Spring 2017 Fall 2016 Fall 2014 Spring 2014 Fall 2012	Instructor General Psychology PSYC1030 The University of Memphis Teaching a course developed to expose students to a broad overview of the important phenomena and concepts in many areas of psychology and to foster an appreciation for the many possibilities for the application of the field of psychology to everyday life. Revamping the auditorium General Psychology course in order to address a high student failure rate. Continuing to build a teaching team composed of instructors, graduate student teaching assistants (TAs), and undergraduate learning assistants (LAs). Creating small group break-out sessions led by TA and LA pairs to provide students opportunities for active learning, personal application of course material, as well as engagement in a learning community. Facilitating an interactive large lecture hall experience by calling on students by name when posing oral questions and by utilizing clicker questions in a think/pair to discuss/share format. Using clickers to track class participation, check student understanding of course material in real-time, and to instruct students in test-taking techniques while taking advantage of the testing effect. Partnering with MacMillan Publishing to provide a more engaging textbook and online adaptive quizzing in order to help students more easily process and learn course material.

Teaching an interactive lecture-based course utilizing supplementary online teaching resources to help increase students' understanding of difficult concepts and to monitor concept comprehension through weekly online chapter quizzes, which allows for review of empirically-identified difficult material. Utilizing iClickers to monitor class attendance, participation, and comprehension as well as to engage in anonymous polling to deepen class discussions. This course is a broad overview of the major areas of abnormal psychology where we discuss definitions of psychological abnormality, historical trends and the fundamental paradigms within the field, and the classification, diagnosis, and assessment of psychological disorders. Classes integrate lecture presentations with in-class discussions, exercises, multimedia, and video.

Fall 2014

Instructor

Honors General Psychology Class PSYC1030

The University of Memphis

Taught an honor's course designed to guide students' exploration of a broad overview of the important phenomena and concepts in psychology as a science of behavior including topics such as the biological foundations for behavior, learning, personality, emotion, abnormal behavior, treatment of psychological disorders, social psychology, developmental psychology, psychological testing, and intelligence. In addition, students examine the existing body of empirical research data that relates to many conceptual issues in psychology to promote active learning, critical thinking, and interaction among students. Each student has the opportunity to explore an area of psychology that is of personal interest.
