM. ON MINORITY REPRESENTATION IN SPECIAL EDUCATION, NAT'L RESEARCH COUNCIL, MINORITY STUDENTS IN SPECIAL AND GIFTED EDUCATION 37 (M. Suzanne Donovan & Christopher T. Cross eds., 2002) [hereinafter NAT'L RESEARCH COUNCIL 2002].

177. HARRY & KLINGNER, supra note 170, at 8; Skiba et al., supra note 170 (describing how these disabilities stand on the "soft" side of science).

178. See, e.g., Thomas Parrish, Disparities in the Identification, Funding, and Provision of Special Education, in RACIAL INEQUITY IN SPECIAL EDUCATION 15 (Daniel J. Losen & Gary Orfield eds., 2002); Angela A. Ciolfi & James E. Ryan, Race and Response-to-Intervention in Special Education, 54 HOW. L.J. 303, 304 (2011) (discussing over representation in soft disability categories); Robert A. Garda, Jr., The New Idea: Shifting Educational Paradigms to Achieve Racial Equality in Special Education, 56 ALA. L. REV. 1071, 1072–73 (2005); Daniel J. Reschly, Identification and Assessment of Students with Disabilities, 6 THE FUTURE OF CHILDREN 40, 43 (1996) (providing a comparison chart of factors in medical and social models); Rebecca Vallas, The Disproportionality Problem: The Overrepresentation of Black Students in Special Education and Recommendations for Reform, 17 VA. J. SOC. POL'Y & L.

which is subject to expert testing, the softer categories involve children who "typically do not exhibit readily observable distinguishing features," meaning that the "authoritative diagnosis of medical professionals, which is common in assessment of many of the low-incidence disabilities, is absent."[179] In a pattern like special education classification overall, American Indian-Alaskan Native and African-American students are categorized as intellectually disabled in greater percentages than their representation in the juvenile population, 1.3% compared to 0.9% for the American Indian-Alaskan Native students and 28% compared to 15% for African-American students. For other groups the proportions are equal or less; for example, 47% of students classified as intellectually disabled are White, while White students are 53% of the juvenile population as a whole.

Figure 23. Special Education by Discretionary Category[180]

	White	Black	Hispa nic	Asian	PI	AIAN
Juvenile population	53%	15%	24%	5%	0.2%	0.9%
Emotional disturbance	54%	27%	14%	1%	0.26%	1.44%
Intellectual disability	47%	28%	20%	2%	0.29%	1.3%
Specific learning disabilities	49%	20%	26%	1%	0.35%	1.61%

181, 184–85 (2009) (focusing on disproportionality involving African-Americans); Mark C. Weber, The IDEA Eligibility Mess, 57 BUFF. L. REV. 83, 145 (2009).

179. NAT'L RESEARCH COUNCIL 2002, supra note 176, at 37.

180. *Id.*at 107 tbl.204.50.

b. Students with disabilities are disproportionately less likely to be academically proficient

The achievement gap between students with disabilities and students without disabilities is longstanding and deep.[181] In "virtually every case, special education students have the lowest average proficiency level on standardized tests and are unable to close the achievement gap over time."[182] Based on the limited results available, at the fourth grade level, students with disabilities consistently score forty-five points lower than students without disabilities score in reading.[183] At eighth grade, the difference was forty-three points and at twelfth grade forty-two.[184] At fourth grade, 65% of

181. See, e.g., KATHERINE KERSTEN, OUR IMMENSE ACHIEVEMENT GAP 1–2 (2012), https://www.scribd.com/document/93114965/Our-Immense-Achievement-Gap-WEB (observing about Minnesota, but broadly applicable, that closing the achievement gap has involved moving "figurative mountains" and invested "billions of dollars—in an unsuccessful attempt to significantly boost minority achievement."); NORM FRUCHTER ET AL., ANNENBERG INST. FOR SCH. REFORM, IS DEMOGRAPHY STILL DESTINY? NEIGHBORHOOD DEMOGRAPHICS AND PUBLIC HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS' READINESS FOR COLLEGE IN NEW YORK CITY 1 (Margaret Balch-Gonzalez ed. 2012), http://annenberginstitute.org/sites/default/files/Demography%20is%20Destiny.pdf (concluding that despite massive initiatives, college readiness still predicted by residence); IMPROVING THE ODDS FOR AMERICA'S CHILDREN: FUTURE DIRECTIONS IN POLICY AND PRACTICE ch. 7 (Kathleen McCartney, Hirokazu Yoshikawa & Laurie B. Forcier eds., 2014).

182. Suzanne Eckes & Julie Swando, Special Education Subgroups under NCLB: Issues to Consider, 111 TCHRS. C. REC. 2479, 2483 (2009), http://www.tcrecord.org/Content.asp?ContentID=15437.

183. See NAEP Data Explorer, NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATS., http://nces.ed.gov/nationsreportcard/naepdata/dataset.aspx (last visited Sept. 11, 2016) (select "Reading" and "Grade 4"; highlight "2013," "deselect 2015," and select "National" under "Jurisdiction"; click "Select Variables"; select "Disability status of student, excluding those with 504 plan" and "Disability status of student, including those with 504 plan"; select "Edit Reports"; select "Build Reports").

184. Id. (select "Reading" and either "Grade 8 or Grade 12"; highlight "2013," "deselect 2015," and select "National" under "Jurisdiction"; click "Select Variables"; select "Disability status of student, excluding those with 504 plan" and "Disability status of student, including those with 504 plan"; select "Edit Reports"; select "Build Reports").

students with disabilities scored below basic levels and in the eighth grade, 62%.[185]

c. Students with disabilities are disproportionately disciplined

The IDEA requires that students with disabilities be in the "least restrictive environment"[186] and also limits suspension from school or change of placement for behavior that violates the school's code of conduct but was caused by or substantially related to the students' disabilities.[187] These provisions would suggest that students with disabilities would be less likely to be suspended or expelled; however, this is not the case.[188] Special education students are far more likely to be suspended from school and expelled with and without services than other students.[189] For all racial groups, over 13% percent of students with disabilities were subject to out of school suspension compared to 6% of students without

185. National Assessment of Educational Progress (NAEP): What Is It and Why Should We Care?, THE ADVOC. INST., http://www.advocacyinstitute.org/advocacyinaction/NAEP_SWDs.shtml (last visited Nov. 6, 2016).

186. 20 U.S.C.A. § 1412(a)(5) (2016).

187. 20 U.S.C.A. § 1415(k) (West 2016). See generally Lynn M. Daggett, Student Rights: Book 'em?: Navigating Student Privacy, Disability, and Civil Rights and School Safety in the Context of School-Police Cooperation, 45 URB. LAW. REP. 203 (2013) (discussing legal issues limits on schools' reporting to law enforcement regarding students with disabilities).

188. ARE WE CLOSING, supra note 21, at 21 ("As with the elementary school analysis, at the secondary level we observe tremendous disciplinary gaps between students with and without disabilities, which holds for each racial group. Typically, students with disabilities at this level are twice as likely to be suspended as their non-disabled peers, which raises serious questions as to whether schools are denying students with disabilities a free appropriate public education (FAPE), and whether they are unlawfully suspending students because of behavior caused by their disability or that results from the district's failure to meet their special education needs.").

189. Suspended Childhood, supra note 127 (concluding similarly for Texas' special education students who "are 9% of the student population . . . but they account for 22% of all pre-K−5th grade out of school suspensions.").

disabilities,[190] and the largest racial disparities occur among these students.[191]

Further disaggregation of the data among these students, American Indian-Alaskan Native and African-American students, together with students identifying as two or more races, were most likely to be suspended. For example, with respect to boys with disabilities, 29% of those students receiving out of school suspensions were American Indian-Alaskan Native, 27% African-American, and 34% two or more races; with respect to girls with disabilities, these groups are 20%, 19%, and 27% respectively. By comparison, White boys and girls, who, again, are a much larger part of the population, were reported at 12% and 6% of the out of school suspensions.[192]

State reports on this issue show similar patterns. For example, the Texas Breaking Schools' Rules study showed high levels of discipline for special education students, finding that almost three-quarters of this group were suspended or expelled at least once during the period of the study; some categories, such as Emotional Disturbance, were more prominent in this group.[193] The Oregon study showed special education suspensions (out-of-school) 3.6 times higher than those of other students in elementary school and 2.2–2.3 times higher in middle and high school.[194]

---

190. See supra Figure 18. Graduation Rates by Status; supra Figure 19. Status Dropout Rate by Race & Ethnicity: supra Figure 20. Victimization by Race and Ethnicity.

191. DANIEL J. LOSEN & TIA ELENA MARTINEZ, CTR. FOR CIVIL RIGHTS REMEDIES, THE CIVIL RIGHTS PROJECT, OUT OF SCHOOL & OFF TRACK: THE USE OF SUSPENSIONS IN AMERICAN MIDDLE AND HIGH SCHOOLS 10 (2013), hhttp://files.eric.ed.gov/fulltext/ED541735.pdf.

192. U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFF. FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, supra note 5; see also supra Figure 19. Status Dropout Rate by Race & Ethnicity.

193. FABELO ET AL., supra note 10, at 47; see also Metze, supra note 74, at 241–42 (describing special education students' overrepresentation in Texas in Disciplinary Alternative Education programs or in or out-of-school suspensions); Vanderhaar et al., supra note 142, at 7 (summarizing as to disparity in students identified with the disability of Emotional Disturbance, "With respect to EBD, there was a race gap as 2.3% of the Black students were identified as EBD, while less than 1% (0.8%) of White students were labeled EBD.").

194. OREGON, supra note 85, at 8, 19.

d. Students with disabilities are disproportionately retained in grade but still dropping and out failing to graduate

Students with disabilities are retained in grade more than their percentage of the student population might suggest. The CRDC reports that IDEA students are 12% of high school enrollment but 19% of students retained.[195] Overall, only 57% of students with disabilities graduate. Only 39.2% of African-American (not Hispanic) special education students graduate with regular diplomas, with 35.1% dropping out; for Hispanics, the numbers are 47.1% graduating with regular diplomas, with 34.9% dropping out.[196]

e. Students with disabilities are disproportionately likely to spend time out of the regular classroom, to be secluded, restrained or placed in alternative schools

IDEA imposes a requirement that special education students be mainstreamed in the "least restrictive environment" wherever possible.[197] Notwithstanding the statutory requirement, special education students are often out of the regular school environment. Students with disabilities are 75% of students restrained at school and 58% of students who are secluded (though only 12% of the CRDC student population).[198] As a whole, students with disabilities spend between 40 and 52 percent of their time outside their regular classrooms.[199] In particular, students in high incidence, high discretion special education categories are out of their class-

---

195. Lhamon, supra note 117.

196. U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC., 29TH ANNUAL REPORT TO CONGRESS ON THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE INDIVIDUALS WITH DISABILITIES EDUCATION ACT 83 tbl.1-17 (2007).

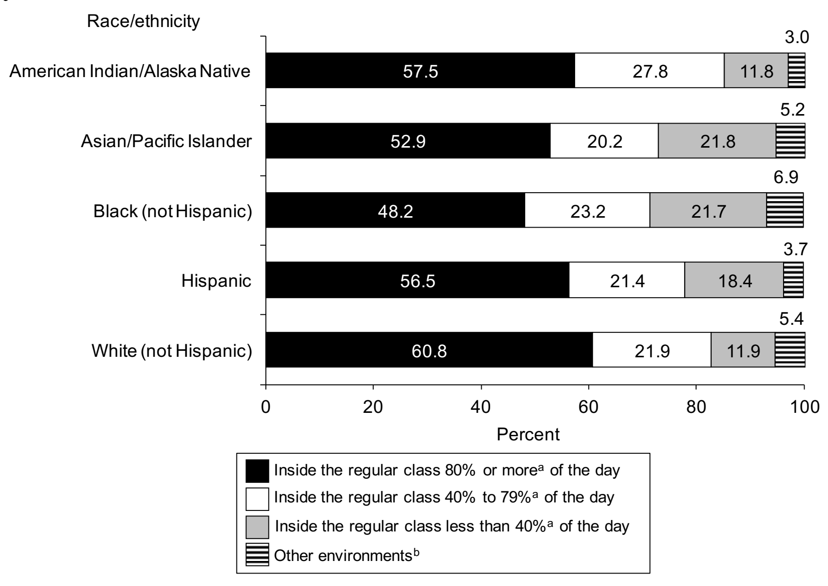
197. 20 U.S.C.A. § 1412(a)(5) (West 2016); SCOTT JOHNSON & SARAH REDFIELD, EDUCATION LAW: A PROBLEM-BASED APPROACH Ch. 12 (LexisNexis 2d ed., 2012); MARK WEBER, RALPH MAWDSLEY & SARAH REDFIELD, SPECIAL EDUCATION LAW: CASES AND MATERIALS Ch. 6 (LexisNexis 3d ed., 2010).

198. U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFF. FOR CIVIL RIGHTS, supra note 5.

199. U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC., 30TH ANNUAL REPORT TO CONGRESS ON THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE INDIVIDUALS WITH DISABILITIES EDUCATION ACT xxi (2008), http://www2.ed.gov/about/reports/annual/osep/2008/parts-b-c/30th-idea-arc.pdf.

rooms; for example, 48% of students labeled "intellectually disabled" spend less than 40% of their time in regular classrooms, and 74% of those students spend less than 80% in regular classrooms.[200] Given what we know about the racial and ethnic special education population, this means more minority students are likely to spend more time outside of regular classrooms.

Figure 24. Special Ed, Education Environment by Race & Ethnicity[201]



Percentage of students ages 6 through 21 served under IDEA, Part B, within racial/ethnic groups, by educational environment: Fall 2007

As is the case with students of color, many students with disabilities are placed in alternative schools.[202] Research suggests that this strategy has exacerbated inequities.[203]

200. Table 50, NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STAT. tbl.50, https://nces.ed.gov/programs/digest/d12/tables/dt12_050.asp (last visited Nov. 6, 2016).

201. U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC., supra note 199, at 61.

202. Vanderhaar et al., supra note 142, at 12–13.

203. Id.

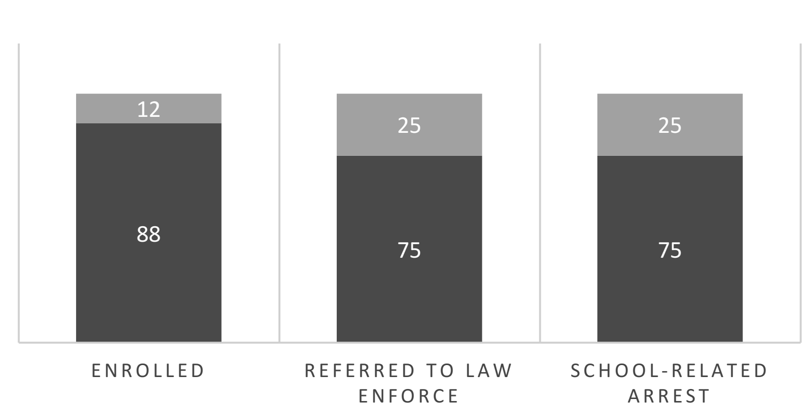
f. Students with disabilities are disproportionately referred to law enforcement or subject to school-related arrest and incarceration

Special education students are 25% of students referred to law enforcement, and 25% of those subject to school-related arrest, over twice their representation in the student population.[204]

Figure 25. CRDC Discipline, % Special Education Students Referred to Law Enforcement & Subject to School-related Arrest[205]



Not surprisingly, we have long known that students with disabilities are disproportionately represented in the correctional system.[206] It is estimated that 65% the youth in juvenile or adult criminal justice systems meet the criteria for disability.[207] Almost

---

204. U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC. OFF. FOR CIVIL RIGHTS , supra note 5.

205. *Id.*at 7.

206. ROBERT B. RUTHERFORD JR. ET AL., YOUTH WITH DISABILITIES IN THE CORRECTIONAL SYSTEM: PREVALENCE RATES AND IDENTIFICATION ISSUES 19 (2002), http://cecp.air.org/juvenilejustice/docs/Youth%20with%20Disabilities.pdf (last visited Nov. 8, 2016) (discussing disproportionality and difficulty in identification in incarcerated settings); see also SUE BURRELL & LOREN WARBOYS, U.S. DEP'T OF JUST., OFF. OF JUV. JUST. AND DELINQUENCY PROGRAMS, SPECIAL EDUCATION AND THE JUVENILE JUSTICE SYSTEM (2000), https://www.ncjrs.gov/pdffiles1/ojjdp/179359.pdf (reporting data and reviewing IDEA requirements).

207. NAT'L DISABILITIES RIGHTS NETWORK, supra note 27, at 7; Elizabeth Cate, Teach Your Children Well: Proposed Challenges to Inadequacies of Correctional Special Education for Juvenile Inmates, 34 N.Y.U. REV. L. & SOC.

1 in 3 of young people who are incarcerated are identified as having or needing special education.[208] These students are incarcerated at rates four times higher than young people attending regular schools.[209]

The 2005 report under the auspices of the Coordinating Council on Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention showed that most of the students who are incarcerated are categorized as "emotionally disturbed" (47.7%); the next highest category is "specific learning disability" (38.6%), then "mental retardation" (9.7%), followed by "other health impaired" (2.9%) and "multiple disabilities" (0.8%).[210] Although their numbers are significant and disproportionate, the education provided to these students is limited at best.[211]

CHANGE 1, 10, 53 (2010) (noting that the rate of juvenile offenders qualifying for special education services almost quadruples the rate among students in the same age range nationally).

208. LOCKED OUT, supra note 76, at 1; see also THE NAT'L EVALUATION AND TECH. ASSISTANCE CTR. FOR THE EDUC. OF CHILDREN AND YOUTH WHO ARE NEGLECTED, DELINQUENT, OR AT-RISK, FACT SHEET 1 (2014), http://www.neglected-delinquent.org/sites/default/files/NDTAC_Special_Ed_FS_508.pdf.

209. LOCKED OUT, supra note 76, at 1.

210. Mary Magee Quinn et al., Youth with Disabilities in Juvenile Corrections: A National Survey, 71 EXCEPTIONAL CHILD. 339, 342 (2005).

211. PETER LEONE & LOIS WEINBERG, ADDRESSING THE UNMET EDUCATIONAL NEEDS OF CHILDREN AND YOUTH IN THE JUVENILE JUSTICE AND CHILD WELFARE SYSTEMS 1 (2012), http://cjjr.georgetown.edu/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/EducationalNeedsofChildrenandYouth_May2010.pdf; see also ANGELINA INESIA-FORDE, THE PRESENCE OF LEARNING DISABLED YOUTH IN OUR JUVENILE INSTITUTIONS (May 2005) (unpublished graduate thesis, The University of Tennessee, Chattanooga), https://www.ncjrs.gov/pdffiles1/nij/grants/213894.pdf; LOCKED OUT, supra note 76, at 12–13 (suggesting steps to improve educational experiences for incarcerated and transitional youths).

g. Students with disabilities are disproportionately bullied and victimized

Like students of color, students with disabilities are highly likely to be bullied or victimized, both by other students and by teachers;[212] and they suffer the related psychological distress.[213]

3. Similar disproportionalities and difficulties impact LGBTQ and GNC young people

Data on Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Transgender, Questioning (LGBTQ) and Gender Nonconforming (GNC) students is more difficult to cumulate than data on other groups,[214] but the data available shows that they suffer many of the same negative distinctions as other groups reviewed in this report, if not more.[215] They also are likely to suffer the compounding problem that occurs when they are part of two such groups.[216]

---

212. Michael T. Hartley et al., Comparative Study of Bullying Victimization Among Students in General and Special Education, 81 EXCEPTIONAL CHILD. 176, 187 (2015) (reporting that "adult [teachers and staff] were more likely to verbally, relationally, and physically bully students with disabilities," according to student self-reports); see also DEAR COLLEAGUE LETTER, supra note 4 (discussing the impact of race-based discrimination in schools).

213. Hartley et al., supra note 212, at 189.

214. JASON CIANCIOTTO & SEAN CAHILL, LGBT YOUTH IN AMERICA'S SCHOOLS 9–11 (2012); ADVANCEMENT PROJECT, POWER IN PARTNERSHIPS: BUILDING CONNECTIONS AT THE INTERSECTIONS OF RACIAL JUSTICE AND LGBTQ MOVEMENTS TO END THE SCHOOL-TO-PRISON PIPELINE 4 (2015) [hereinafter ADVANCEMENT POWER], http://b.3cdn.net/advancement/85066c4a18d249e72b_r23m68j37.pdf.

215. JOSEPH G. KOSCIW ET AL., GAY, LESBIAN & STRAIGHT EDUC. NETWORK ("GLSEN"), THE 2013 NATIONAL SCHOOL CLIMATE SURVEY: THE EXPERIENCES OF LESBIAN, GAY, BISEXUAL AND TRANSGENDER YOUTH IN OUR NATION'S SCHOOLS 23–24 (2014), http://www.glsen.org/sites/default/files/2013%20National%20School%20Climate%20Survey%20Full%20Report_0.pdf.

216. CIANCIOTTO & CAHILL, supra note 214, at 21–22 (discussing tricultural experience). See generally M. SOMJEN FRAZER & HARLAN PRUDEN, RECLAIMING OUR VOICES: TWO SPIRIT HEALTH & HUMAN SERVICE NEEDS IN NEW YORK STATE (2010), http://www.health.ny.gov/diseases/aids/providers/reports/native_people/docs/reclaiming_our_voices.pdf (discussing Native and LGBT health issues).

a. LGBTQ youth suffer in a disproportionately difficult school climate

LGBTQ and GNC youth are subject to hostile school climates with attendant negative consequences.[217] As the Gay, Lesbian & Straight Education Network (GLESN) explains, "Schools nationwide are hostile environments for a distressing number of LGBTQ students, the overwhelming majority of whom routinely hear anti-LGBTQ language and experience victimization and discrimination at school."[218] Because of their sexual orientation or gender expression, these students do not feel safe at school,[219] where they are more often victimized and often blamed even while they are victims.[220] These students are far less likely to find support for stopping the harassing or assaultive behavior.[221] As one student put it, "The time I did report, the process of being heard was more demeaning than the harassment."[222] Another student observed, "Almost all of the time, I would end up being the one in trouble because it's 'my fault for drawing negative attention to myself.'"[223]

As GLESN reports, in these conditions, LGBTQ students are far more likely to miss school or avoid certain parts of the

---

217. See PRESTON MITCHUM & AISHA C. MOODIE-MILLS, CTR. FOR AM. PROGRESS, BEYOND BULLYING: HOW HOSTILE SCHOOL CLIMATE PERPETUATES THE SCHOOL-TO-PRISON PIPELINE FOR LGBT YOUTH 1 (2014), https://cdn.americanprogress.org/wp-content/uploads/2014/02/BeyondBullying.pdf.

218. KOSCIW ET AL., supra note 215, at xvi.

219. Id., at 12 (summarizing that 55.5% reported feeling unsafe because of their sexual orientation, 38.7% because gender expression, and 20.0% because of their academic achievement).

220. BURDGE, HYEMINGWAY, & LICONA, supra note 150, at 6; ADVANCEMENT POWER, supra note 214, at 4 ("Phrases like 'if they'd just pull up their pants,' and 'if they didn't flaunt it' reemphasize the culture of victim blaming when it comes to school discipline. Instead of responding in respectful and culturally competent ways, administrators penalize young people for this minor misbehavior.").

221. See KOSCIW ET AL., supra note 215, at 27–35 (describing reasons why such students do not report harassment, as well as their emotional experiences of that harassment).

222. Id. at 33.

223. Id. at 32.

school facilities or activities.[224] They are also more likely to have lower GPAs, lower expectations for post-secondary education, lower levels of self-esteem, and higher levels of depression.[225]

b. LGBTQ and GNC youth are disciplined more severely in school and juvenile justice

Recognizing that LGBTQ juveniles have higher health risks, a longitudinal study published in Journal of the American Academy of Pediatrics found that, controlling for other variables, non-heterosexual youth were disproportionately subject to sanctions including school expulsion, police stops and arrests, and juvenile convictions, with girls more likely to suffer these differences than boys.[226]

LGBTQ young people who are also students of color are also harshly penalized.[227] Treated unfairly, these young people "learn to mistrust not just school police, but all school administration and staff."[228]

4. These same disproportionalities experienced in school plague the juvenile justice system

Students enter and stay in the juvenile justice system following a variety of paths.[229]

---

224. KOSCIW ET AL., supra note 215, at xvi.

225. Id., at xviii.

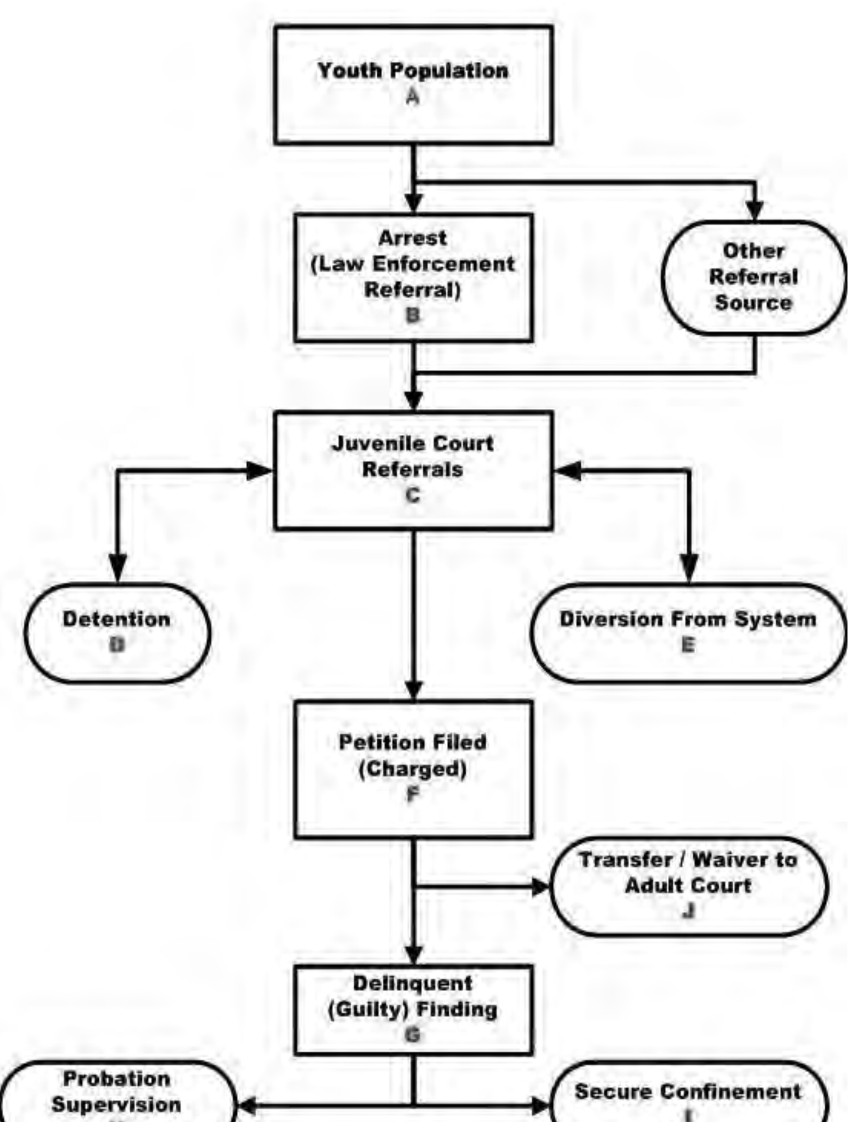
226. Kathryn E. W. Himmelstein & Hannah Brückner, Criminal-Justice and School Sanctions against Nonheterosexual Youth, 127 PEDIATRICS 49, 49 (2011); BURDGE, HYEMINGWAY, & LICONA, supra note 150, at 4.

