The University of Memphis School of Social Work SMART Research, Training and Treatment Center aims to provide evidence-based interventions for school-based mental health programming, increase access for school-based behavioral health programming in underserved areas, provide training on best practices in tele-behavioral health, develop opportunities to research the use of technology in practice, and provide direct services to the states most vulnerable populations.

New SMART Center logo!
The SMART Center has implemented and trained the University Campus Elementary and Middle school classrooms on Calming Corners. These spaces are a safe space for the students and are equipped with comforting objects and soothing materials that can promote mindfulness, breathing, and reflection. One classroom at the Elementary School was trained in December and all of the 6th grade class was trained in January. The SMART Center will continue to check-in with the schools to track the progress and success within the Calming Corners each month and accumulate the data at the end of the year.

The SMART Center also hosts a "warm line" for the community that provides support, psychoeducation, and linkage to community services FREE of charge. The "warm line" is not intended for crisis support, but to assist families with identifying resources in the community. The "warm line" is in service Monday-Friday 9:00am-4:00pm CST.

At the SMART Center, our two undergraduate students Julia McManus and Anna Sanderlin, have made two podcasts that focus on ACEs, or Adverse Childhood Experiences, and Calming Corners. ACEs are potentially traumatic events that occur in childhood and have a lifelong effect on health and opportunity, as well as an impact on future violence, victimization, and perpetration. Calming Corners are a designated safe space for a child to go to when their emotions are running high and they need to regain control of the situation. They promote mindfulness, breathing, and reflection in a healthy space and in a healthy way.