227. See ADVANCEMENT POWER, supra note 214, at 4 (noting the similar negative impacts of harsher discipline for both groups).

228. Id. (noting the lack of training many officers receive regarding how to work with LGBTQ students).

229. See infra Figure 26. Contact Points Juvenile Justice.

Figure 26. Contact Points Juvenile Justice[230]



230. WILLIAM FEYERHERM ET AL., U.S. DEP'T OF JUSTICE, OFFICE OF JUVENILE JUSTICE & DELINQUENCY PREVENTION, DISPROPORTIONATE MINORITY CONTACT TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE MANUAL 1-5 fig.1 (4th ed. 2009), http://www.ojjdp.gov/compliance/dmc_ta_manual.pdf.

While the numbers of young people detained have declined, the numbers of students who find themselves in court—juvenile courts and municipal or justice courts with authority to impose criminal sanctions—because of behavior at school has dramatically increased.[231] The Juvenile Section of the Texas bar writing in 2010 described this as a "paradigm shift" where student behavior that previously resulted in "trips to the principal's office, corporal punishment, or extra laps under the supervision of a middle school or high school coach," now result in criminal prosecution and records for children ages 10 through 16.[232] On any given day, some 20,000 young people are in juvenile detention centers;[233] 54,000 in youth prisons or other confinement;[234] 4,200 in adult jails;[235] and 1,200 in adult prisons.[236] Eighty-seven percent of these young people are incarcerated for nonviolent offenses, and the "majority (66 percent) were youth of color."[237] These young people are all too often mistreated and increasingly abused.[238]

---

231. See, e.g., Christopher A. Mallett, The School-to-Prison Pipeline: A Critical Review of the Punitive Paradigm Shift, 33 CHILD ADOLESCENT SOC. WORK J. 15, 16 (2015) (describing changing attitudes in disciplinary methods over the last several decades in schools and courts).

232. Ryan Kellus Turner & Mark Goodner, Passing the Paddle: Nondisclosure of Children's Criminal Cases, 24 JUV. L. 13, 13 (2010).

233. MENDEL, supra note 58 at 2.

234. OFFICE OF JUVENILE JUSTICE AND DELINQUENCY PREVENTION, THE NUMBER OF JUVENILES IN RESIDENTIAL PLACEMENT CONTINUED TO DECLINE IN 2013, http://www.ojjdp.gov/ojstatbb/snapshots/DataSnapshot_CJRP2013.pdf.

235. BUREAU OF JUSTICE STATISTICS, JAIL INMATES AT MIDYEAR 2014 3 (2014), http://www.bjs.gov/content/pub/pdf/jim14.pdf.

236. BUREAU OF JUSTICE STATISTICS, PRISONERS IN 2013 19 (2013), http://www.bjs.gov/content/pub/pdf/p13.pdf.

237. Unbalanced Juvenile Justice, THE W. HAYWOOD BURNS INST., http://data.burnsinstitute.org/about (last visited Nov. 12, 2016) (providing data sets for state by state comparative analysis at various juvenile justice decision points); see supra Figure 7. Discipline Disproportionality Girls, Figure 23. Special Education by Discretionary Category & Figure 24. Special Ed, Education Environment by Race & Ethnicity; see also SOUTH DAKOTA JUVENILE JUSTICE REINVESTMENT INITIATIVE WORK GROUP, FINAL REPORT 1–2 (2014), http://jjri.sd.gov/docs/JJRI%20WG%20Report_Final.pdf (reporting similarly for youth in South Dakota).

238. THE ANNIE E. CASEY FOUND., MALTREATMENT OF YOUTH IN U.S. JUVENILE CORRECTIONAL FACILITIES 2 (2015), http://www.aecf.org/m/ resourcedoc/aecf-maltreatmentyouthuscorrections-2015.pdf; THE ANNIE E. CASEY

"With few exceptions, data consistently show that youth of color have been overrepresented at every stage of the juvenile justice system."[239] Specific groups in specific situations show particular disproportionalities. For example, while Native American youth are not generally disproportionately arrested, in South Dakota they are very much so, 9% of the population and 40% of the arrests.[240] Overall, minority youth are disproportionately represented in this system.[241] As the recent National Academy of Science report on Reforming Juvenile Justice summarized: "There is evidence that

---

FOUND., NO PLACE FOR KIDS (2011), http://www.aecf.org/ m/resourcedoc/aecf-NoPlaceForKidsFullReport-2011.pdf; see, e.g., Jennifer Gonnerman, Kalief Browder: 1993-2015, NEW YORKER (June 7, 2015), http://www.newyorker.com/news/news-desk/kalief-browder-1993-2015; Jennifer Gonnerman, Before the Law, NEW YORKER (Oct. 6, 2014), http://www.newyorker.com/magazine/2014/10/06/before-the-law (cataloguing the story of Kalief Browder, arrested for stealing a backup, incarcerated at Rikers); Bruce Selcraig, Camp Fear, MOTHER JONES, Nov./Dec. 2000, http://www.motherjones.com/politics/2000/11/camp-fear (recounting death of 14 year old Native American Gina Score in state custody in a boot camp for teenage girls). But see Christina Rose, Lock 'Em Up With a Hug: Native Detention Programs Connect Youth to Community, INDIAN COUNTRY TODAY MEDIA NETWORK (Oct. 28, 2015), http://indiancountrytodaymedianetwork.com/2015/10/28/lock-em-hug-native-detention-programs-connect-youth-community-162232.

239. REFORMING JUVENILE JUSTICE, supra note 86, at 3; see supra Figure 23. Special Education by Discretionary Category; THE SENTENCING PROJECT, POLICY BRIEF: DISPROPORTIONATE MINORITY CONTACT 1 (2014), http://sentencingproject.org/doc/publications/jj_Disproportionate%20Minority%20Contact.pdf [hereinafter THE SENTENCING PROJECT]. See generally JJDP, Easy Access, supra note 1 (providing access to detailed information on juvenile crime and the juvenile justice system).

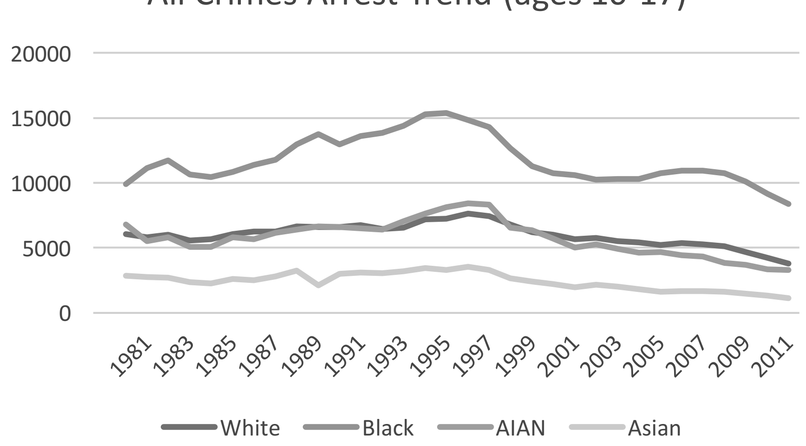
240. See Christina Rose, 'Terrible Racial Disparities' Not Fixed with SD Juvenile Justice Reform, INDIAN COUNTRY TODAY MEDIA NETWORK (June 24, 2015), https://indiancountrytodaymedianetwork.com/2015/06/24/terrible-racial-disparities-not-fixed-sd-juvenile-justice-reform-160831.

241. The Office of Juvenile Justice Delinquency Prevention lists nine points of contact in the juvenile justice system: arrest, referral, diversion (handled without formal complaint), detention, petitioned (charge filing), delinquent findings (adjudication), probation, confinement in secure correctional facilities, transferred to adult court. Evaluation Data, OFFICE OF JUVENILE JUSTICE AND DELINQUENCY PREVENTION, http://www.ojjdp.gov/dmc/evaluationdata.html (last visited Nov. 12, 2016).

'race matters' above and beyond the characteristics of an offense."[242]

a. Youth of color are disproportionately arrested[243]

Figure 27. Juveniles Arrested by Race[244]



Arrest[245] is the decision that is most significant to the total level of disproportionality in the juvenile justice system.[246] While

242. REFORMING JUVENILE JUSTICE, supra note 86, at 3.

243. The juvenile justice literature refers to arrest as "when law enforcement agencies apprehend, stop, or otherwise contact [youth] and suspect them of having committed a delinquent act." WILLIAM FEYERHERM ET AL., supra note 230, at 1–7 tbl.1. Delinquent acts are defined as acts that "if an adult commits them, would be criminal, including crimes against persons, crimes against property, drug offenses, and crimes against the public order." WILLIAM FEYERHERM ET AL., supra note 230, at 1–7 tbl.1.

244. NAT'L CTR. FOR JUVENILE JUSTICE, JUVENILE ARREST RATES BY OFFENSE, SEX, AND RACE: 1980–2011 (2014), http://www.ojjdp.gov/ ojstatbb/crime/excel/JAR_2011.xls (Hispanics not included in this data set).

245. WILLIAM FEYERHERM ET AL., supra note 230, at 1–7 tbl.1.

246. Interpretation of the National DMC Relative Rate Indices for Juvenile Justice System Processing in 2010: Delinquency Offenses, OFFICE OF JUVENILE JUSTICE AND DELINQUENCY PREVENTION http://www.ojjdp.gov/ojstatbb/ dmcdb/asp/offensedef.asp?offense=1 (last visited Nov. 12, 2016) [hereinafter Delinquency Offenses]; see OJJDP 2014 NATIONAL REPORT, supra note 24, at arrest rates have declined considerably, those under eighteen still represent 12.5% of those arrested,[247] and there is still a significant gap among juveniles of different races with African-American and American Indian rates remaining higher than White and Asian.[248] The Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (OJJDP) uses Relative Rate Indices (RRI) to describe disproportionality between treatment of White youth and those of other races;[249] for minorities, the RRI is 1.7 at the arrest decision point showing a minority youth arrest rate 70% more than the arrest rate of White youth.[250] The RRI for African-Americans is 2.2.

---

115 ("Once a juvenile is apprehended for a law violation, it is the police officer who first determines if the juvenile will move deeper into the justice system or will be diverted."); Cynthia Conward, There is No Justice: There is "Just Us": A Look at Overrepresentation of Minority Youth in the Juvenile and Criminal Justice System, 4 WHITTIER J. OF CHILD & FAM. ADVOC. 35, 44–47 (2004), http://heinonline.org/HOL/Page?handle=hein.journals/wjcfad4&div=6&g_sent=1&collection=journals ("[Youth arrest] disparit[ities] [are] most pronounced at the beginning stages of the criminal justice system.").

247. Samantha A. Goodrich et al., Evaluation of a Program Designed to Promote Positive Police and Youth Interactions, 3 J. JUV. JUST. 55, 55 (2014) http://www.journalofjuvjustice.org/JOJJ0302/JOJJ0302.pdf#page=60;___OJJDP 2014 NATIONAL REPORT, supra note 24, at 120, 125 (noting a decrease in juvenile arrests for violent crimes in recent years).

248. NAT'L CTR. FOR JUVENILE JUSTICE, JUVENILE ARREST RATES BY OFFENSE, SEX, AND RACE (1980-2011) (2014), http://www.ojjdp.gov/ojstatbb/crime/excel/JAR_2011.xls; National Disproportionate Minority Contact Databook, OFFICE OF JUVENILE JUSTICE AND DELINQUENCY PREVENTION http://www.ojjdp.gov/ojstatbb/dmcdb/asp/display.asp?display_in=1 (last visited Nov. 12, 2016); supra Figure 24. Special Ed, Education by Race & Ethnicity. See generally, Statistical Briefing Book, OFFICE OF JUVENILE JUSTICE AND DELINQUENCY PREVENTION http://www.ojjdp.gov/ojstatbb/default.asp (last visited Nov. 12, 2016) (providing annual overview of data).

249. FEYERHERM ET AL., supra note 230, at 1-2, 1-3.

250. DELINQUENCY OFFENSE*s*, supra note 246.

Figure 28. Relative Rates for JJ Contact[251]

RELATIVE RATES	Minority	Black	AIAN*	AHPI
Arrest	1.7	2.2	0.9	0.3
Referral	1.1	1.1	1.2	1
Diversion	0.7	0.7	0.8	0.9
Detention	1.2	1.2	1.4	1.1
Petitioned	1.2	1.2	1.1	1.1
Adjudicated	0.9	0.9	1.1	0.9
Probation	1.2	1.2	1	0.9
Placement	0.9	0.9	1	1.1
Waiver	1.2	1.2	1.3	0.4

These rates have remained essentially stable since 1990.[252] Recent research suggests that while the risk of arrest is generally disproportionate for African-American youth, this is particularly so in communities that are predominantly non-Black.[253]

Arrest is an especially worrisome point given its impact on subsequent points in the juvenile justice system.[254] "[B]ias, either

---

251. See FEYERHERM ET AL., supra note 230.

252. See OJJDP 2014 NATIONAL REPORT, supra note 24, at 177–78; THE SENTENCING PROJECT, supra note 239, at 2.

253. Tia Stevens Andersen, Race, Ethnicity, and Structural Variations in Youth Risk of Arrest: Evidence from a National Longitudinal Sample, 42 CRIM. JUST. & BEHAV. 900, 910–11 (2015), http://cjb.sagepub.com/content/42/9/900; cf. Shaun A. Thomas et al., The Contingent Effect of Race in Juvenile Court Detention Decisions: The Role of Racial and Symbolic Threat, 3 RACE & JUST. 239, 258 (2012) (finding that Black youths' risk of detention decreased when the relative size of the Black population in a community increased).

254. Akiva M. Liberman et al., Labeling Effects of First Juvenile Arrests: Secondary Deviance and Secondary Sanctioning, 53 CRIMINOLOGY 345, 354–57 (2014); see also Antonis Katsiyannis et al., Juvenile Offenders with Disabilities:

overt or covert (also known as selection bias), that is introduced by the police is very likely to affect outcomes at later stages, even if no bias occurs at later stages."[255] When minority youth are more likely to be arrested and formally processed than their White peers who have engaged in like behavior, then those youth will obviously "more readily accumulate offense histories and dispositions from which inferences are drawn about their character and capacity for reform"—which will influence later outcomes.[256]

b. Youth of color are disproportionately referred, detained (longer), charged, and held Once arrested, the rate of referral to juvenile court further increases disparities. For example, for 2010, "even after controlling for possible disparities up to the arrest decision, minority youth were more likely than white youth to be referred to juvenile court for a delinquent offense."[257] Youth of color are then detained disproportionately: "In 2010, the likelihood of detention was greatest for [B]lack youth for all but public order offenses—American Indian and Asian youth had slightly greater proportions

---

Challenges and Promises, in HANDBOOK OF JUV. FORENSIC PSYCHOL. AND PSYCHIATRY 521, 525 (Elena Grigorenko ed., 2012) ("Age at first arrest has been generally found to be one of the strongest predictors of recidivism.").

255. Leiber & Peck, supra note 60, at 348.

256. Leiber & Peck, supra note 60, at 355; Donna Bishop & Michael Leiber, Racial and Ethnic Differences in Delinquency and Justice System Responses, in THE OXFORD HANDBOOK OF JUV. CRIME AND JUV. JUST. 445–84 (Barry C. Feld & Donna M. Bishop eds., 2012); see Himmelstein & Brückner, supra note 226.

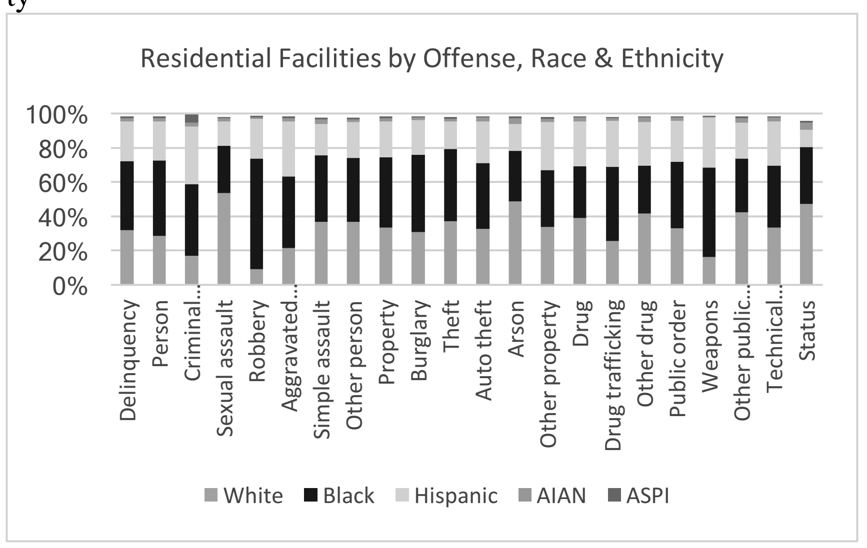
257. Delinquency Offenses, supra note 246; see also OJJDP 2014 NATIONAL REPORT, supra note 24, at 164 (finding racial disparities in detention constant after controlling for gender). See generally Mark Soler, Missed Opportunity: Waiver, Race, Data, and Policy Reform, 71 LA. L. REV. 17, 22–23 (2010) (finding that minority youth are 99% of transfers); JUVENILE JUSTICE INITIATIVE, AUTOMATIC ADULT PROSECUTION OF CHILDREN IN COOK COUNTY, ILLINOIS 2010-2012 7–8 (2014), http://jjustice.org/wordpress/wp-content/uploads/Automatic-Adult-Prosecution-of-Children-in-Cook-County-IL.pdf (last visited Nov. 12, 2016); THE SENTENCING PROJECT, supra note 239, at 7 (noting that minority youths make up a disparate proportion of youths in confinement)..

of public order cases detained (30% and 29%, respectively) than black youth (26%).”[258]

Figure 29. Juveniles in Residential Facilities by Race & Ethnicity[259]



Once detained, minority youth are more likely to stay in the system longer than their White peers and more likely to be locked up.[260] Some analysts have concluded that youth detention “is [the] most significant” stage of the juvenile justice process “for the rest of a young person’s life” because “[a]n adolescent who has spent

258. OJJDP 2014 NATIONAL REPORT, supra note 24, at 163; NAT’L COUNCIL ON CRIME AND DELINQUENCY, JUSTICE FOR SOME 2 (2007), http://www.nccdglobal.org/sites/default/files/publication_pdf/justice-for-some.pdf; see also Soler, supra note 257, at 23; Leiber & Peck, supra note 60, at 333; JJDP, Easy Access, supra note 1 (select “Race” and “Most Serious Offense General”; click “Show Table”). The greatest disparity exists in drug offenses, for which Black youth are two times more likely to be detained than White youth. OJJDP 2014 NATIONAL REPORT, supra note 24, at 164; see supra Figure 7. Discipline Disproportionality Girls & Figure 25. CRDS Discipline, % Special Education Students Referred to Law Enforcement & Subject to School-related Arrest.

259. Statistical Briefing Book: Juveniles in Corrections, OFFICE OF JUVENILE JUSTICE AND DELINQUENCY PREVENTION http://ojjdp.gov/ojstatbb/corrections/qa08205.asp?qaDate=2011 (last visited Nov. 12, 2016).

260. Id.

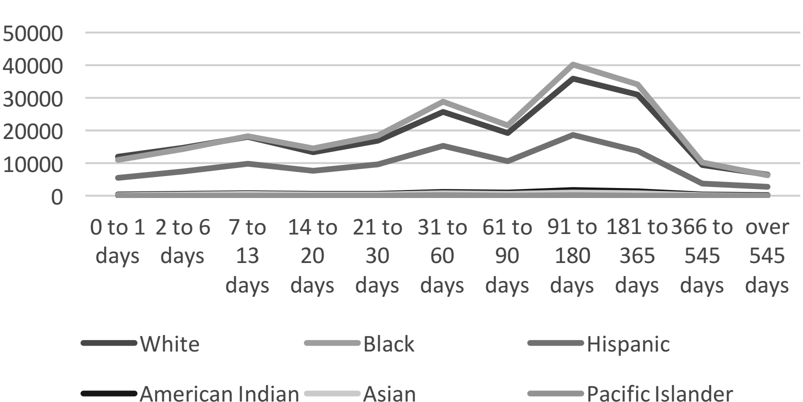
time in secure detention is far less likely to attain a high school diploma or consistently participate in the labor force in the future."[261]

Figure 30. Time Detained by Race & Ethnicity[262]



Massachusetts data is illustrative at the state level. Although the number of detained/committed youth has decreased, minority youth remain disproportionately represented in the system. Minority youth who represent about 20% of the juvenile population are "nearly 60% of the young people securely detained after arraignment and before adjudication, and 60% of those committed to the Commonwealth's Department of Youth Services (DYS) after an adjudication of delinquency."[263]

---

261. THE SENTENCING PROJECT, supra note 239, at 7 (citing J.H. Keeley, Will Adjudicated Youth Return to School After Residential Placement? Results of a Predictive Variable Study, J. CORRECT. EDUC. 57, 65–85 (2006)); see also BARRY HOLMAN & JASON ZIEDENBERG, THE DANGERS OF DETENTION 2 (2006), http://www.justicepolicy.org/images/upload/06-11_rep_dangersofdetention_jj.pdf.

262. JJDP, Easy Access, supra note 1 (select "Days Since Admission" and "Race"; click "Show Table").

263. ROBIN L. DAHLBERG, AM. CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION, LOCKING UP OUR CHILDREN: THE SECURE DETENTION OF MASSACHUSETTS YOUTH AFTER ARRAIGNMENT AND BEFORE ADJUDICATION 5 (2008), https://aclum.org/app/uploads/2015/06/reports-locking-up-our-children.pdf.

Once in the system, there are various disproportionalities. Black youth have been found to be "more likely than white youth or youth of other races to receive formal delinquency petitions, although they were less likely to be adjudicated delinquent."[264] However, "Black youth [are] more likely than White youth to be prosecuted for serious crimes."[265] Then they are disproportionately confined as compared to being placed on probation[266] and more likely to be transferred to adult facilities for detention.[267]

c. Youth with disabilities show the same disproportionalities and experiences in juvenile justice as well

Statistics on disabled youth in the juvenile justice system are less precise than data disaggregated by race, ethnicity, class, and other demographic categories because not all studies define disability in the same way,[268] and few jurisdictions maintain con-

264. Emily R. Cabaniss et al., Reducing Disproportionate Minority Contact in the Juvenile Justice System: Promising Practices, 12 AGGRESSION & VIOLENT BEHAV. 393, 394 (2007); see also OJJDP 2014 NATIONAL REPORT, supra note 24, at 167 ("Black youth were less likely to be adjudicated [delinquent] than were youth of other races.").

265. David E. Barrett & Antonis Katsiyannis, Juvenile Delinquency Recidivism: Are Black and White Youth Vulnerable to the Same Risk Factors?, 40 BEHAV. DISORDERS 184, 184 (2015).

266. OJJDP 2014 NATIONAL REPORT, supra note 24, at 169; SARAH HOCKENBERRY, OFFICE OF JUVENILE JUSTICE AND DELINQUENCY PREVENTION, JUVENILE IN RESIDENTIAL PLACEMENT, 2011 1 (2014), http://www.ojjdp.gov/pubs/246826.pdf; see also Cabaniss et al., supra note 264, at 394; Barrett & Katsiyannis, supra note 265, at 184–85.

267. Barrett & Katsiyannis, supra note 265, at 184; see also BENJAMIN ADAMS & SEAN ADDIE, OFFICE OF JUVENILE JUSTICE AND DELINQUENCY PROGRAMS, OJJDP FACT SHEET: DELINQUENCY CASES WAIVED TO CRIMINAL COURT, 2008 4 (2011), http://www.ojjdp.gov/pubs/236481.pdf ("Racial differences in case waivers stem primarily from differences in person and drug offense cases.").

268. CHRISTOPHER A. MALLETT, NAT'L COUNCIL OF JUVENILE & FAMILY COURT JUDGES, SEVEN THINGS JUVENILE COURTS SHOULD KNOW ABOUT LEARNING DISABILITIES 5 (2011) [hereinafter SEVEN THINGS]; Connie L. Kvarfordt et al., Youth with Learning Disabilities in the Juvenile Justice System: A Training Needs Assessment of Detention and Courts Services Personnel, 34 CHILD & YOUTH CARE FORUM 27, 28 (2005); Christopher A. Mallett, Youthful Offending and Delinquency: The Comorbid Treatment of Maltreatment, Mental sistent and comprehensive databases regarding youth with disabilities being processed through the system.[269] However, there is wide agreement that disabled youth are overrepresented in the juvenile justice system, especially with regard to detention.[270] Estimates of the percentage of incarcerated youth offenders with learning disabilities range from 28-50%,[271] although disabled youth make up only 4-9% of the adolescent population.[272]

Health Problems, and Learning Disabilities, 31 CHILD & ADOLESCENT SOCIAL WORK J. 369, 375 (2014) [hereinafter Youthful Offending] ("A lack of consistent definitions across systems that address some of the special education disability impairments of at-risk children and adolescents further complicates an already difficult situation."); see Julie C. Duvall & Richard J. Morris, Assessing Mental Retardation in Death Penalty Cases: Critical Issues for Psychology and Psychological Practice, 37 PROF. PSYCHOL.: RES. & PRAC. 658, 664 (2006), http://www.iapsych.com/iqmr/duvall2006.pdf (noting that definitions vary by state and within the same field of practice).

269. NAT'L COUNCIL ON DISABILITY, ADDRESSING THE NEEDS OF YOUTH WITH DISABILITIES IN THE JUVENILE JUSTICE SYSTEM: THE CURRENT STATUS OF EVIDENCE-BASED RESEARCH 49 (2003), https://www.ncd.gov/rawmedia_repository/381fe89a_6565_446b_ba18_bad024a59476.pdf.

270. DANIEL P. MEARS & LAUDAN Y. ARON, URBAN INST., ADDRESSING THE NEEDS OF YOUTH WITH DISABILITIES IN THE JUVENILE JUSTICE SYSTEM: THE CURRENT STATE OF KNOWLEDGE v (2003), http://www.urban.org/sites/default/files/alfresco/publication-pdfs/410885-Addressing-the-Needs-of-Youth-with-Disabilities-in-the-Juvenile-Justice-System.PDF (noting that despite a lack of empirical support for some aspects of disabled juveniles' interactions with the justice system, "research consistently suggests that youth with disabilities are overrepresented in [long-term] correctional settings").

271. SEVEN THINGS, supra note 268, at 5 (estimating 28-43%); David E. Barrett et al., Delinquency and Recidivism: A Multicohort, Matched-Control Study of the Role of Early Adverse Experiences, Mental Health Problems, and Disabilities, 22 J. EMOTIONAL & BEHAV. DISORDERS 3, 4 (2014) (estimating that 30-50% of incarcerated youth have "documented disabilities"); Kvarfordt et al., supra note 268, at 28 (estimating 35.6-46% with learning disabilities); Youthful Offending, supra note 268, at 372 (estimating 28-45% with special education disabilities). But see Antonis Katsiyannis et al., Juvenile Offenders with Disabilities: Challenges and Promises, in HANDBOOK OF JUV. FORENSIC PSYCHOL. AND PSYCHIATRY 521, 521 (2012), (stating in prevalence of disabilities among incarcerated youth may be "as high as 90%").

272. Youthful Offending, supra note 268, at 372; see also Christopher A. Mallett, The 'Learning Disabilities to Juvenile Detention' Pipeline: A Case Study, 36 CHILD. & SCHS. 147, 147 (2014) [hereinafter Learning Disabilities]

Recent studies have shown that disabilities are predictive both of delinquency and of recidivism.[273] Research focusing on arrest rates for minors with serious emotional disabilities shows a predictably broad range, reported by one researcher as 21–58%.[274] Beyond the initial offense, there is more substantial evidence that juveniles with learning disabilities are at greater risk of recidivism and may face difficulty reentering a school environment in which they are already at a disadvantage.[275] The precise causes of this higher rate of recidivism, however, represent an unresolved topic of scholarly debate.[276]

The intersection between race and disability in juvenile justice has not been extensively researched. However, a recent study examining the combination of race and disability as a predictor of recidivism found that disability status increases the likelihood of repeat offending for both Black and White adolescents.[277] Interestingly, a mental health diagnosis (but not a learning disability) "relating to aggression or impulse control" was the strongest predictor of recidivism for both groups, but a school-classified learning disability increased the risk for Black youth more than for White youth.[278]

---

273. See e.g., Barrett et al., supra note 271, at 10; 'Learning Disabilities, supra note 272, at 149–50; see Barrett & Katsiyannis, supra note 265, at 190; Katsiyannis et al., supra note 271, at 525–26.

274. Maryann Davis, Arrest Patterns into Adulthood of Adolescents with Serious Emotional Disability, in 14TH ANNUAL CONFERENCE PROCEEDINGS: A SYSTEM OF CARE FOR CHILDREN'S MENTAL HEALTH: EXPANDING THE RESEARCH BASE 150 (2001), https://www.gpo.gov/fdsys/pkg/ERIC-ED465248/pdf/ERIC-ED465248.pdf.

275. See HOLMAN & ZIEDENBERG, supra note 261, at 2, 9; Katsiyannis et al., supra note 271, at 525–26; Learning Disabilities, supra note 272, at 148 ("[M]any detained adolescents with learning disabilities fail to return to school.").

276. See Barrett et al., supra note 271, at 4; Learning Disabilities, supra note 272, at 148–49.

277. Barrett & Katsiyannis, supra note 265, at 190.

278. Id. at 190–91.

d. LGBTQ youth are also disproportionately represented in juvenile settings

While LGBTQ youth are thought to be about 7% of the overall youth population,[279] they represent 13–15% of those in the juvenile justice system.[280] Consistent with this, youths who have self-identified have been significantly more likely to be stopped by police than their peers identifying as heterosexual.[281] They are twice as likely to be detained and held in secure facilities for "truancy, warrants, probation violations, running away, and prostitution" compared with their heterosexual and gender-normative peers, though they are on a par for more violent offenses.[282] While youth who do continue with education in juvenile justice are less likely to be recidivists, education within juvenile justice settings is lacking.[283] It is difficult to return to school for youths coming from alternative schools or juvenile justice settings.[284]

---

279. See ROBERT P. JONES & DANIEL COX, PUB. RELIGION RESEARCH INST., HOW RACE AND RELIGION SHAPE MILLENNIAL ATTITUDES ON SEXUAL AND REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH 46, http://publicreligion.org/site/wp-content/uploads/2015/03/PRRI-Millennials-Web-FINAL.pdf (finding this percent among 18-35 year olds and also finding that "[t]here are no significant differences across races in LGBT identity, but there are modest religious and political differences.").

280. DEV. SERVS. GRP., OFFICE OF JUVENILE JUSTICE AND DELINQUENCY PREVENTION, LGBTQ YOUTHS IN THE JUVENILE JUSTICE SYSTEM 2 (2014), http://www.ojjdp.gov/mpg/litreviews/LGBTQYouthsintheJuvenileJusticeSystem.pdf; KATAYOON MAJD ET AL., THE EQUITY PROJECT, HIDDEN INJUSTICE: LESBIAN, GAY, BISEXUAL, AND TRANSGENDER YOUTH IN JUVENILE COURTS 1–2 (2009), http://web.archive.org/web/20160401085258/http://www.equityproject.org/wp-content/uploads/2014/08/hidden_injustice.pdf.

281. Himmelstein & Brückner, supra note 226.

282. Angela Irvine, "We've Had Three of Them": Addressing the Invisibility of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Gender Non-conforming Youths in the Juvenile Justice System, 19 COLUM. J. GENDER & L. 675, 689 (2010).

283. NELLIS, supra note 91, at 67.

284. See, e.g., Elizabeth Lamura, Our Children, Ourselves: Ensuring the Education of America's At-Risk Youth, 31 BUFF. PUB. INT. L.J. 117, 150-154 (2013) (discussing difficulty at reentry).

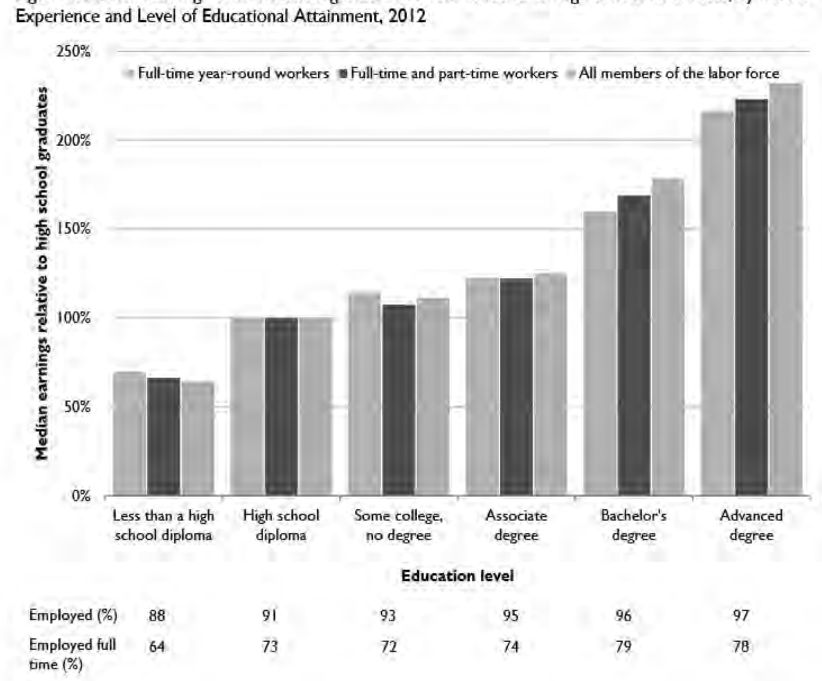
II. SOCIETAL CONSEQUENCES FOR IMPRISONING YOUTH

> [T]he total exclusion from the education process for more than a trivial period . . . is a serious event in the life of the suspended child. Neither the property interest in educational benefits temporarily denied nor the liberty interest in reputation, which is also implicated, is so insubstantial that suspensions may constitutionally be imposed by any procedure the school chooses . . . .[285]

The costs of maintaining the status quo are extraordinarily high for individual students, their families, their communities, and the economy as a whole. Individuals in the school-to-prison-pipeline lose the chance for educational achievement and related life opportunities.

285. Goss v. Lopez, 419 U.S. 565, 576 (1975).

Figure 31. Earnings by Status[286]



They are lost to the workforce and costly.[287] Estimates vary on exactly how costly, depending on what is being counted, e.g., dropout v. juvenile detainee, but by all accounts they are staggering in terms of lost wages and taxes and extra medical, increased crime-related expenditures, and other costs:

286. SANDY BAUM, URBAN INST., HIGHER EDUC. EARNINGS PREMIUM: VALUE, VARIATION, AND TRENDS 2, tbl.1 (2014).

287. See The Graduation Effect: The Economic Impact of a High School Diploma, ALL. FOR EXCELLENT EDUC. (Dec. 15, 2015), http://all4ed.org/webinar-event/dec-15-2015-2/ ("Nationally, increasing the high school graduation rate to 90 percent for just one high school class – the class of 2013 for instance, or now 2015 – increasing the high school graduation rate to 90 percent for just one class would create more than 65,000 jobs."); see also U.S. Graduation Rate, Unemployment Compared to Other Nations in Infographic, HUFFINGTON POST (June 26, 2012, 3:31 PM), http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2012/06/26/infographic-shows-how-us-_n_1628187.html.

> The Center for Labor Market Studies estimates the social and economic costs of dropouts as a consequence of lower earning power and job opportunities, unemployment, incarceration, and government assistance. High school dropouts are estimated to earn $400,000 less than high school graduates across their working lives. The lifetime earning loss for males can exceed $500,000. In addition, because of lower lifetime earnings, dropouts contribute far less in federal, state, and local taxes than they receive in cash benefits, in-kind transfer costs, and incarceration costs as compared to typical high school graduates.[288]

Figure 32. Annual Costs per Inmate/Student[289]

---

288. OJJDP 2014 NATIONAL REPORT, supra note 24, at 15; see also HENRY LEVIN ET AL., THE COSTS AND BENEFITS OF AN EXCELLENT EDUCATION FOR ALL OF AMERICA'S CHILDREN 18 (2006), http://www3.nd.edu/~jwarlick/documents/Levin_Belfield_Muennig_Rouse.pdf ("The fiscal consequence is $148 billion in lost tax revenues and additional public expenditures over the lifetime.").

289. See Christian HENRICHSON & RUTH DELANEY, VERA INST. OF JUSTICE, THE PRICE OF PRISONS: WHAT INCARCERATION COSTS TAXPAYERS 10 fig.4 (2012), http://www.vera.org/sites/default/files/resources/downloads/Price_of_Prisons_updated_version_072512.pdf; Total and Current Expenditures Per Pupil in Fall Enrollment in Public Elementary and Secondary Education, by Function and State or Jurisdiction: 2009–10, NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATS. tbl.215, http://nces.ed.gov/programs/digest/d12/tables/dt12_215.asp (last visited Oct. 25, 2016).

In contrast, students who do not drop out and who are not incarcerated,[290] but continue their education and graduate from high school and beyond are more likely to be employed and enjoy more earning power over their lifetimes.[291] Empirical research demonstrates that they suffer additional long-term detrimental effects, including reinforcement of violent attitudes and behaviors[292] and heightened mental health concerns.[293] They are "more likely than their peers who graduate to be unemployed, living in poverty, receiving public assistance, in prison, on death row, unhealthy, divorced, and ultimately single parents with children who drop out from high school themselves."[294]

---

290. See HOLMAN & ZIEDENBERG, supra note 261 (explaining that formerly detained youth have less success finding employment). It is also important to recognize that once incarcerated, juveniles often do not have access to adequate education services or, worse, cannot complete their education and develop career skills to obtain employment once released. See Peter E. Leone, Doing Things Differently: Education as a Vehicle for Youth Transformation and Finland as a Model for Juvenile Justice Reform, in A NEW JUVENILE JUSTICE SYSTEM: TOTAL REFORM FOR A BROKEN SYSTEM 86, 91 (Nancy E. Dowd ed., 2015).

291. PEW RESEARCH CTR., THE RISING COST OF NOT GOING TO COLLEGE 6 (2014), http://www.pewsocialtrends.org/files/2014/02/SDT-higher-ed-FINAL-02-11-2014.pdf. ("For example, among those ages 25 to 32, fully 22% with only a high school diploma are living in poverty, compared with 6% of today's college-educated young adults. In contrast, only 7% of Baby Boomers who had only a high school diploma were in poverty in 1979 when they were in their late 20s and early 30s.").

292. See Hobbs et al., supra note 75, at 81; Mark J. Van Ryzin & Thomas J. Dishion, From Antisocial Behavior to Violence: A Model for the Amplifying Role of Coercive Joining in Adolescent Friendships, 54 J. OF CHILD PSYCH. 661, 661 (2013) (finding that coercive friendships at age 16–17 predicted early-adulthood violent behavior).

293. HOLMAN & ZIEDENBERG, supra note 261, at 8; Javid H. Kashani et al., Depression Among Incarcerated Delinquents, 3 PSYCH. RES. 185, 190–91 (1980) (demonstrating that mental health issues such as depression increased among incarcerated youth); Christopher B. Forrest et al., The Health Profile of Incarcerated Male Youths, 105 PEDIATRICS 286, 288–89 (2000) (finding that incarcerated males suffered from significant mental health concerns).

294. THE SILENT EPIDEMIC, supra note 42, at 2 (citation omitted); see also DON BEZRUKI, DAVID VARANA, AND CHERRY HILL, AN EVALUATION: SECURE JUVENILE DETENTION 4 (1999) (finding that detaining youth does not deter most juveniles and does not reduce the likelihood of recidivism); THE CAMPAIGN FOR EDUC. EQUITY & TEACHERS COLL., COLUMBIA UNIV., THE SOCIAL COSTS OF

In this context, some have described increasing the high school graduation rate as the nation's best economic stimulus.[295] As the Alliance for Excellent Education summarizes:

> Lower local, state, and national tax revenues are the most obvious consequences of higher dropout rates; even when dropouts are employed, they earn, on average, $8,000 less annually than high school graduates and they pay less in taxes. State and local economies suffer further when they have less-educated populaces, as they find it more difficult to attract new business investments. Simultaneously, these entities must spend more on social programs when they have lower educational levels.[296]

Noting that two-thirds of the U.S. economy is driven by consumer spending, some researchers point out that raising individuals' education levels will boost their purchasing power and increase the national economy.[297]

There are also more direct costs. Staying in the education pipeline and out of the prison pipeline is a huge cost savings to society.[298] The Alliance for Excellent Education, for example, has

---

INADEQUATE EDUCATION (2005), http://www.tc.columbia.edu/i/a/3082_ SocialCostsofinadequateeducation.pdf; HOLMAN & ZIEDENBERG, supra note 261, at 4; Brent B. Benda & Connie L. Tollett, A Study of Recidivism of Serious and Persistent Offenders Among Adolescents, 27 J. OF CRIM. JUST. 111, 119 (1999) (demonstrating that prior incarceration was a stronger predictor of recidivism than being neglected or abused by parents, gang membership, being with peers at the time the offense was committed, or carrying a weapon); supra Figure 31. Earnings by Status.

295. ALL. FOR EXCELLENT EDUC., INSEPARABLE IMPERATIVES: EQUITY IN EDUCATION AND THE FUTURE OF THE AMERICAN ECONOMY (2012), [hereinafter EQUITY IN EDUCATION], http://all4ed.org/reports-factsheets/inseparable-imperatives-equity-in-education-and-the-future-of-the-american-economy/.

296. Economic Impacts, supra note 151; see also David Leonhardt, A Link Between Fidgety Boys and a Sputtering Economy, N.Y. TIMES, April 29, 2014, at A3.

297. EQUITY IN EDUCATION, supra note 295.

298. See ALL. FOR EXCELLENT EDUC., SAVING FUTURES, SAVING DOLLARS: THE IMPACT OF EDUCATION ON CRIME REDUCTION AND EARNINGS (2013) [hereinafter SAVING FUTURES], http://all4ed.org/wp-content/uploads/2013/09/SavingFutures.pdf; JUSTICE POLICY INST., THE COSTS calculated that $18.5 billion in crime costs could be saved annually if the male high school graduation rate increased by 5 percent.[299] More directly, juvenile detention costs are extremely high, averaging $148,767 per juvenile per year and ranging as high as $352,663 in the state of New York.[300] This extraordinary expense dwarfs the amount that on average our nation spends to educate one youth per year in our public schools ($12,296 in 2014–2015).[301] And incarceration beyond juvenile years just adds to these expenditures; for New York City, the cost of an inmate is higher than Harvard tuition.[302]

OF CONFINEMENT: WHY GOOD JUVENILE JUSTICE POLICIES MAKE GOOD FISCAL SENSE 2 (2009) [hereinafter COSTS OF CONFINEMENT], http://www.justicepolicy.org/images/upload/09_05_rep_costsofconfinement_jj_ps.pdf (last visited Oct. 25, 2016); see also NAT'L JUVENILE JUSTICE NETWORK & TEX. PUB. POLICY FOUND., THE COMEBACK STATES: REDUCING YOUTH INCARCERATION IN THE UNITED STATES 2 [hereinafter COMEBACK STATES], http://www.njjn.org/uploads/digital-library/Comeback-States-Report_FINAL.pdf (discussing states that have been successful in reducing confinement, California, Connecticut, Illinois, Ohio; Mississippi, New York, Texas, Washington, and Wisconsin); NAT'L JUVENILE JUSTICE NETWORK & THE TEX. PUB. POLICY FOUND., THE COMEBACK AND COMING-FROM-BEHIND STATES: AN UPDATE ON YOUTH INCARCERATION IN THE UNITED STATES (2013) [hereinafter COMING-FROM-BEHIND STATES], http://www.njjn.org/uploads/digital-library/The-Comeback-and-Coming-from-Behind-States.pdf.

299. SAVING FUTURES, supra note 298.

300. See JUSTICE POLICY INST., STICKER SHOCK: CALCULATING THE FULL PRICE TAG FOR YOUTH INCARCERATION 11 (2014) [hereinafter STICKER SHOCK], http://www.justicepolicy.org/uploads/justicepolicy/documents/sticker_shock_final_v2.pdf.

301. See Fast Facts: Expenditures, NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATS., https://nces.ed.gov/fastfacts/display.asp?id=66 (last visited on Oct. 25, 2016).

302. See NYC's Yearly Cost Per Inmate Almost as Expensive as Ivy League Tuition, FOX NEWS (Sept. 20, 2013), http://www.foxnews.com/us/2013/09/30/nyc-cost-per-inmate-almost-equals-ivy-league-education-expenses-tied-to-rikers/; Marc Santora, City's Annual Cost Per Inmate Is $168,000, Study Finds, N.Y. TIMES, Aug. 23, 2013, at A16; see supra Figure 32. Annual Costs per Inmate/Student.

Figure 33. Reducing the Number of Youth in Juvenile Facilities[303]

Top 10 States that lowered the number of youth in juvenile justice facilities from 1997 to 2006. Seven of the 10 states that reduced the number of youth in juvenile justice facilities saw drops in the total number of violent offenses reported to law enforcement.

State	Percent change in number of youth in juvenile facilities	Percent change in total number of violent offenses reported	Percent change in number of property offenses reported
Louisiana	-57%	-20%	-30%
Mississippi	-41%	-32%	-18%
New Mexico	-39%	-15%	-27%
Washington	-34%	-11%	-7%
Maine	-34%	2%	-11%
Wisconsin	-33%	13%	-11%
Tennessee	-33%	8%	-2%
Georgia	-27%	-3%	-6%
Connecticut	-27%	-23%	-25%
Maryland	-26%	-12%	-20%
Average	-35%	-9%	-16%
US Total	-12%	-13%	-14%

These numbers, which far too often serve to achieve their intended purpose, lead to the conclusions, "[w]e cannot afford the financial or the societal costs of unnecessary juvenile incarceration. By shifting our focus—and our investments—to the front end of the system, we will save not only money, but also lives."[304]

III. CAUSES OF THE SCHOOL-TO-PRISON PIPELINE

As previously described, causes of the school-to-prison pipeline are many and complex. Here we discuss in some detail three, which relate particularly to work of the American Bar Association on this issue: criminalization of school discipline; the presence and role of School Resource Officers; and the role implicit bias plays in disproportionality. Other law-related causes discussed in somewhat less detail include the impact of zero tolerance policies,[305] the limited constitutional rights of students in school,[306] low academic achievement,[307] and high stakes testing.[308]

303. COSTS OF CONFINEMENT, supra note 298, at 10.

304. STICKER SHOCK, supra note 300, at 3 (quoting Rick Scott, Governor's OpEds, (Jan. 2012)).

305. The ABA has opposed these policies. See also Am. Psychol. Ass'n Zero Tolerance Task Force, supra note 10, at 852 (explaining that a ten-year-old

A. Criminalization of School Discipline

Over the last three decades, there has been a distinct shift among many lawmakers, school officials, and teachers regarding how to discipline children for violations of school rules. While at one time it was common for educators to send students involved in a fight to the principal's office for assessment and discipline, in too many schools today it is just as common to refer those students to law enforcement for arrest and prosecution.[309] Several scholars girl was expelled because her mother put a small knife in her lunchbox to cut up an apple and describing that another student was expelled for talking on a cell phone to his mother who was on deployment as a solider to Iraq and with whom he had not spoken to for thirty days). Nor is there evidence that zero tolerance policies have made schools safer. See ADVANCEMENT PROJECT & THE CIVIL RIGHTS PROJECT AT HARVARD UNIV., OPPORTUNITIES SUSPENDED: THE DEVASTATING CONSEQUENCES OF ZERO TOLERANCE AND SCHOOL DISCIPLINE 17 (2000) [hereinafter OPPORTUNITIES SUSPENDED], http://civilrightsproject.ucla.edu/research/k-12-education/school-discipline/opportunities-suspended-the-devastating-consequences-of-zero-tolerance-and-school-discipline-policies/crp-opportunities-suspended-zero-tolerance-2000.pdf (stating that after four years of implementation, schools that used zero tolerance policies were less safe than those that did not use them); ARRESTING DEVELOPMENT, supra note 7, at 10; Am. Psychol. Ass'n Zero Tolerance Task Force, supra note 10, at 857 (finding that "zero tolerance policies have not provided evidence that such approaches can guarantee safe and productive school climates"); Krezmien et al., supra note 122, at 274. These policies have pushed more students out of schools and into the juvenile justice system. See KIM ET AL., supra note 94, at 78.

---

306. See Schools, Police, supra note 2.

307. See discussion supra starting at note 94 regarding disproportionality in academic achievements.

308. According to Professor James Ryan, "the temptation to exclude low-performing students, enhanced by the NCLBA, can hardly be denied: One less student performing below the proficiency level increases the overall percentage of students who have hit that benchmark." Ryan, supra note 122, at 969; see also NAACP LEGAL DEFENSE & EDUC. FUND, supra note 122, at 5 (explaining that accountability laws encourage schools to exclude students from school whom school officials believe may bring down the school's test scores); Darling-Hammond, supra note 122, at 252 ("Perhaps the most adverse, unintended consequence of NCLB's accountability strategy is that it undermines safety nets for struggling students rather than expanding them.").

309. See, e.g., FED. ADVISORY COMM. ON JUVENILE JUSTICE, supra note 122, at 10; ARRESTING DEVELOPMENT, supra note 7, at 10; EDUCATION UNDER ARREST, supra note 7, at 15 (stating that during the 2007–2008 school year in Jefferson County, Alabama, ninety-six percent of students referred to juvenile have referred to this shift as the "criminalization of school discipline."[310]

The reasons behind the criminalization of school discipline are complex. Several scholars have observed that the criminalization of school discipline has emerged parallel to and in connection with the criminalization of social problems generally in the United States.[311] When violent crime rates for juveniles increased from the mid-1980s to 1994, particularly among minority youth in the inner cities, elected officials felt political pressure to respond in the same fashion that they responded to the increase in adult crime.[312] court were for misdemeanors that included disorderly conduct and fighting without a weapon); Kristin Henning, Criminalizing Normal Adolescent Behavior in Communities of Color: The Role of Prosecutors in Juvenile Justice Reform, 98 CORNELL L. REV. 383, 410 (2013) ("Whereas schoolteachers, principals, and school counselors once handled school-based incidents such as fighting, disorderly conduct, and destruction of property in school, school officials now rely on local police or in-house SROs to handle even the most minor of school infractions.").

---

310. See Kathleen Nolan & Jean Anyon, Learning to Do Time: Willis's Model of Cultural Reproduction in an Era of Postindustrialism, Globalization, and Mass Incarceration, in LEARNING TO LABOR IN NEW TIMES 133, 136 (Nadine Dolby et al. eds., 2004); Henry A. Giroux, Racial Injustice and Disposable Youth in the Age of Zero Tolerance, 16 INT'L J. QUALITATIVE STUD. 553, 562 (2003); Matthew T. Theriot, School Resource Officers and the Criminalization of Student Behavior, 37 J. OF CRIM. JUST. 280, 282 (2009); Kerrin C. Wolf, Arrest Decision Making by School Resource Officers, 12 YOUTH VIOLENCE AND JUV. JUST. 136, 137 (2013).

311. See, e.g., Donna M. Bishop & Barry C. Feld, Juvenile Justice in the Get Tough Era, in ENCYCLOPEDIA OF CRIMINOLOGY AND CRIMINAL JUSTICE 2766, 2770 (Gerben Bruinsma & Davis Weisburd eds., 2014); KATHLEEN NOLAN, POLICE IN THE HALLWAYS: DISCIPLINE IN AN URBAN HIGH SCHOOL 22–24 (2011); Giroux, supra note 310, at 557–58 (2010); Hirschfield, supra note 115, at 88 (2008); Nolan & Anyon, supra note 310, at 136.

312. See BARRY C. FELD, BAD KIDS: RACE AND THE TRANSFORMATION OF THE JUVENILE COURT 14 (1999) (explaining as youth crime rates increased, especially among urban African-Americans, public fear of social disorder also increased, leading to a denouncement of coddling youth criminals); Giroux, supra note 310, at 561 (observing that the zero tolerance policies in schools were modeled on minimum sentencing and "three strikes" laws); Hirschfield, supra note 115, at 89–90; Pedro A. Noguera, The Trouble with Black Boys: The Role and Influence of Environmental and Cultural Factors on the Academic Performance of African American Males, 38 URBAN EDUC. 431 (2003). As Donna Bishop and Barry Feld describe, these violent incidents received an extraordinary amount of media attention, resulting in a "moral panic," in which "the media, politicians, and the public reinforce each other in an escalating alarmist response that exaggerates the magnitude of the threat and produces urgent calls to 'do something.'" Bishop & Feld, supra note 311, at 2770; see also Elizabeth S. Scott, "Children are Different": Constitutional Values and Justice Policy, 11 OHIO ST. J. CRIM. L. 71, 94 (2013) ("The hostility and fear that characterized attitudes toward young offenders in the 1990s resulted in policies and decisions driven primarily by immediate public safety concerns and the goal of punishing young criminals.").

Moreover, although juvenile crime rates have steadily declined since 1994,[313] a series of high-profile school shootings further propelled lawmakers to respond in this manner.[314] Consequently, lawmakers passed a series of harsh laws designed to deter juvenile crime on the streets and in schools.[315] At the same time, many school officials, also facing pressure to respond to high-profile incidents of school violence,[316] began embracing strict, heavy-handed disciplinary methods to maintain order and control in their buildings.[317] The end result is a series of laws, policies, and prac-

---

313. See JEFFREY A. BUTTS, JOHN JAY COLL. OF CRIM. JUST., VIOLENT YOUTH CRIME PLUMMETS TO A 30-YEAR LOW (2012), http://johnjayresearch.org/rec/files/2012/11/databit201211.pdf; KANG-BROWN ET AL., supra note 8, at 2.

314. See Monahan & Torres, supra note 121, at 1, 2–3 ("[T]he threat of 'another Columbine' (or Virginia Tech, and so on) haunts the social imaginary, leading parents, policy makers, and others to the sober conclusion that any security measure is worth whatever trade-offs are involved in order to ensure safety."); Elizabeth S. Scott, Miller v. Alabama and the (Past and) Future of Juvenile Crime Regulation, 31 L. & INEQ. 535, 541 (2013) (observing that although serious acts of school violence are rare events, after the Columbine shootings "legislatures across the country rushed to pass strict zero tolerance laws, making it a crime to threaten violence in school").

315. See PATRICIA TORBET ET AL., NAT'L CTR. FOR JUVENILE JUSTICE, STATE RESPONSES TO SERIOUS AND VIOLENT JUVENILE CRIME: RESEARCH REPORT xi (1996) (documenting states' legislative and executive action that shifted towards the goal of punishing criminal behavior rather than rehabilitating the offenders in response to increases in juvenile crime).

316. See Kevin P. Brady et al., School-Police Partnership Effectiveness in Urban Schools, 39 EDUC. & URBAN SOC. 455, 456 (2007) ("An increasing fear of school violence coupled with the public's misperceptions of the actual degree of violence in our nation's schools has caused school officials, especially those located in urban areas, to implement more punitive-based school discipline policies and practices for responding to and preventing student crime and violence.").

317. Hirschfield, supra note 115, at 91.

tices that have pushed more students out of school and into the justice system.

Many of the laws, policies, practices, and trends that have converged over the last three decades, resulting in the creation of a pathway from school-to-prison for too many students. Some of these laws, policies, practices, and trends stem directly from the "tough on crime," punitive mindset described above. Others are less related to that mindset but still contribute to the pipeline in other ways.

B. The Increased Presence of Law Enforcement Officers in Schools

A key component of the pipeline is the increased presence of law enforcement officers in schools. Law enforcement officers have interacted with and provided services to schools for decades.[318] However, the practice of having law enforcement officers, or school resource officers (SROs),[319] regularly present in schools on a large scale is a relatively new phenomenon, part of the larger

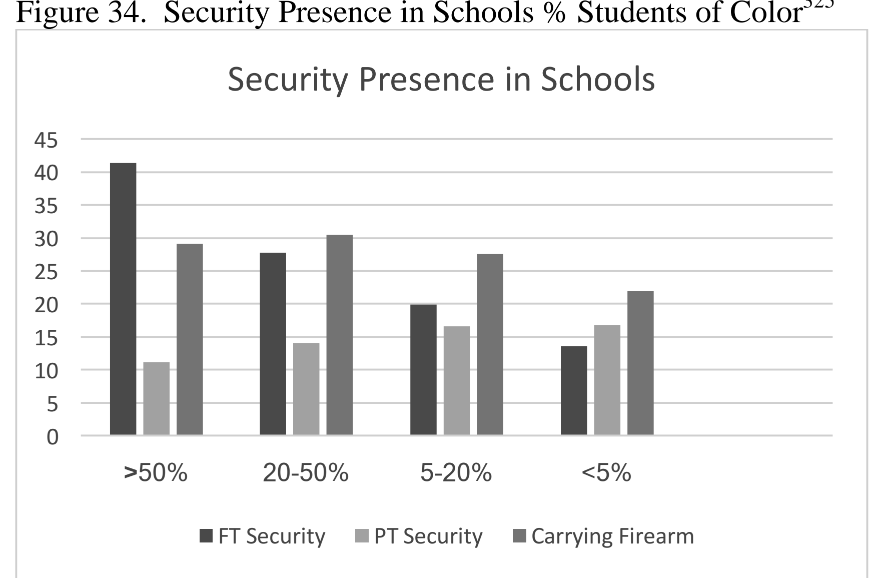
---

318. See NATHAN JAMES & GAIL MCCALLION, CONG. RESEARCH SERV., SCHOOL RESOURCE OFFICERS: LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS IN SCHOOLS 2 (2013), https://www.fas.org/sgp/crs/misc/R43126.pdf; Paul J. Hirschfield & Katarzyna Celinska, Beyond Fear: Sociological Perspectives on the Criminalization of School Discipline, 5 SOC. COMPASS 1, 1 (2011). These traditional services include visible patrols, criminal investigations, and responses to calls for service. BARBARA RAYMOND, OFFICE OF CMTY. ORIENTED POLICING SERVS., U.S. DEP'T OF JUSTICE, ASSIGNING POLICE OFFICERS TO SCHOOLS 1 (2010), http://www.popcenter.org/Responses/pdfs/school_police.pdf.

319. According to the Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) program and the Safe and Drug Free Schools and Community Act, a SRO is a "career law enforcement officer, with sworn authority, deployed in community-oriented policing, and assigned by the employing police department or agency to work in collaboration with schools and community-based organizations." 42 U.S.C. § 3796dd-8(4) (2012); 20 U.S.C. § 7161 (2012) (repealed 2015). SROs typically are sworn police officers employed by the police department and assigned to work in schools full-time, but in larger jurisdictions such as Los Angeles or Houston, SROs might be employed by the school districts. See CATHERINE Y. KIM & INDIA GERONIMO, ACLU, POLICING IN SCHOOLS: DEVELOPING A GOVERNANCE DOCUMENT FOR SCHOOL RESOURCE OFFICERS IN K–12 SCHOOLS 5 (2009).

overall movement towards criminalizing school discipline.[320] In the late 1970s there were fewer than one hundred police officers in our public schools,[321] but this number grew significantly in the years that followed. According to the Bureau of Justice Statistics' Law Enforcement Management and Administrative Statistics survey, in 1997 there were approximately 12,300 SROs employed by local law enforcement agencies nationwide.[322] In 2003, the number of full time SROs jumped to a high of 19,900.[323] In 2007, the number of SROs dropped slightly to 19,088.[324]

Figure 34. Security Presence in Schools % Students of Color[325]



*Students of color = combined Black, Hispanic, ASPI AIAN

320. See JAMES & MCCALLION, supra note 318, at 21–22; RAYMOND, supra note 318, at 1; Krezmien et al., supra note 122, at 275; Theriot, supra note 310, at 281.

321. See Brady et al., supra note 316, at 457; Hirschfield & Celinska, supra note 318, at 1.

322. JAMES & MCCALLION, supra note 318, at 19.

323. Id.; see also Theriot, supra note 310, at 281 ("While it is difficult to know the exact number of school resource officers, it is estimated that there might be more than 20,000 law enforcement officers patrolling schools in the United States.").

324. JAMES & MCCALLION, supra note 318, at 5 fig.1.

325. SIMONE ROBERS ET AL., BUREAU OF JUSTICE STATISTICS, U.S. DEP'T OF EDUC., INDICATORS OF SCHOOL CRIME AND SAFETY: 2014, at 162 tbl.20.3 (2014), http://nces.ed.gov/pubs2015/2015072.pdf.

Security = security guard, security personnel, School Resource Officers (SROs), or sworn law enforcement officers who are not SROs

SRO programs vary from state to state, county to county, and even district to district.[326] In some states and counties, police agencies assign SROs to schools, either by request of school district officials or by the police agencies.[327] In a handful of states, school districts have the authority to create school district-run police departments.[328] SRO programs are very expensive.[329] A rough estimate of the cost of employing 19,088 full time SROs is almost $619 million a year.[330] To put an SRO in every public school, as some recommend, would cost approximately $3.2 billion each year.[331] Despite this high cost, federal and state governments have encouraged the use of law enforcement and other strict security measures in schools by passing laws granting money for these purposes. For example, the U.S. Department of Justice Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) program and the Safe and Drug-Free Schools and Communities Act have provided millions of dollars for law enforcement, metal detectors, surveillance cameras, and other deterrent and security measures in schools.[332] Several states also have their own programs to fund

---

326. See Ben Brown, Understanding and Assessing School Police Officers: A Conceptual and Methodological Comment, 34 J. CRIM. JUST. 591, 592 (2006); THE COUNCIL OF STATE GOV'TS JUSTICE CTR., OFFICERS IN SCHOOLS: A SNAPSHOT OF LEGISLATIVE ACTION 1 (2014) [hereinafter A SNAPSHOT OF LEGISLATIVE ACTION], http://csgjusticecenter.org/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/NCSL-School-Police-Brief.pdf.

327. See Brown, supra note 326, at 592; A SNAPSHOT OF LEGISLATIVE ACTION, supra note 326, at 1–2.

328. See Brown, supra note 326, at 592; A SNAPSHOT OF LEGISLATIVE ACTION, supra note 326, at 1–2; see also KIM & GERONIMO, supra note 319, at 5 (explaining that SROs are sworn police officers typically employed by the police department and assigned to work in schools full-time, but in larger jurisdictions such as Los Angeles or Houston, SROs might be employed by the school districts).

329. JAMES & MCCALLION, supra note 318, at 20.

330. Id.

331. Id. The average minimum salary for an entry-level police officer is $32,412. Id.

332. See 20 U.S.C. §§ 7115(b)(2)(E)(ii), (vi) (2012) (authorizing funding for metal detectors, electronic locks, surveillance cameras, and SROs); JAMES & these strict measures in schools, even prior to the Newtown shootings.[333]

Although lawmakers, police departments, and school officials expanded SRO programs to enhance school safety in the wake of rising juvenile crime rates and high-profile school shootings,[334] the programs were largely unevaluated and may have the opposite effect.[335] According to a recent Congressional Research Service Report,

> The body of research on the effectiveness of SRO programs is limited, both in terms of the number of studies published and the methodological rigor of the studies conducted. The research that is available draws conflicting conclusions about whether SRO programs are effective at reducing school violence. In addition, the research does not address

---

MCCALLION, supra note 318, at 7–8; OFFICE OF CMTY. ORIENTED POLICING SERVS., U.S. DEP'T OF JUST., 2011 SECURE OUR SCHOOLS PROGRAM 1, http://www.cops.usdoj.gov/pdf/2011AwardDocs/CSPP-SOS-CHP/SOSMethodology.pdf.

333. See, e.g., ALA. CODE § 41-15B-2.2(b)(2)(a) (2012); GA. CODE ANN. § 20-2-1185(b) (West 2012); 24 PA. STAT. § 13-1302-A(c) (West 2012).

334. See JAMES & MCCALLION, supra note 318, at 10–11; RAYMOND, supra note 318, at 5; Brown, supra note 326, at 591; Theriot, supra note 310, at 280. In 2002, the U.S. Department of Justice sponsored a survey of school principals nationwide to ascertain the reasons why schools established SRO programs. See LAWRENCE F. TRAVIS III & JULIE K. COON, CTR. FOR CRIMINAL JUSTICE RESEARCH, THE ROLE OF LAW ENFORCEMENT IN PUBLIC SCHOOL SAFETY: A NATIONAL SURVEY (2005), https://www.ncjrs.gov/pdffiles1/nij/grants/211676.pdf. The responses were mixed. Principals indicated that "national media attention about school violence" (24.5%) and "disorder problems (e.g., rowdiness, vandalism)" (17.5%) were the reasons behind establishing the program. Id. at 85 tbl.6.1. Interestingly, the most common response was "other," which included reasons such as receiving a grant, "part of community policing," "part of a drug awareness program," "to improve school safety," and "to build relationships with students." Id. at 84. Only 3.7% of respondents indicated that the level of violence in the school was the reason for establishing an SRO program. Id. at 85.

335. See JAMES & MCCALLION, supra note 318, at 9; Brown, supra note 326, at 592 (observing that despite the enormous expense associated with SRO programs, it is not clear whether SROs enhance student safety); Theriot, supra note 310, at 280.

> whether SRO programs deter school shootings, one of the key reasons for renewed congressional interest in these programs.[336]

Absent evaluation, lawmakers and school officials expanded SRO programs despite the potentially harmful effects that SROs may have on the educational setting.[337] For example, strict security measures in and of themselves can harm the educational climate by alienating students and generating mistrust,[338] which, paradoxically, may lead to even more disorder and violence.[339]

---

336. JAMES & MCCALLION, supra note 318, at 10–11; Theriot, supra note 310, at 280 ("Empirical evaluations of these various security strategies are limited, have varying levels of methodological rigor, and often report conflicting findings." (internal citations omitted)). Another summary of the research on the effectiveness of SRO programs states: "Studies of SRO effectiveness that have measured actual safety outcomes have mixed results. Some show an improvement in safety and a reduction in crime; others show no change. Typically, studies that report positive results from SRO programs rely on participants' perceptions of the effectiveness of the program rather than on objective evidence. Other studies fail to isolate incidents of crime and violence, so it is impossible to know whether the positive results stem from the presence of SRO programs or are the results of other factors." RAYMOND, supra note 318, at 8; see also Benjamin W. Fisher & Emily A. Hennessy, School Resource Officers and Exclusionary Discipline in U.S. High Schools: A Systematic Review and Meta-analysis, ADOLESCENT RES. REV., June 2015, at 217 (presenting results of meta-analyses on impact of SROs).

337. See Brown, supra note 326, at 592 (lamenting that such little attention has been devoted to measuring the impact SROs have on the school environment); Theriot, supra note 310, at 281 (observing that the research on SROs rarely discusses criminalization of school discipline or provided data about arrests).

338. See Paul Hirschfield, School Surveillance in America, in SCHOOLS UNDER SURVEILLANCE: CULTURES OF CONTROL IN PUBLIC EDUCATION 38, 46 (observing that strict security measures are "a frequent cause of disunity or discord within the school community"); Randall R. Beger, The "Worst of Both Worlds": School Security and the Disappearing Fourth Amendment Rights of Students, 28 CRIM. JUST. REV. 336, 340 (2003) (concluding that "aggressive security measures produce alienation and mistrust among students); Ending the School-to-Prison Pipeline: Hearing Before the Subcomm. on the Constitution, Civil Rights & Human Rights of the S. Comm. on the Judiciary, 112th Cong. 1–4 (2012) (testimony of Edward Ward, Blocks Together, Dignity in Schools Campaign) (describing his school environment as "very tense," "antagonizing," and "dishearten[ing]," where "the halls were full with school security officers whose

Further, several empirical studies demonstrate that putting more SROs in school is associated with involving more students in the criminal justice system, even for low-level violations of school behavioral codes.[340] For example, examining restricted data from the U.S. Department of Education, Jason Nance found that a police officer's regular presence at a school significantly increased the odds that schools referred students to law enforcement for several lower-level offenses.[341] These findings held true even after taking into account other variables that might influence whether schools refer students to law enforcement such as general levels of criminal activity and disorder in the schools and neighborhood crime.[342] Matthew Theriot took advantage of a natural experiment in which only purpose seemed to be to serve students with detentions or suspensions"); cf. Tom R. Tyler & Lindsay E. Rankin, Legal Socialization and Delinquency, in THE OXFORD HANDBOOK OF JUVENILE CRIME AND JUVENILE JUSTICE, supra note 256, at 361 (observing that "surveillance systems have deleterious effects on the social climate of groups because their use implies distrust, which decreases people's ability to feel positively about themselves, their groups, and the system itself").

---

339. See Clifford H. Edwards, Student Violence and the Moral Dimensions of Education, 38 PSYCHOL. SCHS. 249, 250 (2001) (stating that "intrusive strategies are likely to undermine the trust needed to build cooperative school communities capable of really preventing violence"); Pedro A. Noguera, Preventing and Producing Violence: A Critical Analysis of Responses to School Violence, 65 HARV. EDUC. REV. 189, 190–91 (1995) (observing that the "get tough" approach undermines school safety because coercive measures create mistrust and resistance among students); Matthew J. Mayer & Peter E. Leone, A Structural Analysis of School Violence and Disruption: Implications for Creating Safer Schools, 22 EDUC. & TREATMENT CHILD. 333, 350, 352 (1999) (finding that student disorder and student victimization were higher in schools using strict security measures); Steinberg, Allensworth, & Johnson, What Conditions Support Safety in Urban Schools, supra note 16, at 127–29 (finding that students and teachers reported lower levels of perceived safety in schools that had higher suspension rates, even after controlling for community and contextual variables).

340. See U.S. DEP'T OF JUSTICE CIVIL RIGHTS DIV., INVESTIGATION OF THE FERGUSON POLICE DEPARTMENT 37–38 (2015) [hereinafter DOJ FERGUSON], http://www.justice.gov/sites/default/files/opa/press-releases/attachments/2015/03/04/ferguson_police_department_report.pdf (finding that the Ferguson Missouri Police treated "routine discipline issues as criminal matters").

341. See Nance, supra note 82, at 35–47.

342. See id. (describing and analyzing this empirical study).

a school district in the southeastern United States assigned full-time SROs to schools residing within the city limits, but not to those outside the city limits.[343] Theriot found that schools with SROs were more likely to arrest students for lower-level offenses such as disorderly conduct than schools without SROs but not for more serious crimes.[344] In a very recent study, Emily Owens discovered that police jurisdictions that received federal grants to hire more SROs in schools learned about more crimes taking place in schools, and those law enforcement agencies were more likely to arrest students who commit crimes in schools.[345]

Perhaps the most significant challenge of having SROs in schools is that while SROs may be in schools primarily to enhance school safety, many SROs also become involved in student disciplinary matters that educators traditionally have handled and should continue to handle.[346] It is easy to see how this happens. Most SROs spend their time each day patrolling buildings and grounds, investigating complaints, minimizing disruptions, and maintaining order.[347] When SROs observe students being disruptive and disorderly, they intervene because they view this as one of their duties, even when those duties overlap with the traditional 343. See Theriot, supra note 310, at 282.

344. Id. at 284–85.

345. Emily G. Owens, Testing the School-to-Prison Pipeline 3–4 (Univ. of Pa. Dep't of Criminology, Working Paper No. 2015-5.1, 2015), https://crim.sas.upenn.edu/working-papers/police.

346. See Brown, supra note 326, at 591; see also DOJ FERGUSON, supra note 340, at 37–38.

347. See Theriot, supra note 310, at 281; JAMES & MCCALLION, supra note 318, at 2. According to the COPS program an SRO's duties include the following:

> (A) to address crime and disorder problems, gangs, and drug activities affecting or occurring in or around an elementary or secondary school; (B) to develop or expand crime prevention efforts for students; (C) to educate likely school-age victims in crime prevention and safety; (D) to develop or expand community justice initiatives for students; (E) to train students in conflict resolution, restorative justice, and crime awareness; (F) to assist in the identification of physical changes in the environment that may reduce crime in or around the school; and (G) to assist in developing school policy that addresses crime and to recommend procedural changes.

42 U.S.C. § 3796dd-8(4) (2012).

duties of school officials.[348] Furthermore, SROs apparently have the legal authority to intervene in almost all student disciplinary matters. For example, most states have criminal laws that prohibit assault, disorderly conduct, larceny, and disturbing the peace,[349] and several states have passed statutes that explicitly criminalize the disruption of school activities[350] or talking back to teachers.[351] Accordingly, if a student is involved in a scuffle with another student, talks back to a teacher, yells at another student, steals another student's pencil, or exhibits other types of poor behavior, SROs have legal authority to arrest that student, even a six-year old student who is throwing a temper tantrum.[352] Thus, in many schools, SROs have become the "new authoritative agents" of discipline.[353]

---

348. Interestingly, the SRO handbook developed by COPS provides an example of an SRO who "once had to threaten to arrest a principal for interfering with a police officer in the performance of his duty when the administrator was physically barring [the SRO] from arresting a student," reminding SROs that they have the power to arrest students over the objections of school officials. PETER FINN ET AL., U.S. DEP'T OF JUSTICE, OFFICE OF CMTY. ORIENTED POLICING SERVS., A GUIDE TO DEVELOPING, MAINTAINING, AND SUCCEEDING WITH YOUR SCHOOL RESOURCE OFFICER PROGRAM 51 (2005), http://www.popcenter.org/Responses/school_police/PDFs/Finn_et_al_2005.pdf.

349. See, e.g., CAL. PENAL CODE § 241.1 (West 2014) (prohibiting assault); FLA. STAT. ANN. § 877.03 (West 2014) (prohibiting acts that breach the peace and disorderly conduct); N.Y. PENAL LAW § 155.05 (McKinney 2014) (prohibiting larceny); VA. CODE ANN. § 18.2-415 (West 2014) (prohibiting disorderly conduct).

350. See ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 13-2911 (West, Westlaw through 2016 Sess.); CAL. PENAL CODE § 415.5 (West 2010); FLA. STAT. ANN. § 871.01 (West 2014); MASS. GEN. LAWS ch. 272, § 40 (2014); NEV. REV. STAT. ANN. § 392.910 (West, Westlaw through 2015 Sess.); S.C. CODE ANN. § 16-17-420 (West, Westlaw through 2016 Sess.); S.D. CODIFIED LAWS § 13-32-6 (2014); TEX. EDUC. CODE ANN. § 37.123 (West 2014); WASH. REV. CODE ANN. § 28A.635.030 (West 2014); W. VA. CODE ANN. § 61-6-14 (West 2014).

351. See ARIZ. REV. STAT. ANN. § 15-507 (West 2009 & Supp. 2012); ARK. CODE ANN. § 6-17-106(a)(1)(A)–(C) (LexisNexis 2013); IDAHO CODE ANN. § 18-916 (West 2016); MONT. CODE ANN. § 20-4-303 (2011); N.D. CENT. CODE § 15.1-06-16 (2003).

352. See Bob Herbert, 6-Year-Olds Under Arrest, N.Y. TIMES, Apr. 9, 2007, at A17 (reporting the arrest of a six-year-old student for throwing a temper tantrum at school).

353. Brown, supra note 326, at 591.

The problems with SROs handling student disciplinary issues are multifaceted. Whereas teachers and school officials have advanced academic credentials, receive training in child psychology, discipline, pedagogy, educational theory and practice, and are accountable to local school boards,[354] SROs are trained in law enforcement, have little or no training in developmental psychology or pedagogy, and may not be accountable to school boards.[355] Thus, an SRO's decision to arrest a student may be based on criteria that are wholly distinct from and even anathema to the best interests of the student or the school as a whole.[356] The anecdotal evidence of SROs mishandling student discipline problems abounds.[357] In its investigation of the Ferguson Missouri Police

354. This does not imply that teachers and school officials do not need more training in these areas. In fact, as previously noted, too many school officials and teachers rely too heavily on overly-punitive disciplinary methods. It is critical for school officials and teachers to become aware of and support using alternative methods to create safe, supportive learning environments. See Nance, Dismantling the School-to-Prison Pipeline: Tools for Change, supra note 2.

355. Brown, supra note 326, at 591.

356. Id.; DOJ FERGUSON, supra note 340, at 8. Of course, this does not imply that educators or school officials always use their training well. In fact, over the last few decades many teachers and school officials have adopted a punitive mindset to discipline children that may also contribute to the Pipeline. See supra text and discussion at note 309.

357. See Kaitlin Banner, Breaking the School-to-Prison Pipeline: New Models for School Discipline and Community Accountable Schools, in A NEW JUVENILE JUSTICE SYSTEM: TOTAL REFORM FOR A BROKEN SYSTEM 302–03 (describing events of SROs mishandling student disciplinary issues); SHAKTI BELWAY, S. POVERTY LAW CTR., ACCESS DENIED: NEW ORLEANS STUDENTS AND PARENTS IDENTIFY BARRIERS TO PUBLIC EDUCATION 4, 6 (2010), https://www.splcenter.org/sites/default/files/d6_legacy_files/downloads/publication/SPLC_report_Access_Denied.pdf; Nancy A. Heitzeg, Criminalizing Education: Zero Tolerance Policies, Police in the Hallways, and the School-to-Prison Pipeline, in FROM EDUCATION TO INCARCERATION: DISMANTLING THE SCHOOL-TO-PRISON PIPELINE 11, 22 (Anthony J. Nocella II, Priya Parmar & David Stovall eds., 2014) (describing various incidents where students were arrested for minor offenses); ELORA MUKHERJEE, N.Y. CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION, CRIMINALIZING THE CLASSROOM: THE OVER-POLICING OF NEW YORK CITY SCHOOLS 6, 14 (Phyllis Eckaus et al. eds., 2007), http://www.nyclu.org/pdfs/criminalizing_the_classroom_report.pdf (describing the arrests of students resulting from bringing cell phones to school and being late to class); DOJ FERGUSON, supra note 340, at 37–38; Sharif Durhams, Tosa East Student Ar-

Department, the United States Department of Justice recently determined the following:

> SROs' propensity for arresting students demonstrates a lack of understanding of the negative consequences associated with such arrests. In fact, SROs told us that they viewed increased arrests in the schools as a positive result of their work. This perspective suggests a failure of training (including training in mental health, counseling, and the development of the teenage brain); a lack of priority given to de-escalation and conflict resolution; and insufficient appreciation for the negative educational and long-term outcomes that can result from treating disciplinary concerns as crimes and using force on students.[358] rested, Fined After Repeated Texting, MILWAUKEE J. SENTINEL, Feb. 18, 2009, at B8; Herbert, supra note 352, at A17; Ann M. Simmons, High School Scuffle Exposes a Racial Rift, L.A. TIMES (Oct. 11, 2007), http://articles.latimes.com/2007/oct/11/local/me-palmdale11; Student Arrested for 'Passing Gas' at Fla. School, NBCNEWS.COM, http://www.nbcnews.com/id/27898395/ns/us_news-weird_news/t/student-arrested-passing-gas-fla-school/#.VFlEEPnF98E (last updated Nov. 24, 2008); Thomas C. Tobin, Video Shows Police Handcuffing 5-Year-Old, TAMPA BAY TIMES (Apr. 22, 2005), http://www.sptimes.com/2005/04/22/Southpinellas/Video_shows_police_ha.shtml.

358. DOJ FERGUSON, supra note 340, at 38.

C. The Role of Implicit Bias and Related Unconscious Associations/Decisions[359]

A particularly alarming aspect of the school-to-prison pipeline is that certain groups of students, especially minority students, are disproportionately affected. At each juncture of the pipeline—from failing to receive a quality education, failing to graduate, being suspended or expelled, or being referred to law enforcement for violating a school rule and then on into the juvenile justice system—there are differences along group lines that are not readily explicable. The differences and disproportionalities discussed in this report are so well documented, so large, and so well known that one must question why the pattern has not yielded to change.

When one considers the statistical overview from a high level, it may sometimes be difficult to remember that these appalling numbers represent decision after decision point in the lives of individual students. Many—if not most—of the critical decisions impacting young people along the educational pipeline are discretionary individual decisions.[360] For the most part, these decisions will have been made by people acting in good faith—a teacher who recommends a student to take advanced courses in mathematics or science (or not); the school official who decided to suspend a student for disruptive behavior (or not); the special education team that classifies a child as emotionally disturbed (or not); the police officer who decides to arrest (or not); the prosecutor who decides to prosecute (or not); the judge who decides divert or detain; and so on. In these instances, it is hardly likely that the teacher explicitly thought, "Oh, J won't make it in school, he's Black;" or "Oh, let's call the police about K, he's ADHD and his family are Hispanic so we might as well get some help getting him out of here." It is unlikely that the police officer thought similarly and explicitly decided on these bases to arrest rather than call J or K's parents; it is even less likely that the judge was so motivated. It is hardly likely that any of these decision makers would consciously agree with these sentiments, in fact, the opposite.

359. Some of this part is taken from Professor Redfield's work on the American Bar Association's Achieving an Impartial Jury: Addressing Bias in Voir Dire and Deliberations project, which can be viewed at http://www.americanbar.org/groups/criminal_justice/voir_dire.html, and from various of her presentations, all on file with the author. See, e.g., Sarah E. Redfield, Professor of Law, Presentation to the Nebraska State Bar Association: Understanding Implicit Bias to Gain Justice & Equal Opportunity (Oct. 2015); Sarah E. Redfield & Bernice B. Donald, Joint Training to the Warren County Department of Human Services: Implicit Bias & the School-to-Prison Pipeline (May 2015); Sarah E. Redfield & Jason Nance, Joint Training to the Warren County Department of Human Services: Implicit Bias & the School-to-Prison Pipeline (May 2015).

360. See supra text and discussion accompanying notes 29–35.

If these explicit biases are not the reasons underlying the seemingly intractable data on disparity, then what are the reasons?[361] While there are several factors that may contribute to these disparities, if we accept as given that most educators and juvenile justice decision makers are acting in good faith when they explicitly exercise their discretion, then a possible explanation lies with implicit associations that influence their discretionary decisions. That is, as many researchers now agree, a primary cause of differential treatment is the implicit bias of decision makers.[362] This part of the report discusses the issues from this perspective.

Explicit bias is a preference deliberately generated and consciously experienced as one's own; implicit bias is an association or preference that is unconscious and experienced without awareness.[363] Implicit biases may well be dissociated from what we ac-

---

361. This is not to say that explicitly held views are not part of the problem.

362. See, e.g., van den Bergh et al., supra note 40, at 518; McIntosh et al., supra note 35, at 6 (explaining that conscious or unconscious bias is an important factor in the discipline gap); L. Song Richardson, Police Efficiency and the Fourth Amendment, 87 IND. L.J. 1143, 1146–47 (2012) (explaining that individuals have nonconscious reactions to others that negatively influences their decisions and behaviors to those individuals); see also Cynthia Lee, Making Race Salient: Trayvon Martin and Implicit Bias in a Not Yet Post-Racial Society, 91 N.C. L. REV. 1555, 1570 (2013) ("Despite our largely egalitarian attitudes and beliefs, social science research over the past decade has shown that a majority of Americans are implicitly biased against Blacks.").

363. See JERRY KANG, NAT'L CTR. FOR STATE COURTS, IMPLICIT BIAS: A PRIMER FOR COURTS 1 (2009), http://wp.jerrykang.net.s110363.gridserver.com/wp-content/uploads/2010/10/kang-Implicit-Bias-Primer-for-courts-09.pdf. See generally NEUROSCIENCE OF PREJUDICE AND INTERGROUP RELATIONS 175 (Belle Derks, Daan Scheepers & Naomi Ellemers eds., 2013) ("Stereotypes are cognitive structures stored in memory that represent attributes associated with a social group.") (citation omitted). We use the implicit bias/association vocabulary here, but the vocabulary describing the brain's dual response mechanisms tively and honestly believe.[364] When a teacher says that the boys will be better choices for the math team than the girls, that teacher is displaying an explicit bias; but when that teacher asserts he is selecting students for the team equitably, yet the team repeatedly is disproportionately male dominated, that teacher is likely displaying an implicit bias in selecting members.[365] When Jennifer Mendoza made baseball history as the first woman to call a nationally televised game, and a fan that "[n]o one wants to hear a women in the booth . . . [sic] I will not listen or watch those games she is on," that fan is expressing an explicit bias.[366] When an employer selects men over women based on names or pictures making gender clear, that employer is likely responding with implicit bias.[367] does vary. See Matthew D. Lieberman, Reflective and Reflexive Judgment Processes: A Social Cognitive Neuroscience Approach, in SOCIAL JUDGMENTS: IMPLICIT AND EXPLICIT PROCESSES 44 (Joseph P. Forgas et al. eds., 2003) (using reflexive/reflective or x/c); DANIEL KAHNEMAN, THINKING, FAST AND SLOW 13 (2011) (using fast/slow and System1/System 2); Matthew D. Lieberman, Research, UCLA SOC. COGNITIVE NEUROSCIENCE LABORATORIES http://www.scn.ucla.edu/research.html (last visited Nov. 5, 2016). See generally PAMELA CASEY ET AL., AM. JUDGES ASS'N, MINDING THE COURT: ENHANCING THE DECISION-MAKING PROCESS (2012), http://aja.ncsc.dni.us/pdfs/Minding-the-Court.pdf (discussing terminology and approach).

---

364. See Patricia G. Devine, Stereotypes and Prejudice: Their Automatic and Controlled Components, 56 J. PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. 5, 5–6, 15 (1989); Brian A. Nosek & Rachel G. Riskind, Policy Implications of Implicit Social Cognition, 6 SOC. ISSUES & POL'Y REV. 113, 128–29 (2012); Kate A. Ratliff & Brian A. Nosek, Negativity and Outgroup Biases in Attitude Formation and Transfer, 37 PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. BULL. 1692, 1692 (2011); see also PAMELA M. CASEY ET AL., NAT'L CTR. FOR STATE COURTS, HELPING COURTS ADDRESS IMPLICIT BIAS: RESOURCES FOR EDUCATION app. B at B9–B14 (2012), http://www.ncsc.org/~/media/Files/PDF/Topics/Gender%20and%20Racial%20Fairness/IB_report_033012.ashx (cumulating references).

365. See Ernesto Reuben et al., How Stereotypes Impair Women's Careers in Science, 111 PROC. NAT'L ACAD. SCI. 4403, 4403 (2014) (showing that employers will choose a male employee over a female employee for a job requiring arithmetic skills even where actual task results show the female with better test scores).

366. Dominique Mosberger, Jessica Mendoza Makes Baseball History, Prompting Sexist Backlash, HUFFINGTON POST (Oct. 7, 2015, 5:57 AM), http://www.huffingtonpost.com/entry/jessica-mendoza-playoffs_5614d906e4b0cf9984d7a353.

367. See Marianne Bertrand & Sendhil Mullainathan, Are Emily and Greg More Employable than Lakisha and Jamal? A Field Experiment on Labor Mar-

It used to be the case that if we wanted to know a person's bias, we asked.[368] Not surprisingly, the answers, particularly in socially sensitive situations,[369] were often less than accurate, whether because we believe we are not biased, because we do not want those around us to know we think we may be biased, or because we do not know ourselves.[370]

---

ket Discrimination, 94 AM. ECON. REV. 991, 991 (2004) ("White names receive 50 percent more callbacks for interviews."); Rhea E. Steinpreis, Katie A. Anders & Dawn Ritzke, The Impact of Gender on the Review of the Curricula Vitae of Job Applicants and Tenure Candidates: A National Empirical Study, 41 SEX ROLES 509, 509 (1999) ("Both men and women were more likely to vote to hire a male job applicant than a female job applicant with an identical record. Similarly, both sexes reported that the male job applicant had done adequate teaching, research, and service experience compared to the female job applicant with an identical record."); see also ARIN N. REEVES, COLORED BY RACE: BIAS IN THE EVALUATION OF CANDIDATES OF COLOR BY LAW FIRM HIRING COMMITTEES: THE 2015 UPDATE & SUMMARY OF DATA FROM 2005 (2015), http://www.nextions.com/wp-content/files_mf/144793674920151115ColoredbyRaceYPS.pdf ("Racial/ethnic minority candidates are also more likely to receive negative comments about their names, the lack of 'polish' in their overall appearance, and their 'comfort levels' in talking with people in the firm."); ARIN N. REEVES, WRITTEN IN BLACK & WHITE: EXPLORING CONFIRMATION BIAS IN RACIALIZED PERCEPTIONS OF WRITING SKILLS (2014), http://www.nextions.com/wp-content/files_mf/1446822647201404011 4WritteninBlackandWhiteYPS.pdf (discussing significant evaluation differences with blind evaluation of White names and African-American names on writing samples).

368. See, e.g., John B. McConahay, Modern Racism, Ambivalence, and the Modern Racism Scale, in PREJUDICE, DISCRIMINATION, AND RACISM 91 (John Dovidio et al. eds., 1986); YO JACKSON, ENCYCLOPEDIA OF MULTICULTURAL PSYCHOLOGY 294 (2006) (discussing the Modern Racism Scale).

369. See David M. Amodio & Patricia G. Devine, On the Interpersonal Functions of Implicit Stereotyping and Evaluative Race Bias: Insights from Social Neuroscience, in ATTITUDES: INSIGHTS FROM THE NEW IMPLICIT MEASURES 193 (Richard E. Petty et al. eds., 2009); Adam R. Pearson et al., The Nature of Contemporary Racial Prejudice, 3 SOC. & PERSONALITY PSYCHOL. COMPASS 314, 324 (2009).

370. Willhem Hoffman et al., A Meta-Analysis on the Correlation Between the Implicit Association Test and Explicit Self-Report Measures, 31 PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. BULL. 1369, 1376 (2005); Brian A. Nosek et al., The Implicit Association Test at Age 7: A Methodological and Conceptual Review, in SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY AND THE UNCONSCIOUS: THE AUTOMATICITY OF HIGHER MENTAL PROCESSES 265 (John A. Bargh ed., 2007) [hereinafter IAT at Age 7].

Asking measured explicit bias. Over the past twenty years, we have developed new approaches that can measure bias without asking directly. Now rather than ask, we measure bias by measuring reaction time (response latency) to paired stimuli, such as matching the word male with the name Greg, or female with Emily, as compared to male with Emily. These are automatic associations,[371] and they exist in many domains. The underlying theory in the research is that we will respond more accurately and quickly to associations that fit with our pre-formed mental templates or schemas, female with Emily;[372] that is, we respond more quickly to acquired associations that are largely involuntary.[373]

These automatic associations or implicit biases can now be reliably tested at an unconscious level.[374] The Implicit Association Test (IAT)[375] is the leading social science measure of this type of unconscious response.[376] There is a wealth of literature, including meta-analyses, on the IAT generally and on its relationship to ex-

371. See, e.g., MAZARIN R. BANAJI & ANTHONY G. GREENWALD, BLINDSPOT: HIDDEN BIASES OF GOOD PEOPLE (2013).

372. PROJECT IMPLICIT, https://implicit.harvard.edu/implicit/ (last visited Nov. 5, 2016). There are other implicit association tests available online such as fat/thin, elderly/young, skin color. See About the IAT, PROJECT IMPLICIT, https://implicit.harvard.edu/implicit/iatdetails.html (last visited Nov. 5, 2016); Leslie Ashburn-Nardo, Presentation, The Implicit Association Test: Its Uses (and Potential Misuses) in Organizations, http://slideplayer.com/slide/4281514/ (last visited Nov. 5, 2016).

373. See, e.g., Anthony G. Greenwald & Linda Hamilton Krieger, Implicit Bias: Scientific Foundations, 94 CALIF. L. REV. 945, 948 (2006); Brian Nosek et al., Pervasiveness and Correlates of Implicit Attitudes and Stereotypes, 18 EUR. REV. SOC. PSYCHOL. 36, 45 (2007) [hereinafter Pervasiveness and Correlates].

374. See Anthony G. Greenwald et al., Understanding and Using the Implicit Association Test: III. Meta-Analysis of Predictive Validity, 97 J. PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. 17, 18–19 (2009); Pervasiveness and Correlates, supra note 373, at 36; STAATS, supra note 40, at 26 (summarizing review of reliability and validity).

375. See Anthony G. Greenwald et al., Measuring Individual Differences in Implicit Cognition: The Implicit Association Test, 74 J. PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. 1464, 1464 (1998); Anthony G. Greenwald, The Psychology of Blink: Understanding How Our Minds Work Unconsciously, Part 1 - 2008, YOUTUBE (Nov. 26, 2013), https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=wA01Viu-P4U; PROJECT IMPLICIT, supra note 372.

376. See generally STAATS, supra note 40, at 24–26 (providing an overview of the IAT approach).

plicit bias and its value as a predictor of the same.[377] While most researchers support the IAT as an accurate measure of implicit bias,[378] the research is not unanimous.[379] Nevertheless, as the use of the IAT has increased, there has been an explosion of research in both social and neuroscience arenas concerning implicit bias,[380]

---

377. See, e.g., Amodio & Devine, supra note 369, at 193; Anthony G. Greenwald, Mazarin R. Banaji & Brian A. Nosek, Statistically Small Effects of the Implicit Association Test Can Have Societally Large Effects, 108 J. PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. 553, 557 (2015); Greenwald et al., supra note 374, at 17; John T. Jost et al., The Existence of Implicit Bias Is Beyond Reasonable Doubt: A Refutation of Ideological and Methodological Objections and Executive Summary of Ten Studies that No Manager Should Ignore, 29 RES. ORGANIZATIONAL BEHAV. 39, 39 (2009); IAT at Age 7, supra note 370, at 265; Thomas F. Pettigrew & Linda R. Tropp, A Meta-Analytic Test of Intergroup Contact Theory, 90 J. PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. 751, 751 (2006). But see H. Anna Han et al., Malleability of Attitudes or Malleability of the IAT?, 46 J. EXPERIMENTAL SOC. PSYCHOL. 286, 298 (2010) (questioning influence of perspective on IAT results); Frederick L. Oswald et al., Predicting Ethnic and Racial Discrimination: A Meta-Analysis of IAT Criterion Studies, 105 J. PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. 171, 171 (2013) ("IATs were poor predictors of every criterion category other than brain activity, and the IATs performed no better than simple explicit measures."); Philip E. Tetlock & Gregory Mitchell, Implicit Bias and Accountability Systems: What Must Organizations Do to Prevent Discrimination?, 29 RES. ORGANIZATIONAL BEHAV. 3, 3 (2009) (questioning construct validity and reliability). See generally STAATS, supra note 40, at 24 (discussing the IAT approach).

378. See, e.g., Emily L. Fisher & Eugene Borgida, Intergroup Disparities and Implicit Bias: A Commentary, 68 J. SOC. ISSUES 385, 396 (2012) ("Taken together, the research included in this terrific special issue represents a strong body of evidence in support of the claim that implicit biases are contributing to an understanding of ongoing real-world disparities. As such, we believe that implicit bias research will continue to play a crucial role in understanding and hopefully reducing these aggregate-level disparities as they surface in employment, legal, and health care domains.").

379. See, e.g., id. at 393 (summarizing criticism and response to criticism and noting that "[r]egardless of any debate over IAT validity, the broader point that is often lost amidst the methodological and ideological cacophony is that considerable implicit bias research goes beyond the IAT and uses methods that have been regarded with less criticism. . . . [U]sing these types of techniques also finds that implicit bias predicts a variety of behavioral outcomes in intergroup domains"); Justine E. Tinkler, Controversies in Implicit Race Bias Research, 6 SOC. COMPASS 987, 987 (2012).

380. See Nancy Hopkins, Amgen, Inc. Professor of Biology at MIT, Baccalaureate Address at Boston University: Invisible Barriers and Social Change and the social science is increasingly confirmed by neuroscience research.[381] For example, functional magnetic resonance imaging (fMRI) (evidenced by the higher blood oxygenation level throughout the brain)[382] of the amygdala (the part of the brain identified as involved with emotional reactions) has found activation response to be predictive of race bias when measured indirectly by the IAT even if not shown when measured explicitly by (self-reported) responses to the Modern Racism Scale.[383]

IAT results can be surprising and disturbing, perhaps particularly so for those who consider themselves egalitarian but whose IAT results show the typical American preferences for European American as compared to African-American, the abled as compared to the disabled, and for women with families as com-

---

(May 18, 2014), http://www.bu.edu/news/2014/05/19/boston-universitys-141st-commencement-baccalaureate-address-nancy-hopkins/ (describing discovery of unconscious bias as one of greatest scientific discoveries of the past 50 years); Johanna Wald, Director of Strategic Planning, Charles Hamilton Houston Inst., Presentation at the Restorative Justice Conference: Implicit Racial Bias and the School-to-Prison Pipeline (Nov. 3, 2012) (using the explosion descriptor).

381. See Jennifer T. Kubota et al., The Neuroscience of Race, 15 NATURE NEUROSCIENCE 940, 944 (2012) (reviewing and cumulating the research finding "[a] network of interacting brain regions" including the Amygdala, dorsal anterior cingulate cortex (ACC), and fusiform gyrus, to be "important in the unintentional, implicit expression of racial attitudes and its control"); Lieberman, Reflective and Reflexive Judgment Processes, supra note 363, at 44; Damian Stanley et al., The Neural Basis of Implicit Attitudes, 17 CURRENT DIRECTIONS IN PSYCHOL. SCI. 164, 164–68 (2008) (summarizing the research to date on the function of the amygdala in relation to implicit automatic response); see also David M. Amodio et al., Individual Differences in the Activation and Control of Affective Race Bias as Assessed by the Startle-Eyeblink Responses and Self-Report, 84 J. PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. 738, 738 (2003).

382. See generally Owen D. Jones et al., Brain Imaging for Legal Thinkers: A Guide for the Perplexed, 2009 STAN. TECH. L. REV. 5, ¶¶ 16, 18, 27, 31 (2009) (describing fMRI); Brian A. Nosek, Implicit Social Cognition: From Measures to Mechanisms, 15 TRENDS COGNITIVE SCI. 152, 152 (2011) [hereinafter Measures to Mechanisms] (describing Age of Measurement and various techniques).

383. David M. Amodio, The Social Neuroscience of Prejudice: Then, Now, and What's to Come, in STEREOTYPING AND PREJUDICE 1 (Charles Stangor & Christian S. Crandall eds., 2013) (discussing amygdala/fear response in relation to overriding implicit bias); Elizabeth A. Phelps et al., Performance on Indirect Measures of Race Evaluation Predicts Amygdala Activation, 12 J. COGNITIVE NEUROSCIENCE 729, 729 (2000).

pared to women with careers.[384] Surprising or not, these results can be connected with real world response: "Notably, implicit attitudes show predicative validity; the magnitude of preference exhibited on the test predicts a host of discriminative behaviors, from nonverbal avoidance to evaluating an individual's work."[385]

1. Acknowledging that prior intervention has not proven sufficient

Decades of study and calls for action have not removed concerns about disproportionality along the educational pipeline and in juvenile justice. The Coleman Report in 1966 on educational opportunity,[386] the two National Research Council reports on special education in 1982 and 2002,[387] and the National Coalition of State Juvenile Justice Advisory Groups Report on the Delicate Balance to the President, the Congress, and the Administrator of the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention in 1989,[388] all identified the issue. These studies have been followed by study after study and call after call for action as disproportionality is identified and decried all along the school-to-prison pipeline.

---

384. See discussion infra notes 400–403 and accompanying text.

385. Kubota et al., supra note 381, at 942; see also Allen R. McConnell & Jill M. Liebold, Relations Among the Implicit Association Test, Discriminatory Behavior, and Explicit Measures of Attitudes, 37 J. EXPERIMENTAL SOC. PSYCHOL. 435, 440 (2001) ("[R]esearchers can be confident that attitudes assessed by the IAT do relate to intergroup behavior."); ANTHONY G. GREENWALD, IAT STUDIES SHOWING VALIDITY WITH "REAL-WORLD" SUBJECT POPULATIONS 5–6 (2012), http://faculty.washington.edu/agg/pdf/Real-world_samples.pdf; PROJECT IMPLICIT, supra note 372.

386. Equality of Educational Opportunity Study, supra note 96.

387. See NAT'L RESEARCH COUNCIL, PLACING CHILDREN IN SPECIAL EDUCATION: A STRATEGY FOR EQUITY ix–xii (Kirby A. Heller, Wayne H. Holtzman & Samuel Messick eds., 1982); NAT'L RESEARCH COUNCIL 2002, supra note 176, at 56; Lloyd M. Dunn, Special Education for the Mildly Retarded, Is Much of It Justifiable?, 35 EXCEPTIONAL CHILD. 5, 5 (1968); see also, e.g., CHILDREN'S DEF. FUND OF THE WASH. RESEARCH PROJECT, SCHOOL SUSPENSIONS: ARE THEY HELPING CHILDREN? 1 (1975), http://diglib.lib.utk.edu/cdf/data/0116_000050_000205/0116_000050_000205.pdf.

388. NAT'L COAL. OF STATE JUVENILE JUSTICE ADVISORY GRPS., A DELICATE BALANCE (1989), http://www.juvjustice.org/sites/default/files/resource-files/A%20Delicate%20Balance.compressed.pdf.

There have been legislative and regulatory responses. Discrimination on the basis of sex,[389] race,[390] or disability[391] is unlawful. Specific Congressional mandates define and address disproportionality concerns. IDEA[392] and the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act[393] specifically require monitoring and reporting on this very point; and NCLB's mandate on disaggregated data serves a similar purpose.[394] Although the nation stands publicly committed to equality and equity in educational opportunity

---

389. See Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, 20 U.S.C.S. §§ 1681–88 (LexisNexis 2013) (prohibiting discrimination on the basis of sex under education programs or activities receiving Federal financial assistance); U.S. DEP'T OF JUSTICE, TITLE IX LEGAL MANUAL 5–6 (2001), https://www.justice.gov/sites/default/files/crt/legacy/2010/12/14/ixlegal.pdf.

390. Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C.S. §§ 2000d–2000d-7 (LexisNexis 2013) (prohibiting discrimination on the basis of race, color, or national origin under any programs or activities receiving Federal financial assistance); see also 28 C.F.R. § 50.3 (2014); 34 C.F.R. §§ 100.1–13 (2014). See generally U.S. DEP'T OF JUSTICE, TITLE VI LEGAL MANUAL 1–2 (2001), https://www.justice.gov/sites/default/files/crt/legacy/2011/06/23/vimanual.pdf (describing relationship among the antidiscrimination provisions).

391. Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, 29 U.S.C.S. § 794 (LexisNexis 2013) (prohibiting discrimination against any "otherwise qualified individual with a disability" under Federal grants and programs); Title II of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990, 42 U.S.C.S. §§ 12131–12134 (LexisNexis 2013) (prohibiting discrimination on the basis of disability by public entities); see also 28 C.F.R. §§ 35.101, 39.101 (2014); 34 C.F.R. Part 104.1-61 (2014).

392. 20 U.S.C.S. § 1412(24) (LexisNexis 2014); 20 U.S.C.S. § 1416(a)(3)(C) (LexisNexis 2014); 20 U.S.C.S § 1418(d) (LexisNexis 2014). "The State [must have] in effect, consistent with the purposes of this title . . . policies and procedures designed to prevent the inappropriate overidentification or disproportionate representation by race and ethnicity of children as children with disabilities, including children with disabilities with a particular impairment . . . ." 20 U.S.C.S. § 1412(24).

393. 42 U.S.C.S. § 5633(a)(22) (LexisNexis 2014) (requiring state plans to "address juvenile delinquency prevention efforts and system improvement efforts designed to reduce, without establishing or requiring numerical standards or quotas, the disproportionate number of juvenile members of minority groups, who come into contact with the juvenile justice system").

394. See 20 U.S.C.S. § 6301 (LexisNexis 2014).

and juvenile justice,[395] such government interventions, including related regulatory enforcement, have yielded change, but these approaches remain limited, costly, and, in some cases, controversial.[396]

Similarly, the extensive work of many public interest groups has proved extremely valuable. Still, that the data and research continues to show sustained and substantial inequality suggests that past explanations are inadequate and approaches insufficient.[397] A quick internet search on school improvement strategies to close the seemingly intransigent achievement gap[398] easily yields well over four million results including entries from leaders such as the NEA, the NAACP, and other organizations committed deeply and historically to these efforts.[399] A similar search for var-

395. See generally KIM ET AL., supra note 94, at 34–50 (providing an overview of unlawful discrimination); SAMUEL WALKER ET AL., THE COLOR OF JUSTICE: RACE, ETHNICITY, AND CRIME IN AMERICA 26–29 (5th ed. 2011) (discussing continuum disparity to discrimination); Arne Duncan, Secretary, U.S. Dep't of Educ., Remarks on the 45th Anniversary of "Bloody Sunday" at the Edmund Pettus Bridge, Selma, Alabama (Mar. 8, 2010), http://www2.ed.gov/news/speeches/2010/03/03082010.html.

396. See DEAR COLLEAGUE LETTER, supra note 4; Comm. on Educ. and the Workforce, U.S. House of Representatives, Letter to Arne Duncan, Secretary, U.S. Dep't of Educ. & Eric Holder, Attorney Gen., U.S. Dep't of Justice (Feb. 12, 2014) (on file with author) (criticizing the Department's Dear Colleague Letter and preferring local interventions).

397. See Elizabeth N. Jones, Disproportionate Representation of Minority Youth in the Juvenile Justice System: A Lack of Clarity and Too Much Disparity among States "Addressing" the Issue, 16 U.C. DAVIS J. JUV. L. & POL'Y 155, 159 (2012) ("Interestingly, of the four 'core' areas of JJDPA concern, it is this section – the only one implicating race as a concerning factor – that has not produced results of consequence."); see also REFORMING JUVENILE JUSTICE, supra note 86, at 130, 205 (emphasizing the importance of fairness and perceived fairness).

398. See, e.g., Student Achievement in California: Statement on 2013 STAR Data, EDUC. TRUST—WEST (Aug. 8, 2013), https://west.edtrust.org/press_release/student-achievement-in-california-ed-trust-west-statement-on-2013-star-data-2/ (finding no change in California scores).

399. Indeed, each of us knows of at least one school that beat the odds, one student who became a poster child for beating the odds; one program that can show results in terms of student success. The search also reveals an interesting trend toward programs that are focused not only on closing the achievement gap (academic) but also on closing cultural gaps.

ious aspects of the school-to-prison pipeline garners similar results. Reviewing the scope and history of these seemingly intransigent differences—setting after setting, decision after decision, outcome after outcome—is important background for offering a new approach to answer the question why change remains so slow?[400]

2. Summary of implicit bias research and its implications for the school-to-prison pipeline

The following summary of concepts of implicit bias research suggests how an understanding of implicit bias and its implications might offer a new approach for understanding and decreasing disproportionality in education and juvenile justice decisions:

- Implicit biases are measurable by social psychology and neuroimaging.[401]
- Implicit biases are "pervasive."[402]
- Implicit biases are different from what we self-report.[403]
- IAT results show high levels of implicit bias against the disabled *(78% of the sample show a pro-abled implicit preference, 9% pro-disabled)*.[404]
- IAT results show that women are more strongly associated with family and men more strongly with careers (75% of the

400. VIRGINIA VALIAN, WHY SO SLOW?: THE ADVANCEMENT OF WOMEN xi–xii (1999) (asking this very question and discussing women in academia but equally applicable to other settings).

401. See discussion supra notes 377, 381, and 383 and accompanying text.

402. PROJECT IMPLICIT, supra note 372.

403. See discussion supra note 370 and accompanying text.

404. PROJECT IMPLICIT, https://implicit.harvard.edu/implicit/takeatest.html (click "I wish to proceed"; click "Disability IAT"; then proceed with test to see statistics) (last visited Nov. 5, 2016) (testing available that shows one's implicit biases against the disabled relative to others, with the statistics cited). While research concerning implicit bias in favor of the abled and against the disabled is less developed than the research on race, this is one of the strongest and widely held of biases. See Pervasiveness and Correlates, supra note 373, at 36; see also Mark E. Archambault et al., Utilizing Implicit Association Testing to Promote Awareness of Biases Regarding Age and Disability, 19 J. PHYSICIAN ASSISTANT EDUC. 20, 20–23 (2008) (discussing health care providers and suggesting a link between implicit bias and clinical decision making including IAT results for medical students biased toward abled).

sample show women-family preference, 9% women career preference).[405]

- IAT results shows that women are more strongly associated with liberal arts, and men more strongly with science (70% show men-science preference, 11%, a women-science preference).[406]
- IAT results show high levels of implicit bias against African-Americans (68% of the sample show a pro-White implicit preference, 14% pro-African-American).[407]

---

405. PROJECT IMPLICIT, https://implicit.harvard.edu/implicit/takeatest.html (click "I wish to proceed"; click "Gender-Career IAT"; then proceed with test to see statistics) (last visited Nov. 5, 2016) (testing available that shows one's implicit biases on gender relative to others, with the statistics cited).

406. PROJECT IMPLICIT, https://implicit.harvard.edu/implicit/takeatest.html (click "I wish to proceed"; click "Gender-Science IAT"; then proceed with test to see statistics) (last visited Nov. 5, 2016) (testing available that shows one's implicit biases on gender relative to others, with the statistics cited). And these associations have impact on women's career pathways. See JOANN MOODY, RISING ABOVE COGNITIVE ERRORS: IMPROVING SEARCHES, EVALUATIONS, AND DECISION-MAKING (2010), http://huadvanceit.howard.edu/wp-content/uploads/2015/01/Moody-Article.pdf [http://web.archive.org/web/20150910050012/http:/huadvanceit.howard.edu/wp-content/uploads/2015/01/Moody-Article.pdf]; Sarah Redfield, Professor, Univ. of N.H., Presentation at UNH New Faculty Seminar: What You Don't Know Does(n't) Hurt You? (Feb. 2013); Lyneka Little, Women Studying Science Face Gender Bias, Study Finds, ABC NEWS (Sep 27, 2012), http://abcnews.go.com/blogs/business/2012/09/women-studying-science-face-gender-bias-study-finds/.

407. PROJECT IMPLICIT, https://implicit.harvard.edu/implicit/takeatest.html (click "I wish to proceed"; click "Race IAT"; then proceed with test to see statistics) (last visited Nov. 5, 2016) (testing available that shows one's implicit biases on gender relative to others, with the statistics cited). The remaining percent score shows preference in neither direction. The bias is more dominant in White test takers, but some Blacks also show pro-White results, though in a more nuanced way. Project Implicit reports that:

> Data collected from this website consistently reveal approximately even numbers of Black respondents showing a pro-White bias as show a pro-Black bias. Part of this might be understood as Black respondents experiencing the similar negative associations about their group from experience in their cultural environments, and also experiencing competing positive associations about their group based on their own group membership and that of close relations.

FAQs, PROJECT IMPLICIT, https://implicit.harvard.edu/implicit/demo/

- Implicit biases are sensitive to being primed.[408]
- Implicit biases may "become activated automatically, without a person's awareness or intention, and can meaningfully influence people's evaluations and judgments."[409]
- Implicit biases are often dissociated from what a person actively and honestly believes or endorses.[410]
- But are not necessarily dissociated from—indeed often predictive of—explicit action or decisions.[411]
- Implicit bias may cause some youth to seem more threatening than others.[412]
- Implicit biases are more prevalent in ambiguous situations.[413]
- Implicit biases can cause anxiety.[414]

---

background/faqs.html#faq19 (last visited Nov. 5, 2016); see also Elizabeth A. Phelps, Julius Silver Professor of Psychology and Neural Science, N.Y. Univ., Presentation at the Macarthur Neuroscience and the Law Conference: Race Bias, Decisions, and the Brain (Apr. 27, 2013).

408. See Laurie A. Rudman, Sources of Implicit Attitudes, 13 CURRENT DIRECTIONS PSYCHOL. SCI. 79 (2004); see also Danielle M. Young et al., Innocent until Primed: Mock Jurors' Racially Biased Response to the Presumption of Innocence, PLOS ONE (Mar. 18, 2014), http://www.plosone.org/article/info%3Adoi%2F10.1371%2Fjournal.pone.0092365. To better understand the concept of "priming," see KANEMAN, supra note 363, at 52–58.

409. See generally MASON D. BURNS ET AL., SELF-REGULATION STRATEGIES FOR COMBATTING PREJUDICE 3 (2016) (on file with author).

410. See discussion supra note 364 and accompanying text.

411. See, e.g., Measures to Mechanisms, supra note 382, at 152.

412. Joshua Correll et al., The Police Officer's Dilemma: Using Ethnicity to Disambiguate Potentially Threatening Individuals, 83 J. PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. 1314, 1314 (2002) ("[M]ildly aggressive behavior [may be seen as more threatening] when it is performed by an African-American than when it is performed by a White person."). See generally Jennifer L. Eberhardt et al., Seeing Black: Race, Crime, and Visual Processing, 87 J. PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. 876, 876 (2004) (describing the existence of an African-American/criminal stereotype as well-documented).

413. Kurt Hugenberg & Galen V. Bodenhausen, Facing Prejudice: Implicit Prejudice and the Perception of Facial Threat, 14 PSYCHOL. SCI. 640, 640 (2003) (showing White observers are quicker to observe anger in ambiguously hostile African-American faces than in White); see also Kurt Hugenberg & Galen V. Bodenhausen, Ambiguity in Social Categorization: The Role of Prejudice and Facial Affect in Race Categorization, 15 PSYCHOL. SCI. 342 (2004) (finding that hostility influences categorization of racially ambiguous faces).

414. Jacoby-Senghor et al., supra note 31, at 53.

- Implicit biases can cause misremembering.[415]

These errors are related not to consciously racist attitudes or preferences but to participants "systematically and implicitly mak[ing] stereotype-driven memory errors." (Levinson, Forgotten Racial Equality)

- Implicit bias reduces student academic performance.[416]
- Implicit bias is at play in discretionary situations and influences disciplinary and other youth related decisions.[417]

3. Summary of group dynamics research and its implications for the school-to-prison pipeline

415. See Birt L. Duncan, Differential Social Perception and Attribution of Intergroup Violence: Testing the Lower Limits of Stereotyping of Blacks, 34 J. PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. 590, 596–97 (1976) (describing research involving viewing a video of an ambiguous shove where White observers were much quicker to call the shove violent where performed by a Black than by a White); Justin D. Levinson, Forgotten Racial Equality: Implicit Bias, Decisionmaking, and Misremembering, 57 DUKE L.J. 345, 394, 399–401 (2007) (finding that when participants read two short stories, with some participants assigned to the story with the protagonist with a typically African-American name, Tyronne, some to stories with a typically Hawaiian name, Kawika, and some to stories with typically White name, William, they recalled facts from the stories such that Tyronne and Kawika were more aggressive with fewer mitigating factors than William); see also Charles Ogletree et al., Criminal Law: Coloring Punishment: Implicit Social Cognition and Criminal Justice, in IMPLICIT RACIAL BIAS ACROSS THE LAW 45 (Justin D. Levinson & Robert J. Smith eds., 2012).

416. See discussion infra notes 441–466 and accompanying text.

417. See discussion supra notes 28–35, 362 and accompanying text.

"[M]ere classification of people into social groups allows people to understand others with regard to one or a few main characteristics, such as their age, gender, social role, physical appearance, or relation to the self. One should not confuse the process of categorization, which facilitates the ability to think clearly, with the "cultural baggage" associated with these categories." (Eberhardt, Confronting Racism)

The findings on implicit bias are augmented by a second area of social science research, which considers group dynamics. We all are part of cultural groups, and cultural groups are one of the major categorization mechanisms that all humans use to process information.[418] Traits that define cultural groups include race, ethnicity, religion, gender, sexual orientation, national origin, family, or professional status.[419]

The following summary of concepts of group-oriented research suggests how an understanding of group dynamics and in-group preference might offer a new approach for understanding and decreasing disproportionality in special education and other education and juvenile justice decisions:

- Categorization of and preference for people based on group identity is a normal, fundamental process of the human brain.[420]
- Culture and cultural groups link to decision-making.[421]

---

418. See ABA CRIMINAL JUSTICE SECTION, BUILDING COMMUNITY TRUST IMPROVING CROSS-CULTURAL COMMUNICATION IN THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE SYSTEM 12–25 (2010), http://www.americanbar.org/content/dam/aba/migrated/sections/criminaljustice/PublicDocuments/bctext.authcheckdam.pdf.

419. Culture is also described as shared meanings and shared language or representational communications. See id.

420. Galen V. Bodenhausen et al., Social Categorization and the Perception of Social Groups, in SAGE HANDBOOK OF SOCIAL COGNITION 311 (Susan T. Fiske & C. Neil Macrae eds., 2012).

421. Merlin Donald, How Culture and Brain Mechanisms Interact in Decision Making, in BETTER THAN CONSCIOUS? DECISION MAKING, THE HUMAN MIND, AND IMPLICATIONS FOR INSTITUTIONS 191, 191 (Christoph Engel & Wolf Singer eds., 2008) ("The human brain does not acquire language, symbolic skills, or any form of symbolic cognition without the pedagogical guidance of

- Our automatic group identification is significant.[422]
- We make connections when someone appears or is labeled a certain way.[423]
- We tend to prefer our own, no matter how we define our own.[424]
- Our response is influenced by our self-concept, which transfers to others like ourselves. Without conscious attention, we start with this assumption: If I am good and I am White, then White is good[425] . . . and you are White, then you are also good.[426] culture and, as a result, most decisions made in modern society engage learned algorithms of thought that are imported from culture.").

---

422. See Anthony G. Greenwald & Thomas F. Pettigrew, With Malice Toward None and Charity for Some: Ingroup Favoritism Enables Discrimination, 69 AM. PSYCHOLOGIST 669 (2014); Pettigrew & Tropp, supra note 377, at 751.

423. See HATTIE, supra note 29, at 291; Nayeli Y. Chavez-Dueña et al., Skin-Color Prejudice and Within-Group Racial Discrimination: Historical and Current Impact on Latino/a Populations, 36 HISP. J. BEHAV. SCI. 3 (2014); Thierry Devos & Mahzarin Banaji, American = White?, 88 J. PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. 447 (2005); Charles W. Perdue et al., Us and Them: Social Categorization and the Process of Intergroup Bias, 59 J. PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. 475, 478–79, 482–84 (1990).

424. Henri Tajfel, Experiments in Intergroup Discrimination, SCI. AM., Nov. 1970, at 96 (showing that group loyalty occurs even if factors that put you in a group are random and arbitrary, that is, the very act of categorization may be enough to create an in-group preference).

425. See Bertram Gawronski et al., I Like It, Because I Like Myself: Associative Self-Anchoring and Post-Decisional Change of Implicit Attitudes, 43 J. EXPERIMENTAL SOC. PSYCHOL. 221 (2007); Laurie A. Rudman, Social Justice in Our Minds, Homes, and Society: The Nature, Causes, and Consequences of Implicit Bias, 17 SOC. JUSTICE RES. 129, 137 (2004).

426. It is not always thus. See, e.g., Brown v. Bd. of Educ., 347 U.S. 483, 495 n.11 (1954) (referencing Dr. K. B. Clark's work studying the response of African-American children to White dolls about which he testified, > [t]he conclusion which I was forced to reach was that these children in Clarendon County, like other human beings who are subjected to an obviously inferior status in the society in which they live, have been definitely harmed in the development of their personalities; that the signs of instability in their personalities are clear, and I think that every psychologist would accept and interpret these signs as such.

RICHARD KLUEGER, SIMPLE JUSTICE (1976)); Gordon J. Beggs, Novel Expert Evidence in Federal Civil Rights Litigation, 45 AM. U. L. REV. 1 (1995) (dis-

- In-group members (however defined) enjoy a presumptive advantage as to expectations and response.[427]
- Differences between groups are exaggerated and those in the out-group are viewed as worse, not as competent or warm as the in-group, more threatening.[428]
- The attitudes of one's group influence an individual group member's attitudes.[429] For example, if our fellow teachers have an association regarding certain groups of students, then we will likely follow suit.
- Group identification, or mismatch,[430] can impact a wide range of behaviors and decisions—placement, class participation, encussing social science evidence of African-American children's preference for White dolls); see also Emily Falk & Matthew B. Lieberman, The Neural Bases of Attitudes, Evaluation, and Behavior Change, in THE NEURAL BASIS OF HUMAN BELIEF SYSTEMS 71 (Frank Krueger & Jordan Grafman eds., 2013).

---

427. See Nilanjana Dasgupta, Implicit Ingroup Favoritism, Outgroup Favoritism, and Their Behavioral Manifestations, 17 SOC. JUST. RES. 143 (2004); Charles W. Perdue et al., supra note 423, at 478–79, 482–84 (explaining that we view in-group members as more competent, cooperative, confident, independent, intelligent, warmer, more affirming, tolerant, good-natured, sincere, and more concerned with group goals); Pettigrew & Tropp, supra note 377, at 751; see also Croft & Schmader, supra note 32, at 1143 (suggesting that differing in-category standards may result in higher grades from the out-group).

428. See Bodenhausen et al., supra note 420, at 317; Bernadette Park & Myron Rothbart, Perception of Out-Group Homogeneity and Levels of Social Categorization: Memory for the Subordinate Attributes of In-Group and Out-Group Members, 42 J. PERSONALITY AND SOC. PSYCHOL. 1051 (1982); see also Yael Granot et al., Justice Is Not Blind: Visual Attention Exaggerates Effects of Group Identification on Legal Punishment, 143 J. EXPERIMENTAL PSYCHOL. 2196 (2014).

429. See, e.g., IAT at Age 7, supra note 370, at 265.

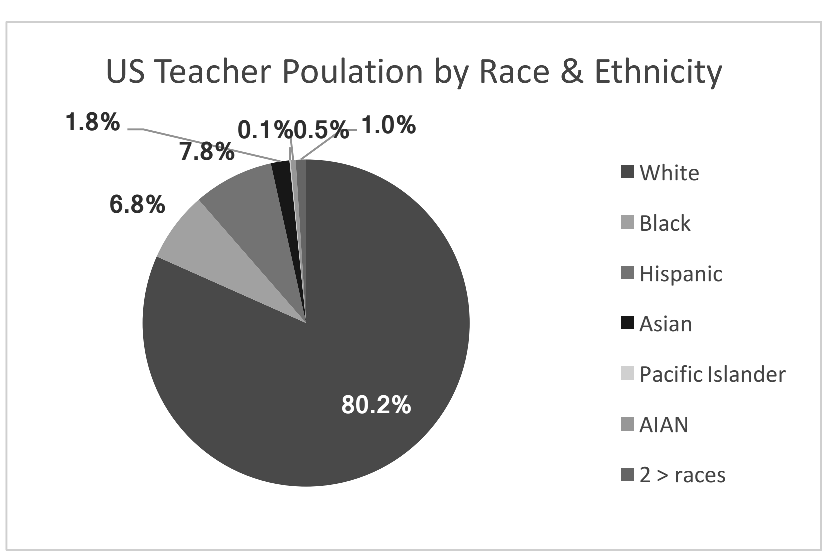
430. Compare Littisha A. Bates & Jennifer E. Glick, Does It Matter If Teachers and Schools Match the Student? Racial and Ethnic Disparities in Problem Behaviors, 42 SOC. SCI. RES. 1180, 1182, 1187 (2013) (answering in the affirmative whether "teacher-student racial/ethnic matches result in evaluations of student behaviors that are different from instances in which children are taught and assessed by a teacher from outside their racial or ethnic group"), with Geert Driessen, Teacher Ethnicity, Student Ethnicity, and Student Outcomes, 26 INTERCULTURAL EDUC. 179, 188 (2015) ("The conclusion seems justified that there is as yet little unambiguous empirical evidence that a stronger degree of ethnic match be it in the form of a one-to-one coupling of teachers to students with the same ethnic background, or a larger share of minority teachers at an ethnically mixed school, leads to predominantly positive results. Insofar favoragagement, evaluation, referral for special education, discipline, and on along the pipeline.[431]

- There is particular significance in school and juvenile justice settings where the teaching and administrative force remains largely White and the population increasingly of color.[432]

Figure 35. U.S. Teacher Population by Race & Ethnicity[433]



ble effects were found, they apply to a greater extent to subjective teacher evaluations than to objective achievement outcome measures.").

431. See generally, e.g., WRITTEN IN BLACK & WHITE, supra note 367 (showing implicit bias in evaluation of law associate writing); Chris C. Goodman & Sarah E. Redfield, A Teacher Who Looks Like Me, 27 J. C.R. & ECON. DEV. 105 (2013) (discussing issues where teaching force differs from student body); Sarah E. Redfield & Theresa Kraft, What Color is Special Education, 41 J. L. & EDUC. 129 (2012).

432. See Bates & Glick, supra note 430, at 1188; Charles W. Perdue et al., supra note 423, at 478–79, 482–84; see also WILLIAM PETERS, A CLASS DIVIDED: THEN AND NOW (1987).

433. NAT'L CTR. FOR EDUC. STATISTICS, supra note 95, at 134 tbl.209.10.

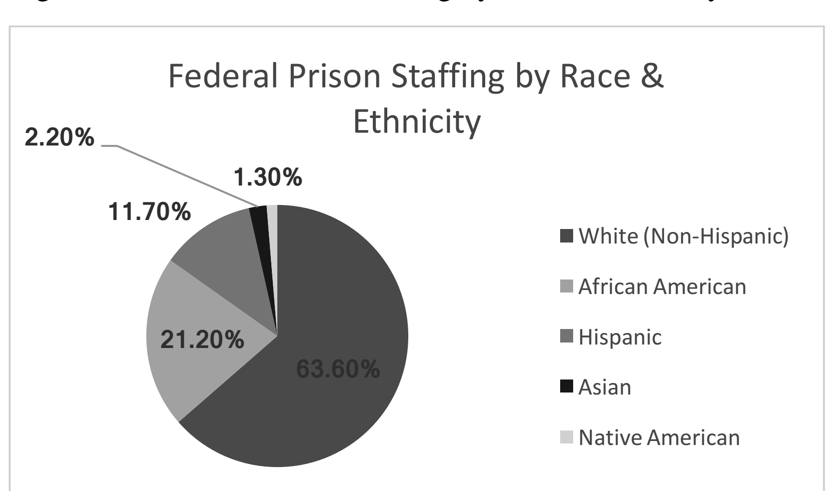
Figure 36. Federal Prison Staffing by Race & Ethnicity[434]



4. Summary of micromessaging research and its implications for the school-to-prison pipeline

Group dynamics are reinforced then again by what we know about micromessaging. Like implicit bias and group dynamics, micromessages can involve implicit unconscious communications and results.[435] The following summary of micromessaging suggests how an understanding of these concepts might offer a new approach for understanding and decreasing disproportionality:

- Micromessages can be either affirming (conveying inclusion and respect, for example having your class contribution meaningfully acknowledged) or negative (conveying disrespect, for example being ignored when you volunteer an answer in class).[436]

434. Staff Ethnicity/Race, FED. BUREAU OF PRISONS (Aug. 27, 2016), http://www.bop.gov/about/statistics/statistics_staff_ethnicity_race.jsp.

435. They may also be explicitly racist. See, e.g., Julio Cammarota, Misspoken in Arizona: Latina/o Students Document the Articulations of Racism, 47 EQUITY & EXCELLENCE EDUC. 321, 324 (citing as examples of explicit addressing an "African American young male by calling him 'boy,' or telling a student that he or she derives from a racial background in which 'intelligence' is an uncommon trait.").

- If you are in my in-group, you are more likely to be the recipient of micro-affirmations than microinequities.[437]
- Once received, positive or negative, micromessages accumulate and influence behavior.[438]
- These messages can have power for the recipient and others. For example, when a person with higher status acknowledges someone, that acknowledgement influences others to also think better of the acknowledged person; the reverse is also true.[439]
- Micromessages can influence learning dynamics and interactions of youth with teachers and juvenile justice personnel.[440]

5. Putting Implicit together to understand the pipeline

Implicit bias, group dynamics, and micromessaging have obvious implications for teachers and others who deal with young people and the messages they send day in and day out, and for the students who receive them, also day in and day out. For example, consider a teacher who decides that a student's name is too hard to learn to pronounce so calls that student "Frank" (which is the

---

436. See, e.g., STEPHEN YOUNG, MICROMESSAGING: WHY GREAT LEADERSHIP IS BEYOND WORDS (2007); Dávila, supra note 27, at 458 (describing "disregard" as a microaggression).

437. See MOODY, supra note 406; Mary Rowe, Micro-affirmations & Micro-inequities, 1 J. INT'L OMBUDSMAN ASS'N 45 (2008); Mary Rowe, The Saturn's Rings Phenomenon, 50 HARV. MED. ALUMNI BULL. 14 (1975).

438. See Jennifer Wang, Janxin Leu & Yuichi Shoda, When the Seemingly Innocuous "Stings": Racial Microaggressions and Their Emotional Consequences, 37 PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. BULL. 1666, 1666 (2011) (conflating microaggression and race bias); Caroline E. Simpson, Professor at Fla. Int'l Univ., Presentation Entitled: Accumulation of Advantage and Disadvantage or Nibbled to Death by Ducks (June 1, 2010), http://www.aas.org/cswa/MAY10/Simpson_UncBias.pdf; Alexandra Svokos, College Campuses Are Full of Subtle Racism and Sexism, Study Says, HUFFINGTON POST (Jan. 12, 2015, 5:22 PM), http://www.huffingtonpost.com/2015/01/12/microaggressions-college-racism-sexism_n_6457106.html ("[D]iscrimination, often manifested in what are called 'microaggressions,' creates unwelcoming environments and can be detrimental to academic performance . . . .").

439. VALIAN, supra note 400, at 4.

440. See discussion infra starting at note 442.

teacher's name) to the amusement of the rest of the class.[441] Or a teacher who only calls on certain students, or only continues a dialogue with certain students, and disregards others—sending a message both to those students who are engaged and to the rest of the class.[442]

When implicit bias and its correlates in group dynamics and messaging are read together with what we know about the delivery of public education and juvenile justice overall, the ramifications are obvious.[443] The teaching force, which is at least 83.5% White and 56% female (in Special Education, 83.9% White and 72.5% female),[444] will most likely share the implicit biases shown by other Americans for White, abled, and women-and-families.

There is evidence[445] that these perceptions—again, albeit unintentional—will directly influence student outcomes,[446] particu-

---

441. Rita Kohlia & Daniel G. Solórzano, Teachers, Please Learn Our Names!: Racial Microaggressions and the K-12 Classroom, 15 RACE ETHNICITY & EDUC. 441, 451 (2012).

442. See, e.g., STACY A. HARWOOD ET AL., RACIAL MICROAGGRESSIONS AT THE UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT URBANA-CHAMPAIGN: VOICES OF STUDENTS OF COLOR IN THE CLASSROOM 1 (2015), http://www.racialmicroaggressions.illinois.edu/files/2015/03/RMA-Classroom-Report.pdf ("Over half of participants (51 percent) reported experiences of stereotyping in the classroom. About a third (27 percent) of the students of color reported feeling that their contributions in different learning contexts were minimized and that they were made to feel inferior because of the way they spoke. Additionally, a quarter (25 percent) of students of color reported feeling that they were not taken seriously in class because of their race."); Dávila, supra note 27, at 455 (describing low expectations as a form of microaggression); Goodman & Redfield, supra note 431, at 133–34 (discussing cumulative messaging).

443. See Chris C. Goodman, Retaining Diversity in the Classroom: Strategies for Maximizing the Benefits that Flow from a Diverse Student Body, 35 PEPP. L. REV. 663 (2008). See generally discussion supra notes 431–443 and accompanying text.

444. Snyder & Dillow, supra note 104, at 117 tbl.75.

445. See HARRY & KLINGNER, supra note 170, at 75–81; Skiba et al., supra note 170, at 264; Alvin Y. So, Hispanic Teachers and the Labeling of Hispanic Students, 71 HIGH SCH. J. 5, 7 (1987) (reviewing the High School and Beyond Study, U.S. Dep't of Educ. National Education Longitudinal Studies (NELS), and identifying both a differential attitude and differential treatment of Hispanic students by Anglo compared to Hispanic teachers).

446. See, e.g., MARCOS PIZZARO, CHICANAS AND CHICANOS IN SCHOOL RACIAL PROFILING, IDENTITY BATTLES, AND EMPOWERMENT 240 (2005) ("Just

larly so for students of color and students with disabilities.[447] For example, Russell Skiba and his colleagues have found that "when the teacher thought the child was either black or Hispanic, he or she more often judged special education placement as appropriate compared with when the teacher believed the child was white."[448] Beth Harry and her colleagues found similarly that negative beliefs about African-American families are pervasive among educators and influenced special education evaluation in harmful ways.[449] A recent study by Drew Jacoby-Senghora, Stacey Sinclair, and Nicole Shelton demonstrated that increased anxiety and reduced student learning in White instructor/Black student situations are such that "instructors' implicit bias affects their lessons and their students' subsequent performance irrespective of instructors' explicit prejudice."[450] Another study by Linda van den Bergh and her colleagues in the Netherlands documents these very concerns and confirms, in an education setting, the significance of comparisons of implicit and explicit measures of bias.[451] This study of teachers and elementary students found that differential teacher expectations were related to the size of the ethnic achievement gap and to teachers' implicit prejudice, as measured on an IAT. Teachers showing greater biases "appeared more predisposed to evaluate their ethnic minority students as being less intelligent and having less promising prospects for their school careers."[452]

The teacher and societal perceptions highlighted by Jacoby-Senghor, van den Bergh, and others also have an indirect negative impact as a foundation for stereotypes turned inward as stereotype as the police often use racial profiles to determine who are potential criminals and who do not need to be pulled over, teachers use racial profiles to determine who will and who will not excel in school.").

---

447. LOSEN & GILLESPIE, supra note 12, at 35. See generally Jeffrey Stone & Gordon B. Moskowitz, Non-Conscious Bias in Medical Decision Making: What Can Be Done to Reduce It?, 45 MED. EDUC. 768 (describing underlying biased attitudes "leaking" to patients); STAATS, supra note 40, at 30–32 (reviewing and summarizing the relevant literature).

448. Skiba et al., supra note 170, at 264.

449. HARRY & KLINGER, supra note 170, at 75–81.

450. Jacoby-Senghor et al., supra note 31, at 53.

451. See van den Bergh et al., supra note 40, at 518.

452. Id.

threats.[453] Students know how they are perceived and labeled.[454] Young people perceive the unfairness inherent in these labels;[455] they understand the societal perceptions that create them and turn them inward in what is described as stereotype threat (or stereotype consciousness), a threat which can further negatively impact student performance.[456] A phenomenon first identified by psychologist Claude Steele and now well documented across a wide variety of groups,[457] stereotype threat describes the anxiety students expe-

---

453. See, e.g., Jacoby-Senghor et al., supra note 31, at 54 ("When anxiety and poorer lesson quality associated with instructors' implicit bias cause black students to perform worse, their relatively poor performance may trigger identity threats and belonging concerns that further diminish performance.").

454. See Michelle Fine et al., Civics Lessons: The Color and Class of Betrayal, 106 TCHRS. C. REC. 2193, 2204–05 (2004) (finding that students believed that their teachers considered them to be "animals," "inmates," or "killers"); Paul J. Hirschfield, supra note 115, at 92 ("Owing to a dominant image of black males as criminals and prisoners, many school authorities view chronically disobedient black boys as 'bound for jail' and 'unsalvageable.'"); Noguera, supra note 312, at 448 fig.1 (observing that African-American students were less inclined than White students to believe that their teachers were concerned about and supported them); see also EDUC. ALLIANCE, STUDENT VOICE: WEST VIRGINIA STUDENTS SPEAK OUT ABOUT THE ACHIEVEMENT GAP 62 (2004); EDUC. ALLIANCE, THROUGH DIFFERENT LENSES: WEST VIRGINIA SCHOOL STAFF AND STUDENTS REACT TO SCHOOL CLIMATE 39 (2006), http://www.academia.edu/290024/Through_Different_Lenses_West_Virginia_School_Staff_and_Students_React_to_School_Climate.

455. See discussion supra note 37 and accompanying text; see also Gregory et al., supra note 56, at 59; Sherry Marx, Not Blending In: Latino Students in a Predominantly White School, 30 HISP. J. BEHAV. SCI. 69, 69 (2008).

456. See CLAUDE M. STEELE, WHISTLING VIVALDI AND OTHER CLUES TO HOW STEREOTYPES AFFECT US (2010); Clark McKown & Rhona S. Weinstein, The Development and Consequences of Stereotype Consciousness in Middle Childhood, 74 CHILD DEV. 498, 498 (2003); PIZZARO, supra note 446; Barbara Schneider et al., Barriers to Educational Opportunities for Hispanics in the United States, in HISPANICS AND THE FUTURE OF AMERICA 188–89 (Marta. Tienda & Faith Mitchell eds., 2006); Claude M. Steele, A Threat in the Air: How Stereotypes Shape Intellectual Identity and Performance, 52 AM. PSYCHOLOGIST 613, 614 (1997); Claude M. Steele, Stereotyping and Its Threat Are Real, 53 AM. PSYCHOLOGIST 680, 680–81 (1998).

457. See, e.g., STEELE, supra note 456; Matt McGlone, Stereotype Threat (Oct. 14, 2008), https://itunes.apple.com/us/podcast/stereotype-threat-by-matt/id295430869 (summarizing research).

rience because of societal stereotypes (girls aren't good at math),[458] even where students do not believe the stereotype.[459] Girls' performance lessens as they worry about confirming the stereotypes about their group: I am a girl, girls are not expected to be good at math, and this is a difficult math test.[460] Like other aspects of disengagement, stereotype threat demonstrably lowers student achievement,[461] and may reduce student interest in a particular domain of study.[462] While research specifically on this point for special education remains to be developed, one can readily imagine the impact of race/ethnicity connections with the label of seriously emotionally disturbed or intellectually disabled.

De-biasing is possible and necessary; new training, debiasing tools, and system monitoring is called for.[463] Research continues to mount as to effective approaches to interrupt and suppress 458. See Laurel School's Center for Research on Girls, LAUREL SCHOOL, https://www.laurelschool.org/page.cfm?p=625&LockSSL=true, (last visited Jan. 11, 2016).

---

459. See, e.g., id.; McGlone, supra note 457.

460. See What is Stereotype Threat?, REDUCINGSTEREOTYPETHREAT.ORG, http://www.reducingstereotypethreat.org/definition.html (last visited Nov. 7, 2016).

461. See Nancy H. Murri et al., Reducing Disproportionate Minority Representation in Special Education Programs for Students With Emotional Disturbances: Toward a Culturally Responsive Response To Intervention Model, 29 EDUC. & TREATMENT CHILD. 779 (2006); Claude M. Steele & Joshua Aronson, Stereotype Threat and the Intellectual Test Performance of African Americans, 69 J. PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. 797, 808 (1995).

462. FREDERICK L. SMYTH ET AL., IMPLICIT GENDER-SCIENCE STEREOTYPE OUTPERFORMS MATH SCHOLASTIC APTITUDE IN IDENTIFYING SCIENCE MAJORS 1, 10 (2009), http://projectimplicit.net/nosek/papers/SGN2010gensci.pdf (reporting that "implicit stereotyping was more strongly related to majoring in STEM than was SAT-math performance," showing a "potent link between implicit stereotyping and scientific self-concept"). Perhaps even more concerning is their conclusion: "Remarkably, the negative correlation of implicit stereotyping with women's choices of STEM majors was as powerful for the most mathematically-able women as for the least." Id. at 8.

463. See generally, e.g., BURNS ET AL., supra note 409, at 21–22; Patricia G. Devine et al., Long-Term Reduction in Implicit Bias: A Prejudice Habit-Breaking Intervention, 48 J. EXPERIMENTAL SOC. PSYCHOL. 1267 (2012) (describing successful training).

reflexive responses in appropriate situations—de-biasing.[464] The research supports initiatives that train us to engage in more intentional and mindful reflection to avoid implicit biases at critical decision points.[465] This report recommends this training for decision makers all along the education and school-to-prison pipeline. Once de-biased, it is likely that our education system will look very different from the disproportional picture it presents today.

---

464. See, e.g., Devine et al., supra note 463, at 1267; Patricia G. Devine et al., The Regulation of Explicit and Implicit Race Bias: The Role of Motivations To Respond Without Prejudice, 82 J. PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. 835 (2002); Kerry Kawakami et al., The Impact of Counterstereotypic Training and Related Correction Processes on the Application of Stereotypes, 10 GROUP PROCESSES & INTERGROUP RELATIONS 139, 147 (2007) ("In general, the results of the present research support the hypothesis that correction is a deliberate and calibrated process that people use strategically to compensate for undesired external influence."). The research is still coming in on what may or may not be effective. For example, there is caution about potential "backlash" from use of the IAT. See, e.g., Jacquie D. Vorauer, Completing the Implicit Association Test Reduces Positive Intergroup Interaction Behavior, 23 PSYCHOL. SCI. 1168 (2012) (finding that White participants' taking race-based IAT led to their non-White (Aboriginal) partners feeling less well regarded than after interactions after a non-race-based IAT); Jennifer K. Elek & Paula Hannaford-Agor, First, Do No Harm: On Addressing the Problem of Implicit Bias in Juror Decision Making, 49 CT. REV. 190 (2013) (suggesting that mock jurors who were given the implicit bias instruction responded to it in subtle ways although the instruction did not produce any backfire or harmful effect); Margo J. Monteith et al., Schooling the Cognitive Monster: The Role of Motivation in the Regulation and Control of Prejudice, 3 SOC. & PERSONALITY PSYCHOL. COMPASS 211 (2009) (discussing motivation); Jessi L. Smith, et al., Now Hiring! Empirically Testing a Three-Step Intervention to Increase Faculty Gender Diversity in STEM, 65 BIOSCI. 1084 (2015) (describing successful training regarding faculty STEM hiring).

465. See, e.g., Smith et al., supra note 464; Tom R. Tyler et al., The Impact of Psychological Science on Policing in the United States: Procedural Justice, Legitimacy, and Effective Law Enforcement, 16 PSYCHOL. SCI. PUB. INT. 75 (2015); Lorie Fridell & Sandra Brown, Fair and Impartial Policing: A Science Based Approach, POLICE CHIEF, June 2015, at 20–25; Jason P. Nance & Sarah E. Redfield, Clark County Training Presentation: Reversing the School-to-Prison Pipeline, (Dec. 10, 2015) (on file with authors); Jason P. Nance & Sarah E. Redfield, Warren County Training Presentation: Reversing the School-to-Prison Pipeline (May 29, 2015) (on file with authors).

What is needed is a commitment of resources to appropriate training to this end.[466]

6. New Response to the School-to-Prison Pipeline: A Focus on Implicit

Previous sections of the report reviewed implicit bias, group dynamics and micromessaging, all unconscious responses that often influence decisions in unintended ways and result in unintended results, thought by many to account in part for the disproportionalities identified. The differences in expectations and results previously discussed play out in specific arenas and cry out for individuation rather than group-triggered response.

It is easy to conceptualize how a White female educator or decision-maker, facing a decision involving disciplining a twelve year old African-American boy who was involved in a shoving incident finds herself in a context where race has been shown to matter (at least implicitly).[467] That White educator is more likely to implicitly respond negatively to him (than to a similarly situated White boy) based on implicit associations and group identification.[468] If she is in a poor, urban school with a majority of students of color, there are more likely to be School Resource Officers present.[469] She is more likely to call for help from the SRO than to send the boy to the principal's office or some lesser intervention.[470] When the SRO arrives he/she is likely to view the scene less favorably than he/she might for a White student, especially if the teacher

---

466. See, e.g., BURKE & NISHIOKA, supra note 85.

467. See, e.g., discussion supra notes 415–417 and accompanying text; Eberhardt et al., supra note 412, at 876; Phillip Atiba Goff et al., The Essence of Innocence: Consequences of Dehumanizing Black Children, 106 J. PERSONALITY & SOC. PSYCHOL. 526 (2014).

468. Michael J. Bernstein et al., The Cross-Category Effect: Mere Social Categorization Is Sufficient To Elicit an Own-Group Bias in Face Recognition, 18 PSYCHOL. SCI. 706, 706 (2007); see also, e.g., 2 HANDBOOK OF SOCIAL PSYCHOLOGY (Susan T. Fiske et al. eds., 5th ed. 2010).

469. See supra Figure 34.

470. See, e.g., discussion supra notes 38–39 and accompanying text; see also Granot et al., supra note 428, at 2196 (finding that where study participants "fixated frequently on outgroup targets, prior identification influenced punishment decisions").

labels the offender as a troublemaker.[471] As the incident proceeds along, it is also easy to see how misremembering might come into play and the behavior of the Black boy remembered as more aggressive.[472] And these first decisions will carry on along the pipeline, where this young student will more likely find himself arrested and detained.[473]

When these implicit dynamics are viewed in the context of the tremendous discretion at play along the pipeline, in decisions like this one and in so many others, including discretionary special education decisions, discretionary referral to law enforcement, discretionary arrest and detention, the critical role of the decision maker is obvious.[474] As one of the recent supplementary papers issued by the Disparity Collaborative summarizes:

> [T]here is clear evidence that children of color are punished more severely than White children for relatively minor, subjective offenses in schools. These are the very types of behaviors that require judgment and discretion by the decision-maker in determining punishment. There is also research that illustrates how the implicit biases or assumptions held by adults with decision-making authority lead to harsher treatment of Blacks than Whites for similar behaviors. Considered in tandem, these two sets of studies strongly suggest that implicit racial bias contributes to the differential treatment of children of color—particularly Black boys—in school settings.[475]

---

471. See discussion supra note 423 and accompanying text.

472. See, e.g., discussion supra note 415 and accompanying text.

473. See discussion supra pp. 48–49; see also Dara Lind, Why Having Police in Schools Is a Problem, in 3 Charts, VOX (Oct. 28, 2015, 12:10 PM), http://www.vox.com/2015/10/28/9626820/police-school-resource-officers.

474. See, e.g., Decoteau J. Irby, Net-Deepening of School Discipline, 45 URB. REV. 197 (2013) (summarizing research); Kelly Welch & Allison Ann Payne, Exclusionary School Punishment: The Effect of Racial Threat on Expulsion and Suspension, 10 YOUTH VIOLENCE & JUV. JUST. 155, 165 (2012).

475. JOHANNA WALD, CAN "DE-BIASING" STRATEGIES HELP TO REDUCE RACIAL DISPARITIES IN SCHOOL DISCIPLINE?: A SUMMARY OF THE LITERATURE

That is, what we know about implicit associations and biases call for a pause in the process. Not every decision is one that calls for a stare not a blink, but some are. That the decision maker needs to be deciding without bias, explicit or implicit, is also critical. In its recent report on Reforming Juvenile Justice, the National Academies of Science highlighted the importance of addressing bias in discretionary decision-making for juvenile justice, though their conclusion is equally important to decisions further back on the school-to-prison pipeline:

> Because bias (whether conscious or unconscious) also plays some role, albeit of unknown magnitude, juvenile justice officials should embrace activities designed to increase awareness of unconscious biases and to counteract them, as well as to detect and respond to overt instances of discrimination. Although the juvenile justice system itself cannot alter the underlying structural causes of racial/ethnic disparities in juvenile justice, many conventional practices in enforcement and administration magnify these underlying disparities, and these contributors are within the reach of justice system policy makers.[476]

As the Academy suggests, it is in reach of decision makers to bring about change by becoming aware of the implicit aspects of their decisions and responding with conscious attention to the individual. One can now imagine a context where the decision makers have become aware of their implicit biases, where before the teacher calls for the School Resource Officer, she quickly asks herself, Would I be doing this if this were Emily, a twelve-year-old white girl in my class? Or where the SRO presence is minimal or not existent and the student is sent to the principal, who asks him/herself the same type of questions. Or if an SRO is called, he/she has been trained with a quick checklist of points to consider.

---

2 (2014), http://www.indiana.edu/~atlantic/wp-content/uploads/2014/03/Implicit-Bias_031214.pdf.

476. REFORMING JUVENILE JUSTICE, supra note 86, at 7.

Or if the student is to be suspended, a lawyer or law student is present to represent him and so on down the line.

IV. OVERVIEW OF TOWN HALL MEETINGS

A. Background Information Provided for 2014-15 Town Halls

The issue: For too many of our young people, particularly those who are Black, Hispanic, American Indian, disabled, LGBTQ, and/or low-income, the education pipeline stands broken, and the doors to meaningful education remain closed. The problem is particularly acute in regard to students being pushed or dropping out of school, often into the juvenile or prison system—the so-called school-to-prison pipeline. Disproportionality—where certain racial or other groups are represented out of proportion to their student numbers—remains virtually unchecked in regard to academic achievement, discipline, suspension, and expulsion and in regard to certain special education categorizations and placements. The disproportionate minority contact in juvenile justice and delinquency matters is equally troubling. While the availability and visibility of data on pipeline issues is increasing, the problems have been known for decades and have been resistant to change.

The issues posed by the school-to-prison pipeline are a civil rights challenge for our society. The economics alone are enough reason to address it: students who drop out or are pushed out of school are disengaged first as students and then as citizens; they lose earning capacity; they become more dependent on welfare or join the expensive prison population. The U.S. spends an average of $12,296 per year per student while states' average per inmate cost is over twice that, $31,286;[477] and juvenile detention even higher, an estimated $88,000 per year.[478]

The goals: The Town Halls use the convening power of the ABA to host a series of national gatherings of key individuals and 477. Fast Facts: Expenditures, supra note 301; HENRICHSON & DELANEY, supra note 289, at 10 fig.4 (providing the average of the forty states reporting in the Vera Survey).

478. COSTS OF CONFINEMENT, supra note 298, at 4; see also DETENTION REFORM: A COST-SAVING APPROACH, ANNIE E. CASEY FOUND. (2007), http://www.aecf.org/work/juvenile-justice/jdai/ (estimating costs between $32,000 and $65,000).

organizations 1) to call particular attention to the role of the legal community in addressing pipeline issues; 2) to direct focus to the role implicit bias may play in these issues; 3) to recognize ongoing research and programmatic intervention and allow opportunity for networking to support replication of successful efforts; and 4) to develop an action plan to address the components of the school-to-prison pipeline dilemma.

The typical format: The Town Halls follow a proven format for engagement for change. The first hour features an expert panel drawn largely from the local area and led by two experienced ABA moderators. The panelists speak to the designated topic area and to their experience with pipeline programs and interventions. The second hour opens the program to the audience for questions, comments, and discussion. The formal program is followed by an informal networking opportunity, and, where possible, a reception hosted by local participants.

Within this framework, the Task Force held eight Town Hall meetings and a roundtable discussion during 2014 and 2015. The purpose of these meetings was to understand the causes and effects of the school-to-prison pipeline at different regions of the country, connect constituencies and individuals interested in reversing these negative trends, recognize ongoing research, discuss potential solutions, and showcase successful local programmatic interventions.

Introductory Note: Because we did not have court reporters at each Town Hall, we are unable to reproduce full testimony here, though all was considered in formulating the report's recommendations. The materials that follow provide a glimpse of what the expert panels offered during the Town Halls, but cannot begin to reflect the depth and breadth of knowledge experts brought to the sessions.

B. Chicago Town Hall Meeting – February 7, 2014

The inaugural Town Hall was convened at the ABA midyear meeting in Chicago to discuss issues posed by the school-to-prison pipeline. Entitled, "The School-to-Prison Pipeline: What Are the Problems? What Are the Solutions?" the Town Hall offered expert information on the nature of the problem, together with presentations of local Chicago leaders who have programs on the ground to help find solutions. Speakers provided an overview of the problems associated with the school-to-prison pipeline; discussed the role that implicit bias plays in producing disparities relating to disciplining students; and discussed the role that lawyers can take to prevent more students from becoming involved in the justice system.

The first Town Hall aptly illustrated the convening power of the ABA and brought together an expert panel and an extraordinary audience (a standing room only crowd, almost all of whom stayed for the entire program). Those commenting and writing about the session[479] uniformly lauded the ABA's ability to connect people from different perspectives who came armed with varying solutions; they also praised the Town Hall emphasis on facilitating taking action and implementing real solutions at all levels. One example illustrates the potential here: Three law students traveled from New Orleans (sponsored by their deans at Tulane and Loyola) to talk about Stand Up For Each Other ("SUFEO"), where New Orleans law students represent K-12 students in suspension hearings; Chicago area law students attended as well, took these young people out for lunch, and started a conversation about replicating SUFEO in Chicago (which they did).

Speakers included:

- Julie Biehl, Professor, Children and Family Justice Center, Bluhm Legal Clinic, Northwestern University School of Law, Chicago, Illinois
- Nancy Hietzeg, Professor, Sociology and Critical Studies of Race and Ethnicity, St. Catherine University, St. Paul, Minnesota
- Justice Michael Hyman, Chair of the ABA Coalition on Racial and Ethnic Justice
- Mariame Kaba, Project NIA, Chicago, Illinois
- Sarah Redfield, Professor of Law Emerita, University of New Hampshire School of Law

479. See Monica Llorente, Help Us Dismantle the School-to-Prison Pipeline, ABA CHILDREN'S RIGHTS LITIG. (Apr. 10, 2014), https://apps.americanbar.org/litigation/committees/childrights/content/articles/spring2014-0414-dismantle-school-to-prison-pipeline.html.

- Robert Saunooke, Law Offices of Robert Saunooke, Miramar, Florida, and legal and policy advisor to the chairman, Seminole Tribe of Florida
- Wesley Sunu, Tribler Orpett & Meyer
- Dr. Artika Tyner, Community Justice Project, Clinical Faculty, Director of Diversity, University of St. Thomas Law School, Minneapolis, Minnesota
- Rev. Janette Wilson, National Rainbow PUSH Coalition, Chicago, Illinois

Selected points from the testimony:

- The problem is "our" fault, the fault of all adults in our community.
- The problem is a complex web of mass incarcerations, which is extremely difficult to exit.
- That children enter the web through an interaction with a police officer, which commonly occurs at school, is an improper role for police officers in Chicago schools.
- Currently in Chicago, two police officers are stationed within each Chicago school, and eighty-four percent of arrests occurring in these schools are for misdemeanor offenses.
- Reframing policing in schools is absolutely necessary.
- Reverend Wilson discussed the punitive environment that permeates many schools and maintained that we are "feeding bodies to the criminal system."
- Dr. Tyner maintained that we are depriving too many youth "of meaningful opportunities for education, future employment, and participation in our democracy."
- Ms. Kaba reminded participants that the school-to-prison pipeline is "almost a misnomer in some cases;" "we should really be talking about a community-to-prison pipeline or a cradle-to-prison pipeline. It starts even before young people enter the school building." She also observed that matters that school principals and counselors should handle are being handled by police.
- Professor Heitzeg observed that students are indirectly funneled into the justice system through suspension and expulsion policies and directly routed through the growing number of police in schools.

- Mr. Saunooke pointed out that the lack of funding for education contributes the pipeline and observed that teachers, especially in schools that serve high concentrations of Native American students, rarely stay more than two or three years.
- Professor Biehl emphasized that students need to remain in school and that we should not revoke parole for students because they were not in school and incarcerate them, which inhibits their ability to obtain an education. Professor Biehl also debunked the myth that a juvenile's record is confidential. She maintained that a young person's record can be significant barrier to school reentry, employment, financial aid for college, and housing.
- Participants observed that to successfully interrupt the pipeline, schools must focus on ideas of community and cultural understanding.
- Participants identified numerous factors that pose a challenge to dismantling the school to prison pipeline, including implicit bias, funding, and related trends in education, but collective action beyond the dialogue is needed to achieve change.

"Before we push children into a criminal system, we need to push them into a loving setting that allows them to understand the consequence of negative behavior." Reverend Wilson.

C. Boston Town Hall Meeting – August 8, 2014

The second Town Hall was held at the annual ABA meeting in Boston. Speakers provided an overview of the problems and consequences of the school-to-prison pipeline. Again, it was an extraordinary panel of experts and an extraordinary audience. The panel and audience focused on the excellent on-the-ground programs in Massachusetts (including legislation and class action litigation on point); discussed the role implicit bias plays in producing disparities along racial lines; discussed the disproportionate effect that schools' current punitive policies and actions have on students with disabilities, and discussed certain initiatives that organizations and schools in Massachusetts are taking to reverse these trends. As was the case in Chicago, after the Town Hall, speakers continued to engage in extended networking conversations on next steps.

Speakers included:

- Robert Fleischner, Assistant Director, Center for Public Representation, Northampton, Massachusetts
- Damon Hewitt, Senior Advisor, U.S. Programs, Open Society Foundations, New York, New York
- Mike Ortiz, Staff Counsel, Student Services, Lowell Public Schools, Lowell, Massachusetts
- Sarah Redfield, Professor of Law Emerita, University of New Hampshire School of Law
- Marlies Spanjaard, Director of Education Advocacy, The Ed-Law Project – Children's Law Center of Massachusetts and the Committee for Public Counsel Services, Boston, Massachusetts
- Wesley Sunu, General Counsel, Sentry Insurance a Mutual Company
- Judge Gloria Y. Tan, Middlesex County Juvenile Court, Massachusetts

Selected points from the testimony:

- While there has been some traction on aspects of school-based discipline, the conversation has to be more comprehensive and include discussions on class and race.
- Mike Ortiz, Staff Counsel for Lowell Public Schools, stated that the phrase "school-to-prison pipeline" is too narrow and argued that "community-to-prison pipeline" more accurately reflects the scope of the problem. Based on a high poverty level in a community, schools in that community will often encounter students with more emotional and learning disability issues than wealthier schools. As a result, poorer communities become further burdened when their schools are asked to do more but with less resources.
- Judge Tan, Middlesex County Juvenile Court, stated that when children are removed from their home, efforts must be made to ensure they are able to attend and stay in their school of origin unless it is shown it is not in their best interest.

- Damon Hewitt, Senior Advisor for U.S. Programs, Open Society Foundations, articulated the depth and intransigency of the problem and highlighted that more school resource officers in schools are not the solution.
- Marlies Spanjaard, Director of Education Advocacy for The Edlaw Project, stated that of the districts where people found resource officers helpful, it was not in their arresting function but in their function as additional adults in school buildings. Since schools actually desire more adult presence in their buildings, the better choice is to hire more school counselors and fewer school resource officers.
- Robert Fleischner, Assistant Director for the Center for Public Representation, discussed the federal class action lawsuit against the city of Springfield, Massachusetts and the city's school system. The lawsuit raises concerns over the school system's public day programs, which are supposed to provide alternate pathways for students with disabilities. Bob added that the case claims that students are facing segregation in violation of the Americans with Disabilities Act. Because the ADA requires that public schools provide services in integrated environments, this segregated setting denies them equal educational opportunity.

D. Houston Town Hall Meeting – February 6, 2015

The third Town Hall meeting took place in Houston, Texas, in connection with the ABA's 2014 mid-year meeting. Speakers discussed the issues and consequences of the school-to-prison pipeline and local initiatives to reverse these trends.

Speakers included:

- Marilyn Armour, Director, The Institute for Restorative Justice and Restorative Dialogue, University of Texas, Austin, Texas
- Cynthia D. Mares, President, Hispanic National Bar Association
- Miner "Trey" P. Marchbanks, Texas A&M University, Public Policy Research Institute

- Wykisha McKinney, Child Health Outreach Program Manager, Children's Defense Fund Texas
- Pamela Meanes, President of the National Bar Association
- Mary Schmid Mergler, Director, School-to-Prison Pipeline Project, Texas Appleseed
- Sarah Redfield, Professor of Law Emerita, University of New Hampshire School of Law
- Wesley Sunu, General Counsel, Sentry Insurance a Mutual Company

Selected points from the testimony:

- Pamela Meanes, President of the National Bar Association, identified the school to prison pipeline as one of the many reasons for achievement gaps between black and white students. Ms. Meanes stated that it is in our collective interest to educate schools on how to fix this issue and discussed programs, such as the use of classical academies, which are schools that students have the option to attend as an alternative to jail. Unlike an alternative school, this is a "regular" school where students are engaged and educated. Additionally, the role of mentors in all fifty states, as well as programs conducted by Alpha Kappa Alpha, for example, have played a role in diverting students away from the justice system at an early age.
- Methods that schools can use to better handle disciplinary matters need to be identified to avoid the streamlined path into prison caused by swift referral of students to school police officers and the juvenile justice systems for catch-all offenses/Class C crimes.
- Dr. Armour, the Director of the Institute of Restorative Justice and Restorative Dialogue discussed the vast improvement that the "RJ Project" has produced in specific school districts. Ms. Armour stated that this new technique has reduced eighty-four percent of out of school discipline, as well as dropped tardiness by thirty-nine percent. By changing the school climate and shifting the focus on altering the punitive model, Ms. Armour explained that shifting the focus to building relationships, rather than punishing students, will halt the school to prison pipeline.
- Dr. Marchbanks, of the Public Policy Research Institute at Texas A&M, discussed the "Breaking School Rules" study, which looked to individual, school level data for every student in the state of Texas in grades seven through twelve. Mr. Marchbanks explained that if a student is suspended in Texas, the state must be notified of the occurrence of, and reason for, the suspension. Further, school data was linked to the justice system, because each time a student was referred to the justice system, the state was made aware. The study found that sixty percent of students in Texas were suspended at least once, and while discrepancies were bad, even white students experienced a fifty percent suspension rate. Therefore, proper leadership and school policies are needed to mitigate the negative academic outcomes and increased social costs associated with suspensions.

- Cynthia Mares, President of the Hispanic National Bar Association, reported additional statistics on the school to prison pipeline. While discussing what is being done to solve this problem, Ms. Mares talked about groups that have come together to advocate as a community. Once such group is "Law School Sí Se Puede," which helps students gain acceptance into the law school of their choice by providing mentoring and funding for the LSAT.
- Wykisha McKinney, Child Health Outreach Program Manager of the Children's Defense Fund – Texas, further discussed the importance of sending students to counseling instead of funneling them straight to the juvenile justice system, which can be achieved through the creation of new codes, greater parental involvement in the classroom, and continued advocacy.
- Additionally, in her discussion of how to reduce the number of students who are entering into the school to prison pipeline, Mary Schmid Mergler, Director of the School to Prison Pipeline Project (Texas Appleseed), stated that internal drivers, as well as direct referrals to the juvenile justice system by school police, are forcing students into the pipeline. Ms. Mergler stated that school policing must be altered to decrease school arrests.
- This should not be the last discussion on how to solve the school to prison pipeline, as continued help with advocacy is needed to solve this problem in all states and school districts.

E. Washington, D.C. Town Hall Meeting—February 26, 2015

The fourth Town Hall occurred in the District of Columbia at Jones Day, in conjunction with the Criminal Justice Sections Collateral Consequences Summit. Speakers discussed issues of the pipeline from a national perspective, focusing on the disproportionate effects of disciplinary policies on students of color and students with disabilities and the role of federal policy and interventions.

Speakers included:

- The Honorable Bernice Donald, 6th Circuit Court of Appeals & incoming Chair Criminal Justice Section of the ABA
- Renee Wolenhaus, Deputy Chief, Educational Opportunities Section, Civil Rights Division, Department of Justice
- Lara Kaufmann, Senior Counsel & Director of Education Policy for At-Risk Students, National Women's Law Center
- Dawn Sturdevant Baum, Senior Attorney Department of the Interior, Indian Education Team Leader, Division of Indian Affairs, Office of the Solicitor
- William Alvarado Rivera, past President of the Hispanic Bar of the District of Columbia and Deputy Chief Counsel, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services
- Barbara R. Arnwine, President & Executive Director of the National Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law (Lawyers' Committee)
- Kristin Harper, Special Assistant, Office of Special Education and Rehabilitative Services, U.S. Department of Education
- Sarah Redfield, Professor of Law Emerita, University of New Hampshire School of Law, Moderator

Selected points from the testimony:

- Highly punitive measures do not improve safety nor do they improve performance.
- Lara Kaufmann observed that our failure to address issues in students such as trauma leads to students acting out and that we need to train educators better to understand the role implicit bias plays in disproportionalities associated with student discipline.
- William Rivera, Deputy Chief Counsel of the Office of General Counsel at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, provided data indicating that the disproportionate use of discipline starts early in pre-schools. As a solution to pre-school expulsion, he recommended that pre-schools use Positive Behavioral Intervention & Supports (PBIS) instead of expelling these students.

- Barbara Arnwine reminded participants that Minneapolis School District dramatically reduced its student suspension rate by placing a moratorium on suspending students in early grades, having higher-level school administrators review suspensions and expulsions of students, and reducing the police presence in the schools.
- Kristen Harper maintained that when students are incarcerated, that we must educate them better, focusing on improving their reading skills. This will ease the transition back into society upon their release.

F. Arizona State University Town Hall Meeting – March 27, 2015

The fifth Town Hall meeting occurred at the Arizona State University Sandra Day O'Connor College of Law. It was held in connection with a symposium hosted by the Arizona State Law Journal and had a special focus on school-to-prison pipeline problems in Indian Country. This convening included both a Town Hall session and a research symposium, the papers from which will be published in the Arizona State Law Review.

Speakers included:

- Denise E. Bates, Interdisciplinary Studies and Organizational Leadership Faculty, College of Letters and Sciences, Arizona State University
- Bryan McKinley Jones Brayboy, Special Advisor to the President, Professor of Justice and Social Inquiry; Director, Center for Indian Education, School of Social Transformation, Arizona State University
- Nicholas Bustamante, M.S. student in Justice Studies and Social Inquiry
- Jeremiah Chin, Ph.D. and J.D. candidate, Research Associate, Center for Indian Education, Arizona State University
- Tiffani Darden, Associate Professor of Law, Michigan State University College of Law; Chair, AALS Education Law
- Philip S. (Sam) Deloria, Director, American Indian Graduate Center

- Patty Ferguson-Bohnee, Faculty Director, Indian Legal Program, Sandra Day O'Connor College of Law
- Sheri Freemont, Director, Family Advocacy Center, Salt River Pima-Maricopa Indian Community
- Leonard Gorman, Director, Navajo Nation Human Rights Commission
- Jenifer Kasten, Director of Public Policy, Decoding Dyslexia Arizona
- John Lewis, Former Executive Director, Inter Tribal Council of Arizona
- Dr. Laura McNeal, Assistant Professor of Law, Brandeis School of Law, University of Louisville
- Jason Nance, Associate Professor of Law, Associate Director of Education Law and Policy for the Center on Children and Families, University of Florida Levin College of Law
- Guenevere Nelson-Melby, Assistant Juvenile Public Defender, Pima County Juvenile Court
- Stephen Pevar, Senior Staff Attorney, American Civil Liberties Union, Racial Justice Program
- Claire Raj, Assistant Professor, Clinical Program, University of South Carolina School of Law
- Sarah E. Redfield, ABA Coalition on Racial and Ethnic Justice, University of New Hampshire School of Law
- Dr. Charles "Monty" Roessel, Director, Bureau of Indian Education
- Kenneth G. Standard, Board of Governors, American Bar Association
- Dr. Sabina E. Vaught, Associate Professor of Urban Education, Tufts University
- Malia Villegas, Director, Policy and Research, National Congress of American Indians
- Vanessa Walsh, J.D. candidate, S.J. Quinney College of Law
- Ron J. Whitener, Associate Judge, Tulalip Tribal Court; Affiliated Assistant Professor of Law, University of Washington School of Law
- Dorothy (Dottie) Wodraska, Director of Juvenile Transition, Maricopa County Education Services Agency.

Selected points from the testimony:

- As a result of their rural geography and concentration in medically underserved areas, Native students face unique health issues. Among these issues is toxic stress, a condition caused by adverse experiences in childhood that occur without the buffer of supportive relationships. To help address the effects of toxic stress, the panelists proposed federal policies that aim at fostering resilience.
- Native students are more likely to experience poverty.
- All these factors have led to a lack of academic achievement among Native students.
- Dr. Bryan Brayboy, President's Professor and Borderlands Professor of Indigenous Education and Justice in the School of Social Transformation at Arizona State University, made several recommendations, including preparing all teachers to work in, with, and for Native communities, re-prioritizing the school process for Native children, connecting Native languages and cultures in both curriculum and pedagogy, and funding these efforts at the same level we fund prisons.
- Guenevere Nelson-Melby, Assistant Juvenile Public Defender for Pima County Juvenile Court, discussed her participation in a taskforce that created a rubric to minimize law enforcement calls by schools. This rubric uses objective criteria in the form of a checklist model to determine when police involvement is necessary and seeks to reduce disproportionate minority contact throughout the juvenile criminal system. Based on preliminary numbers, this rubric has significantly decreased arrests throughout several school systems in Pima County.
- Dr. Charles Roessel, Director of the Bureau of Indian Education, discussed his undertaking of a major reform endeavor of the Bureau of Indian Education to create a school improvement agency.
- Sheri Freemont, Director of the Salt River Pima-Maricopa Indian Community Family Advocacy Center, discussed the SRPMIC Multi-Disciplinary Team (MDT) Model. She credits the model's success to the fact that it is applied to all incidents regardless of the severity of the incident. The MDT consists of core and secondary team members who meet biweekly for updates, training, and challenges, and meet at any time as needed for immediate needs.

G. New Orleans Town Hall Meeting – April 14, 2015

The sixth Town Hall meeting was held in conjunction with the Section of Litigation Annual Conference 2015 at Loyola University New Orleans College of Law. Speakers discussed the problems and consequences of the school-to-prison pipeline generally; specific problems associated with charter schools; and local initiatives that schools and organizations are taking to reverse these trends.

Speakers included:

- Christopher Bowman, Counselor to the District Attorney, Orleans Parish District Attorney's Office
- Nancy Degan, Chair, ABA Section of Litigation
- Robert Garda, Professor, Loyola University New Orleans College of Law, Moderator
- Meghan Garvey, Managing Director, Louisiana Center for Children's Rights
- The Honorable Ernestine S. Gray, Judge, Orleans Parish Juvenile Court
- Eden Heilman, Director, Southern Poverty Law Center
- Rosa K. Hirji, Attorney & Co-Chair, ABA Section of Litigation, Children's Rights Litigation Committee
- Diane Holt, Attorney, Columbia, South Carolina
- Rahsaan Ishon, Families and Friends of Louisiana's Incarcerated Children
- María Pabón López, Dean, Loyola University New Orleans College of Law
- Jason P. Nance, Levin College of Law, University of Florida
- Devan Petersen, Foster Youth Advocate, New Orleans
- Dana Peterson, Deputy Superintendent of External Affairs, Recovery School District, New Orleans
- Sarah Redfield, Professor of Law, Co-Chair, ABA Joint Task Force Reversing the School-to-Prison Pipeline, Moderator
- Student Leaders and Students, SUFEO, Stand Up For Each Other, New Orleans
- Rosie Washington, Executive Director, Micah Project, New Orleans
- Gina Womack, Families and Friends of Louisiana's Incarcerated Children, invited

Selected points from the testimony:

- Meghan Garvey, Managing Director of the Louisiana Center for Children's Rights, described the Louisiana Charter School System as a fractured system, citing lack of detailed oversight as one of the chief problems facing educators in Louisiana. Moreover, no centralized education office exists that is able to provide resources, such as mental health resources, to all the different schools.
- Eden Heilman, Managing Attorney from the Southern Poverty Law Center, outlined the various entry points into the pipeline and the factors that keep children trapped in the system. To address these issues, she suggested both legal and political strategies including individual client representation, filing administrative complaints to federal agencies, looking at the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act to address issues on a larger systems level, class action litigation, and using legislation and policy to effect change.
- Judge Ernestine S. Gray strongly believes students should get the full experience of being meaningfully engaged in school. She stated that if communities want to keep children from becoming arrested or becoming homeless, communities have to work harder to afford these children an education.

H. Honolulu Town Hall Meeting – April 18, 2015

The seventh Town Hall meeting took place in Honolulu, Hawai'i in conjunction with the ABA's Solo, Small Firm, and General Practice Division and the National Asian Pacific American Bar Association. Speakers discussed the school-to-prison pipeline program in Hawai'i, particularly with respect to native Hawaiians, specific programs in Hawai'i designed to reverse the negative trends, and sought to develop an action plan to address the unique components of this issue.

Speakers included:

- Carl Ackerman, Director, Clarence T.C. Ching PUEO Program, Punahou School
- Nancy J. Budd, Attorney, State of Hawai'i Board of Education
- Beth Bulgeron, Academic Performance Manager, Hawai'i State Public Charter Commission

- Kim Greeley, Attorney, COREJ, Honolulu, Hawai'i, Moderator
- Jenny Lee, Staff Attorney, Hawai'i Appleseed Center for Law and Economic Justice
- Justin D. Levinson, Professor, William S. Richardson School of Law, University of Hawai'i
- Kamaile Maldonado, Office of Hawaiian Affairs
- Mark Patterson, Warden, Hawai'i Youth Correctional Facility
- The Honorable Karen M. Radius, Founding Judge, Hawai'i Girl's Court
- Dr. Karen Umemoto Ph.D., Professor, University of Hawai'i at Manoa

Selected points from the testimony:

- Too many young people are having the doors to meaningful education closed because they are being pushed out of school and into the juvenile justice system.
- Consequently, these young people are being disengaged as citizens, thus creating a serious civil rights challenge for Hawaiian school districts and society as a whole.
- The shift toward punitive approaches to school discipline does not focus on the root of the problem, which for many native Hawaiians likely relates back to elements of colonialism and intergenerational trauma that has yet to cease.
- Statistics show severe disproportionate treatment of native Hawaiians in schools.
- Turning to the police for educational infractions compounds the problems. This gives a student a criminal mindset before that student ever has the chance to rehabilitate.
- Hawaiian law provides school administrators with a high level of discretion to assess disciplinary situations and impose punishment, which could be a positive factor in eliminating the school to prison pipeline if administrators are educated to use suspension as a last resort disciplinary tactic.
- Professor Levinson stated that the role of implicit biases and stereotype threat will always pose an issue, unless specific measures are taken to resolve these issues. Therefore, as Mr. Levinson discussed, it is necessary for us to understand how teachers and other students perceive students at a young age, and how these perceptions affect behavior.

- Judge Radius, referencing the Girl's Court, which she founded, emphasized the importance of gender-specific understanding re: delinquency. The Girl's Court provides open courtroom sessions and gender-specific programming for girls and their families. Her court has experienced great success in reducing runaways and arrests, as well as helped girls to receive diplomas, enroll in community college, obtain vocational training, become drug free, obtain employment, and mend troubled relationships with family.
- All panelists agreed that to best help students, each department must work together to provide comprehensive mental health care, family involvement, trauma informed care, culturally specific care, and gender specific care.

I. Miami Town Hall Meeting – May 14, 2015

The last Town Hall meeting for 2015 was held in Miami, Florida and hosted by the Wilkie D. Ferguson, Jr. Bar Association and The Law Center at Miami Dade College. Speakers discussed the problems associated with the school-to-prison pipeline generally; and issues and programs unique to Miami school districts.

Speakers included:

- Colleen Adams, Founder & Executive Director, Empowered Youth
- Leigh-Ann A. Buchanan, President, Wilkie D. Ferguson, Jr. Bar Association, Moderator
- Dwight Bullard, Florida State Senate
- Norman Hemming III, Special Counsel, Office of the United States Attorney, Southern District of Florida
- Ruth Jeannoel, Lead Organizer, Power U Center for Social Change
- Christopher Lomax, Associate, Jones Day
- Carlos Martinez, Public Defender, Miami-Dade County Office of the Public Defender
- Marvelle McIntyre-Hall, Law Center Director, Miami Dade College Wolfson Campus
- Arnold R. Montgomery, Administrative Director, Office of Educational Equity, Access, and Diversity, Miami Dade Public Schools

- Jason P. Nance, Associate Professor of Law & Associate Director for Education Law and Policy, Center on Children and Families, University of Florida Levin College of Law, Moderator
- The Honorable Orlando Prescott, Senior Administrative Judge, Eleventh Judicial Circuit Juvenile Division, Miami-Dade County
- Maurice Sikes, Sergeant, Coral Gables Police Department

Selected points from the testimony:

- A call to action is needed to reverse the school to prison pipeline.
- Miami is a unique educational environment, which ultimately calls for unique solutions to eliminate the school to prison pipeline. The role of community programs, such as Empowered Youth, is critical. Empowered Youth first enforces character and skill building, and second focuses on job development.
- The focus should be on programs that can give students the opportunity to be cared for and believed in, instead of on zero tolerance.
- Arnold Montgomery, Administrative Director of the Education Transformation Office of the Miami-Dade school system, maintained that zero tolerance policies in schools are not effective in deterring student misbehavior, as they "limit or remove access to experience opportunities to achieve success." Mr. Montgomery proposed that the solution to dismantling the school to prison pipeline includes three steps. First, schools must have codes of conduct that establish consequences, not punishment, which will balance the need for student safety while optimizing student success. Second, students and their families must be provided with learning opportunities that foster academic excellence, career pathways, and real world learning. Finally, the school district must "create a system of oversight, and build collaborative working relationships between municipal law enforcement agencies, and also juvenile justice systems."

